Unfortunately in a group 5,000 strong, mistakes will be made. The officers don't have the luxury of time in these situations. They have to just go on what they see or what they thought they saw.

You'd think that Mike White would be kidding when he said, "Any time you hear chanting, run. No intelligent thought is going on there." He wasn't kidding. The idea of police officers dressed like Star Wars Storm Troopers riding on Seattle Slew seemed like overkill. It's not.

The sad thing is that Red Sox fans are widely known as some of the most knowledgeable fans in the nation. Peter Gammons has often commented that he is blown away every time he talks to people at Fenway. Instead, we've got "alleged" Sox fans acting like the boys from the Bronx Zoo. The positive side is that while part of the crowd is just looking for an excuse to destroy things, 90 percent are just looking for a good time.

To that 10 percent of you, stop it. Seriously. Stop it. What you are doing isn't cool nor is it funny. The only thing you are accomplishing is royally messing up one of the greatest events in New England sports history. If you are a die-hard Sox fan, and you see one of these half-wits about to do something stupid, it's your obligation as a member of Red Sox Nation to tell them to knock it off for the good of the celebration and society.

This column doesn't just apply to the Red Sox, it applies to every Boston sports team that's in contention to win a championship. Okay, so maybe it just applies to the Patriots, who presumably will bring about more victory bashes come wintertime. If the current trend continues, the UMass brass will be rapidly marching down the path to get these celebrations banned all together. So, for the love of Schilling and his bloody sock: Stop it!

Dave Quinn is a Collegian staff member.

Who's your daddy, now?

Airline and I screamed when the phone rang. The incoming call was from a 45 year-old man from the Bible belt we had never met who was calling for phone sex. I looked into Airline's eyes and nervously laughed in horror at what we were about to do. I looked at the phone and winced. What should I say? As the phone rang a second time, I tested my voice, making it as high-pitched and breathy as I could, the voice of an excited girl. I picked up and quickly said "hello" like the alluring sex kitten he was waiting for.

Thomas Naughton

"Hi, baby, it's Daddy," the deep, twangy voice said back to me.

I thought I was going to die. Airline and I met our southern phone sex-suitor in a Daddy/Daughter Sex chat room on Yahoo! Chat. We chatted with this man who's screen name was something like BigDaddy4Baby and convinced him that we were a 14-year-old girl named Jennifer who wanted him to call us and talk dirty — an experiment of epic and hilarious proportions.

I stumbled upon this lexicon of society when I signed up for my Yahoo! Email account. Users of Yahoo! Mail can also utilize chat rooms and messaging systems. When I saw the option for "chat" I laughed. I thought the widespread use of Myspace and AOL Instant Messenger had made the idea of chat rooms obsolete.

My curiosity piqued, I explored the chat room menu. Chat-nation was alive and well; there were rooms for any interest or topic you could think of, though most rooms' Users In Chat lists were empty or scant. The most populated rooms in the thousands were, of course the ADULT rooms. Yahoo! Chat offers a number of ADULT chat rooms based on orientation, fetishes and even region. There is a link you must click to verify that you are of legal age to view these rooms, but if a young person lies about their age in their profile, they can easily access the ADULT room list.

These men were married men who were looking for real sex with underaged girls. I kept thinking as we laughed nervously how unfunny the situation was.

I looked at the few ADULT chat rooms that Yahoo had created, the names of which were all pretty chaste considering they were sexually oriented. Then I saw the "User-created Rooms" list and my mouth dropped. There were at least a hundred chat rooms, all with names I cannot publish because they were extremely dirty. I thought I was a filthy person, but these chat people put me to shame.

There were a large number of rooms that made me very uneasy and angry at the same time: they were all Daddy/Daughter sex-oriented. Fantasies are one thing. I think everyone should be able to do what they want in their own private life, but these chat room titles alone were encouraging older men to meet young girls in real life for sex. The obvious course of action, I immediately deduced, was to make a fake profile and see just how much of these chatters were into fantasy, and how much were into a scary reality.

Airline and I convened to jumpstart our experiment. We started with a screen name. We knew it would have to be something suggestive. We constructed a profile of a 14 year-old girl, complete with Britney Spears quotes. With our new identity created, Airline and I ventured into the chat room.

Because we had listed our age as 14, we were not allowed into the ADULT area. However, we quickly found out that we didn't need to be admitted because of the flood of instant messages we were already receiving from men. We giggled and squealed at the things these men were saying to us. We viewed their profiles, saw their pictures and saw that many of the men listed themselves as "married." The ominous pall that hung over our experiment kept hitting us in the face with reality: these men were married men who were looking for real sex with underaged girls. I kept thinking as we laughed nervously how un-funny the situation was.

The thought occurred to me that these men could be just as fake as we were, so our experiment of course went to the next level.

"Lets see some web-cams," Airline shouted at me as we hovered over the keyboard like scientists splicing up atoms.

With a few keystrokes, the screen filled up with windows displaying live web-cam images of men, some nude and indecently gesturing. We covered our eyes and squealed like the girl scouts these men were hoping for.

"I can't believe this!" I screamed and clutched Airline's hand.

I saw wedding rings on the hands of men touching their own naked bodies. I saw the smiling faces of middle-aged men attached to these bodies, snickering. The realness of the images, of which these men thought they were showing off for, made my stomach turn.

"Lets make one of them call us, and reveal that we're guys!" I shouted, which brought us to our phone conversation with southern BigDaddy4Baby.

I can't tell you what he said to me because it's not suitable to print, but we strung him along for five minutes before I talked in my normal voice, revealed that I was a guy and asked him why he, a married man with children wanted to meet a 14-year-old girl from the Internet. He couldn't say anything. He tried to laugh at the situation, but I pressed him with more questions, asking him what his wife thought of him calling young women. He hung up amidst our booming laughter, leaving our questions unanswered.

I didn't really expect answers. As I laughed with Airline, I thought to myself what a funny anecdote this would be: tricking old men into thinking we were girls.

Then the weighty truth about our culture hit me: authorities are suing teenagers for downloading songs, yet nothing is done about the men who actually talk to young girls on Yahoo! Chat, begging them to meet or have phone sex with them.

What's really important is whether or not Kid Rock has another diamond-encrusted sofa because of the endangering of profits by downloaders, not the corruption and rape of young women. Ignore the next Amber Alert, because these chat rooms couldn't possibly have anything to do with kidnappings. What is really the dangerous crime on the Internet is truly the illegal download of the next crappy Metallica album. "And I think to myself, what a wonderful world..."

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

We've got spirit, yes we do

Continuing my series of columns on my experience here at UMass as a transfer student, this week is no different. Perhaps I paint an optimistic picture of life here in Amherst, but my college experience is limited to one that I didn't enjoy and the little time that I've spent on this campus. In that small amount of time, I have noticed one thing that is present here at the University of Massachusetts that was not present at the school from which I transferred: school spirit.

Mike Anmuth

The school that I attended before UMass (which shall still remain nameless as I don't want to influence anyone's opinion about that school) was plagued by a lack of school spirit. Students there would wear clothing featuring names and logos of other colleges, but not the one that we were attending.

These weren't graduate students who had perhaps attended these other institutions for their undergraduate. Oh no, these were undergrads that for some reason, did not like to wear the gear from their own school. I would often wonder time and time again how this phenomenon worked. If you asked me today, I still couldn't identify why students who paid tuition each and every semester wouldn't want anything to show for it besides the bill and eventually a degree.

The staunch difference here at UMass is that people are proud to go to school here. Everywhere I turn there are UMass hoodies, UMass umbrellas, UMass pants, UMass notebooks, UMass coffee mugs, the list goes on and on. The striking theme is that UMass students enjoy toting around and wearing UMass-branded objects. To me, this says something about the population here at the University of Massachusetts — it says that the students here have pride in their school, pride in their athletics and pride in wearing the name of the institution where they spend the better part of their year. The amount of maroon and white seen on any given day on campus makes one proud to go here, even if they're just getting used to the environment or haven't yet bought out the entire inventory of the UStore.

Not every student has an unbridled enthusiasm for their place of higher learning, and not every student owns tons of merchandise bearing the name of the school. UMass students, unlike the students at the school from which I came, identify themselves as part of a bigger entity than just their home town and buy things accordingly. The majority of the shirts here are emblazed with a proud showing of the University of Massachusetts scrolled across the front.

I realize there is a point when you start to wonder why I'm writing about this topic, and to this I answer because school spirit matters. When you enjoy the institution you are spending the bulk of your time, the environment becomes warmer and friendlier; people are generally happier.

School spirit is tantamount to a college identity, and with the spirit of UMass being so prominent, I feel the relevance is overwhelming.

School spirit means that people are there to cheer on our Minutemen and Minutewomen in athletics. School spirit allows for organizations like the Maroon Platoon, our student athletics fan club, to exist and thrive. Without spirit for UMass, there would be fewer hoodies seen around campus, but also, our athletics would have less people cheering and less people to hold up big, foam hands at our home games.

School spirit is tantamount to a college identity, and with the spirit of UMass being so prominent, I feel the relevance is overwhelming.

Beginning this column by relating my past experience regarding school spirit was to illustrate that an abundance of school spirit is a great thing. This columnist did not expect such an outpouring of enthusiasm on campus when he first arrived, and I have to say that I am very pleasantly surprised that the flagship campus is not just a place with 1,450 acres of land. It also fosters a community of students who have recognizable pride and passion for their school.

The University of Massachusetts may be comparable to other public universities, but as long as I keep seeing the maroon and white shirts, hats, pants, coffee mugs and the like, I am convinced that there is something very special here in Amherst, a tradition to which every student should be proud to belong.

Mike Anmuth is a Collegian columnist.

www.dailycollegian.com

The children are our future

I work with three juvenile boys, ages 16 to 18. All three of them have been badly abused by the people who were supposed to be responsible for them. Since being taken away from their parents by the state, they have been shuffled from facility to facility, with little regard for what is in their best interest.

Sam Wilkinson

This makes me angry.

When opponents of gay-marriage declare that nothing more sinister faces the United States, I wonder what exactly it is that they're seeing. Do they honestly believe that there are no more pressing social issues in this country than letting two guys get married? Do they honestly believe that the consenting decision of two rational male or female adults is somehow more important than the safety of this nation's children? They must. If they didn't, then they wouldn't be spouting ridiculousness about the horrors of gay marriage.

This makes me angry.

Not surprisingly, I feel the same way about pro-lifers, who seem to genuinely believe that the importance of life ends at birth. It's why, when they're out there talking about the "Holocaust" of abortion, they aren't similarly advocating for a better social system for abused children. Nor are they advocating for anything other than an end to Roe vs. Wade. If that court decision was overturned, all of these activists so allegedly concerned with the safety and well-being of the unborn would disappear back into the ether, their jobs allegedly done.

Ours is a culture that has totally given up on the disgusting reality of abused children.

This makes me angry.

The Catholic Church has made regular habit of taking out full-page ads suggesting that support for John Kerry is somehow anti-Catholic, as if pulling the lever on Nov. 2 not only places a vote, but also slaps the Pope himself across the face. These people, too, seem to believe that life ends at birth. If they didn't, then they wouldn't have allowed for the shameful abuse of thousands of innocent children nationwide. How, I wonder, is it even possible for a church to be so viciously pro-life and yet, at birth, be so viciously pro-life?

This makes me angry.

Stem-cell research? Are you kidding me? There are kids being badly abused by the people who are supposed to be responsible for them, and you're talking to me about the work of scientists in labs? It tells a lot about a person when they care more passionately about cells in a Petri dish than they do about kids in a home.

This makes me angry.

Politicians everywhere declare war on pornography in the media, and yet shy away from tackling the larger social issues that plague our society. Here's Joe Lieberman declaring that Hollywood's bankrupting America yet totally avoiding any legislative moves to actually protect children from physical harm. The government might not have enough time to deal with the epidemic of abuse in this country, but we've got more than enough time for Janet Jackson's breast.

This makes me angry.

We have laws against drugs. We have laws against speeding. We have laws against littering. We also have laws against child abuse, but with the exception of sexual predators, few of the people who hurt children end up not facing any punishment. Of course, their kids are taken away from them, which some view as punishment, instead of seeing it as salvation for the endangered child.

This makes me angry.

But this is what makes me angriest: all of these people, from the gay marriage opponents to the pro-lifers, from the Catholic Church to the stem-cell activists, from the politicians to laws themselves, everybody involved is taking the easy way out. The activists pick the issues that are easily solved by a Constitutional amendment or a squashed court decision. The Church (and to be fair, it extends beyond the Catholic Church) and stem cell activists choose to be more concerned with cells than actual people. The politicians and the laws they write avoid tackling the tough issues because the easier ones are, well, easier.

The activists and the politicians — who will, at any time, remind anybody who is willing to listen just how much they care about "the children" — don't at all. It is a shameful display of hypocrisy and idiocy. Unfortunately, they get away with it, because ours is a culture that has totally given up on the disgusting reality of abused children, as if to say because theirs isn't an easy solution, we won't even begin to address the problem.

It is this that makes me angriest.

Sam Wilkinson is a UMass graduate and former Collegian staff member.

The new racism in America

During the recent SGA racism controversy, many students questioned the extent of racism on campus. The issue could have been an opportunity for the UMass community to engage the many different perspectives on racism.

David Lewis

But the people who most needed a dialogue instead only got a barrage of loaded opinions. In final assessment, the conversation about the racism in the drawing drowned out the more important issue of its social context.

Many Americans now seem to believe that racism and racial inequality no longer exist. Nothing could be further from the truth. Current census data shows that racial inequality is ingrained in our society as much now as during the Civil Rights era.

The inequalities are so well-documented that after listing a few of them, it begins to feel redundant. According to recent US Census statistics: the median income of black and Latino families is $54K compared to $54K for whites (2001); the average net worth of white households is nearly five times that of black households (1998); the unemployment rate for blacks is twice that of whites (2002); Latinos are three times more likely than whites not to finish high school (2003); 26 percent of whites completed four years of college compared to 15 percent of blacks and 11 percent of Latinos (1999); black small businesses are denied loans 70 percent of the time compared to 27 percent for whites (1998); 22 percent of blacks and Latinos are below the poverty level compared to 10 percent of whites (2001); for males, blacks are six times and Latinos are four times more likely than whites to spend time in prison (1999); blacks are six times more likely to be murdered than whites (2000); black girls are twice as likely to become teenage mothers as white girls (1999); there are currently still no black or Latino senators or governors.

Many Americans now seem to believe that racism and racial inequality no longer exist. Nothing could be further from the truth.

These disparities are the direct result of institutionalized racism. Institutionalized racism is racial inequality that is caused by social institutions as opposed to direct discrimination on a personal level. Blacks, Latinos and Native Americans continue to be systematically disadvantaged in the areas of education, health care, criminal justice, employment, business and home funding and government representation. These disadvantages apply to all necessary aspects of human life.

The "new racism" is the acceptance of institutionalized racism as the status quo. It operates through the belief that the US has achieved equality and that now all Americans are born with an equal opportunity to succeed. The new racism is perhaps even more insidious than the overt racism of the past, because it suggests that poor conditions in black and Latino communities are due to their inferior intelligence, personal choices and values. The new racism plays on the traditional notion that with the right combination of ambition and hard work, anyone can achieve the American Dream. Therefore, blacks, Latinos and Native Americans should "pull themselves up by their bootstraps."

This ideology says that failure to get ahead is solely one's own fault. It teaches us to see ourselves as individuals and not as part of a larger social fabric. But this mentality denies or downplays historical context and social responsibility. Clearly, minority communities have been systematically disadvantaged throughout US history.

The widespread illusion of equality has tilted public opinion away from the need for social programs. If we already have equality, then programs like welfare, food stamps, unemployment assistance, day care, Medicare, urban development, clinics, shelters, public education, youth centers, job training and teen mother assistance are "government handouts" paid for by our taxes. This argument ignores the fact that our existing social programs are largely under-funded and inadequate.

Whether we choose to believe it or not, we are all intimately connected to the racism of our society. As an individual you may strive not to be racist, but the dominant form of racism has more to do with whether you accept or oppose institutionalized racism than your personal values.

Before the Civil War, many Northerners talked about how they opposed slavery, but only a small minority joined the Abolitionist movement. It is a criticism of our society that still remains true: we talk about social justice, but we don't act. Saying "I am not a racist" while failing to oppose institutional racism is akin to saying, "I oppose slavery" while failing to fight it. We must assume personal responsibility for fighting injustice if our professed values are to be taken as anything but empty talk.

Although usually disguised with words like "urban" and "underprivileged," issues of race are very much at the forefront of policy discussions both here at UMass and on the national stage. Taking a stand on these issues requires education, community involvement and direct action on a political level. If you want to make an impact, educate yourself, engage in dialogues with your peers, find out about the community organizations serving local cities such as Holyoke and Springfield (visit the CSL office in Goodell or do a Google search), incorporate social justice into your career plans, contact your state rep and vote. You can also contact minority advocacy groups such as ALANA to learn about current issues of race here on campus.

David Lewis is a Collegian columnist.

The third leg of the tripod

First of all, let me preface this by saying that my intention here is to inform. However, I'm sure that over the course of this article my leftist political ideology will become obvious. I have seen enough in my life to convince myself of the fact that it takes all kinds. I have encountered a number of individuals who feel that a vote against Bush is a vote against America.

Colin Jones

To those people and to people like them, all I can say is that a realistic viewpoint, irrespective of personal political affiliation, is to acknowledge the fact that if America is to remain the most powerful country in the world, we must be balanced in our views. I'm not going to say that Bush is in any way an evil man or a buffoon, but I think that people who are constantly exaggerating his intelligence (or rather, lack thereof) and attack his personal character are being ignorant.

Likewise, those who choose to say that we must accept and follow the decisions of our political leaders without question and those who don't is somehow on par with treason are being equally ignorant.

Elections are always important. Despite the preceding election and the ramifications implicitly connected to the Electoral College system that made themselves so readily apparent, all of us who are able to vote should do so. There are a number of reasons why our participation in politics is important, but to me the most important and obvious of them is respect.

The right to vote is something that our grandfathers fought and died for, that women petitioned for over decades, that minorities were martyred for. As such, I feel that I am indebted to these people for their successes and sacrifices that have made this a country where all of us can express our views, albeit indirectly. Plus, this is a particularly important election, one in which a number of key issues are at stake in a way that they have not been for quite some time.

Our government is set up like a tripod, with each of its branches having a means of checking and thus balancing the others. The reality of this situation is that while a large amount of focus from the voting public is directed towards both the executive and legislative branches, the judicial branch is often surprisingly overlooked. This may be the nature of the beast, because we as voters have a degree of control over the executive and legislative branches through electing our politicians, but the judicial branch holds as much power as the other two branches.

The structural organization of our government does not allow us as voters to decide who is going to serve on the Supreme Court; that decision is left up to the President. Plus, these justices are on the court for life, or until they decide to step down.

What all of this adds up to is a huge amount of power in the hands of a few individuals, who not only do not have term limits but were not selected by the voting public. This means that given the nature of their position, members of the Supreme Court are capable of making controversial decisions with very far reaching implications that do not reflect the views of American voters.

John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Conner and William Rehnquist are likely to step down during this approaching presidential term.

Add to this the fact that age is catching up with the current Supreme Court. John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Connor and William Rehnquist are all likely to step down during this approaching presidential term.

Rehnquist, the chief justice, is very conservative and given the fact that he is turning 80 this month and has recently been diagnosed with cancer, it would be logical to assume that he would want another conservative to take his place if he chose to step down. O'Connor is more moderate than Rehnquist, but is still fairly conservative. At 74, she's no spring chicken either. Stevens is 84 and is the most liberal justice on the Court.

What all of this means is that whoever is elected president stands a good chance of being able to ensure that individuals who are sympathetic to their political ideology will have an opportunity to have a strong influence over many policies in this country for years to come.

Now, it is theoretically possible that all of these justices will continue to serve on the Court for the duration of this approaching term, and it will be the subsequent president who gets the opportunity to appoint their replacements. Then again, it is theoretically possible that a giant meteor could strike the Earth tomorrow and send us into the next Ice Age, but it just doesn't seem too likely now does it?

Should Bush be elected and should he have the opportunity to push the Court further to the right, we could see dramatic changes on highly important issues, such as separation of church and state, the relationship between federal and state powers, maybe even abortion.

Plus, a Bush Court could make some decisions regarding the war on terror that don't stop at keeping us safe. Sooner or later, the Court will be asked to make a decision regarding how much information the government can accumulate on all of us and to what lengths they will be able to go to get that information. Given what has happened in this country since Sept. 11, maybe pretty soon thinking Big Brother is watching us won't be such a paranoid thought anymore.

Colin Jones is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

PRACTICE WHAT YOU PREACH

In his ludicrous piece "What Feminism Really Says", Zach Oelshlegel takes a dim view of feminism and disguises his sexist blather as a defense of Laura Bush. He is offended that Teresa Heinz Kerry would not know the complete biography of Mrs. Bush, and that she forgot to note Bush's role as a mother of two children in a statement she (Heinz Kerry) made. Since Oelshlegel is so insistent that people get their facts straight before they speak, let's hold him to that standard.

So, which Women's Studies classes have you taken, Zach? Which feminist theory are you referring to throughout your diatribe? What scholarly feminist texts did you pore over before unpacking Heinz Kerry's statements? You see, I have studied the feminist movements — the one that fought to raise women's status from mere chattel to full citizens, the one that insisted women be given the right to vote, the one that won women the right to choose safe and legal abortion.

I have read books, attended classes and seminars (including the Sexism workshop offered by the Social Justice Education Program this past weekend), and I don't hear the echoes of any genuine feminist theory in your arguments. If you had bothered to think before speaking, as you are apparently urging Teresa Heinz Kerry to do, you would know that feminist theory, first of all, is not just one school of thought, but is actually an umbrella term for many ideas and arguments relating to sexist oppression, a discourse which has been going on for decades, if not centuries.

None of the feminist theories that I have seen seriously attempts to "convince women that they are better than men." Oelshlegel is being either disingenuous or ignorant when he states, "every honor that comes with bearing children or raising them has been stripped by feminism." Even a cursory overview of past and especially recent feminist scholarship shows that feminists are pushing for progressive changes in social attitudes and legislation that value the lives of mothers — both professionally paid working moms and stay-at-home working moms — and their children.

What I do see in Oelshlegel's smarmy rant is a regurgitation of the arguments made by anti-feminist forces as long as women have dared demand anything resembling rights from the patriarchy. For example, he claims that, "it [feminism] all seems to boil down to taking the same role as a man." When a few brave women in the mid and late 19th century like Lucy Stone and Elizabeth Cady Stanton started wearing bloomers as an alternative to constrictive and impractical corsets and gowns, rabid critics immediately accused them of trying to "be men."

Another hilarious and baseless assertion of Oelshlegel's is that feminists "[try] to make sure that men and women never play different roles, seemingly hating men for ever having to bear children and regarding prospects of motherhood as a curse rather than a blessing." Tell this to the millions of mothers out there who identify themselves as feminists. He claims that feminists ignore "biological differences and common sense." Oelshlegel has to ignore common sense to even make these statements. Again, he's just repeating (as many media outlets do these days) what he has heard, in this case from outspoken anti-feminist icons like Rush Limbaugh and Dr. Laura Schlessinger.

While Oelshegel may think it's admirable that he's coming to the "defense" of Laura Bush and mothers everywhere, what he has done is exposed himself as an enemy of those women and men who would end sexist oppression in our world without denigrating individual women's choices. I challenge him to sign up for a Women's Studies course next semester — at least for the 1 credit seminar offered through the SJEP, Education 392 — and educate himself about the true aims and goals of the many different feminisms, before he again embarrasses himself by "speaking before thinking."

Shannnon Gorr
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Revisiting the greats with 'Citizen Kane'

By Jeffrey Horrowitz
Collegian Staff

Kane: "You know if I hadn't been very rich, I might have been a great man."

Thatcher: "Don't you think you are?"

Kane: "I think I did pretty well under the circumstances."

Thatcher: "What would you like to be?"

Kane: "Everything you hate."

Citizen Kane, though often named the greatest film ever made by Sight & Sound and AFI, is one of the few masterpieces that succeeds as a technical landmark and manages to simultaneously reach the emotional depth and sorrow necessary to move us. Sure, the film is all about a reporter's quest to find the meaning of the word "Rosebud", but the look of the film and the way everything is constructed within the shot is hypnotic.

The lighting is marvelous; the cinematography from genius Gregg Toland is unrivaled. The different techniques that Welles (who also wrote and directed it) innovated like deep focus, optical illusions, invisible wipes, the appearance of ceilings in the shots, even the nitty-gritty innovations, were then unthinkable and are now unbelievable. This man was a genius and after Kane (his unmatched directorial debut), would go onto become the greatest filmmaker we've ever seen.

Rosebud was the last word of a famous newspaper mogul, Charles Foster Kane (Orson Welles), a larger then life figure (in this constructed reality) that captivated the public's fascination for decades. The editor shouts to one of his reporters, "Rosebud: Dead or Alive, find its meaning!" as if its significance will define Kane's entire life and finally clue us in on the enigma that was the man. In the hunt for Rosebud, the reporter goes on a journey visiting all the people closest to Kane and getting the inside story in the form of back-flashes being retold through the perspective of those that loved him and those that despised him.

In the process, we see Kane's life how it is remembered and the riddle that seemed so distant in the opening collage starts to become oh so clear. The sly technique that Welles uses is providing us with an opening collage summarizing his life works so that we know the facts as the story unfolds, so when the story is told we can focus on the characters and appreciate the beauty of the visual technical lore created by Toland and Welles.

What an extraordinary jump forward when a scene begins with Kane looking through glass at a picture of the greatest newspaper staff in the world to taking a picture as the mogul that now owns them. It's followed by a fun little party shot beautifully with Bernstein and Leland discussing if the new found success will change Kane. Kane is always clear in sight in the background, whether by reflection or otherwise remaining in focus.

The film is based on the life and times of William Randolph Hearst and is an interesting interpretation of his rise especially in the context of yellow journalism. Consider the brilliant use of "The declaration of principles," which will come back to haunt Kane when he has everything left except a value of principles. Another notable scene in technical admiration comes when the reporter, (whose name is Thompson by the way) visit's the Thatcher museum, which is actually a constructed set.

The statue of Thatcher, a matte drawing, of which the lighting and camera work give an illusion of a gargantuan museum, when in fact it was hand made and small enough to just fill the frame. Here he revisits Kane's childhood — the most famous use of deep focus ever on film. A scene where in order for the camera to move in unison with the actors, Welles sawed a table apart, had workers move it when the camera followed the actors and when they returned, had the workers put the table back together just as the camera moved back into its original setting. (He similarly sawed the sign to Susan Alexander's club to get an aerial shot going through a skylight into the club in order for the camera to literally pass through it).

Bernstein, the only character without sin will be the most reliable source for what really happened (he delivers a monologue about a girl he once saw on a train that still remains in my memories today, in a scene that relies more on acting then technical lore). Notice how financially and emotionally happy he sits now as the President of a big company, while all other sources are dead, senile, or drunk.

The film also takes us through the motions of Kane's marriage to the President's niece (which is shown superbly with startling clarity over many years in a collage of how they have breakfast every morning), through the scandalous affair, his second marriage, his wife's opera run, and finally, through the construction of Xanadu. All the while set with the background of his Inquirer running his life and ruining all that will make it a happy one.

The introduction scene of Kane inheriting the newspaper is a bit goofy in its characters and attempts to be comical, but they are forgotten in more solemn scenes like when he signs over the bankruptcy deed to Thatcher. I marvel every time at the optical illusion of a window that grows bigger when Kane walks toward it and makes Kane larger when he walks away. He will do this again, in front of the fireplace of Xanadu, in Welles most famously respected optical illusion.

There is an astonishing amount of foreshadowing jump cuts, of him listening to Susan singing for the first time, and then listening to her months later; and watching her decorating her apartment. All are visually wonderful. Consider the jump cut from Thatcher telling a six-year-old Kane who has just been taken from his mother "Merry Christmas," then finishing with "And a happy new year" when Kane is 21. Notice also the shot of him addressing that large crowd in what seems like a stadium. It's on the cover. There's no one in that audience, just flickers of light. That's not a stadium, but he makes it look like one. The close-ups of people are only done showing three of four people up close; the rest are illusions.

Welle's performance in Kane is one of the best ever given. His body language with other characters, his charisma in playing the part and his joy of performing this transition from young adventurous newspaper mogul to old miserable business tyrant is hypnotic. Welles has intensity in his face, and in his eyes during dramatic scenes that is astounding.

When he fires Leland, what a shocking scene of broken friendship; what a great close-up of Leland's reaction; and how strategically brilliant to do it right after they hadn't spoken for six months. That famous scene where his wife leaves him, and he chases Jim Gettys down the hall screaming, "I'm Charles Foster Kane!" Welles was so enraptured in the performance that when he ran down the stairs, he twisted his ankle.

Look at the argument between Kane and Leland after he loses the election. The ceiling is low, and he is towering over the camera. It's a vertically inclined shot. Looking at him as we looked at Thatcher in the earlier Christmas scene. It is done with brilliant cinematography, lighting, coordination, framing, acting, and precise dialogue. To accomplish the shot, they dug a hole in the ground and put the camera inside to film from the point of view of a little child watching Kane with disapproval hiding in a little corner as Kane bows his head in defeat and is lectured by his drunk friend (who stayed up all night, the day before to capture the authenticity of his performance in the scene). He mispronounced a line and kept going and it was so real they kept that take.

The opera scene is another great illusion of gargantuan sets presented as real with invisible wipes and neat camera work. His obsessed expression as he forces a standing ovation in that very scene is frightening, and never has a character gone through such physical and emotional change in behavior through the course of a movie — De Niro came close with his astonishing Raging Bull performance.

When Kane comes to his lowest point he is trapped in an overly gigantic house he doesn't need, in a marriage that is more of a father-daughter relationship then a spousal romance, to a woman he doesn't love, who spends her days putting puzzles together not realizing she's simply married to one. The picnic scene is dreadful but it's meant to be and by the time Susan leaves him and he destroys her room, he can fall no lower and he is left with a little crystal ball and tears in his eyes muttering the word, Rosebud. One of the last breathtaking optical illusions comes when he walks in between two wall-encased mirrors parallel to one another and there are a thousand reflections of a lonely Kane. Roger Ebert, called it "The most evocative shot in the film," there's no better way to describe it.

Rosebud is seen in the very last shot of the movie and sure enough it doesn't explain anything, unless we give the word meaning. Most often interpreted as a loss of childhood innocence, I believe it can be analyzed as much for inability to love and be loved as for deprivation of a deserved childhood. As the faceless Thompson concludes at the end when told Rosebud would've answered all, "No, I don't think so. No, Mr. Kane was a man that got everything he wanted and then lost it. Maybe Rosebud was something he couldn't get or something he lost. Anyway, it wouldn't have explained anything. I don't think any word can explain a man's life. No I think Rosebud is just a piece in a jigsaw puzzle. A missing piece."

Orson Welles stars in "Citizen Kane" as a man whose wealth and power becomes the death of him.

"Citizen Kane" is said to be one of the early cinematic masterpieces, for its film illusions and direction.

The ride of your life: a beautifully shot film paves way for an exciting journey

By Joe Pietrafite
Collegian Staff

What might you accomplish by the time you're 24 years old? Sure, you may have graduated college, and maybe some of you will have even finished graduate school.

Others might even be successful in the working world. Will you have traveled 4,500 kilometers on a motorcycle across South America, and worked in a leper colony along the way? I didn't think so. In the Focus Features movie "The Motorcycle Diaries," that's just what two friends do.

"The Motorcycle Diaries" is based on Ernesto (Che) Guevara's memoirs of the same name, written when he and his pal Alberto Granado traveled across the continent in 1950's. Onboard Alberto's motorcycle, they travel through Chile, Peru, and Argentina in order to get to a leper colony where Che will do his medical residency before he graduates medical school.

Che and Alberto both begin their journey with the same ideas and goals (fun, women, drinking and adventure), but as their trip progresses, it becomes clear that both men will eventually go on to lead extremely different lives.

This journey becomes the backbone for Che's eventual leadership during the Cuban Revolution in the 1960's. Many of his beliefs and views were shaped during this intense six-month journey and his month-long tenure at the leper colony in Peru.

"The Motorcycle Diaries" made a splash during its North American premiere at the Sundance Film Festival last January, and was an enormous success at the Cannes Film festival in France, where it was nominated for the Palm D'Or award. There are extremely powerful performances from Gael Garcia Bernal as a young Guevara (audiences will remember him from the sexy 2001 import "Y Tu Mama Tambien"), and relative newcomer Rodrigo De la Serena as Che's best friend Alberto. Under the skillful and brilliant direction of Walter Salles, Bernal and De La Serena give both moving and compassionate performances, and I wouldn't be totally surprised if either of them becomes a name that is repeatedly heard come awards season. I also wouldn't be surprised if the film itself ends up on numerous Top 10 lists, and wins a couple "Best Picture" awards.

'The Motorcycle Diaries'
Directed by Walter Salles
Starring Gael Garcia Bernal, Rodrigo Dela Serena Focus Features
Rated R
126 mins
Grade A-

The true star of the film though, is the mountainous route they take on their bike and the stunning cinematography of Eric Gautier. The sweeping vistas and mountaintops the pair traveled through are exquisitely shot, making "The Motorcycle Diaries" hands down one of the most visually satisfying films of the year. The crystal blue skies that touch the endless green valleys and the windswept mountain trails only add to the actor's outstanding performances. There's one point in the film where Ernesto and Alberto are pushing the bike through a snowstorm in the Andes Mountains, and the entire screen is desolate and bleak except for their shadowy figures pushing the bike through the storm.

The photography and production design are so meticulously detailed and shot that often times the audience forgets that they're watching a historical film, and they get lost in the beautiful storytelling and the outstanding performances. Director Salles has been pretty quiet in the film industry since his last success, the Brazilian film "Central Station," but with "The Motorcycle Diaries," he has a film that has been both a critical and audience success.

Bernal and Del Serena taking the ride of their lives.

"The Motorcycle Diaries" chronicles Che Guevara, and his years spent traveling on a motorcycle.

'The Grudge' gives horror without a cause

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The haunted house in "The Grudge," is inhabited by a pair of ghosts that skulk around, dooming anyone unlucky enough to enter. One is a spooky little boy who has the feral, strangulated yowl of an angry cat; and the other, more disquieting one, is a lithe young woman with lanky black hair, mottled white-blue skin and a stare of frozen horror (she also has a nasty habit of slinking right up to her victims and scaring them to death.) Does she sound like a familiar demon princess? "The Ring," the hit Halloween thriller from a couple of years ago, had a similar murderous specter and that's not the only thing the two films have in common. Like that other film, "The Grudge" has a lot of eerie bad dream images, but they can barely hold themselves together. The movie is all atmosphere that disappears into thin air.

'The Grudge'
Directed by Takashi Shimizu
Starring Sarah Michelle Gellar, Jason Behr
Columbia
Rated PG-13
98 mins.
Grade C+

Both films are adapted from more popular Japanese films (in this case, the movie is called "Ju-On") and both have what can be described as a mood. But that's all each film has going for it: mood. "The Grudge," is built from one freakazoid supernatural shock after another, but they don't connect to each other or the audience. Each moment of nightmare creepiness has its share of jolting, heebie-jeebie scares (prepare to be startled), but they don't add up — "The Grudge" shocks you so much that you go numb.

"The Grudge" may be imported from Japan, but it still gets to retain its setting and director, Takashi Shimizu, who at least knows how to conjure an air of ghostly menace. The house is a seemingly average looking split-level, but anyone who enters is cursed to die. The movie flits back and forth in time, as it shows how one by one, they file in and out of the house, only to encounter the wraith-like duo.

Sarah Michelle Gellar plays a care-worker abroad, Bill Pullman a college professor, Jason Behr Gellar's boyfriend, Ryo Ishibashi, from the great Japanese S&M shocker "Audition," is a cop investigating a pair of mysterious deaths. Each and every one enters the house, only to come face to face with a snarling malevolent specter.

Here's how an average scare goes in "The Grudge:" character enters home, hears strange noise, investigates alone. It's a device as old as horror films and one wishes that the movie did attempt to vary the formula more. There is a nifty sequence where a ghost follows one character from her office to her apartment, and Shimizu loads up the movie with sinister special effect stunts, (I liked how a blotchy shadow formed into a menacing feminine shape on a security camera.) But why does each horror sequence have to be a repeat of the one before? (It's an effect that renders them meaningless.) We barely get to know the characters before they get knocked off in increasingly familiar ways. The actors exist solely to be spooked to death. "The Grudge" may have an air of chilly dread, but it's often just a neutered and repetitive slice of tony exploitation horror.

"The Grudge" doesn't differentiate itself from similar horror films such as 2002's "The Ring".

Bill Pullman stars in the horror film "The Grudge", alongside Sarah Michelle Gellar and Jason Behr.

VOTE THIS NOVEMBER 2ND

Our Vote Can Make A Difference

Boricua... It's time we come together and demonstrate our power as a community. It's time we get the respect we deserve. By voting, we can make a statement and show everyone that 3 million Puerto Ricans in this country are a force that cannot be ignored. Do it for our families and our community. Do it for our traditions as well as our future generations.

Our voices will be heard through the power of our vote. A vote that unites us as brothers and represents a brighter future for all.

Call 1-800-596-VOTA or visit inscribeteyvota.org for more information on how to vote on November 2nd in your area. Do it for the entire Puerto Rico and Hispanic community. Boricua, Inscribete y Vota. ¡Que nada nos detenga!

WWW.INSCRIBETEYVOTA.ORG
WESTERN MASSACHUSETTS SATELLITE OFFICE
38 SCHOOL STREET SPRINGFIELD, MA 01105
TEL. (413) 737-7450 EXT. 17

BORICUA
¡INSCRIBETE Y VOTA!
QUE NADA
NOS DETENGA
1-800-596-VOTA

A MESSAGE FROM THE PUERTO RICO FEDERAL AFFAIRS ADMINISTRATION *AUTHORIZED BY THE STATE ELECTIONS COMMISSION CASE NUMBER CEE-SA-03-113

Inside the mind of Razzano

RAZZANO from page 10

TR: Banana bread. It was funny because that tape was shown on a bus trip and I had no clue that someone had gotten it. Back then I was really in to licking the batter out of the bowl, so I really didn't say much.

MDC: How old were you when you filmed this?

TR: 6th grade.

MDC: You were a cheerleader in high school so do you consider cheerleading a sport?

TR: Definitely. On our competition team, you had to have endurance because the routines are long. You are constantly throwing people up in the air, so you need weight training. It was intense.

MDC: Were you ever injured during a routine?

TR: Yeah. I had to get an x-ray of my sternum. I went to catch someone and she was falling and landed on me.

MDC: You're a big Mary-Kate and Ashley Olsen fan. What's your favorite movie?

TR: I'm more of a fan of their older stuff, but I really like It Takes Two.

When it comes on I can recite the movie word for word.

MDC: Approximately how much of the Mary Kate and Ashley Olsen billion dollar empire has been supported by Tracy Razzano and family?

TR: Are we talking now a day or back then because I still purchase merchandise. I'd have to say anywhere between $300 and $1000.

MDC: Did you cry when Mary Kate checked in to the hospital?

TR: No, not really. I'm more of an Ashley fan anyway. I wasn't sad but I knew everything would be okay. I have reason to believe that she went to the treatment facility for reasons other than an eating disorder. So I wasn't surprised when it happened.

MDC: You claim to be a Yankees fan. Are you worried now that they lost to Boston and how many players from the '96 World Series team can you name?

TR: I'm not worried. You can't win them all. I think the Red Sox deserve to win it just because of all the old people who are living to see them in the series.

MDC: What about all the people who died before hand?

TR: (five seconds of silence). I don't want to think about that that makes me very sad. As far as the 96 team, Bernie Williams, Derek Jeter, Joe Girardi, Tino Martinez and Andy Pettitte.

MDC: Not bad. Saratoga is known for its horse racing. How have your "friends" done at the track?

TR: My "friends" lost a lot of money this summer up at the track, some where in the upwards of two hundred. It's a good place to go for the social aspect though. Sometimes you'll win, but I.... I mean "my friends" have the mindset that if you win one, you make up for all the rest.

MDC: What do you do bet the long shot?

TR: Yes. They think that you probably won't win them all, so make it a big one.

MDC: Finally, the Loaded Question, which you can choose to pass on if you'd like. Your teammates gave you the nickname tinkle, how'd you get it?

TR: Well I'll answer it this way. People say that if you make assumptions you're usually wrong. Well you can assume what you want on this one and you'd probably be right.

UMass offense needs to respond

MCGOVERN from page 10

Minutemen and coach Sam Koch look to fill in the center, back midfield.

On September 19, Tim Kitchell was in a very similar situation.

Playing defensive midfield, Kitchell was given a red card for cleating a Harvard player that was on the ground. The result was also very reminiscent, as the Crimson ended up topping UMass 3-1.

What's done is done; it's the results after the Harvard match that should have the Minutemen concerned.

After Kitchell's foul and subsequent suspension, UMass was forced to tinker with an already young lineup. As new players were adjusting to positions they weren't accustomed to playing, the Minutemen went a humbling 1-2-2 over the next five games. Unfortunately for UMass, it doesn't have that luxury this time.

However, after the five-game, post-Harvard learning process, the Minutemen have become more comfortable as a unit on the field and have gone through a series of trying victories for a very young team. UMass has only lost one out of its last five games, with its most recent against LaSalle after Pace's mishap.

During that span, three of the Minutemen's victories have come in overtime, with two taking two extra periods to decide the outcome.

With this being said, the lack of Pace in UMass's next game against the Bonnies will dramatically affect its offense. Granted, there is a slew of young talent that can fill his role as a defensive midfielder, but what the Minutemen really need is another foot in their arsenal.

Pace has started all but one game for the Maroon and White and is currently in sole possession of third for total points on the season. His three goals and four assists have been a blessing for a Minuteman offense that has been looking for midfielder production throughout the season.

MATTHEW MEDEIROS/COLLEGIAN

Junior captain Oral Bullen leads the Minutemen in points this year with eights goals and four assists.

With Pace missing St. Bonaventure, a team that statistically looks like a pushover, has all of a sudden emerged as a threat to UMass.

The Minutemen need to win two more games in order to be a shoe-in for the postseason. Going into St. Bonaventure with one important player down and heading to the very place where its season ended last year, the Maroon and White have nothing to lose over the next few weeks.

So to speak.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian Columnist.

La Russa's little clubhouse quirk

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Larry Walker hustles to the bat rack. Albert Pujols hurries to get his helmet. Jim Edmonds grabs a quick drink of water.

Between innings at Busch Stadium, the bench is a beehive of activity. At any moment, the St. Louis Cardinals' true cleanup man will get busy.

Like clockwork, he swings into action. Manager Tony La Russa, the guy No. 4 hitter Scott Rolen calls the "street sweeper," starts to stroll toward the far end of the dugout with a purpose.

His mission? Stomp every paper cup in his path, then slowly nudge them soccer-style with the side of his foot toward the tunnel leading to the locker room.

Sometimes, he finds a couple thrown by players. Other times, a dozen. La Russa follows the same pattern, and they end up crushed and out of sight.

"I've never seen anything like it," Cardinals pitcher Jeff Suppan said. "But we all have our own little quirks, and that's his."

Atlanta pitching coach Leo Mazzone rocks back and forth while watching ballgames. Texas manager Buck Showalter bundles up in a jacket even in summertime heat. Reliever Turk Wendell would brush his teeth each time he got the third out.

La Russa laughs at his odd habit. It's not a nervous tick — he did it way before Boston led St. Louis 2-0 in the World Series going into Game 3 Tuesday night.

"I mean, it's so atypical of me," he said last week during the NL championship series. "Look around my office here. There's clutter everywhere. So it's not like I'm some ultra-neat person."

Sure enough, there are stacks of letters littering his desk, bats piled up and boxes of stuff scattered all over. Pretty messy, really.

"It's just something that happened over time, something I do in-between innings," he said. "You spend a lot of time in the dugout, and I like to stand up. It's my way of keeping busy, looking for those cups."

No such cleanup guy on the ragamuffin Red Sox.

Manny Ramirez and Orlando Cabrera wear batting helmets gunked up with goo, a combination of pine tar and dirt. Trot Nixon's cap is a weird shade of white, stained with sweat.

Oh, and then there's Boston's hair — Johnny Damon's shaggy look, Bronson Arroyo's cornrows and an assortment of unkempt goatees and beards.

"We give our players personal freedom to express themselves here," Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein said. "And I think our players play better that way. I'm not saying it's better or worse to do it that way. It depends on the mix of personalities you have."

Asked about his clean-cut appearance, the 30-year-old Epstein smiled.

"Don't be fooled by looks. You don't see me at night," he said.

La Russa's little show is on display day and night.

He could easily get a clubhouse boy to dispose of the green cups that wind up on the wooden-slat floor — no telling how many hit the ground by game's end. There's a plastic-lined trashcan in the middle of the dugout, and not many teams have that.

La Russa prefers to do it himself, home or road.

"Oh, we have fun with him," outfielder Reggie Sanders said. "We'll wait for him to go by, then throw one on the floor. But he always gets them on his way back."

"I'll tell you this," said Sanders, playing for his seventh big league team in seven years, "he has the cleanest dugout I've ever seen."

Said La Russa: "I know those guys play with me."

Most dugouts are flat-out gross by the final out. Players routinely spit sunflower seeds and tobacco juice, toss cups and spill bottles of water.

With the Cardinals, it's noticeably neater. When La Russa's around, that is.

Steelers poised to break streak

STEELERS from page 10

in Pittsburgh.

Roethlisberger has been warned by teammates what to expect from Patriots coach Bill Belichick's defense — namely, a whole lot of what he hasn't seen before.

"I'm sure there will be something (different) he will see," Cowher said. "They'll give us some things we'll have to adjust to. But we can't get too caught up in what they do. We have to establish our plan, play smart, control the clock and make some third downs."

The Steelers found out three seasons ago how confusing the Patriots' defense can be even to an experienced quarterback. Then, Pittsburgh was a big favorite in the AFC championship game, only to have a confused Kordell Stewart throw three interceptions during a 24-17 New England victory that led to the first of the Patriots' two Super Bowl championships in three seasons.

Wide receiver Hines Ward still remembers how the Steelers' offense scurried to adjust on the fly as the Patriots repeatedly gave them defensive looks they didn't expect and didn't practice for.

"I'm sure with Ben, they will have a special package for him," Ward said. "But we can't put it all on Ben's shoulders. We can't say, 'You've got to pass the ball for us to win.'"

Just like the Steelers won't say they've made their season should they end the Patriots' streak.

"Sure you get excited about (the game), and I'm not going to downplay that. There's nothing to downplay," Cowher said. "It's a big game. It's why you're in this game, to play in games like this. But there is a lot more left after this game. Nothing will be accomplished or defined with this game."

Meanwhile, Maddox (torn right elbow tendon) is throwing lightly for the first time since being injured Sept. 19, but is not yet close to being ready to practice again.

FREE RIDES HOME ON HALLOWEEN WEEKEND!

SPONSORED BY
MERCY HOUSE
WWW.KWOMERCY.ORG

STREETS ON AMHERST TOO SPOOKY TO DRIVE?
TOO DRUNK TO DRIVE?
JUST PLAIN LAZY?

OCTOBER 30 & 31
10PM-4AM
DOOR TO DOOR SERVICE
CALL 413-687-8848 & 413-687-8865

WE ARE COMING TO YOUR CAMPUS!
University of Pennsylvania's Graduate School of Education is coming to your school's graduate fair. Stop by our table and speak to our admissions representative about the wide range of opportunities in the field of education.
For more details on your graduate fair, please visit www.gse.upenn.edu/admissions_financial/events.php
Graduate School of Education
PennGSE
3700 Walnut Street, Philadelphia, PA 19104
1-877-PENN-GSE admissions@gse.upenn.edu www.gse.upenn.edu

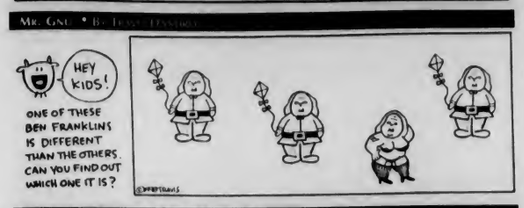
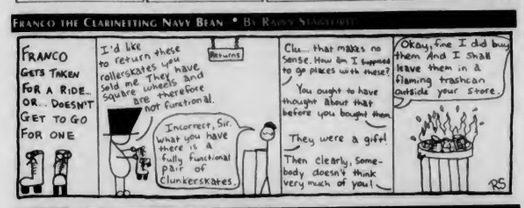
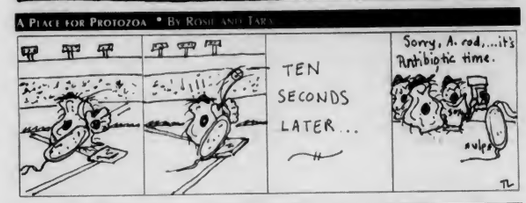
Fancy Nail
Inside Hampshire Mall
413-584-0210
Walk-ins Welcome
FREE French Manicure w/ full set only
Student Special
$2 OFF
w/ fell set or fill
with coupon only



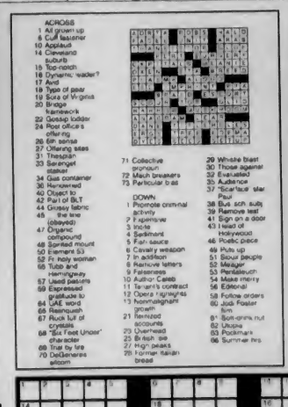
THE HARP
"Come party like your Irish!"
NEW! Wireless Internet! Do your homework, surf the net, WIRELESS INTERNET!!!!
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
Amherst's last great neighborhood pub!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 Check out our new covered deck! www.theharp.net
MON. - "Bad Karaoke"
TUES. - Our Famous Trivia Night
WED. - Reggae Night
TH. - Special Brew
FRI. - Traditional Irish Sesiun
SAT. - Live Music
Molsen Pints $2.00
Pitcher $6.50
VOTED BEST NEIGHBORHOOD PUB EAST OF THE RIVER

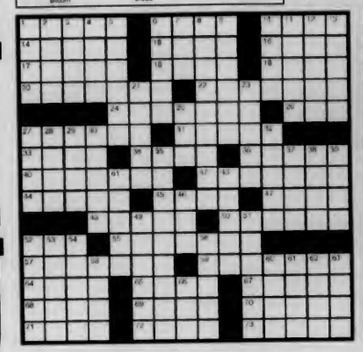


Time To Put On Your Party Shoes At Northampton Bowl
Where you can party and Still hear a pin drop!
College Rock N Bowl
Every Thursday night...9pm-Midnight
Includes: Unlimited Bowling * Shoe Rental * Music & Laser Lights
Full Service Lounge * Snack Bar & Gameroom
OPEN LANES EVERY DAY CALL FOR AVAILABILITY
Northampton Bowl
525 Pleasant Street
Northampton 584-4830



CALLING ALL WOMEN!
DISCOVER YOUR SELF
Find YOUR path through expressive arts
Drawing SELF Collage
Needlework Poetry Writing
WEDNESDAYS 6:00-7:30PM FOR SIX WEEKS, FALL SEMESTER 2004
FOR MORE INFORMATION AND TO REGISTER, CALL
EVERYWOMAN'S CENTER COUNSELING SERVICES (413) 577-0077





The Moan and Dove
The Moan and Dove is like a cool bar in the city, except that it's not cool, and it's not in the city.
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

Feeling fresh?
Submit a comic!

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You're looking good today, you sexy thang.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
That task won't take you as long as you think it will.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Your friends will appear at the most unexpected moments today.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You should take a minute to set your goals for the next month.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Your voice doesn't sound as weird as you think it does.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You could not possibly eat any more junk food. You're at the limit.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You shouldn't pet the polar bears at the zoo.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You hair is looking marvelous today. Those products are magnificent.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You look like you're cold. Tomorrow, wear more clothes.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You should party like it's your birthday. That means lots of silly dancing.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Next time you make a plan of action, you need to stand by it 100 percent.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You shouldn't have watched the Red Sox game. You're going to fail your midterm.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"So before you knock it, try it first/Oh you'll see it's a blessing and it's not a curse..."

-Ben Harper

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE
Ask for Advertising @ 545-3500

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

HAPPY HAPPY BIRTHDAY to Molly Eggleston! #6 Rocks our Socks!! Hope your day is awesome! Love, Sam, Ali, and Butterfield

Cheap heating oil! Join the PIONEER VALLEY COOPERATIVE. Call 545-0865 or come by Commuter Services, Room 428 Student Union.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bdrm, Util included, furnished / unfurnished 720/month 10 Min from UMass Bus Rt 665-4791 665-2203

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles

APARTMENT FOR RENT

free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

AUTO FOR SALE

Purchasing a used car? Having your car repaired? Do you know your legal rights? Contact the Student Legal Services Office, 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99. Pentium III Desktop $99. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Driver Wanted 2 to 5 hours/week $15/hour plus mileage. Driving an elderly woman around 207-361-2695 agatsol@aol.com

Part time employment, flexible hours – earn $30 per hour or more with travel benefits Call 908-431-1900 Ext 115.

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

Parking Attendant Part-time early evening position Must be 18 Years Old and Have your own vehicle $10.50 per hour, apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Avenue Northampton

EMPLOYMENT

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

Make money at home taking surveys? Is this possible? Find out the truth at www.TruthAboutSurveys.com

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992

SERVICES

Snow Plowing It's not too early to think about snow! Call MR. PLOW today for subscription plowing. Space is limited. MR PLOW is a student run business 978-884-7102

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

MONTREAL Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most Weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break 2005 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRSVSC Online
1 800 426 7710

TRAVEL

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902

Egg Donors Needed. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Ages 21-32. Non-smokers only. For more information please visit our website at www.robertmichaelwest.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 27, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A time of reckoning for UMass

Must overcome Pace's penalty

Bob McGovern

Playing in the most competitive Atlantic 10 in recent memory, with a season chock full of emotional ups and downs, the Massachusetts men's soccer team has finally found itself in the "must win" zone.

With three games remaining in their season the Minutemen face two of the top three teams in the conference, in first-place Duquesne (October 31) and third-place Rhode Island (November 5). Both teams have currently been on a roll, with the Dukes winning seven out of their last nine, and Rhode Island going five out of their last seven.

By the power of ironic scheduling, Rhode Island once again has the potential to be the spoiler for the Minutemen this year. Last season, the Rams beat the Maroon and White 3-0 in Kingston, which ultimately ended its playoff chances. This year the Minutemen will have to go back to URI and, depending upon this weekend's results, may be forced to fight for their season, again.

This puts a bit of emphasis on this weekend for UMass, as it will face both Duquesne and a floundering Bonnies squad in the friendly confines of Rudd field. Home has been particularly kind to the Minutemen, where they have gone 5-2-0 on the year.

However, one has to wonder if the recent red card earned by sophomore Ralph Pace will affect how UMass approaches and contends in this weekend's matches.

In the Minutemen's last game, Pace received a red card in the last ten minutes of the first half against LaSalle. The card means that UMass had to play a man down for the rest of the match, which ended up costing them a 2-0 in-conference loss.

Now that Pace will be sidelined for a game, one must wonder how the

See MCGOVERN on page 8

Sophomore Richard Higa questions a call during the Minutemen's game against Xavier on Oct. 17. Higa has four goals and one assist on the season for UMass, who will return to action at home on Friday against St. Bonaventure for a 2:30 p.m. kick-off.

MATTHEW RUSSELL SULLIVAN

A few words with Razzano

By Dave Quinn
Collegian Staff

Before a recent trip to Philadelphia, a gauntlet was thrown down. What member of the Massachusetts field hockey team was brave enough to go one on one in an interview where the questions are not only about field hockey but also about the player themselves and their past? While almost all other players looked the other way, sophomore back Tracey Razzano eagerly stepped forward to accept the challenge. Razzano is what many would call a "free spirit" and made for an interesting and candid interview.

MDC: What is it that you bring to the Massachusetts field hockey team?

TR: I bring comic relief and make stressful situations a little bit easier to handle. On the field, I understand defensive concepts, especially regarding the "dangerous line".

MDC: What's the biggest key to the team making the A-10 finals?

TR: We have to be confident but not too over confidant. We also need to keep away from the complex and keep to the simple.

MDC: What brought you to UMass from Saratoga?

TR: I liked the New England atmosphere. I also wanted to challenge myself to play at a D-1 level. I also had a great time on my recruiting trip. I really liked the girls and I knew I could fit in here.

MDC: When a recruit comes to UMass, who's the best host and why?

TR: I'll take credit for this one. I had three or four freshman last year and they all ended up coming to UMass. So I'm the hostess with the mostest.

MDC: I heard you hosted a cooking show once. What's your specialty?

See RAZZANO on page 8

Now or never for Minutewomen

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Columnist

Much of the attention focused on the Massachusetts women's soccer team this season has been directed toward the strong freshmen class.

The freshmen have earned all of those accolades as they have been steady contributors all year.

Of the Minutewomen's six wins, five of the game-winning goals have been scored by freshmen. Midfielder Jenny Roehrig has three game-winners and forward Britt Canfield has two.

Canfield has received much of the attention, as she has twice been honored as the Atlantic-10 Rookie of the Week.

Roehrig and Canfield are also the top two scorers for UMass. Canfield leads the team with 18 points and nine goals. Roehrig is second in each category, with 10 points and four goals.

Although the freshmen have played a huge role in getting UMass (6-9, 4-5 A-10) to the doorstep of the A-10 Tournament, it will be on the upperclassmen to lead the team the rest of the way.

Dan Duggan

It is one thing for freshmen to step-up during the season, but when it comes time to make a post-season push, typically the more experienced players carry the load.

Despite having only one senior suited up for the majority of the season, UMass still has plenty of experienced players. A majority of the returning players saw considerable action last year and they will need to draw on their experience.

UMass was not in playoff contention last year, but it's safe to assume that the players from last year don't want to go through another year without making the postseason, especially with the league tournament being held on UMass' home field.

The entire season has boiled down to the last two games of the season this weekend. UMass is currently tied for seventh place in the league and must move into the top six to qualify for the conference tournament.

UMass travels to St. Bonaventure Friday and Duquesne Sunday. Any result other than two wins on the trip will result in the Minutewomen being spectators when the A-10 Tournament is played at Rudd Field.

The one veteran player whom much will be expected from this weekend is Lindsey Fairweather. Fairweather, the lone senior to play the entire season, is the unquestioned team leader. This is only her second season in Amherst as she transferred from Boston College before last season, but "Stormy" is one of the most vocal Minutewomen and someone coach Jim Rudy looks to for leadership.

The next two games will be the last of Fairweather's collegiate career unless UMass is able to make the playoffs. The onus will be on Fairweather to lead the team this weekend if she plans on extending her career.

Another veteran who will need to raise her play this weekend is junior Adair Blyler.

Blyler has had a rather quiet season after leading the Maroon and White in scoring last season with 15 points and six goals. She was banged up earlier in the year and as a result her production has not been up to last season's level. She has two goals and two assists on the season for six points, but has only attempted seven shots all season.

Blyler has the ability to score and she could put a sub par season behind her with a goal or two this weekend.

Another upperclassman who will be integral to UMass' success this weekend is junior Lindsey Bellini.

Her role is far more important in the midfield at setting up the offense for Blyler, Fairweather, and Canfield.

If the Minutewomen get strong efforts from these three experienced players this weekend, they may well end up with a postseason berth.

Dan Duggan is a Collegian Columnists

Junior Tiffany Hamill chases the ball against Boston University on Aug. 29. Hamill has one assist this year for the Minutewomen.

Dayton stays on top

By Daniel Hillman
Collegian Staff

On Oct. 22, the first place Dayton Flyers hosted second place Richmond in Atlantic 10 women's soccer action for the top spot in the conference. The Flyers scored two unanswered goals to win the game 2-1. Junior D Alicija Bredlo scored her fourth game-winning goal of the season to help the Flyers pass the Spiders. Bredlo's achievements earned her A-10 Player of the Week honors.

Two days later, on Senior Day, the Flyers ran the nations longest undefeated streak to 16, with a win over George Washington, 3-0. In that game Senior goalkeeper Stacy DeLuca improve to 16-1-0 overall, 9-0-0 in the Atlantic 10. It was her 9th shutout of the season. The two wins this weekend clinched the top seed in the upcoming tournament and a conference record 8th regular season title. They moved up two spots to number 25 in the National Rankings.

Another Feat for Tough Luck Bonnies

SBU's freshman forward Jacquee Parmiter, received A-10 Rookie of the Week honors. Parmiter racked up three points in St. Bonaventure's 3-3 tie against Saint Joseph's on October 22. She also received her team leading 10th assist of the season in the Bonnies' 1-1 draw against Temple on October 24th.

Walker Wins 100th

Duquesne's second year head coach James Walker earned his 100th career victory against Temple on Oct. 22 in an overtime victory, 1-0. Duquesne dominated the game out shooting Temple 33-3, yet still the game went to overtime. Freshman Faye Rasmussen netted the game winner as she buried a 10-yard shot in the 98th minute. Duquesne's sophomore goalkeeper, Virginia Bondi, didn't have to do much to earn her 3rd shutout of the year. She saved two.

Steelers not afraid of Pats

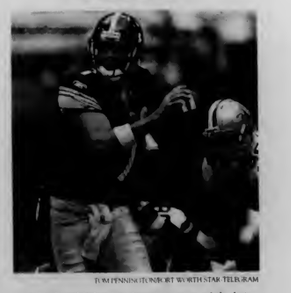
By Alan Robinson
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Ask the Pittsburgh Steelers about the New England Patriots' unofficial NFL record 21-game winning streak, and it's likely they will turn the question around.

What about their own four-game winning streak since rookie Ben Roethlisberger replaced the injured Tommy Maddox at quarterback?

With the Steelers (5-1) a game up on the favored Ravens (4-2) in the AFC North and 10 games still remaining, the Steelers understand the dangers of focusing too much attention on a single regular-season game — even one that could bring an end to the Patriots' run.

That's why the Steelers are taking a decidedly low-key approach into Sunday's game in Pittsburgh, even if winning would substantially increase the national profile of a team that went 6-10 last season.



"We can't get too caught up and enamored with what they've done," coach Bill Cowher said Tuesday. "If we play our game, minimize the mistakes and try to seize some opportunities, hopefully it will fall the right way and we'll have an opportunity to win. We're going to have to be on top of our game to win this."

Or, exactly how they have been since Roethlisberger took over. Certainly, the opposition has been suspect — the combined record of their beaten opponents is 10-23 — but that doesn't minimize how well Roethlisberger has played and how quickly he has settled in.

Roethlisberger wasn't expected to play much if at all this season, yet is fourth in passer rating behind only Daunte Culpepper, Peyton Manning and Donovan McNabb. Roethlisberger's 69 percent completion rate isn't that far off the NFL's all-time record of 70.55 by Cincinnati's Ken Anderson in 1982, and his ability to make plays while on the move has added an extra dimension to Pittsburgh's offense.

But if Roethlisberger is interested in learning how far he's come, he's likely to find out as the Steelers meet the NFL's only two remaining unbeatens, the Patriots and the Eagles (6-0), on successive Sundays

See STEELERS on page 8

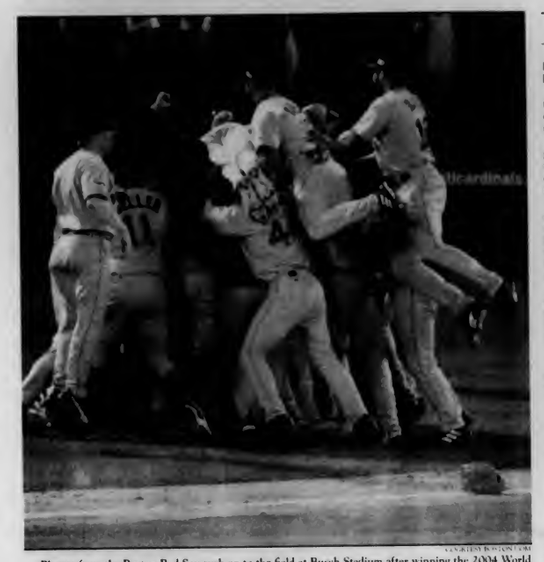
Ben Roethlisberger drops to pass while being chased by Dallas defenders on Oct. 17.

TOM PENNINGTON/UNIQUE SPORTS STAFF TELEGRAM

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 37

UMass welcomes its most famous alumni
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5



THURSDAY • High 55 • Low 35
FRIDAY • High 58 • Low 38
SATURDAY • High 63 • Low 39

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Home, Sweet Home
UMass to host Maine
SPORTS, PAGE 10

Red Sox kiss curse goodbye

Players from the Boston Red Sox rush on to the field at Busch Stadium after winning the 2004 World Series title last night in Game 4.

ASSOCIATED PRESS/CHARLES REX ARBOGAST

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

ST. LOUIS (AP) – The Boston Red Sox – yes, the Boston Red Sox! – are World Series champions at long, long last. No more curse and no doubt about it.

Ridiculed and reviled through decades of defeat, the Red Sox didn't just beat the St. Louis Cardinals, owners of the best record in baseball, they swept them for their first crown since 1918.

Johnny Damon homered on the fourth pitch of the game, Derek Lowe made it stand up and the Red Sox won 3-0 Wednesday night. Edgar Renteria grounded out for the final out, wrapping up a Series in which the Red Sox never trailed.

Chants of "Let's go, Red Sox!" bounced all around Busch Stadium, with Boston fans as revved-up as they were relieved. Only 10 nights earlier, the Red Sox were just three outs from getting swept by the New York Yankees in the AL championship series before becoming the first team in baseball postseason history to overcome a 3-0 deficit.

It was Boston's sixth championship, but the first after 86 years of frustration and futility. Since the Red Sox last won, there were two world wars, the Great Depression, men on the moon and the rise and fall of the Soviet Union.

After all that, the Red Sox made it look easy.

Gone was the heartbreak of four Game 7 losses since their last title, a drought – some insist it was a curse – that really began after they sold Babe Ruth to the Yankees in 1920.

Damon's leadoff homer and Trot Nixon's two-out, two-run double on a 3-0 pitch were all that Lowe needed. Having won the first-round clincher against Anaheim in relief and then winning Game 7 at Yankee Stadium, Lowe blanked the Cards on a mere three hits for seven innings.

Relievers Bronson Arroyo and Alan Embree worked the eighth and Keith Foulke finished it off for his first save.

Even the heavens reacted to the news with a total lunar eclipse. And what a reward the Red Sox earned for their first Series sweep: They get to raise the World Series banner next April 11 in the home opener at Fenway Park, with the Yankees in town forced to watch it.

The Red Sox became the third straight wild-card team to win it, relying on the guts of Curt Schilling and guile of Pedro Martinez. And they took it in the same year they traded away popular shortstop Nomar Garciaparra.

Boston got key contributions from almost everyone. Backup outfielder Dave Roberts did not play in the Series, yet it was his stolen base in the ninth inning of Game 4 in the ALCS that began the comeback against Mariano Rivera.

And while second baseman Mark Bellhorn was born in Boston, no one else on the roster came from anywhere near Beantown. And the only homegrown players on the team are Trot Nixon and rookie Kevin Youkilis.

No matter, this win might make all of them as much a part of New England lore as Plymouth Rock and Paul Revere.

Or, as Red Sox owner John Henry said close to gametime: "People tell me this is the biggest thing since the Revolutionary War."

The Boston win also left no doubt which city is now the most jinxed in baseball. It's Chicago – the Cubs last won it all in 1908, the White Sox in 1917.

Meanwhile, the Cardinals team that led the majors with 105 wins never showed up. The timely hitting, solid pitching and sharp baserunning that served them so well all season completely broke down.

Albert Pujols, Scott Rolen and Jim Edmonds, the meat of the order, combined for just one RBI. Rolen got it on a sacrifice fly, and it was little consolation as he went 0-for-15.

Lowe was loose from the start. While the Cardinals took batting practice, he sat alone in the Boston dugout, his hat backward and singing the little ditty, "If you're happy and you know it, clap your hands."

Lowe was equally relaxed on the mound. He gave up a leadoff single to Tony Womack, then retired 13 straight batters until Renteria doubled in the fifth. Renteria made it to third on a wild pitch, but Lowe fanned John Mabry – who unsuccessfully argued that he tipped strike three – and got Yadier Molina on a routine grounder.

Bustamante reveals new photos of Brennan

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association President Eduardo Bustamante strongly urged the Senate yesterday to use its power to remove Speaker Seamus Brennan from office by means of impeachment, expulsion or by holding a re-election.

Bustamante stressed Brennan's involvement with the 'KKK Nine' incident, where student government members were photographed last March drinking in a University office and mocking a caricature of a Ku Klux Klan Grand Wizard.

Bustamante revealed new photos to the Senate last night showing Speaker Brennan in the photos with the other members.

"[Patrick Higgins] resigned as he should have," Bustamante said. "Associate Speaker Brennan said that he was involved in no wrongdoing and that he left before there was alcohol."

Following the revealing of the photos, Brennan was dismissed from any charges by the Dean of Students because it was questionable whether his involvement in the photos was criminal. He was shown in several photos drinking from a red cup and a silver can, the contents of which were deemed debatable.

"It is clear that [in the photos] he is either drinking a Busch Light or a Diet Coke," Bustamante said, "and if he's drinking a Diet Coke, I don't want him being Speaker," he added jokingly.

Bustamante made it clear that he has no authority in the situation anymore. He expressed his disgust and disproval of the Brennan holding his position, and encouraged the newly elected Senator to pounce on removing him from office.

"It's not in my power, it's up to you guys," Bustamante said. "I don't know what you should do, there is impeachment, expulsion or even maybe a new election; it's up to you."

In order to impeach an office member, a number of steps must occur for the process to be complete. First, an impeachment charge must be brought against the Speaker, and then an ethics committee would review the charge and investigate the evidence. Then, the impeachment proceeding would go to the Senate where a two-thirds vote would be necessary to pass. Finally, the charge would need to go through the judiciary committee.

Speaker Seamus Brennan is shown in numerous photos involving the student leaders of the 'KKK-9' incident.

MEGAN BRINSTER/COLLEGIAN

As the photos were being passed around the Senate, Bustamante refused to reveal the initial person who came forth with the pictures.

"I don't think its right that we attack that individual," he said.

When Seamus had the opportunity to address the Senate in his report, he refused to talk about Bustamante's comments and said that he needs a week to gather information. Brennan also proposed a roundtable discussion to be held in the coming weeks in order to address the public about issues of diversity.

"I didn't want to Senators to get bogged down [with the information about the photos] during the first week," Brennan said. "On Nov. 16, there is going to be a roundtable to address diversity and that would be the proper venue."

When asked why Brennan was considering resigning back in September and the chose not to, he said, "I thought that there would be more pictures, secret pictures or something — I'm sorry."

Attorney General Craig Goldschmidt proposed a new motion that would request office space in the Whitmore administration building for the judicial advisor program. The program, housed in Whitmore last year, was removed due to the expansion of the Dean's office.

President Eduardo Bustamante shows new pictures of Brennan at the meeting last night, urging him to resign.

MEGAN BRINSTER/COLLEGIAN

"We need help," Goldschmidt said. "Students are getting arrested in riots and they don't know their rights."

The program would allow students to speak with other students and get educated about due process. Currently the office is temporarily being housed in the SGA office, but Goldschmidt agreed that it isn't accessible or right that it be there.

"The office used to be in Whitmore, and that is where the proceedings are, it is impossible for me to run back and forth."

Goldschmidt's motion was proposed and passed by the Senate, and they will be arguing to get the space in Whitmore from the administration.

Homecoming Weekend to be 'UMassive'

By Teri Barrows
Collegian Correspondent

Students can expect this Homecoming Weekend to be nothing short of spectacular — or as the UMass Student Homecoming Steering Committee has dubbed the 2004 homecoming events, "It's going to be UMassive!"

Among a few of the weekend highlights, the University will hold a bonfire by the Campus Pond tomorrow night and a heated student section of MinuteFan Park before Saturday's football game against Maine.

Over 2,000 students are expected to show their school spirit at the bonfire and pep rally following Bill Cosby's comedy show at the Mullins Center. A 14-foot diameter bonfire will ignite at approximately 9:30 p.m. and a pep rally featuring Coach Don Brown, the UMass football team, the Minuteman, and the UMass Cheerleaders will jumpstart the night's entertainment.

The night's main act Cold Duck Complex, chosen best hip hop act by the Valley Advocate this fall, will perform a marriage of hip hop lyrics to jazz and funk music. DJ Hypnotiq will follow with hip-hop mixes and Boston-based West Entrance will conclude the night with a mellow rock set.

The heat will continue on Saturday in Minutefan Park from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. under a special student "Beach" tent featuring sand and propane patio heaters to keep game-goers warm.

See HOMECOMING on page 3

Grad School Information Day showcases student futures

By Brian Duffy
Collegian Staff

Over 130 graduate schools of various concentrations filled the Student Union Ballroom yesterday for the University of Massachusetts Five College Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day.

The program was sponsored by Career Services and Representatives from were on hand to answer questions and provide information to students.

Maureen McHugh, a junior Women's Studies major, was primarily interested in finding the best financial opportunity for graduate school. McHugh said she would like to study in a different area of the country if the price is right.

"I feel well prepared for graduate school," McHugh said.

"I'm impressed with the level of interest," said Margaret Jones, graduate admissions counselor from the Professional School of Accounting at Northeastern University.

Seth Calloway, a first year Graduate Student at UMass, said he is impressed with the compassionate approach within the graduate departments in the University. He said that his instructors are sincerely concerned with the goals and aspirations of each student. Calloway's impression is that the professors are focused on making the graduate program work for each student.

Carla Shedd, a representive from Northwestern University, said, "Most people I know don't know what they're doing [about graduate school]," said UMass senior Samantha Cseh. She said she feels that many undergraduates, herself included, have no post-graduate plan whatsoever.

Sophomore Marina Sol rated her UMass experience as a nine out of a possible ten. Sol said she intends on earning her Master's Degree in Accounting in four years. Marina is pleased with the guidance she has received toward selecting graduate programs.

See FAIR on page 3

Students visit different displays in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday during the Five College Graduate and Professional School Information Day. Over 130 different schools were represented.

MATTHEW MEHRA/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor-in-Chief Peter Foundas
Managing Editor Andrew Merritt
Business Manager Rich Pacheco
Production Manager Cory Rosenberg
Night Supervisor Cameron Woods
Advertising Manager Tiffany Sugulski
Editorial Production Samantha Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Meghan Healy
Classified Editor Alyson Zillmann
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Erika Lesley
Photo Editor Matthew Reid
Sports Editor Mike Marzelli
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Josh Kuggins
Friday Manager Hirak Shah
Accounting Clerk Virginie Frecaut
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Josh Greenberg
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorensen
Assistant Hours Thomas Hecht
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst Arts & Living Mike Busack
Asst Arts & Living Monique Jemmott
Assistant Editorial Yousef Munayyer
Assistant Editorial Allison Edles
Assistant News Julie O'Donnell
Assistant News Dan O'Brien
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern
Assistant Sports Jeff Howe

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890 the paper began as Aggie Life. It became the College Signal in 1903, the Weekly Collegian in 1918 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1950. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 545-3500, Mon-Fri between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron J. Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Megan Brinster
COPY EDITOR
Michael Busack
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Tom Heslin, Caitlin Kidcckel, Jodi Weisser

Write for News
Call Erika, Julie, or Dan at 545-1809

Lecture to look at democratic dissent

By Bill Donovan
Collegian Staff

Indiana University Bloomington Professor Robert L. Ivie will present the lecture "Democratic Dissent and the Trick of Rhetorical Critique" today on campus at 4 p.m. in room 20 of the Hasbrouck Lab at the University of Massachusetts.

His lecture will discuss obstacles to dissent that are encountered in weak democratic culture when it is under pressure from crisis and war. Faculty and staff, students, and the public are encouraged to attend.

The event is made possible by the Center for the Study of Communications at UMass. Ivie teaches rhetoric and public culture at Indiana University Blooming-ton. A member of Indiana's Department of Communication and Culture, Ivie is also part of the faculties in American Studies, Cultural Studies, and Myth Studies.

Ivie has been involved in political publications throughout his career. He is the founding editor of the new journal "Communication and Critical/Cultural Studies" which gives a worldwide view of interdisciplinary critical inquiry in the requirements of a more democratic culture. This periodical focuses on social, political, and cultural practices as well as discourses of power. It is published by Routledge and sponsored by the National Communication Ass-ociation.

Ivie was the editor for the "Quarterly Journal of Speech" from 1993 to 1995 and editor of "Western Journal of Communication". His work has appeared in journals like the "Review of Education", "Pedagogy and Cultural Studies", "Rhetoric and Public Affairs", "The Quarterly Journal of Speech", "Communication Monographs", "American Behavioral Scientist", and "Social Science History". Many of his pieces dealt with rhetoric, war, and democracy. Ivie also is a member of editorial boards for "Presidential Studies Quarterly" and "KB Journal".

An editor of books published by Indiana University Press, Michigan State University Press, and Texas A&M University Press, Ivie has written some of his own as well. He co-authored "Cold War Rhetoric: Strategy, Metaphor, and Ideology" and "Democracy and America's War".

Ivie received a PhD in rhetoric and communication at Washington State University in 1972. He has also taught at Texas A&M, Washington State University, Idaho State University, and Gonzaga University. He served as department head at Texas A&M from 1990 to 1993.

Final speaker ends series celebrating Brown v. Board

By Hillary Teed
Collegian Correspondent

A Columbia law professor and columnist for The Nation told an audience in Mahar Auditorium Tuesday night that America's educational system needs to be reformed, affirmative action policies must remain and the need for vigilance against modern technology invades privacy.

Patricia Williams, the last of three speakers in the University of Massachusetts history department series celebrating the Brown v. Board of Education Supreme Court decision, also warned that race relations will get worse before they get better.

Williams said that academic institutions, as a source of upward mobility during the civil rights movement, offered blacks a "passport to power," or a network through which they could obtain higher and better paying jobs.

"Now that passport is completely out of reach for many of us ... due to factors such as the growing wealth gap in America and strong emotional resistance to affirmative action," she said.

Williams said that these statistics show that income and educational achievement are clearly linked.

"It is astonishing that while the average annual income in white households is $88,000, Hispanics earn 11 times less and blacks earn 16 times less," she said.

According to Williams, much has changed since the landmark 1954 Supreme Court decision that struck down segregation in public schools.

Members of elite society now spend $300 an hour for private Kaplan tutoring sessions and hire graduate students to help their young children with poetry," Williams said to an audience of about 250.

The columnist also said that the fiftieth anniversary of Brown v. Board reveals a still-troubled U.S. educational system.

"Our history is one of integration, with a lot of boundaries and taboo about where you can go," she said. "To be able to present ourselves as social equals means being able to [learn] at the same place, at the same time."

Williams also stressed that the nation should commit more funding to America's backbone, the public school system. "We must stop thinking that education is a battle between the elite geniuses and the 'threats' to society," she said, referring to the conflict between white privilege and black disadvantage. "[This means] that we stop being situational about who we educate."

The Columbia professor was part of a generation that went to law school not after the civil rights movement, but because of it. "It was around the Kennedy administration, the Vietnam War, and the women's liberation movement; we didn't see this era as the beginning of an end, but as an opportunity to make a difference," she said.

Many racial issues have surfaced during the 50 years since Brown v. Board, especially controversial cases like affirmative action and the USA Patriot Act.

Williams supports anti-discrimination programs with one exception, but said that she opposes the legislation written after the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks.

"Affirmative action is a very necessary element in the combat against discrimination. While I support it, I am not in favor of affirmative action that is only focused on economic concerns since we do not have a constitutional right to economic equality," she said.

On the other hand, Williams called the USA PATRIOT Act a "violation," and one of many tools that is slowly creating the face of a new civil rights movement in the 21rst century.

"Forms of technology allowed under the act such as high-prolile tracking are making the question of identity very difficult," said Williams.

In addition to being a professor and columnist, Williams is also the author of four books. Her newest book, "Open House", argues that the same issues surrounding the Brown case in the 1950s are resurfacing in new ways today and exploiting individual freedoms.

"Everyone wants their 15 minutes of fame," she warned. "But I think in the very short future, we'll want our 15 minutes of privacy."

Sharon to ignore rebels and stick by Gaza plan

By Ramit Plushnick-Masti
Associated Press

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Ariel Sharon sought to face down rebels in his Likud party, vowing in comments published Wednesday that he would not give in to "pressures and threats" over his Gaza withdrawal plan.

Four Cabinet ministers — led by Sharon's top rival, Finance Minister Benjamin Netanyahu — voted along with a majority of lawmakers who approved the Gaza plan on Tuesday. The four said they would step down if the prime minister did not commit to a national referendum on it.

The turmoil raised new doubts about Sharon's ability to go ahead with the planned withdrawal from the Gaza Strip and parts of the West Bank next summer, as pledged.

The ministers' resignations could force elections in coming months and delay implementation of a withdrawal. Alternately, Sharon could try to reshuffle his coalition and bring in the moderate Labor Party.

Sharon said he would not be swayed by the threats.

"I will never give in to pressures and threats, and I won't accept any ultimatums," he told the Haaretz daily newspaper in Wednesday's editions. "My position on the referendum is unchanged. I am opposed to it because it will lead to terrible tensions and a rift in the public."

Sharon suggested he would try to avoid early elections, telling the Yediot Ahronot daily: "I can promise you that I will have a coalition that will continue to run this country."

Sharon pauses after his historic first-ever vote to remove Jewish settlements from the Gaza Strip on Tuesday.

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE

THINK OUTSIDE

FOUR PERPENDICULAR

SIDES ON A

GEOMETRICALLY

SQUARED BASE.

It takes ingenuity, teamwork and a great deal of effort to pull off some of the high-profile engineering projects being done in the United States Air Force. Engineers who come aboard are immediately put on the fast track and have advancement opportunities typically not found in the private sector. From weapons systems and space station materials to the next generation of X-planes, whatever the project is, it's always fresh, always important and always cutting edge. If this sounds like something you might be interested in, visit our Web site at AIRFORCE.COM or call us at 1-800-423-USAF to request more information.

©2004 Paid for by the U.S. Air Force. All rights reserved.

Happy Halloween!
FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date 10/28 - 11/03
Not responsible for typographical errors.

Beer

Heineken 24 Bottles Loose $20.99
Coors Light 20pk Bottles $12.99
Long Trail 12pk Bottles $10.99
Bud & Bud Light 30pk Cans $18.99
Natural Light & Ice 30pk Cans $12.99
Bass Ale 12pk Bottle $10.99
Icehouse 30pk Cans $12.99
Busch & BuschLight 24pk Bottles $10.99
Honey Brown 12pk Bottles $7.99

Wine
Duckhorn 2000 750 ml Napa, Cabernet 750 ml.....$49.99
Solaris Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml.....$11.99
B.V. Century Cellars Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1 lt.....$10.99
Graceland Cellars Johnson Meyer, Blue Suede Chard, The Kings all 750ml.....$9.99
Vampire Vineyards Merlot, Pleasin 750 ml.....$7.99
Barton & Guestier Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot.....2 for $10.00
Fusee Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot, Syrah 750ml.....$4.99
Foxhorn Merlot 750 ml.....2 for $5

Liquor
Belvedere Vodka 750 ml.....$24.99
Chopin Vodka 750 ml.....$24.99
Beefeater Gin 1lt.....$17.99
Sauza Tequila 1lt.....$16.99
Belvedere Pomarancza Vodka 375 m.....$13.99
Belvedere Cytrus Vodka 375 ml.....$13.99
Southern Comfort 750 ml.....$13.99
"99" Schnapps 750 ml.....$12.99

Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

FREE RIDES HOME ON HALLOWEEN WEEKEND!
SPONSORED BY
MERCY HOUSE
WWW.MYMERCY.ORG
STREETS ON AMHERST TOO SPOOKY TO DRIVE?
TOO DRUNK TO DRIVE?
JUST PLAIN LAZY?
OCTOBER 30 & 31
10PM-4AM
DOOR TO DOOR SERVICE
CALL 413-687-8848 & 413-687-8865

Campaigns intensify before big day

By Mary Dalrymple
Associated Press

SIOUX CITY, Iowa (AP) — Sen. John Kerry accused President Bush on Wednesday of "dodging and bobbing and weaving" on explanations for nearly 400 tons of missing explosives in Iraq. Bush said his presidential challenger was making wild charges without knowing the facts.

Less than a week before the election, both campaigns intensified their efforts.

With their agendas laid out all summer and fall, Bush and Kerry were trying to create an aura of excitement in get-out-the-vote rallies, hoping to snag the dwindling pool of voters who haven't taken sides.

Kerry hit hard at this week's revelation that explosives had disappeared from an outpost in Iraq.

"The missing explosives could very likely be in the hands of terrorists and insurgents, who are actually attacking our forces now 80 times a day on average," Kerry said at a rally in Sioux City. "But now today we've learned even more. What we're seeing is a White House that is dodging and bobbing and weaving in their usual efforts to avoid responsibility, just as they've done every step of the way in our involvement in Iraq."

Kerry said Vice President Dick Cheney "is becoming the chief minister of disinformation" while the president remains silent on the matter.

Bush did bring up the matter a few minutes later, in a speech in Lititz, Penn.

"Now the senator is making wild charges about missing explosives when his top foreign policy adviser admits, quote, 'we do not know the facts.'" Bush said. "Think about that — the senator's denigrating the action of our troops and commanders in the field without knowing the facts.

Unfortunately, that's part of a pattern of saying almost anything to get elected."

Bush was referring to remarks made by Kerry adviser Richard Holbrooke Tuesday in an interview with Fox News. Holbrooke said "the U.N. inspectors had told the American military this was a major depot." He added: "I don't know what happened. I do know one thing — in most administrations the buck stops in the Oval Office."

John Kerry smiles to the crowd during a rally in Sioux City, Iowa.

Courtesy CNN.com

Kerry also appealed to middle class voters in the election homestretch Wednesday, saying Bush had sold them out to help the wealthy and now wanted "four more years so that he can keep up the bad work."

Career Services aid in school search

FAIR from page 1

Marketing Coordinator for Career Services, Kim Holloway, said she encourages all students to contact her office for guidance on choosing graduate schools. Career Services offers resume building, cover letter creation, and interviewing techniques. The office also helps students gain field experience, either through co-op or internship opportunities. Career Services is located in 511 Goodell.

Tommie Joyner Jr., Assistant Director for Career Services, is one of four career counselors at Career Services. Joyner said he believes that a student's G.P.A. and graduate test scores are not the only criterion looked at by graduate school admissions counselors. He said that the personal statement is an integral part of the admissions application. The essay provides a student who might not have an excellent G.P.A. an opportunity to describe why he or she is a worthy candidate.

"This literally can make the difference in acceptance," said the former UMass graduate. Joyner recommends setting up an interview whenever possible with a graduate school, particularly for students who are on the bubble.

When he meets with a student, Joyner said he first assesses where the student is academically. He next tries to determine what the student is looking for and what they want to do. "I'm looking for a pathway to make their dreams come true," he said. Career Services is available to all UMass students.

Homecoming to highlight UMass

HOMECOMING from page 1

"You're going to forget that it's the end of October and think that it's the middle of June," said UMass senior Jessie Day, member of the Student Homecoming Steering Committee.

Students with a valid UMass ID will receive free T-shirts and thunder sticks at the park and STA Travel is giving away a spring break trip for two to Cancun.

Students can enjoy a free barbecue meal in the park by picking up a food voucher in the Dining Halls before Saturday.

"Homecoming is a great reason for us to wakeup a little earlier and show our school spirit by supporting the football team," said Nathaniel Jewell, Co-chair of the Student Homecoming Steering Committee and a senior at UMass.

The committee has planned its events to cultivate this school spirit and draw students out for the game. "Seeing the football team rally in front of a roaring fire gets everyone excited for game-day," said Jewell.

Distinctive Caribbean music by the Pan Handlers and inflatable entertainment such as a gladiator joust will also be featured in MinuteFan Park. The park is run by UMass Athletics before every home game and also features Alumni and Athletics tents, special activities for children in the KidZone, and beer and food concessions. Student admission to the park and the game are free and tickets do not need to be picked up ahead of time. Admission to the bonfire is also free.

Support comes from the Office of Student Affairs and corporate sponsors including Coldwell Banker. Residential Life and the coed service fraternity Alph Phi Omega are providing staffing and building support at the bonfire.

Scientists find skeletons from early dwarf colony

By Joseph B. Verrengia
Associated Press

In a breathtaking discovery, scientists working on a remote Indonesian island say they have uncovered the bones of a human dwarf species marooned for eons while modern man rapidly colonized the rest of the planet.

One tiny specimen, an adult female measuring about 3 feet tall, is described as "the most extremic" figure to be included in the extended human family. Certainly, she is the shortest.

This hobbit-sized creature appears to have lived as recently as 18,000 years ago on the island of Flores, a kind of tropical Lost World populated by giant lizards and miniature elephants.

She is the best example of a trove of fragmented bones that account for as many as seven of these primitive individuals. Scientists have named the new species Homo floresiensis, or Flores Man. The specimens' ages range from 95,000 to 12,000 years old.

The discovery has astonished anthropologists unlike any in recent memory. Flores Man is a totally new creature that was fundamentally different from modern humans. Yet it lived until the threshold of recorded human history, probably crossing paths with the ancestors of today's islanders.

"This finding really does rewrite our knowledge of human evolution," said Chris Stringer, who directs human origins studies at the Natural History Museum in London. "And to have them present less than 20,000 years ago is frankly astonishing."

Flores Man was hardly formidable. His grapefruit-sized brain was about a quarter the size of the brain of our species, Homo sapiens. It is closer in size to the brains of transitional prehuman species in Africa more than 3 million years ago.

Evidence suggests Flores Man made stone tools, lit fires and organized group hunts for meat.

Just how this primitive, remnant species managed to hang on is unclear. Geologic evidence suggests a massive volcanic eruption sealed its fate some 12,000 years ago, along with other unusual species on the island.

Researchers say the perseverance of Flores Man smashes the conventional wisdom that modern humans began to systematically crowd out other upright-walking species 160,000 years ago and have dominated the planet alone for tens of thousands of years.

And it demonstrates that Africa, the acknowledged cradle of humanity, does not hold all the answers to persistent questions of how we came to be.

Courtesy CNN.com

Scientists say prehistoric human dwarf skeletons have been found on a remote Indonesian island. The group was marooned while modern man spread across the planet.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2004

"I may disagree with what you have to say, but I shall defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

It's the thought that counts

Matt Brochu

After they lost a heartbreaker to the Yankees on Friday, July 23, the Red Sox were a beaten team, utterly destroyed by mediocre play, bad luck and history itself. The following day, turned their miracle season around (Hint: it involved a fight between Alex Rodriguez and Jason Varitek and a walk-off homerun by Bill Mueller). I typed, sealed and mailed a letter to A-Rod the following Monday. This is an excerpt from that letter which I think is particularly relevant to recent events.

Dear Alex,

After Friday night, the 2004 Red Sox were dead. Done. Up the creek without a paddle and no MacGyver in sight. Nine and a half games back of your Yankees and no discernable heartbeat to speak of within Red Sox nation. The half-game deficit in the AL Wild Card race no longer mattered. Nomar's unexpected resurgence no longer mattered. It was over, a fact that seemed pretty obvious to me on my television at home.

No one was sure why. The statistics were definitely there. Even after the loss, Boston led your team in almost every major hitting category. They also held the edge in pitching, outslinging your Bombers in terms of ERA and opponents' Batting Average. Not only were the statistics there, but we had the men to manipulate those statistics, Terry's a stats guy. Theo's a stats guy. Ben Affleck's a stats guy.

But stats are what they are. They'll win a bunch of ball games, but they don't ensure World Series victories. Just ask Billy Beane. If you take a look at every action and reaction that needs to go your way to win the whole thing — every bounce, every inch, every hanging curveball — you come to realize just how ridiculously dumb it is to simply play the odds. You need luck. You need character. You need a spark.

That's what the Sox had last year: all of the above. I don't believe in fate, and I don't really believe in God, but I'll refer to Him in this context. He genuinely screwed up last year. Period. When Aaron Boone's homerun sailed smugly over the left field wall, only one thing was certain: Red Sox Nation would be forced to watch the replay roughly 8,000 times over the course of the next year.

Needless to say, we didn't watch SportsCenter for months. But the off-season brought great news. You, Alexander the Great, the LSMVP (Least Significant Most Valuable Player) were unhappy in Texas, and Boston had a chance in the sweepstakes. In what seemed to be a sudden and uncharacteristic change of heart, winning, not money, became your primary concern.

But, no offense Alex, I didn't really want you aboard. It's not that I didn't like you as a player or a person. You're equally admirable in both respects, a self-made man, a guy who plays the game the right way. But it just didn't feel right. A World Series victory with you at the helm would feel tainted, unwarranted, not quite as sweet. A Rangers-Red Sox trade would cheapen the game, and when it came down to it, that wasn't Boston's place ... it was New York's. I'd be damned if we stooped to Steinbrenner's level. But hey, it wasn't my decision.

So when the Player's Association stopped the deal in its tracks, I was admittedly pretty happy. The alternative, a frivolous pursuit of two nobodies named Schilling and Foulke, was fine by me. By the time Spring Training rolled around, we had reeled both of them in and once again seemed poised to make this "the year." But injuries struck early. D-Lowe was "floating it" like the little kid in "Rookie of the Year". Our new, improved manager was nothing more than a younger, less Forrest-Gumpy Grady Little. The kids in "The Sandlot" were better defensively. And Friday was more of the same. No one could save our season. No one ... well at least no one in a Red Sox uniform.

Then came Saturday's game, and with it, the unthinkable ... in the third inning, Bronson Arroyo hit you with a pitch. It wasn't intentional. People get hit by pitches every day. You weren't a victim. You were a statistic.

But you didn't think so. Maybe you'd finally let the hype pad your ego. Maybe the pinstripes had finally sucked out the final wisps of your soul. But apparently no one is allowed to pitch inside to Alex Rodriguez, so you completely overreacted. You stared Bronson down — trying really hard to look tough — even gracing him with a few choice words before slowly making your way to first base. Jason Varitek took exception to your immaturity and not-so-politely suggested you take your base like a good little pretty boy. And everyone knows what happened next.

You lost your mind. After seemingly yelling the words, "DUCK BOORS!" several times in Varitek's direction (at least that's what I told my impressionable little brother who used to look up to you), you picked a fight with him, even borrowing the cheesy two-finger-bring-it-on gesture from Neo in "The Matrix". Did you forget that you're Alex Rodriguez? My God, the umpire should've given you back your bat to make it a fair fight. Logically, a bench-clearing brawl ensued and ejections followed.

But a few innings later, as announcers Joe Buck and Tim McCarver were rambling on and on about "Alex Rodriguez being the symbol of the Red Sox' frustration," I realized something. No one could've done what you had just done. You were the only player, on the only team, in the only stadium, who could have single-handedly given the Sox the spark they needed, that intangible weapon to resurrect their season. This was Apollo Creed's death. And for that, Alex, I thank you.

I thought about waiting until the end of the season to send this letter, you know, after the Red Sox have dispatched the Cardinals in a memorable six-game World Series and after the media has absolutely killed another Kevin Millar slogan. Maybe it would find you on a romantic Maui getaway with Jeter and give you two something to read on the beach. But after watching your post-game interview, the one where you ripped off every "G.I. Joe" cartoon by saying something about "losing the battle, but winning the war," I figured I'd send this now. Just as a token of good faith. So, for Red Sox fans everywhere, thanks again.

And by the way, your lips are purple. You should really get that checked out

In Theo We Trust,

Matt Brochu

Matt Brochu is a UMass graduate student.

Where do we go from here?

Ben Feder

By the time this column runs, the Red Sox may have won the World Series. In that case, the campus is still on fire. Martial Law has been declared throughout the state and they are just beginning to dig through the rumble that once was Southwest. So the chances that anyone will read this article are slim, since the only ones left are running from the four horsemen of the Apocalypse. But I have a question for all of us out there in Red Sox nation.

What will we do if we win?

I mean, up until this moment, we have had a bittersweet relationship with our baseball heroes. They build up the tension in our lives. At the pinnacle moment where they have to choose whether to win or lose, they explode all over themselves. We are left frustrated, demoralized and with a few years cut off our life. This is how it has been forever. They were dependable, and we loved them for it.

But now something is different. We can all smell it in the air. It's like electricity, and Red Sox fans are uttering three words that no one has ever dared to utter across this land for nearly a century. "They might win." Say It out loud. Feel how your mouth resists forming the syllables. "They might win!" Say it enough, and the wind starts blowing harder and the sky darkens for some eerie, ominous reason. These words will wake the dead. I once said it early in the morning, and all the birds outside my window suddenly took to the sky and flew off into the horizon. The anticipation is flowing through this place, and you can feel it oozing out of everything.

We are all caught up in the moment. The past few weeks have been a blissful, dizzying ride of ... what do you call it? Victory. No one knows what day of the week it is, or even the month. Every night is Saturday. Classes have become a secondary priority, and sleep is no longer a concern at this point. All we want to do is watch the Sox hit the ball and feel that addicting, knee-buckling, euphoric flow of energy course through our bodies. Once they win we hypnotically watch the highlights on ESPN until our eyes glaze over and we pass out on the couch. I never know where I'll wake up once a game ends: my bed, on the couch, perhaps in my car.

With a World Series win the Red Sox will seem a little more human. Before, they were the stuff of myths. They were legends, a cursed team. Upon breaking that curse, they will resume their role in the baseball world.

But what will we do if we win? Up to this point, we are all extremely happy. We are experiencing something that no other Red Sox fan has experienced. We swept the Angels. We came back to defeat the Yankees in a most historic fashion, and now we are leading the World Series. If we win, I'll be hysterical. But when that hysteria ends, what will we have to look forward to? Every year I look forward to the baseball season because I know it'll bring me joy and pain, the hope that this is the year. Well if this is the year, what will happen the next year, and the year after that?

If the Red Sox win, they will have vanquished the curse that set their epic tale of tragedy into motion 86 years ago. No more curse. No more excuses why they never seem to get a break. Well then, what will we have to hang our frustrations on? Who will cause us the grief that we search for every year? Without an outlet, I fear that the Red Sox nation will lose its tradition of being the most downtrodden, irrationally optimistic fan base in all of sports. We love the abuse we receive, and we love coming back for more. With each, almost-there-but-didn't-quite-make-it season, we eagerly feed upon the anxiety, despair, hope and heartburn that the Red Sox dish out.

I guess what I'm trying to say is that with a World Series win the Red Sox will seem a little more human. Before, they were the stuff of myths. They were legends, a cursed team. Upon breaking that curse, they will resume their role in the baseball world. After that, what will they have to strive for, and what will we have? Every team wants to win a World Series. But how many want to win and break a century's long affliction?

Perhaps there will be the Curse of the Garciaparra. Perhaps in another 86 years Cubs fans will scream, "two thousand four" at Red Sox/Cubs games. All I know is that in Anaheim, a little boy's father left his family because angels or other ethereal beings aren't allowed to intervene in baseball games. (This is an actual MLB rule.) In New York, pigs are flying, and there are way more Jets fans than there used to be. In Boston, victory hungry fans are on the precipice of world domination. Like I said, "they might win."

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

All hail the infinite dollar

Elizabeth Carter

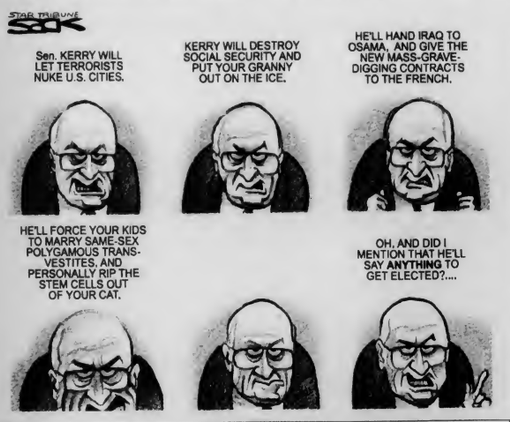
All hail the infinite dollar! Bow down before it, and lay waste to your decency, morality, ethics and soul. Sell yourself a cent at a time until you've got all the cents in the world and not a drop of sense left in your head. Take 'til you can take no more, and if taking means buying, then buy 'til you can buy no more; buy every lie they sell. Keep buying until you've bought into it all.

Incredible how a piece of paper could gain so much power over man, isn't it? But money isn't just any piece of paper, it's paper with value, paper with enough power to make a good man do bad things, and a bad man unleash hell on earth just to have it. It's incredible the sense and reason people will cast aside, incredible how responsibility toward one's fellow man is lost amidst the greedy green sight-stealing glow of the buck. Even more incredible is how much money this world has, and how little it is willing to use to help others. Yet mention the making of a bomb and they say, "A bomb for every man, woman, and child, a bomb to protect, a bomb to save, for in bombs we trust." Yet bombs enslave.

It's incredible how a piece of paper could gain so much power over man, isn't it? But money isn't just any piece of paper, it's paper with value, paper with enough power to make a good man do bad things.

Money: it's a crime. Oh sweet money, oh sweet lies, sing me a song again, dance with me and spin me 'round until I'm spinning so quickly I can no longer see, until I'm completely spinning out of control, but don't you let me go. I want your control. I need it. Because I, me, the part of myself that I own, is out of control. Oh infinite emerald deceiver, take me and my awareness away, dull my mind until I'm blind, until your lies have become my only truth. All I want is the infinite, and you, though solid, are the closest thing to infinity I can grasp in my highly evolved monkey paws.

Money, money, take me higher; you're a number in solid form; numbers never end; maybe if I covet you enough I will reach higher! Maybe if I have all the money to buy up all the things in all the world I'll be infinite too, or maybe I'll never own anything at all, for even if I have all the money in all the world, I will still never have myself. I will never own and understand my own awareness. Did I give up? Yes, yes I did, I sat down, ripped my still-beating heart out, slammed it on the auction block, then sold it to the highest bidder for the cheapest price, for any price is cheap when you're selling your soul.



I live in a world of prices, numbers and bottom lines. That line is unforgiving; that line crosses off names and splices dollar signs in half, and that line is all I hold onto these days. I live in a world of empty shells walking around in their high class suits, dressing themselves up as if that will make them less animal when they destroy in the name of nothing; all of them spending money as if it will amount to something in the end. Survival was not enough for me, taking money for what it is—money as a means of getting by, not as an ideal and a desperately needed imitation infinity—that simply was not enough.

For how is it that you purchase eternity? And you may ask who I am. I am the businessman with no morals, slashing jobs needlessly. "Gotta increase those profits," they say. But what profit is self-profit when you already have more than you need, when your self-profit destroys the livelihood of another? That doesn't sound like profit to me at all. Then he closes his eyes, and washes his hands like Pilate, as if blindness to bad deeds means innocence. No, no my friends, those with self imposed blindness in the name of "I" aren't less guilty, but rather suffer from a lack of personal responsibility.

Who am I? I am the lying politician whose soul has been purchased and paid for by interest groups who care more about their own benefit than the fate of those they affect. I am the Nothing Man, the man who stands for nothing, lives for nothing and goes about his days in the name of nothing. For that's all money is: you can buy all you want, but if you're empty inside, you'll never own a thing. Money is my fickle and unforgiving God, to whom I pay worship by making others fall down on their knees.

I am the plunderer; I am the wretched; I am the beginning of the end. I am the man who forgot that we become the things we do, yet most unfortunately of all, I am.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

STUDENT RUN SOUP KITCHEN IN THE MAKING

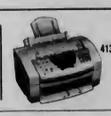
In response to the article printed on Oct. 25 titled, "Hundreds of Students Volunteer for the 16th annual 'Shelter Sunday Drive,'" I am writing to inform all students of MassPIRG's work on creating a Five College student-run Soup Kitchen. The work done this past Sunday by volunteers to raise money for shelters and soup kitchens in the Amherst/Northampton area is valiant and pressing work.

As the article mentioned, government cuts and a struggling economy have negatively affected local humanitarian organizations, and the obvious way to combat this problem is to raise money and volunteer to fill in the gaps. This is where the Five College Soup Kitchen comes into play.

Last year, MassPIRG student volunteers and professionals began to create the plan for students from UMass, Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, Smith and Hampshire to operate a totally student-run cooperative soup kitchen in Northampton. The overwhelming majority of shelters are located in Northampton and the city currently experiences the greatest number of days without the resources to provide hot meals to those unable to afford food for their families and themselves. Specifically, three nights a week shelters and soup kitchens are unable to provide hot meals to those who rely on them for survival.

The majority of those who rely on soup kitchens are children and families. Last year, research found that the average age of a homeless person in the Pioneer Valley area is six years old. This soup kitchen will be an excellent opportunity for students to create positive social change in their community while learning valuable lessons in activist work and organizing.

For the soup kitchen to be realized and up and running by next year, we need to raise the money to support its success. On Halloween, students will be out in the community, collecting cans and fundraising.



Furthermore, this week the SGA will be looking at supporting this effort financially. If you are interested in helping with this project you can call the MassPIRG office at 545-0199, or talk to your SGA senator in favor of the soup kitchen. Students have always been at the forefront of social change in America, and the creation of this soup kitchen is no different. Continue the good work done last Sunday, and utilize your ability to create positive social change for those who are otherwise unable to do so themselves.

Thomas Locke
MassPIRG campus organizer

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & COSBY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass welcomes Cosby home

Perf[illegible] lifetime

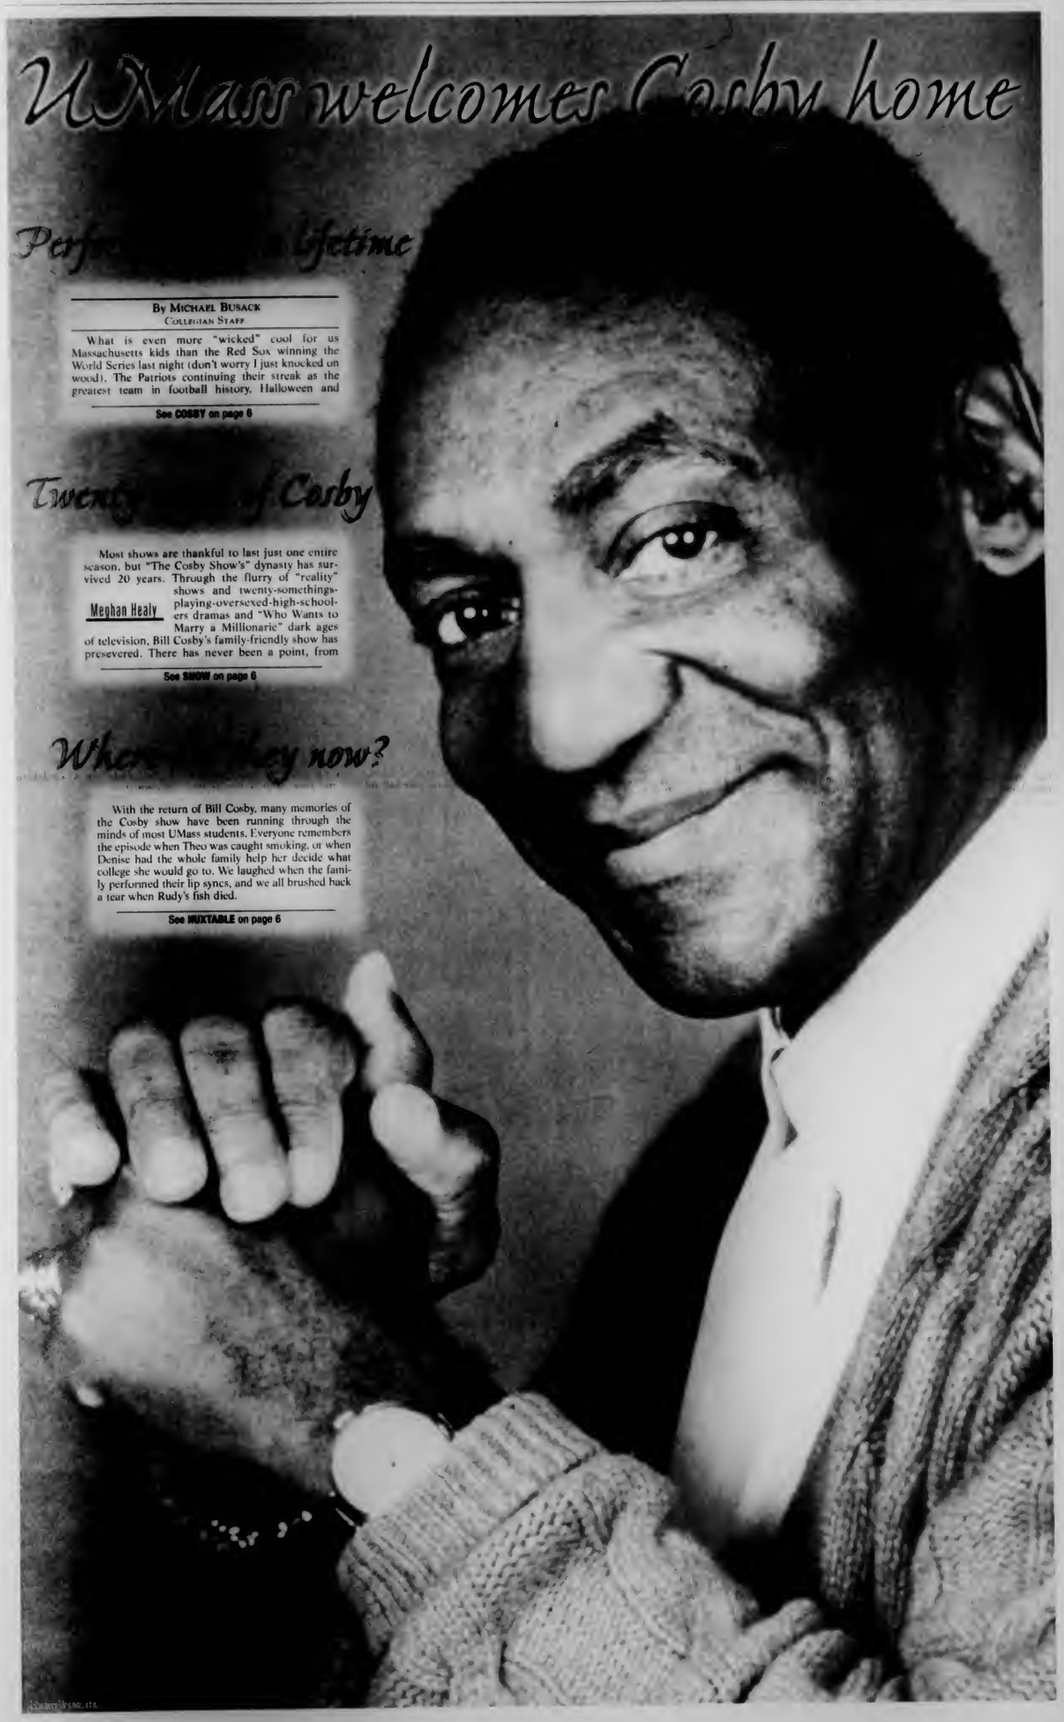
By Michael Busack
Collegian Staff

What is even more "wicked" cool for us Massachusetts kids than the Red Sox winning the World Series last night (don't worry I just knocked on wood). The Patriots continuing their streak as the greatest team in football history. Halloween and

See COSBY on page 6

Twenty[illegible] Cosby

Meghan Healy



Most shows are thankful to last just one entire season, but "The Cosby Show's" dynasty has survived 20 years. Through the flurry of "reality" shows and twenty-somethings-playing-oversexed-high-schoolers dramas and "Who Wants to Marry a Millionaire" dark ages of television, Bill Cosby's family-friendly show has prosevered. There has never been a point, from

See SHOW on page 6

Wha[illegible]ey now?

With the return of Bill Cosby, many memories of the Cosby show have been running through the minds of most UMass students. Everyone remembers the episode when Theo was caught smoking, or when Denise had the whole family help her decide what college she would go to. We laughed when the family performed their lip syncs, and we all brushed back a tear when Rudy's fish died.

See MIXTABLE on page 6

Where are Huxtables now?

HUXTABLE from page 5

Many of you might be wondering, what has happened since? Here is a quick rundown.

Phylicia Rashad (Clair Huxtable)

Since her reign as Clair Huxtable, mother and matriarch of the Cosby pack Phylicia Rashad has appeared in several made-for-television pieces. She was featured in "The Babysitter's Seduction," and the "Possession of Michael D."

Rashad has also starred in the film "Once Upon a Time ... When We Were Colored." In 1996, she again took a sitcom role with longtime television husband Bill Cosby. The two once again lit up the screen as a couple in "Cosby."

Most recently Rashad set a new benchmark for African American female actresses. She became the first African American woman to win a Tony Award for dramtic leading role. Rashad received the award for her performance as Lena Younger in Lorraine Hansbury's groundbreaking play, "A Raisin in the Sun."

Rashad is now performing in a stage version of August Wilson's "Gem of the Ocean."

Tempestt Bledsoe (Vanessa Huxtable)

Since her role as the pesky middle child, Vanessa Huxtable, Tempestt Bledsoe has taken a different route. She has starred in her own teen fitness video, as well as hosted a daytime talkshow titled, the "The Tempestt Bledsoe Show."

Bledsoe also graduated from NYU with a degree in finance.

To this day, Tempestt is still involved in acting, having performed in several off-Broadway productions and in several made for television movies.

She also had a role on "The Practice," as well as guest spots on "The Parkers," and "The Jenny McCarthy Show."

Lisa Bonet (Denise Huxtable)

Lisa Bonet was a good girl as Denise Huxtable on the Cosby Show, but she shed this image when she married rocker Lenny Kravitz.

Bonet starred in her very own "Cosby Show" spinoff, "A Different World," where she played a college student in her sophomore year at Hilman. Bonet left the sitcom in 1989 due to personal problems.

She returned to the "Cosby Show" for the final three seasons. In the 90s Bonet divorced Lenny Kravitz and played several lesser-acclaimed direct to video roles, but in 1998's she starred in "The Enemy of the State," and then the critically acclaimed "High Fidelity."

Bonet now calls Los Angeles home, where she lives with her children. She has directed several music videos and does a great deal of volunteer work with juvenile offenders.

Sabrina LaBeauf (Sondra Huxtable)

Oddly enough, Sabrina LeBeauf auditioned against Whitney Houston for the role of Sondra. After "The Cosby Show," LeBeauf pursued a career as an interior designer.

She since has made appearances on "Star Trek," and "Cosby." She has also had a guest apppearance on "The Howard Stern Show."

Currently, LaBeauf stars on a new cartoon created by Bill Cosby titled "Fatherhood." She plays the family's mother, Norma Bindlebeep.

Keshia Knight Pulliam (Rudy Huxtable)

Since "The Cosby Show," runty little Rudy has been up to what most kids do as a teenager, go to college.

In 2001, Pulliam graduated from Spellman College in Atlanta. She earned a degree in Sociology.

In 2001, she appeared on the game show, "The Weakest Link," in a special child star edition.

Malcom-Jamal Warner (Theo Huxtable)

Theo, the trouble-making, yet lovable son of the Huxtable family has perhaps enjoyed most of his success in the industry in his post-Cosby endeavors.

Since the end of the show, Warner has hosted shows like "CBS Daybreak," and "Tvtic Cafe." He also was a star the television series "Malcolm and Eddie."

He is also slated to star on the new sitcom, "Listen Up."

— Michael Busack

Cosby to perform at Mullins

COSBY from page 5

Homecoming all happening in the same week?

In a special tour performance, Bill Cosby will return to the University of Massachusetts tomorrow, and he is coming with bells on.

After receiving a bachelor's degree from Temple University, In 1977, Mr. Cosby became Dr. Cosby after earning a Doctorate in Education from the University of Massachusetts, and ever since has made yearly visits to his Alma Mater, and has also contributed much to the progress of African Americans and Americans alike. With over 30 years dedicated to comedy, Cosby is considered to be a legend, a man of mythic proportions to comedians young and.

Ever since his graduation from UMass, Cosby has continued to be a mentor. Through his comedy routines in the 1980s, "The Cosby Show" and spin-offs in the 1980s and 1990s, Cosby has continued to fight against racist stereotypes and beliefs. In an innovative way, he has fought to regain the rights of not just the African American family, but of all American families. Cosby's comedy has continued to show Americans that a comedian can be funny without swearing, people can be informative and funny, and a family can be independent, but it is the family that binds.

Bill Cosby
Tomorrow
8 p.m.
Mullins Center
$18, $40, $50, $75

Today, Cosby has many new endeavors. He recently has created a new television show "Parenthood," that is on the Nick at Nite Network. The 68 year old plans to not only come to UMass and visit, but he will also host an alumni fundraising dinner, and perform a comedy routine to a packed house at the Mullins Center.

It is not clear what Cosby will speak about. Perhaps he will touch upon recent comments that he has made about the need for more parents to take responsibility of their children.

"It is not all right for your 15-year-old daughter to have a child," Cosby said in a recent appearance in Milwaukee, Wisc. "I'm 67 years old. I'm not talking to you any different from a grandfather who would say, 'I wouldn't do that if I were you.'"

Many people hope to hear about Cosby's college days. For students that may have shared some of the very same experiences as the comedic legend, most believe it would be interesting to hear about Cosby's wild days.

No matter what Cosby talks about, there is one thing that is constant in his comedy: it's always funny. Throughout his career, Cosby has remained witty, on the mark, and interesting.

We can't wait — Cosby, come home!

What 'Cosby' means for TV families

SHOW from page 5

1984 until now, that "The Cosby Show" has not been on some channel somewhere.

It's hard to really grasp the affect that "The Cosby Show" has had on television or on its viewers. In the years that it has lived on in syndication, the sitcom has touched an increasingly large group of viewers. Although I was not old enough, nor were most of the University of Massachusetts current student body, to remember the show's debut or its subsequent rise into ratings history, I do very clearly remember watching reruns after school and more recently as part of the Nick at Nite line up before "Roseanne."

The longevity of the surprise success of UMass's most famous graduate is really in its honesty.

Twenty years ago television history was made. "The Cosby Show," made its premier in 1984, a wholesome sitcom following the lives of an African-American family no one could have expected that this show would 20 years later be regarded as one of the best shows of all-time. For nearly 10 seasons the Huxtable family came into the living rooms of families of all kinds across America.

As far as TV families go, the Huxtables were your average, squeaky clean clan. Mrs. Clair Huxtable was a successful lawyer and Dr. HeathcliffeHuxtable was a prominent obstetrician. They lived with their children, all five of them, in a nice house in New York City. Week in and week out viewers watched as the Huxtable clan tried, and always succeeded, to figure out the kinds of minor familial dilemmas that most of us wish were the big problems we had going on at home. It seemed like there was no lesson Sondra, Denise, Theo, Vanessa and Rudy — given thiry minutes — wouldn't learn. There were heart to hearts, family dinners and everything in between.

In truth the Huxtables were a little hoaky ... ok, a lot hoaky. But there is a reason that Cosby's blend of kid friendly humor and family storylines has surpassed the hundreds of sitcoms that have come and gone since "The Cosby Show" premeiered over 20 years ago.

The reason lies in the comedian's approach to these topics. Sure the Huxtables seemed too good to be true, but for some reason they were believeable nonetheless. Even if it wasn't the way your family interacted, it was the way their family interacted and that was enough. Cliff and Clair's humor and discussion-based brand of parenting shaped the conception of parenting for a generation.

The Huxtables didn't take themselves too seriously. Kids are funny, they do funny things and the approach that Clair and Cliff took to dealing with them worked on many levels. They didn't talk down to their children and all the kids watching from home appreciated that. The Huxtables showed real-life parents an alternate approach to childrearing and despite their perfect children and perfect jobs, it seemed like maybe they were on to something. It was worth a try.

That's not to say that "The Cosby Show" is perfect. It certainly isn't. Or that there isn't a fair amount of criticism out there for it. There is. UMass's own Professor Sut Jhally, who has recently made headlines for his film "Chasing Catastrophe," has written "Enlightened Racism: The Cosby Show, Audiences, and the Myth of the American Dream" along with Justin Lewis, exploring the show's racial and social implications.

It is possible too, that because of the perfection the Huxtables exuded the composition of the tv family was forever changed. No one seemed to be able to reach the level that Bill Cosby's show has while still maintaining a ring of truth. Shows like "Seventh Heaven" has tried, and failed. "Full House" tried, and failed. Countless others attempted to win our hearts over, none succeeded.

Love 'em or hate 'em "The Cosby Show" created a world with a perfect family, with perfect jobs, perfect problems and achieved the perfect television magic.

Meghan Healy is a Collegian editor.

NEWS FOR U.
In the Loop
www.umass.edu/loop UMassAmherst

Luciana Souza: Brazilian Duos

with Romero Lubambo, guitar
Thursday, November 4th
Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

Down Beat Critics Poll "Rising Star" for three years in a row and Grammy Award nominee for Best Vocal Jazz Album.

This performance is part of the Seventh Annual Billy Taylor Jazz Residency.

Sponsored by Fleet and The River 93.9

The Los Angeles Guitar Quartet

Center Series
Sunday, November 7th
Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

Along with LAGQ favorites, the program includes works from their new "The Guitar Heros" album with tributes to Zappa, Hendrix, Michael Hedges, Pat Metheny, Django Reinhardt, Chet Atkins, Pepe Romero and more.

Sponsored by Quality Inn and the Valley Advocate

Ying String Quartet

Beethoven Quartet Cycle
Sunday, November 21st
Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.

The Quartet will perform Beethoven's Opus 18, No. 1, Opus 18, No. 2 and Opus 130. Plan to join the Quartet for a pre-concert talk at 6:45 p.m. Viennese coffee and desserts will be available for purchase.

For Tickets: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM

THE FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST

HOMECOMING.
NOT A GOOD TIME TO BE MISTAKEN FOR THE OPPOSING TEAM.

Gear up with the best selection of homecoming apparel around.

CELEBRATE HOMECOMING WEEKEND WITH FRUGAL FRIDAY!

Join us for our Special Sales Event
ONE DAY ONLY!
Friday Nov. 12th

Buy 1 clothing or gift item and get an item of equal or lesser value 50% OFF!*

*Does not apply to sale items, reg./fair priced merchandise only. Not valid with any other offer.

UMASS AMHERST
University Store and Textbook Annex
Phone: (413)545-2619
Fax: (413)545-4396

efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

Use of pepper guns coming under fire

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — At least one big-city police department has suspended use of pepper-spray pellet guns blamed for the death of a 21-year-old college student who was shot by police trying to quell a rowdy crowd of Red Sox fans last week.

The Seattle Police Department said it had immediately suspended use of the equipment until it can determine what happened in Boston and gather more information on the firearm that was blamed for the death of Victoria Snelgrove, who was shot with a pellet in the eye after police fired into a crowd of revelers.

Seattle Police spokesman Scott Moss said that the guns are restricted to only a few selected and trained personnel and have not yet been used.

Other police departments around the country said they have found the so-called "less-than-lethal" weapons to be effective and would keep them in use. Boston police, who acquired the weapons in preparation for this summer's Democratic National Convention, have shelved them at least temporarily and have gone back to using a previous version of the pepper-spray pellet guns.

"We've used it on six occasions and haven't had any problems with it," said Sgt. Carlos Rojas, of the Santa Ana Police Department in California. "We've tested it and we feel it's an adequate weapon."

The reassessment comes as the Boston Police Department girds itself for another potential Sox-inspired frenzy, with the hometown team standing on the brink of World Series victory against the St. Louis Cardinals. The Red Sox had their first chance to clinch Wednesday night.

Snelgrove was among an estimated 80,000 fans who swarmed Kenmore Square last week after the Red Sox beat the rival New York Yankees in the ALCS, to send it to its first World Series since 1986.

Officers lired into a crowd of fans near the backside of the Green Monster left-field wall, striking Snelgrove in the face and at least two others. Paul Gately, 24, of Cambridge was struck in the face, requiring stitches to patch a hole in his cheek, as well as several times in his torso, leaving bruises and welts. Kapila Bhamidipati, of Bridgewater, N.J., was struck in the temple and said doctors had to remove small pieces of plastic from his forehead and found a large piece embedded under his skin.

Within 24 hours of Snelgrove's death, Boston Police Commissioner Kathleen O'Toole suspended use of the pepper guns, which fires a pellet of pepper spray.

Several days later, O'Toole tapped former U.S. Attorney Donald K. Stern to lead an independent panel that will investigate the case.

As the state's top federal prosecutor, Stern prosecuted mob figures and pursued a tax-evasion case against former state House Speaker Charles Flaherty. After leaving the U.S. Attorney's Office in 2001, Stern led an investigative commission that found the Suffolk County sheriff's office was rife with management problems and political patronage.

O'Toole called Stern in London on Tuesday, where he was traveling on business, to ask him to head the investigation into the police role in Snelgrove's death.

"He just needed to know that it would be an open an honest and thorough investigation. She assured him it would be, and he said OK," said Hank Shafran, a spokesman for Bingham McCutchen, Stern's law firm.

Virginia-based FN Herstal, which manufactures the FN303 weapon used in Boston, said there have been no comparable incidents since the gun went on the market about two years ago.

"We have had no other instance in any other deployments where anyone has been seriously injured or killed," said Bucky Mills, deputy director of law enforcement sale, marketing and training.

Mills said a "couple hundred" law enforcement agencies have purchased the guns, including New York City and Washington, D.C., as well as several federal agencies.

Charles "Sid" Heal, a commander with the Los Angeles Sheriff's Department and an international expert on less-than-lethal force, said the only thing that stopped his department from buying the weapon was its cost — about $900 per launcher.

Chris Smither brings the blues to NoHo

By Peter Blandino
Collegian Staff

Contemporary blues artist, Chris Smither, will play back-to-back shows at Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall this Friday and Saturday night. Although Smither's art is deeply rooted in folk music and the blues, this New Orleans native is truly an American original. His voice, guitar work, and profound lyrics leave a lasting impression on his listeners. Perhaps this is why Smither's fan base has continued to grow since his emergence in the late sixties.

At age eight, Smither's found a ukulele in his attic. His Uncle Howard provided him with his first musical instruction. "With two chords, you can learn a lot of the songs you hear on the radio," Uncle Howard pontificated. "With three you can rule the world."

Though these were important lessons, Smither's would later be influenced heavily by legendary bluesmen, Lightnin' Hopkins, and Mississippi John Hurt. He was first introduced to Hopkins while studying at the American University in Mexico City, where a friend played him "Blues in My Bottle."He first encountered Hurt through music recorded at Newport in 1963. Two years later, Smither would see his hero perform live at the Gaslights in New York City. Nearly forty years later, in his latest album, "Train Home," Smither pays tribute to John Hurt with a splendid rendition of "Candy Man."

"Train Home," released in 2003 by High Tone Records, is a highly stylized acoustic album. Four of the album's 11 tracks are covers, including Dave Carter's "Crocodile Man," and Bob Dylan's "Desolation Row." Bonnie Raitt lends her vocals to the latter track, which is a highlight of the album.

The original numbers are characterized by captivating lyrics sung with a mix of harshness and sweetness. Smither's distinct finger picking style sounds deceptively simple, and adds an ethereal texture to each song. Songs such as "Never Needed It More, Let it Go", and "Call Time," stand out among this mix of delicacy and force as particularly luminous compositions.

Chris Smither is an internationally acclaimed blues musician. His style and lyrics are as impressive as they are original. He is an artist who leaves his listeners with a certain ineffable presence with the conclusion of each performance. Since the sixties, Smither has been perfecting his art, and now must be considered a master. Each song sets a strange mood, and can relocate the listener to realms previously unknown. He does not overpower you with sound. His strength is subtle. His artwork creeps inside your head, and then expands.

Blues, folk music, poetry — Smither excels is a true artist in all three of these mediums. Check him out this weekend, either on Friday or Saturday night. Tickets are $20 at the door, $17.50 in advance.

Information obtained for www.smither.com was used in this article.

Chris Smither
Tomorrow, Saturday 7p.m.
Iron Horse
Northampton
$17.50, $20

COURTESY SMITHER.COM

Blues musician Chris Smither will play two shows at the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton tomorrow and Saturday at 7 p.m.

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST

HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS

Free Legal Advice, Referrals Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students

Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes

CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

$20 off all Danskos
Wednesday, Oct. 27th through Saturday, Oct. 30th

ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes and Accessories for Women.
downtown Amherst

2 DAYS LEFT!

Eve wonders, 'Why can't we be friends?'

Original Sin

Eve

Why do the guys in my life always seem to do the opposite of what I really want? I feel as though no one is listening to me. I have specifically told one guy I had been seeing that I cannot commit, and yet he tries harder. Since then, any new guys I do meet always initiate conversations regarding us in the future. And whenever I pull away, all of them seem to hold tighter.

What is so difficult to understand? I do not have time or room for a serious companion at the moment. And I am sure others around campus might agree with this philosophy. So what is the need to be repeatedly denied? Maybe it is a physiological game that has yet to be mastered. Or maybe it is a challenge to be the first at winning me over. Whatever it is, they are wasting their time.

The last thing I want to do is hurt anyone. I recently ended a very beautiful relationship that had moved too quickly, but it was the right thing to do for the both of us. Once I had come to terms with my decision, I felt as though the time had come to start casually dating again. But I have noticed that the fun in casual dating can have negative effects. My options are either the guys with only one intention, or the guys that would eventually want more. But little did I know there were other possibilities I had not considered — like my co-worker, for instance.

He was a story waiting to happen for as long as I can remember. I personally believe he is capable of being a great guy, contrary to what people might say. We have known each other for two years, and I am fully aware of his not-so-admirable reputation. But I assumed he would behave respectfully because our friendship was different. The very first encounter began one night at the bars. We happened to be at the same place with different people, and ended up locking lips with each other. Our actions were harmless — at the time — until it happened again. For some reason, other people knew about it, too. I was aware that he has tendencies to talk a lot, but how can someone be that insecure? It was as if he needed to prove he has a purpose in life. My initial reaction of disgust lasted momentarily.

A few days later, I ran into him again, and he tried to explain himself. He explained himself in detail, our details, and as loud as he could. Suddenly, I heard a girl say, "What? You did that? How could you?" Her arms were crossed tightly, and she stood on the side waiting for an answer. I was speechless. He turned toward her and came up with one of the saddest excuses I had ever witnessed, "Don't be silly, we are talking about someone from work." We both looked at him as if he really thought that would save him, and she walked away.

I stayed to give him just a little more hell. "Why didn't you tell me you were seeing someone? And why are you bragging about our business if you are cheating?" He looked away and said, "We will talk about this later, OK?" and he left. Suddenly it all became clear. She must have trapped him in this situation if he is so desperate to get out of it. He has never been the type to commit long-term, and that is why I assumed our actions were innocent, but he put himself in this situation. I have noticed lately that I have other friends that are beginning to feel trapped also.

And why don't they break up? Because no one wants to be the bad guy.

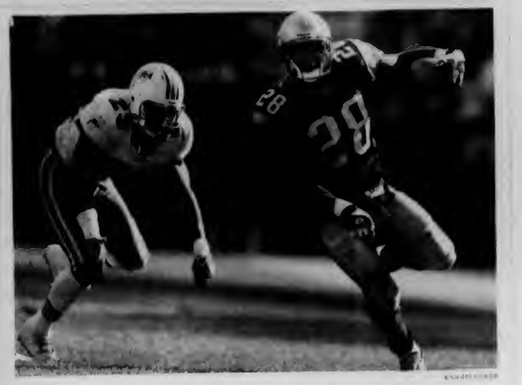
So they cheat, they lie, they push away, until the other half makes the inevitable decision. Yet, someone still gets hurt. Do couples really prefer to be miserable together than alone? It is heartbreaking to acknowledge this reality, if it holds true. I refuse to be a part of this vicious cycle.

Eve is a Collegian columnist.

SCARED YOU WON'T FIND A CO-OP OR INTERNSHIP FOR THIS SPRING?

Take the first step and come to a Field Experience Welcome Session!

TODAY! Thursday, October 28
3:00 pm
508 Goodell Building



Monday, November 1
3:00 pm
508 Goodell Building

and most Mondays and Thursdays

For more information, go to www.umass.edu/careers or call 545-2224

CareerServices

21 and counting...

Corey Dillon, shown carrying the ball against Miami earlier in the season, will look to lead the Patriots to their 22nd consecutive win when they travel to Heinz Field to face Pittsburgh on Sunday.

PROJECTED STARTERS

Offense
QB 10 - Tim Day, Sophomore
RB 5 - Steve Baylark, Junior
FB 40 - Rich Demers, Senior
WR 11 – Jason Peebler, Senior
TE 44 – Mike Douglas, Junior
LT 77 – Colin Stoelzel, Junior LG 74 – Rob Kane, Senior (Captain
C 62 – Alex Miller, Sophomore
RG 73 – David Thompson, Sophomore
RT 68 – Matt Austin, Freshman
WR 4 – Brandon London, Sophomore

Defense
DE 95 – Keron Williams, Junior
DT 57 – Justin Schweighardt, Junior
DT 99 – Wilner Alexis, Freshman
DE 48 – David Burris, Freshman
OLB 35 – L.A. Love, Junior
MLB 51 – Serge Tikum, Junior
OLB 29 – Brad Anderson, Junior
CB 26 – Tracy Belton, Sophomore
FS 34 – Shannon James, Junior
SS 7 – James Ihedigbo, Sophomore
CB 34 – Brandon Freeman, Freshman

Special Teams
K 33 – Matt Goldstein, Senior
P 13 – Christian Koegel, Sophomore
KR 11 – Jason Peebler, Senior
PR 87 – Nathanael Hasselbeck, Junior

Offense
QB 19 – Ron Whitcomb, Sophomore
RB 21 – Marcus Williams, Senior
FB 40 – Kenneth Henry, Sophomore
WR 1 - Christian Pereira, Senior
TE 80 – Josh Radulski, Junior
LT 72 – Ryan Bird, Junior
LG 52 – Evign Dodge, Junior
C 62 – Ben Lazarski, Junior
RG 68 – Mikle Leconte, Senior
RT 73 – Mark Lehner, Senior WR 8 – Ryan Waller, Junior

Defense
DE 30 – Kurt Bulwith, Junior
DT 55 – Pat Pa'u, Senior
DT 90 – Mike DeVito, Sophomore
DE 99 – Marcus Walton, Senior
LB 38 – Jermaine Walker, Junior
LB 11 – Agean Robinson, Senior
CB 2 – Devon Goree, Senior
SS 17 – Joan Quezada, Junior
FS 47 – Daren Stone, Sophomore
SS 4 – Brandon McGowan, Senior
CB 20 – John Baumgartner, Senior

Special Teams
K 12 - Mike Mellow, Senior
P 12 - Mike Mellow, Sophomore
KR 6 - Arel Gordon, Sophomore
PR 5 – Kevin McMahan, Junior

Dukes, Owls battle for crown

ATLANTIC 10 from page 10

22. Temple sophomore defenseman Chris Shelton scored the first goal of his career to beat number one Duquesne 1-0. Senior keeper Patrick Hannigan was stellar in saving four shots to record his 16th career shutout for the Owls.

On Sunday Temple kept playing good fundamental soccer with a 2-0 victory over St. Bonaventure on Senior Day. Sophomore midfielder Ryan McMullan and senior forward Nate Webb both scored early in the second half on the Bonnies freshman keeper Jonathan Blanchard who recorded six saves in relief of the injured starter Sean Fyde.

These two consecutive wins move Temple within one win of Duquesne for the conference crown with three games left to play.

A homecoming for Williams

WILLIAMS from page 10

eve on where Williams always is on the field. His 16 receptions for 146 yards also make him a receiving threat out of the backfield.

"[Maine coach Jack Cosgrove] wants to establish the run game, and let everything else come off of that," Brown said. "And with the threat of the run, the play-action game can become more effective and get the opportunities with deep shots and scenarios down the field. Because of his philosophy, it gives [Williams] a chance to be a marquee player."

Ihedigbo is one UMass defender who would certainly like to limit Maine's play-action game by sticking it to his former teammate.

He is one of the core members of UMass' young secondary, which is also the backbone of the team's defense. Ihedigbo spent most of his time last season at free safety, registering 74 tackles, four interceptions, three forced fumbles and two fumble recoveries.

Last week against Rhode Island, he may have been his best performance of the year. He recorded six tackles, including 1.5 tackles for loss, and recovered quarterback Jayson Davis' fumble late in the second half that appeared to seal the game for the Minutemen.

"I think his play has been solid, not spectacular, but very solid," Brown said. "Once he settled into a rhythm (on Saturday), he played extremely well against the option attack."

Perhaps the duo's most gratifying day together as teammates was when they helped carry Amherst Regional High School to a Super Bowl victory in 1999 when Ihedigbo was a sophomore and Williams a junior.

There will clearly be more on the line than just a conference victory for these two on Saturday, and Williams can even set another milestone during his return trip to Amherst.

If he can rush for 100 yards against UMass' undersized defensive line, Williams will hold the Maine record for most 100-yard rushing performances throughout a career.

With a performance like that, Williams could make this trip to Amherst his personal homecoming.

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
The #1 place to develop your Halloween Pictures
Try our NEW digital camera
Bring your digital pictures & have them on CD!
We feature many discount packages- JUST ASK US!
Also, ask about our student discount. Valid Student ID required. Amherst locations ONLY!

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!
Open Hours:
Mon - Thur: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Fri & Sat: 11:30am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12pm-10pm
Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Chinese Luncheon Specials
Served Mon thru Sun.: 11:30 am to 3:00 pm
L1. Chicken w. Broccoli ... $5.25
L2. Chicken w. Cashew Nuts ... $5.25
L3. Chicken w. Mixed Vegs ... $5.25
L4. Sweet & Sour Chicken ... $5.25
L5. Curry Chicken ... $5.25
L6. Chicken w. Garlic Sauce ... $5.25
L7. Ginger Chicken w. String Beans ... $5.25
L8. Espresso Chicken ... $5.50
L9. Ma-La Chicken ... $5.50
L10. House Special Chicken ... $5.50
Sushi: Maki Rolls
Veggie Maki (Vegetables) $3.95
Kappa Maki (Cucumber) $2.95
Oshinko Maki (Japanese Pickle) $2.95
Avocado Maki $2.95
Asparagus Maki $2.95
Nato Maki (Fermented Soy Beans) $3.50
Tekka Maki (Tuna) $3.95
California Maki (Crab Meat, Avocado & Cucumber) $3.95
Alaska (Salmon, Avocado & Cucumber) $4.25
Spicy Tuna (Tuna & Cucumber in Spicy Sauce) $4.5
Spider Roll (Fried Softshell Crab & Onion in Cream)

GreatGifts
The Mercantile Bandanas
Eye Patches
Accessories
Masks
Wild Hats
BOO
Fun Stuff Candles
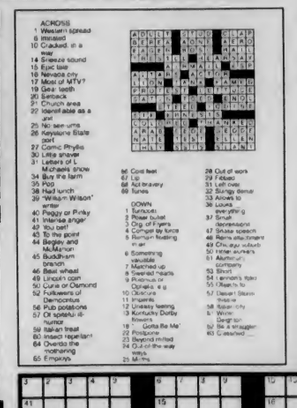
Incense
Rings
Bracelets
Chains
Tapestries
Earrings
Hours 10 am-6pm Th-Fri 9pm Sun 12-6
Amherst-11 E.Pleasant-Carriage Shops
Northampton-108Main St.

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
From "Saturday Night Live" and the movies "Anger Management", "Happy Gilmore" and "The Wedding Singer"
KEVIN NEALON
NOV. 12TH
"Jeff Greene" on HBO's "Curb Your Enthusiasm"
JEFF GARLIN
NOVEMBER 5TH
NOV. 13TH
a.k.a. "Dr. Dirty"
JOHN VALBY

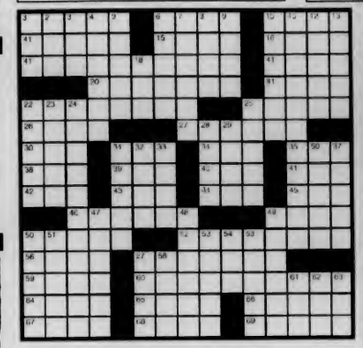
• NIKOUKARI CHARRON MAHONEY PC •
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
• Family Law Matters
• Criminal - OUI
• Immigration
• Landlord/Tenant Matters
Mondana Nikoukari, Esq.
Samuel L. Charron, Esq.
Christopher K. Mahoney, Esq.
2 Mattoon Street • Springfield, MA 01105
737-8008
www.ncm-pc.com

McMurphy's
7th Annual
Kegs & Eggs
Homecoming Celebration
Saturday October 30th
Doors Open at 10 am NO COVER
Free food and prizes!
Free Breakfast Buffet
Proof of Age Required

ignite your appetite
India House
tuesday - Sunday
45 State Street
Northampton
586-6344



the food's the thing
!
cha cha cha
lunch + dinner
134 main st n'ton
586-7311



ACROSS
1 Western spread
6 Wasted
10 Cracked, in a way
14 Sneeze sound
15 Epic tale
16 Nevada city
17 Most of MTV?
19 Gear teeth
20 Setback
21 Church area
22 Handfasle as a unit
25 No see-ums
26 Keystone State sch.
27 Comic Phyllis
30 Little shaver
31 Letters of L. Michaels show
34 Boy in the farm
35 Pod
38 Had lunch
39 "William Wilson" writer
40 Peggy or Pinky
41 Intense anger
42 You bet!
43 To the point
44 Begley and McMahon
45 Buddhism beacon
46 Basil wheat
48 Lincoln coin
50 Curve or Diamond
52 Purveyors of Democritus
56 Pub potations
57 Of spiteful ill-humor
58 Italian treat
60 Insect repellant
64 Overdo the mothering
65 Emporia
66 Cool feet
67 Up
68 Act bravely
69 Tunes
DOWN
1 Turnouts
2 Power (up)
3 Org. of Tigers
4 Romped by force
5 Roman footing in air
6 Something valuable
7 Matched up
8 Revered Hearts
9 Sweetie-o-s
Opinions
11 Imperils
12 Uneasy feeling
13 Kentucky Derby fixtures
18 "... Gotta Be Me"
22 Postpone
23 Beyond limited
24 Out-of-the-way
28 Out of work
29 7-Elevn
31 Left over
32 Sprigs dense
33 Arrows to 36 Lovers everything
37 Small
39 Serenades
47 Skates sidestepper
48 Bellyaching
49 Chi-square subject
50 Inner workers
51 Aluminum company
53 Short
54 Lennon's lyric
55 Reacts to
57 Desert Storm missile
58 Solon city
59 "Winnie-Dee" singer
61 Be 4 a snapper
63 Crawford

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
AB
The place where there's always fun and entertainment brewin'!
October 28th
Dani Linnetz
acoustic rock
October 25th
Mentos & the New Horizon
Reggae
November 1st
Amherst Jazz Orchestra
8:30-11PM
NFL FOOTBALL ON A 61" WIDE SCREEN TV WITH FREE BUFFET RAFFLE AT HALFTIME www.amherstbrewing.com

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
The grace period is over. Now it's back to normal.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Today your smile will spark someone's interest.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
You think you lost something, but you didn't really. It's somewhere very obvious.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Remember to drink water today.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
You're going to get an surprise package in the mail.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your Halloween costume needs a few creative touches. It's a bit lackluster now.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You need to participate if you expect anything.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You really should have watched the game last night.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You need to get a few more comfy pillows to sleep with.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You need to work on communicating your feelings in a more straightforward way.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You're going to make a beautiful Guinness bottle this Halloween.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You're not living up to your full potential. Maximize yourself.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Boston's greatest baseball player has been cast adrift. George H. Ruth, the middle initial apparently standing for "Hercules," maker of home runs and the most colorful star in the game today, became the property of the New York Yankees yesterday afternoon."

-John J. Hallahan, The Boston Globe, Jan. 6, 1920

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE
Ask for Advertising @ 545-3500

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

1 Bdrm, Util included, furnished / unfurnished 720/month 10 Min from UMass Bus Rt 665-4791 665-2203

AUTO FOR SALE

Chevrolet Malibu 2000 70,000 loaded, excellent condition $5,300/best offer 413-687-4449

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Part time employment, flexible hours – earn $30 per hour or more with travel benefits Call 908-431-1900 Ext 115.

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

Parking Attendant Part-time early evening position Must be 18 Years Old and Have your own vehicle $10.50 per hour, apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Avenue Northampton

EMPLOYMENT

Driver Wanted 2 to 5 hours/week $15/hour plus mileage. Driving an elderly woman around 207-361-2695 agafool@aol.com

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

EMPLOYMENT

Make money at home taking surveys! Is this possible? Find out the truth at www.TruthAboutSurveys.com

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

Snow Plowing
It's not too early to think about snow! Call MR. PLOW today for subscription plowing. Space is limited. MR PLOW is a student run business 978-884-7102

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endless-summertours.com

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

TRAVEL

MONTREAL
Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most Weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRVMC Online
1.800.426.7710

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 28, 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Home, sweet home

UMass to host No. 19 Maine after four straight road games

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

For four consecutive weeks, the Massachusetts football team was on the move. Friday mornings consisted of bus trips and plane rides, afternoons of practices on unfamiliar fields and evenings of hotel check-ins and position meetings in uninspiring conference rooms. Saturdays, meanwhile, brought new challenges of every shape and size from locales as far away as Virginia and as close as Eastern Massachusetts.

A young football team in the first year of a new system, it was a difficult yet valuable stretch — one that will undoubtedly go a long way in the maturation processes of the team's many inexperienced players.

At the same time, however, UMass coach Don Brown and his players will never shy away from the fact that all they ever want to do is win football games — wherever, whenever and against whomever they may be. On Saturday, that opportunity will be there; the opportunity to win a football game that matters significantly in any context or situation, and to do so on Homecoming in front of the friends, family and fans that love and support the Minutemen no matter their record.

For the 51st time in the storied history of two of Division I-AA's elite programs, UMass and Maine will meet on the gridiron again in a series that dates back to 1908. Kickoff is slated for 1 p.m.

"It's been a very difficult stretch for us, there's no doubt about that," Brown said. "The one thing I've been pleased with is that the effort has always been there; the guys have always played hard and given it their all.

"It's good for us as a team to finally be home and play in front of our fans, and it will certainly help us to be back in familiar surroundings."

While the Minutemen will certainly relish the chance to return home, the challenge on the football field this weekend may be as great as any they've faced in I-AA play this year. Despite a somewhat misleading 4-3 overall record and a 2-2 mark in A-10 play, Jack Cosgrove's Black Bears are a force to be reckoned with, especially on offense where the young UMass defenders will be facing their third drastically different system in as many weeks.

"Having to give the guys another completely different look to defend is obviously difficult for them," Brown said. "We went from New Hampshire where they threw the ball all over the place, to Rhode Island and the triple option and now this weekend where they shift and move all over the place.

"It's going to be a challenge for our guys."

Maine's offense, which features a myriad of shifts and motion before every play, is complemented by a collection of skill position players that rival any in the conference and in I-AA as well. Led by former Amherst Regional star tailback Marcus Williams and reigning A-10 Rookie of the Year Ron Whitcomb, along with speedy wide receiver Christian Pereira, the Black Bears are a dynamic force moving the football, one that Brown sees as similar in style to his own attack.

"What they try to do in terms of establishing the run is a lot like how our offense is designed," Brown said. "They want to establish the run with Williams and base their passing game off of that. It's up to us to play our game and stop the run and look to throw them off passing the ball."

Stopping Williams will clearly be easier said than done. A preseason second team All-American, a 2003 All-Conference first team selection and a finalist for the Walter Payton Award given to the best offensive player at the I-AA level, Williams was voted team MVP by his teammates last season after rushing for 1,284 yards and moving up to third on the school's all-time rushing list.

This season, Williams has rushed for 732 yards and six touchdowns, and has combined with Pereira to score nearly twice as many touchdowns as the rest of the squad collectively.

"He's a good back, a guy who runs hard and is tough to bring down," Brown said. "We need to play physical, know what we're doing out there and finish our tackles to be successful."

Whitcomb also posses a major challenge for UMass, as the second-year quarterback has grown considerably since last season's 24-16 UMass victory in Orono. Having completed 121-of-194 passes for 1,243 yards and 16 touchdowns, Whitcomb's efficiency rating sits at a whopping 154.13.

"He's good in their system," Brown said. "He manages the game well, makes his throws and gets the ball in the hands of his playmakers.

"Our defensive backs are ready, and have to play a solid game to keep guys in front of them."

NOTES: Linebacker Charles Walker is back practicing with the team, and may see action on Saturday. In addition, defensive lineman Jason Leonard will once again be out with a separated shoulder while defensive back R.J. Cobbs is back in practice but may not play Saturday.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Senior fullback Rich Demers and the Minutemen return home after a four-game road trip to host rival Maine for Homecoming. UMass was last at home for a 21-7 September 25 loss to Delaware.

GAME DAY CENTRAL

No. 19 Maine	Massachusetts
(4-3 Overall 2-2 Atlantic 10)	(3-5 Overall 1-4 Atlantic 10)
Last Week: Defeated Northeastern 35-26	Last Week: Lost to Rhode Island 27-24

Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium – Amherst, Massachusetts (17,000/Grass)
Kickoff: 1 p.m.

Television: None

Radio: UMass Football Radio Network – WRNX 100.9 FM Holyoke, flagship (Bob Behler; play-by-play, Doug White; color commentary, Johnson Owumi; sidelines)
UMass Student Radio – WMUA 91.1 FM Amherst (Derek Volner; play-by-play, Marc Bertrand; color commentary)
Maine Radio – WZON 620 AM Bangor, Maine (Rich Kimball; play-by-play, Bob Lucy; color commentary, Clem LaBree; sidelines)

Series record: UMass leads 36-13-1
Series in Amherst: UMass leads 16-3
Last meeting: UMass 24 Maine 16 September 20, 2003 in Orono, ME

Former Amherst Regional star returns

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

Everyone is coming home this weekend.

The Massachusetts football team (3-5, 1-4 Atlantic 10), which just suffered a 1-3 road trip and is stuck in a midseason rut, is returning to McGuirk Alumni Stadium for the first time in over a month.

And Marcus Williams will celebrate the University of Massachusetts' Homecoming Weekend with the rest of the students as he returns for his final collegiate game against UMass. Williams, an Amherst native, has since traveled five hours north only to become one of the greatest tailbacks in Maine's history.

Being one of the greatest of anything hasn't been anything new for Williams, who left Amherst Regional High School as the program's all-time leading rusher, surpassing 3,000 yards, scoring 37 touchdowns and averaging over 10 yards per game in his high school career. As the team's captain, he also played on the defensive side of the ball, splitting time between linebacker and safety.

Don't expect Williams to take part in the Homecoming festivities, though, as he is still returning to face a team that did not seriously recruit him out of high school even though UMass was his school of preference.

Though his was a huge void to fill when he graduated, UMass redshirt sophomore strong safety James Ihedigbo took over the reigns and rushed for 1,012 yards and 18 touchdowns as a senior while also comprising over 2,000 all-purpose yards and being named the team's defensive MVP.

The two former Amherst high school studs will meet once again on different sides of the field on Saturday when Maine (4-3, 2-2 A-10) visits UMass at 1 p.m., and Ihedigbo and company are aware of the challenge they are about to face.

"(Ihedigbo) has briefly talked about (Williams) in practice, and obviously, (Williams) is a marquee back," UMass coach Don Brown said. "Our guys are excited about the challenge of stopping him."

Stopping Williams has been something that not many football teams have been able to accomplish since his days of playing just down the street from McGuirk. A four-year contributor at Maine, Williams has rushed for 3,548 yards in his collegiate career as of last week's game against Northeastern when he totaled 137 yards on the ground.

Williams is also looking to pick up some hardware. He was The Sports Network's Preseason Second Team All-American, and he is one of 16 candidates on the watch-list for the Walter Payton Award, which is given to the best offensive player in Division I-AA.

He is the only player in Maine history to run for 1,000 yards in two different seasons, and with 685 yards through seven games, he is on pace to do it for a third consecutive year.

Just his presence in the backfield alone will make opposing defenses keep an extra

See WILLIAMS on page 8

George Washington back on track in A-10

By Matt Burke
Collegian Correspondent

The Colonials of George Washington University were down and out after a loss to first place Duquesne on Oct. 15. They were considered to be one of the worst teams in the Atlantic 10. Since then, they have won their last three conference games and have clawed their way back into contention for a playoff berth. At 4-8-3 overall and 3-3-2 in the A-10, George Washington has scored victories against St. Bonaventure, Xavier, and most recently the fourth place Flyers of Dayton.

Although they played well at the end of the first half against Dayton, the Colonials trailed 1-0 at halftime. George Washington came out swinging in the second half. Junior midfielder/forward Frank Ambrosio scored two goals, one in the 64th minute and another in the 73rd. Junior defenseman Ben Mortimer then scored on a penalty kick to seal the 3-1 victory for George Washington in the 82nd minute after the Dayton keeper was ejected for a foul in the box.

Ambrosio has three goals and three assists on the season for the struggling Colonials. Mortimer also has three goals. Junior keeper Derek Biss had four saves in victory while Dayton's Steve Ladislaw had two prior to his ejection.

George Washington may have started winning too late as they are now in seventh place with three games to go. The playoffs will be held at their home field, and if they have hopes of playing as opposed to watching the games from the sidelines, they will surely have to win their last three contests.

On Friday they host No. 2 Temple, and while beating the Owls would have seemed impossible three weeks ago, with the Colonials momentum and their home fans they may get by with a victory. Then on Sunday, St. Joseph's comes to town, and after that their last game will be played on the road at Richmond.

George Washington could do the impossible and salvage their season with three more conference victories. If they do, it will have been an incredible comeback.

Rhode Island Back on Track

The only way to beat Rhode Island is to stop the nation's leading scorer, senior forward Sasha Gotsmanov. Gotsmanov scored his 17th goal of the season to beat Fordham 2-1 Sunday at Fordham. Gotsmanov leads a special Rhode Island squad that is now 10-5-1 overall and 5-2-1 in the A-10.

Gotsmanov headed in his fourth game-winner of the season with 5:32 left to play in the first half, in what became one of the most exciting A-10 games of the year. The Fordham Rams (1-5-2 A-10, 3-10-2 overall) refused to go quietly against a dominating Rhode Island offense. After slowing down the URI scoring machine and forcing their defense to be the deciding factor Fordham's defense then stepped up their pressure as well.

URI's Danleigh Borman put the Rhode Island Rams ahead 12 minutes into the contest but Fordham quickly countered with a Scott Felius header. After eight minutes of scoreless soccer Gotsmanov got his chance to put URI ahead for good. The two teams then played an intense scoreless second half.

This is Rhode Island's second win in a row after a loss to Dayton on Oct. 17.

Coach Ed Bradley became Rhody's winningest coach on Oct. 22 as the Rams downed La Salle 4-2. Gotsmanov scored two goals in that game and Bradley notched his 176th victory.

Friday the Rams play No. 1 Duquesne at home. Then they host St. Bonaventure and Massachusetts to finish up their season. Massachusetts and Duquesne will be tough games for the Rams but they have momentum and are a favorite to win the league.

Duquesne Remains No. 1 but Temple Closes In Duquesne stays atop the A-10 despite a loss to Temple on Oct.

See ATLANTIC 10 on page 8

NOTICE

The Daily Collegian will feature a special back page tommorow and a commemorative wrap on Monday to celebrate the Boston Red Sox 2004 World Series Championship.

Find some Tricks & Treats this Halloween
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

TODAY: High: 58, Low: 45 | SATURDAY: High: 64, Low: 51 | SUNDAY: High: 62, Low: 41
DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

The Collegian looks back at the World Series Champs
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2004 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 38

Red Sox win brings celebration

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

A deafening roar of cheers and a colorful display of fireworks marked the beginning of a largely peaceful celebration in Southwest Residential Area late Wednesday night, as approximately 3,000 students flocked from their dorms to celebrate the Boston Red Sox victory in the World Series.

"It's crazy, I can't believe the madness," said Derek Popek, a UMass student.

According to UMass officials, police arrested 22 people for charges of disorderly conduct and failure to disperse, and one person was put into protective custody. No injuries or significant property damage was reported. Over 100 officers were on the scene, including UMass police, Massachusetts State Police, and Amherst police. A helicopter was used to monitor the crowd.

"I believe the word has gotten out that we are serious about maintaining order and arresting people when necessary," UMass Police Chief Barbara O'Connor said.

In John Quincy Adams Tower, students pressed against their windows, which were decorated with Red Sox symbols and signs, waving to the revelers below. The crowd threw toilet paper and shoes, waved Red Sox flags and crowd surfed. Several sets of fireworks were set off, and one man climbed a tree in the Southwest quad, impersonating a monkey.

"There's nothing like it. These are stories to pass on," said Jonathan Gravallese, a student.

The celebration was the first disturbance UMass experienced since the Red Sox entered the World Series last Saturday.

"It's amazing," said Kassia Mercier, who stood under Berkshire Dining Commons watching the celebration. Mercier said she was overjoyed to be at UMass for the historical night. "You get to experience everything ... it's great to be here."

Police dispersed the crowd with three police horses and one line of officers after about an hour of celebration. No pepper ball or smoke canisters were used, unlike the string of on-campus disturbances from last week, when the Red Sox beat the New York Yankees in the American League Championship Series. The campus was declared secure at 1:30 a.m.

The following people were arrested early Thursday morning by UMass police, Massachusetts State Police and Amherst Town Police.

Ikaika Cullen Arnado, 24, of Kaneohe, Hawaii, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

Ravi S. Parmar, 19, of Chelmsford, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

Stuart M. Angus, 19, of Southborough, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

See CELEBRATIONS on page 2

CURTIS KILLIAN/COLLEGIAN

After the Red Sox win over the Cardinals for the World Series title, thousands of students gather to celebrate in the Southwest Pyramids.

Hard vs. soft power: Nye and Kristol debate foreign policy

By Yousef Munayyer
Collegian Staff

The Cole Assembly room at Amherst College was packed beyond capacity Wednesday night with attendees seeking to get a glimpse of "America in the world: Hard Power vs. Soft," a spirited debate between academics regarding foreign policy.

The debate, which was sponsored by the Victor S. Johnson Lecture Fund and the Office of the President at Amherst College, began at 8 p.m. William Kristol, the editor of the Weekly Standard, and Joseph Nye of the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University made opposing arguments regarding American foreign policy. Tony Marx, the Amherst College president, welcomed the panelists and moderated the debate.

Nye, who is known for advocating soft power, explained the theory as "convincing state actors to want what you want" as opposed to coercion in an attempt to "change hearts and minds."

He focused on the need for the United States to be an actor among many in the international community and the importance of working with broad coalitions for the purpose of progression. He stressed that in recent years the United States has support among many foreign nations.

"The United States lost about 30 points of attractiveness on average in every country in Europe, including countries that supported us, like England," Nye explained.

The idea of hard power would not work to well, he said, "If the nature of the game is to win the hearts and minds of others."

William Kristol began his argument facetiously by joking about the time he spent at Harvard University where he worked alongside Nye.

"I was the token conservative at Harvard," Kristol said. "They like to have one on the faculty, they want the students to know what they look like."

Kristol, a known neo-conservative and chairman of the Project for a New American Century think tank, made the opposite argument on the use of power.

"The 90s ended on 9/11 and now we are in a new era in international politics," Kristol said. "Hard power remains awfully important, its necessary to go into these places and promote democracy and freedom."

Nye also explained how the view of unipolarity is fundamentally flawed as the United States

See DEBATE on page 3

FBI investigating Halliburton

By John Solomon
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI has begun investigating whether the Pentagon improperly awarded no-bid contracts to Halliburton Co., seeking an interview with a top Army contracting officer and collecting documents from several government offices.

The line of inquiry expands an earlier FBI investigation into whether Halliburton overcharged taxpayers for fuel in Iraq, and it elevates to a criminal matter the election-year question of whether the Bush administration showed favoritism to Vice President Dick Cheney's former company.

FBI agents this week sought permission to interview Bunnatine Greenhouse, the Army Corps of Engineers' chief contracting officer who went public last weekend with allegations that her agency unfairly awarded KBR, a Halliburton subsidiary, no-bid contracts worth billions of dollars for work in Iraq, according to documents obtained by The Associated Press.

Asked about the documents, Greenhouse's lawyers said Thursday their client will cooperate but that she wants whistleblower protection from Pentagon retaliation.

"I think it (the FBI interview request) underscores the seriousness of the misconduct, and it also demonstrates how courageous Ms. Greenhouse was for stepping forward," said Stephen Kohn, one of her attorneys.

"The initiation of an FBI investigation into criminal misconduct will help restore public confidence," Kohn said. "The Army must aggressively protect Ms. Greenhouse from the retaliation she will encounter as a result of blowing the whistle on this misconduct."

FBI agents also recently began collecting documents from Army offices in Texas and elsewhere to examine how and why Halliburton got the no-bid work.

"The Corps is absolutely cooperating with the FBI, and it has been an ongoing effort," said Army Corps spokeswoman Carol Sanders. "Our role is to cooperate. It's a public contract and public funds. We've been providing them information for quite a while."

Wendy Hall, a Halliburton spokeswoman, said the company is cooperating with various investigations, but she dismissed the latest revelation as election politics. She noted Congress' auditing arm, the Government Accountability Office, found the company's no-bid work in Iraq was legal.

"The old allegations have once again been recycled, this time one week before the election," Hall said. "The GAO said earlier this year that the contract was properly awarded because Halliburton was the only contractor that could do the work.

Mock presidential debate at Smith

By Charles Caldi
Collegian Staff

About 100 people gathered to see two economics professors from Smith College engage in a political debate about the presidential contenders' positions on the economy.

Smith faculty members James D. Miller and Roger T. Kauffman assumed the roles of President George Bush and Senator John Kerry to debate the economic issues facing the nation.

"We hope to clarify the economic arguments of each candidates, in addition, we want students to see the practical application of the economic theory we teach," said Kauffman.

Seven issues were carefully discussed by both sides: tax cuts, the budget deficit, trade and outsourcing, energy and the environment, education, social security and healthcare.

The format of the debate was rather formal, however the ambience was relaxed. Just like the actual candidates, the role-playing professors had several minutes to make a clear argument about each topic, leaving room for rebuttals and questions from the audience. Also, both parties had opening and closing statements.

The professors said the difference between this debate compared to the one the nation saw on television two weeks ago was the issues were debated on a solely academic basis.

That is not to say that the debate was not competitive.

On issues such as the budget deficit, both parties agreed that it is detrimental to the economy, because it increases the interest rates and consequently decreases investments. Dr. Miller, who played Bush, agreed that the budget deficit was the worst performance of the Bush presidency.

He also stated that no democrats in congress have attempted to stop his spending proposals, and that Kerry's plan to compensate by raising taxes to the rich would not work due to the Congress being dominated by Republicans.

On the other hand, Dr. Kaufman, playing Kerry, praised Bush's No Child Left Behind policy of holding poor performing public schools accountable through money incentives, but criticized him saying that the program was "not funded adamantly."

The professors could not resist trading rhetorical blows at each other's candidates.

"Bush is the master flip-flopper on free trade," said Kauffman.

"Edwards is the most protectionist, anti-free trade senator," said Miller while debating the trade and outsourcing issue.

Indeed there were some exaggerations on both parts, showing that they were succumbing to the passionate and populist aspects of American politics.

"If Kerry is in the hands of the teacher's unions, then Bush is in the hands of corporations," said Kaufman as a rebuttal to Miller on the topic of education.

Construction has OSHA concerned for wellness of workers

By Bill Donovan
Collegian Staff

As waterproofing of the University of Massachusetts' W.E.B. DuBois Library continues, staff and faculty have been getting sick, while some are being relocated because of the fumes the process is generating. According to library officials, the air quality is well below the danger level and safe to w[illegible]in.

"We are very much below OSHA (Occupational Safety and Health Administration) levels for hazardous materials. You can smell it at a hundred parts per thousand. When it is dangerous, it's a hundred parts per million," said Jay Schafer, Director of UMass Libraries. "As people are opening the entrance doors, the fumes come in the library and go up the air shafts and elevators."

According to Theresa Warner, Assistant Director for Admin-istrative Services, the application of waterproofing began in the summer. New Jersey-based sub-contractor Premier applied the product Kemperol, which is a woven fabric membrane that acts like a glue in waterproofing. This process was applied to the W.E.B. DuBois's new plaza while under construction in mid-September.

"We've been in the preparation stage since summer," explained Warner. "Around Sep. 17 and 18, a major application of waterproofing was done by Premier. The first day, they were waterproofing at 7:30 a.m. and I could detect the fumes whereas others could not."

Some workers in the library have gotten sick due to the chemicals in the air. Warner added members of the staff are being relocated if it is affecting them negatively.

"Certain people have certain sensitivities, it could be exacerbated from pre-existing cold symptoms," said Warner. "Our concern first and foremost is for occupants of this building. We try to accommodate as best as we can for employees. Our workers were told to be seen if they were sick because of it."

Signs are posted at library entrances warning people of the fumes. The signs say: "The fumes you smell are the result of the application of a waterproofing product called Kemperol outside the Library. Please pardon the inconvenience and discomfort this may cause."

Donna Johnson, bookkeeper and president of the library union at UMass, feels the library should be closed down for the safety of faculty, staff, and visitors.

"A piece of concrete fell one day and nearly killed someone," said Johnson. "We are trying to relocate people like Heather Deirdre, Search Supervisor at the library, who is pregnant and asthmatic. They're [the administration] really giving us trouble. They think just relocating workers and turning fans on will make it better."

Warner explained the library is experimenting with fans to see if the fumes will move out of the building.

"On the 26th floor, we are experimenting with air purifiers and fans in the elevator lobby," said Warner.

"This is a learning project, something happens and we try to mitigate the problem."

Schafer explained other precautions the library administration is taking to lower fume levels.

"[The fumes are] just a nuisance, and we've tried to accommodate staff. We've contacted labor relations, facility planning, and environmental safety," said Schafer. "There is widespread concern to provide a safe workplace. This is a very common application process. It was used on the Empire State Building."

Warner added that industrial hygienists who work for ATC Associates are at the library excavation site daily to check air readings to make sure they are safe.

"We put into effect a protocol saying people have the right to leave work and get fresh air when irritated by the fumes," Warner said. "All of the folks we have; contractors, facilities planning and ATC all have told us this is a safe building and we're allowed to be in it. Right now, ATC has reported a .01 parts per million recording, which is way below the danger level."

Warner explained why the odor of the Kemperol often travels into the library in multiple directions, into the entrance and ground-level air intakes and shafts.

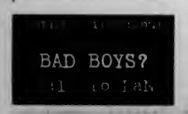
"It depends on which way the wind is blowing. As people open the doors, it comes in and goes up air shafts and the elevators," explained Schafer. "We've tried to separate the main ventilation systems. The first one goes from the main floor to the 13th. And the second goes up to the 26th."

Another method of diverting the fumes is by opening stairwells in the library.

COURTESY UMASS BUG

The fumes given off by the recent renovations to the W.E.B. Dubois Library are making workers sick.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-1699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugalski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
COMICS EDITOR Alyson Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marselli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kagan
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginie Frecaut
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquart
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Bucsek
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN INDEPENDENT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Curtis Killian
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Cory Rosenberg, Nick Belanger

Rally brings 3,000 to Southwest Quad

CELEBRATIONS from page 1

Sergey Y. Zhuravlev, 19, of Amherst, was arrested for disorderly conduct, and unlawful possession of fireworks.

Jason Ward, 21, of Amherst, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

Skylar T. Kelly, 20, of Harpswell, Maine, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

Ryan M. Haffey, 20, of Watertown, was arrested for disorderly conduct, failure to disperse, and inciting a riot.

Michael J. Nicholls, 20, of Belmont, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

Robert Hyde, 23, of Pittsfield, was arrested for disorderly conduct, inciting a riot, failure to disperse, and mistreatment of a police animal.

Virgil S. Bellini, 20, of Amherst, was arrested for disorderly conduct, failure to disperse, and resisting arrest.

Brian Marsh, 18, of Westminster, was arrested for disorderly conduct.

Thomas A. Brigham, 25, of Gloucester, was arrested for disorderly conduct, failure to disperse, and inciting a riot.

Barrett A. Allision, 18, of Amherst, was arrested for failure to disperse, disorderly conduct, and inciting a riot.

Christian McClellan, 20, of Evanston, Ill., was arrested for inciting a riot and failure to disperse.

Brian J. Leibinger, 22, of Pittsfield, was arrested for disorderly conduct, inciting a riot, failure to disperse, and resisting arrest.

Anita J. Steele, 20, of Gloucester, was arrested for disorderly conduct, inciting a riot, and failure to disperse.

Daniel T. Bosch, 26, of Holyoke, was arrested for disorderly conduct, inciting a riot, and failure to disperse.

Joseph John Kelley, 18, of Bradley, was arrested for disorderly conduct, inciting a riot and failure to disperse.

Joelle E. Pecci, 18, of Northborough, was arrested for disorderly conduct, inciting a riot, and failure to disperse.

Aidan Quinn O'Kennedy, 19, of Melrose, was arrested for inciting a riot, and failure to disperse.

Matthew Lynch Benzie, 21, of Atlanta, Georgia, was arrested for disorderly conduct, inciting a riot, and failure to disperse.

John N. Jackson, 19, of Deerfield, was arrested for disorderly conduct, incitlng a riot, and failure to disperse.

Boston deputy under investigation

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — To some, Deputy Superintendent Robert E. O'Toole Jr. is a cop's cop, a 36-year police veteran who commands respect from his troops. To others, he's a rogue cop with a temper.

O'Toole has become a flash point in the investigation into the death of 21-year-old Victoria Snelgrove, an Emerson College student killed last week by a pepper-spray pellet fired by police as they tried to control an unruly crowd of 80,000 Red Sox revelers.

His supporters say he is a disciplined, by-the-book cop who is well-equipped to lead the police department's Special Operations Unit. His critics, however, say he has a tendency to use excessive force – a charge that has become a central question in the investigation into Snelgrove's death.

O'Toole's critics point to an earlier episode as evidence that he should not have been in charge of crowd control and police deployment the night Snelgrove died.

They recall an incident in 1986, the last time the Red Sox played in the World Series, when O'Toole was filmed by a television crew slapping a drunken fan in the face as he was being taken into protective custody during a World Series celebration.

The videotape caused a public uproar and prompted one Boston newspaper columnist to dub him "Slaps O'Toole."

"There's certainly some kind of impulse-control problem with him," said Howard Friedman, a Boston attorney who represented Rodney Armstrong, the man O'Toole slapped. "He seems to be someone who wants to charge in himself."

"A supervisor isn't supposed to jump in and grab someone on his own, and worse is a supervisor who uses excessive force in front

See O'TOOLE on page 3

COURTESY OF WIRE PHOTOS INTERNATIONAL

The Boston Deputy Superintendent Robert E. O'Toole is currently under investigation for authorizing the use of excessive force at the riots around Fenway Park following the Red Sox ALCS win.

Man found guilty in '75 Reading murder

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — A man was convicted of manslaughter Thursday for strangling a 14-year-old girl in 1975 and dumping her body on a Reading golf course.

David Allen Jones, 45, was married and living in Georgia when investigators tracked him down in 1997. They charged him with first-degree murder in the death of his former neighbor, Robin Gilbert, whose body was found partially covered with brush on the Meadowbrook Golf Course on July 2, 1975, the morning after she left her parents' house to smoke a cigarette and never returned.

The jury in Middlesex Superior Court deliberated for five days before convicting Jones of the lesser charge. He faces a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison at his sentencing, scheduled for Monday.

"We expected a murder conviction and will have to settle for manslaughter," Gilbert's family said in a statement, acknowledging that the passage of so much time presented challenges for prosecutors. "We will hopefully find some solace in knowing that after all these years the true story of Robin's death has been told."

Jones' lawyer, Eileen Agnes, did not immediately return a call seeking comment.

The case had been closed after the state medical examiner ruled that Gilbert's death was the result of heart disease, despite the fact that her clothes were ripped and her body had been dragged several hundred yards.

It remained closed for more than 20 years, until 1996, when police received a tip that led them to a diary kept by Jones' mother, who had died of cancer that year. The diary led them to suspect Jones, who was 16 at the time of the killing.

Cuba dumps the dollar for pesos

By Anita Snow
Associated Press

HAVANA (AP) — Cuba's banks and exchange houses began large-scale conversions of U.S. money into a local currency on Thursday as Fidel Castro's communist nation moved to dump the dollar from general circulation.

Cubans lined up several hours before exchange houses opened to convert the American dollars widely used here for 11 years for the local Cuban convertible pesos that will now be the main currency accepted for consumer goods.

"I'm not going anywhere, I don't need dollars," said 68-year-old port worker Ramon Gonzalez, among about 80 people lined up outside the main exchange house in Old Havana.

"For me, it's just the same," Gonzalez said of the convertible pesos, tied at one-to-one to the U.S. dollar. "It just has a different face."

"As long as it keeps the same value, there is no problem," added 57-year-old custodian Alberto Serra.

Responding to stepped-up U.S. sanctions, Castro announced Monday that within two weeks, U.S. currency would be not be accepted at stores and businesses.

After Nov. 8, changing American money will carry a 10 percent commission fee that won't be applied to other foreign currencies.

"It's good news that there is now a currency for obligatory use in the country," said well-known dissident intellectual Manuel Cuesta Morua, adding it was important for every country to have its own currency. "The bad news is that it will hurt remittances received by citizens from abroad because it will reduce their buying power."

Authorities, meanwhile, said they were considering wider use of the euro as Cuba began rebuilding the hard currency base built mostly on dollars for more than a decade. Foreign tourists were advised to leave American money at home and bring other foreign currencies instead.

Since the government decided to replace the dollar with the local Cuban convertible peso beginning Nov. 8, authorities "have been studying coordinating with Cuba's Central Bank to extend the acceptance of the euro in other areas of the country," Tourism Minister Manuel Marrero said Wednesday.

"It is recommended that after that date that visitors to the country don't carry United States dollars," Marrero said at a news conference. He said visitors could exchange euros, Canadian dollars, British pounds or Swiss francs into convertible pesos after arriving here.

The euro is accepted already at several coastal resorts on this Caribbean island.

The currency switch appears aimed at eliminating Cuba's dependence on the money of its No. 1 enemy – the United States – for hard currency reserves, building up new sources of convertible foreign funds, and reasserting centralized control over the economy.

HOMETOWN HIGH

• DO YOU WANT TO VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL, BUT CAN'T THINK OF A GOOD REASON WHY?

• ARE YOU AN OUTGOING PERSON WHO LIKES TO INTERACT WITH GROUPS OF PEOPLE?

• DO YOU WANT TO AFFECT THE LIVES OF OTHER PEOPLE IN A POSITIVE WAY?

• IF YOU ANSWERED YES, THEN UNDERGRADUATE ADMISSIONS HAS THE PERFECT OPPORTUNITY FOR YOU!

GET INVOLVED WITH HOMETOWN HIGH

•VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL AND EXPRESS YOUR WISDOM GAINED AT UMASS AMHERST TO HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS LOOKING AT COLLEGES!
•TALK ABOUT YOUR PERSONAL EXPERIENCE, YOUR CONCERNS DURING YOUR FRESHMAN YEAR, AND SHARE WHY YOU DECIDED TO COME TO UMASS AMHERST!

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS:
• FILL OUT AN INTEREST SHEET
• ATTEND A 1 & 1/2 HOUR TRAINING SESSION
• SET UP AN APPOINTMENT
• VISIT YOUR OLD HIGH SCHOOL

RECEIVE A FREE UMASS AMHERST T-SHIRT FOR YOUR EFFORTS

COME SEE US ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE TO SIGN UP!
MON 11/1–FRI 11/5
9:00 AM–3:00 PM

FOR MORE INFO EMAIL KERI AT KDEJONG@EDUC.UMASS.EDU OR CALL KERI OR SARAH AT THE ROBSHAM MEMORIAL CENTER FOR VISITORS–545-0306

UMASS AMHERST

ugg...so many!

ZANNA
Clothing, Shoes and Accessories for Women.
downtown Amherst

Welcome Back
UMass Amherst Alumni

UMASS AMHERST

The Alumni Association is glad you've come home!

UMassAlumni.com

You were. You are. UMASS.

American foreign policy up for dispute is not the super power It is always perceived as being. He likened the situation to a game of three-dimensional chess saying that on the first level we are militarily strong. Secondly, however, we are economically on par with many other actors, and lastly in regards to transnational relations there is no American hegemony and instead there is a state of chaos. Nye explained that the greatest threats to the United States come from that third level which the United States has not adapted to.

DEBATE from page 1

The debate quickly transformed from a broad theoretical analysis of the exercise of power to a debate on recent foreign policy towards the Middle East.

Kristol said he didn't agree that, "al-Qaida is a stateless group" rather, "they needed a nation to train 10-to-20,000 people."

"Iraq has been the biggest challenge for Bush, but I think things are going to work out ... if we can get to elections in January, I'm very optimistic."

Nye did not share Kristol's optimism and criticized the naiveté of the Bush administration and the strategies they have employed.

"Hammering Saddam, I think, would have made sense had he been developing weapons, but the evidence on that wasn't there," Nye said, adding that "The idea that this would be like Japan or Germany after World War II was naïve."

"I'm generally a defender of the Bush administration, but they have made plenty of mistakes," Kristol said.

However, he also emphasized that John Kerry could make mistakes as well.

"If John Kerry is president ... American forces will be deployed somewhere in the world," he said.

With less than a week before the presidential election, Kristol said he thought that the war in Iraq would improve for Bush.

"We won the Cold War by being a smart power, that's when you use both hard and soft power," he said.

YOUSEF MUNAYYER/COLLEGIAN

William Kristol, Joseph Nye and Tony Marx sit on the panel at Amherst College on Wednesday, which discussed issues of American foreign policy.

Kristol summed up his argument by claiming, "In the last three or four years I don't think we have been a smart power."

The debate concluded and was followed by a 30-minute question and answer session in which the panelists took questions from the Five-college audience. The Victor S. Johnson Lecture Fund and the Office of the President, which sponsored this event, will soon host Jonathan Kozol, public school teacher and an award-winning writer and educational activist, on Thursday, Nov. 11, at 8 p.m.

Thailand explosion kills 2, injures 21

By Alisa Tang
Associated Press

TALOH MANOH, Thailand (AP) — Villagers on Thursday buried some of the 78 Muslims who died in military custody after a protest in troubled southern Thailand, while authorities insisted at a briefing for diplomats that the detainees were not intentionally mistreated.

Later Thursday evening, a bomb exploded outside a bar in the region, killing two people and injuring 21, police said.

The deaths occurred after a protest Monday outside a police station in Narathiwat province turned violent, with at least seven people killed, apparently shot by security forces. Then, as 1,300 people were rounded up and detained, 78 were suffocated or crushed to death when they were packed tightly into military trucks, officials said.

The Foreign Ministry has put the death toll from Monday's violence at 87, though it was not clear the circumstances of all the deaths.

Thousands of Muslims gathered in the province for the mass burial of 22 unidentified victims, but the crowd thinned before the bodies were brought from a military camp in neighboring Pattani province.

Scores of people watched as volunteers carried the corpses wrapped in white fabric and tarps from pickup trucks to the foot of a mass grave as night fell and Islamic leaders recited prayers.

Some residents held cloth to their noses to mask the smell of the bodies, which were gently lowered into a ditch at a rural cemetery fringed by jungle near a 17th century mosque.

Armed police and soldiers stood nearby.

Earlier Thursday, some people searched for relatives at the army camp in Pattani province, where up to 1,300 detainees were taken after Monday's riot. Most detainees were later moved to other camps in the south.

At a special briefing late Thursday, Foreign Ministry Permanent Secretary Krit Garnjana-Goonchorn told diplomats from 54 countries that "mistakes and errors of judgment were apparently made, but there was no deliberate intent, in apy way, to mistreat the detainees."

Besides the 87 dead, the violence also wounded 37 people. Nine had gunshot wounds and the rest suffered bruises and dehydration. Five were in critical condition, a hospital official said.

Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra has defended the security forces, saying they acted appropriately in dispersing the riot. He conceded that mistakes were made in transporting detainees and appointed a committee to investigate.

Thaksin and other officials sought to blame the detainees' deaths in part on weakness due to dawn-to-dusk fasting during the Muslim holy month of Ramadan. But a government-employed forensic scientist said two or three of the detainees had broken necks.

Arafat flown to Paris for medical treatment

By Lara Sukhtian
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Doctors decided to fly ailing Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat to Paris for treatment, as associates described a Palestinian leader who was too weak to stand Thursday, appeared confused and spent most of the day sleeping.

Fifteen doctors examined the 75-year-old Arafat on Thursday and decided he would be able to get the best treatment in Paris, one of the doctors said on condition of anonymity.

If Arafat were taken to the hospital, it would highlight the severity of the health crisis and mark the first time for him to leave his battered Ramallah headquarters since he was confined there by Israel in 2002.

Israeli officials assured the Palestinians on Thursday that if Arafat recovered, he would be able to return to the West Bank, a prominent Israel-Arab lawmaker said. In the past, Israel was unwilling to make such promises. The doctors, who had considered flying Arafat by helicopter to a hospital in Amman, Jordan, were by Arafat's side Thursday in a small clinic at his compound after he collapsed and briefly lost consciousness Wednesday night.

Palestinian officials initially tried to play down the health problems, saying he performed Muslim prayers before dawn Thursday and ate a light breakfast of cornflakes and milk.

On Thursday evening, Arafat's aides released two photos showing him sitting in a chair, broadly smiling as he posed with his doctors. He wore blue pajamas and a dark stocking cap.

A close Arafat associate said the Palestinian leader spent most of the day sleeping. When he awoke, he was moved into a wheelchair because he was very weak and could not stand up, the associate said. At times, Arafat appeared confused, not recognizing some of his visitors, he added.

Arafat has been unable to hold down food, and also suffers from diarrhea, the associate said on condition of anonymity.

Israeli defense officials met Thursday to discuss the possible fallout if Arafat dies. Anxious Palestinians throughout the West Bank and Gaza Strip waited for any scrap of information about his condition, with many fearing his death would plunge their nation into a profound crisis.

"I was awake all the night," said Imad Samara, a 38-year-old teacher from Gaza City. "I pray to God to save him because we need him, he is the safety valve for everything here, he is the father of all the Palestinians."

Arafat's wife, Suha, arrived at the Ramallah headquarters Thursday after she was called from Tunis to be with her husband. Suha Arafat lives in Paris with their young daughter, and has not seen her husband since 2001.

On Wednesday evening, Arafat's persistent two-week illness had taken a sudden turn for the worse. Arafat vomited after eating soup, then collapsed and was unconscious for about 10 minutes, a bodyguard said.

Palestinian officials initially insisted that Arafat was suffering only from a severe flu, while doctors said he also suffered from a large gallstone. Israeli officials have speculated Arafat is suffering from cancer in the digestive tract, but the Palestinians said tests found no sign of cancer.

Arafat has been confined to the sandbagged, partially demolished compound since May 2002. He has been kept inside both by occasional Israeli military blockades and by threats that he would not be allowed to return if he leaves.

Israel, fearing it will be blamed for any further deterioration in Arafat's condition, said Thursday it is ready to lift its travel ban and allow Arafat to leave.

COURTESY MARTINOTICIAS.COM

Palestinian Prime Minister Yasser Arafat is currently hospitalized, suffering serious medical problems.

O'Toole becomes the target of investigation of all the officers he's supposed to be supervising. It sends the wrong message," Friedman said.

O'TOOLE from page 2

Armstrong sued O'Toole and won $5,000 in punitive damages from a jury, plus $500 in compensatory damages. Friedman said the jury found that although Armstrong was not injured in the incident, O'Toole used excessive force in slapping him.

After the incident, then-Police Commissioner Francis Roache demoted O'Toole. His career remained stagnant until 1992, when William Bratton, then the superintendent in chief of the department, assigned O'Toole to his personal staff.

Bratton, now the police chief in Los Angeles, did not return telephone calls seeking comment for this story.

Current police Commissioner Kathleen O'Toole elevated Robert O'Toole back to his old position of deputy superintendent of special operations in April, two months after she came into office on the heels of an uproar over the death of a fan killed during a Super Bowl celebration in Boston.

"Based on his performance since then, on very high recommendations from people for whom I have a great deal of respect, I decided to give him a second chance, with unanimous support from other members of my command staff. More than anybody else I appointed during my early days here, Bob O'Toole received very high marks," said Commissioner O'Toole, who is not related to Robert O'Toole.

But she said that her longtime professional relationship with Deputy Superintendent O'Toole will not stand in the way of finding out what happened the night Snelgrove died.

"It's important that I emphasize that I need to be totally objective in terms of this investigation, and will go where the truth takes us. I owe that to the Snelgrove family. I owe that to Bob O'Toole. I owe that to the other officers involved. We'll leave no stone unturned. We'll find out precisely what happened that night," she said.

An officer at the scene and a person involved with the investigation who were not identified told The Boston Globe that O'Toole fired a pepper-spray pellet gun into the crowd, even though he did not have proper training in the use of the weapon and was supposed to be supervising control of the crowd.

Snelgrove, of East Bridgewater, was hit in the eye with one of the pellets and died hours later. Two other people were injured after getting hit in the face with police-fired pellets.

Robert O'Toole's lawyer, Timothy Burke, said O'Toole fired four rounds from the compressed-air gun, but did not fire the shot that killed Snelgrove. He said two of the pellets struck a sign, a third hit an unruly reveler in the chest and a fourth hit a man in the buttocks.

An anonymous police source with knowledge of the investigation told The Associated Press that Deputy Superintendent O'Toole was likely not the shooter.

Albert Sweeney, a retired officer who worked with O'Toole for more than 30 years, called him "the ultimate professional," and said he could not believe he indiscriminately fired into a crowd or did anything improper during the melee.

"I can't imagine Bob using a weapon he's not trained and authorized to use. I have a hard time believing reports that it was not used with proper protocol," Sweeney said. "This is a man who loves this city, loves the Boston Police Department and has served both this city and his country for over 30 years."

Red Sox to be greeted with parade Saturday

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The city will toast its first World Series champions in 86 years with a parade Saturday that will stretch from the Fenway to City Hall Plaza, but won't include the traditional rally at its end because of concerns about the size of the crowd and security.

Mayor Thomas Menino announced the plans at a news conference Thursday with Red Sox president Larry Lucchino. The team swept the World Series in four games with a 3-0 win Wednesday night at St. Louis, giving the city its first baseball championship since 1918.

"This is a historic occasion that goes to the heart of what it means to be a Bostonian," Menino said. "Many Sox fans wondered if they'd ever see a World Series, a world championship, in our lifetime. I'm proud that on Saturday we can all celebrate it together."

An estimated 1.5 million people attended the Feb. 3 parade for the Super Bowl champion New England Patriots. And about 1.2 million celebrated the Patriots' first Super Bowl win in 2002 – the first Boston pro sports title since 1986.

Both celebrations included a rally on City Hall Plaza, where players and coaches addressed fans.

Officials said Saturday's Red Sox crowd could be twice as big, partly because of the team's enormous popularity across New England, and partly because of a championship drought that has spanned generations and included several agonizingly near misses.

The mayor, who described the parade as a "rolling rally," said there will be no planned stops along the approximately three-mile route, because of safety concerns.

Like the Patriots, the Red Sox players will ride in "Duck Boats," Boston's famous amphibious tourist vehicles, equipped with microphones to allow them to speak to the fans en route.

The mayor said police will be out in force to make sure things don't get out of hand, as they did last week when a college student was killed by police firing pepper spray-filled pellets into a rowdy crowd of fans celebrating the Red Sox's pennant-clinching win over the New York Yankees.

"Public safety is our number one priority," Menino said. "Let's show the team what the fans are made of and behave in a way we can all be proud of.

O'Reilly case to settle sexual harassment case

By Samuel Maull
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Fox News Channel television host Bill O'Reilly and a former producer of his talk show have agreed to settle their legal dispute over her allegations of sexual harassment, O'Reilly's lawyer announced Thursday.

Andrea Mackris had claimed O'Reilly made a series of explicit phone calls to her, advised her to use a vibrator and telling her about sexual fantasies involving her.

O'Reilly actually sued Mackris hours before her case was filed Oct. 13. The talk show host said he was fighting an extortion attempt, that Mackris and her lawyer demanded $60 million in "hush money" to make the case quietly go away.

O'Reilly, who's married, is host of the top-rated prime-time cable news program – and he's seen his ratings go up by 30 percent since the case was filed.

O'Reilly's lawyer, Ronald Green, issued a statement Thursday saying both sides "regret that this matter has caused tremendous pain, and they have agreed to settle. All cases and claims have been withdrawn, and all parties have agreed that there was no wrongdoing whatsoever by Mr. O'Reilly, Ms. Mackris, or Ms. Mackris' counsel, Benedict P. Morelli & Associates."

Mackris' lawyer did not immediately return a telephone call seeking comment.

Green's statement also said he and O'Reilly "withdraw any assertion that any extortion by Ms. Mackris, Mr. Morelli" or his law firm occurred.

"Out of respect for their families and privacy, all parties and their representatives have agreed that all information relating to the cases shall remain confidential," Green's statement said.

ignite your appetite

India House
tuesday - Sunday
45 State Street
Northampton
586-6344

the food's the thing
!
cha cha cha
lunch + dinner
134 main st n'ton
588-7311

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2004

"I may disagree with what you have to say, but I shall defend to the death your right to say it." -Voltaire

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DNA testing expansion warranted

Within the expanding realm of scientific technology, DNA testing has become a more and more common thing. One of its chief uses in society is helping police departments and federal investigators track down committers of rape and murder. However, DNA testing is expanding its uses and was recently used in catching a burglar who had broken into someone's home and stolen a computer and some jewelry in New York City. This new use of DNA testing is long overdue and has the very real potential of catching the perpetrators in a timely manner.

According to the New York Times, "the new program called Biotracks has identified 23 suspects of burglary to 34 cases, most of which the police say would not otherwise have been solved." One aspect that makes this system so affective is that the majority of suspects of burglaries, as a result of DNA testing, already had files from previous crimes they had committed. This technology could cut short the victims' suffering and bring justice to where it's due a lot sooner, rather than later or not at all.

One also has to take into effect the relative weight that DNA evidence holds compared to eyewitness accounts or fingerprints in a court of law. DNA evidence that is brought to attention and is found to be conclusive toward one suspect is more likely to "plead guilty, which means less time and money spent on trials," according to Richard A. Brown, the Queens district attorney.

The idea of DNA testing should be more acceptable to the general public after the extremely successful show C.S.I. has drawn a cult following. And while the show is fiction, many people have had their interest piqued by DNA testing, thus making the idea of it helping to catch perpetrators of less egregious crimes more comfortable and highly appealing.

Biotracks was funded by a $175,000 grant from the National Institute of Justice. The money was part of the Bush administration's $5 billion initiative, which hopes to make DNA a "routine law enforcement tool across the country," according to the National Institute of Justice's director, Sarah A. Hart.

With the recent riots going on at UMass and throughout the area as a result of the Boston Red Sox victories, property damage has undoubtedly accumulated. DNA testing would be a much more useful tool in finding the suspects of the destruction rather than weeks and weeks of examining surveillance footage, if available at all.

Using DNA testing for smaller crimes would also yield higher results because there would be fewer samples to test. Therefore, mixed DNA from more than one person is highly unlikely. While some may argue that diverging from more serious crimes such as rape and homicide to solve burglaries and property damage cases using the same scientific technologies is not properly prioritizing the crimes, to the victims of the break-ins, it is just as important to find out what happened to their savings account book monitoring their children's college fund.

There is no prioritizing crime when people are victimized. DNA technology exists and should be used to assist in all crime investigations, regardless of the severity of the offense.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Those who do not understand

Johnny Donaldson

The body is numb. The body is cold. It is empty and alone. They call this depression. There is no feeling here in the flesh, no peace, no rest. There is feeling. There is melancholy and there is despair. There is a feeling of hollowness, of nothingness, of nothing being. It is a feeling of utter meaninglessness.

Nothing matters. It is not pain. It is worse. Pain would be a blessing. Pain would be a relief, a release. With pain you feel. With pain you know you exist. That the nothingness has not eaten you from the inside out. With pain you feel. With this you don't. This is depression.

Those who don't know don't understand. They cannot understand. They are scared and unsure, because they don't know this kind of pain. They give us mantras to live by. Everybody hurts. Everybody feels pain. Life will get better. They do not understand, so they tell us these mantras to help themselves feel better, thinking that they will help us. But we speak in words of self-pity, self-absorption and self-destruction when we speak of it at all. Those are our words to them. Our words are hollow and meaningless to them, for they do not know — do not comprehend — that we, ourselves, are hollow and meaningless.

This is not something I want to speak of. This is something I must speak of. It is embarrassing to talk about, to tell people. But demons must be confronted as they scratch and claw and howl outside the door, trailing tracks of blood and tears in their wake. I have told friends and lost friends. Lost family. Those Who Do Not Understand. I cannot articulate the words to describe this. The words are shriveled, they are small. They disappear into the air, never understood, soon to be forgotten as Those Who Do Not Understand abandon to pursue their own pleasures and vices and hedonistic impulses.

Is it better to be sad and weak, or sad yet strong? When you are sad and weak, you do not care and there is peace in that. You'll do anything to feel, anything to make the sadness go away, even if that means hurting yourself to do it. Hurting subverts the pain, the anguish, the inarticulate abyss that slices through muscle and bone and tendon and flesh. You give in, you let loose, you follow the downward spiral until it spirals no more. You destroy yourself, your mind, your body, but you stave off the emptiness inside. When you are sad yet strong, you cannot carve in, you cannot let go, you keep your head above the surface no matter how much it thrashes you around. But you the emptiness remains, forever there.

The days that are good ... those are good days. We wish for the good days. We hope and pray and wait in silence for those days. Those days are good. But those days don't often last. Only on the really bad days do Those Who Do Not Understand notice us in our sadness; every other day, we smile and laugh and chatter on as if our lives our normal, so we aren't noticed for who we are. When we are noticed we are rejected and left alone in our misery, a cold, dark place where dead leaves skitter by on dusty ground as coy dogs howl balefully in the silvery, waning moonlight.

We walk along the paths of our lives, and the shadows remain long and deep, stretched before our way. They tangle with the dead branches of the dead trees that loom astride us, laughing and mocking and whispering their evil entreaties with a velvet voice in our ear. We bury our feelings deeper and deeper inside until they cannot be buried anymore; that is when we long to see the crimson glitter of our life weep and our tears bleed. But to overcome, to find the path into light, one must confront the demons and devils with their slavering, dripping jaws, to fight them and to stand them down once and for all.

But to Those Who Do Not Understand, I will leave you with a poem, called "Minstrel Man." by Langston Hughes, and then you may once understand: "Because my mouth/ Is wide with laughter/ And my throat/ Is deep with song/ You do not think/ I suffer after/ I have held my pain / So long?/ Because my mouth/ Is wide with laughter/ You do not hear/My inner cry?/ Because my feet/ Are gay with dancing/ You do not know/ I die?"

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

'Soft power' overlooked

Stephen Post

When William Kristol speaks, Washington listens. More to the point, the Bush administration listens. Kristol is the man behind the Project for the New American Century (PNAC), the neo-conservative think-tank that pushed regime change in Iraq years before 9/11. After the 1991 Gulf War, Kristol was a one-man drum and fife corps, keeping Iraq on the agenda when others had lost interest.

He kept pressing, and in 1998, PNAC sent a letter to President Clinton, urging him to unseat Saddam, and fast. If Clinton did not act, the letter read, "the safety of American troops in the region, of our friends and allies like Israel and the moderate Arab states and a significant portion of the world's supply of oil will all be put at hazard." Among the undersigned were such lights as Francis Fukuyama, as well as Donald Rumsfeld and Paul Wolfowitz (Rumsfeld's DoD counterpart in the current administration).

Kristol's magazine, the Weekly Standard, subsidized by Rupert Murdoch, published opinion piece after opinion piece harping on the Iraq issue. Doggedly, and through eight years of a democratic administration, Kristol carried the torch, and when Bush came into office in 2000, the stage was set for Saddam's take-down.

On Wednesday night, I stood face to face with William Kristol. He was in town to debate Joseph Nye, dean of Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, about America's role in the world. Should it use "hard power" or "soft power" to get its way? Military force or moral suasion? "Shock and Awe" or "winning hearts and minds"?

The venue, Cole Assembly Room at Amherst College, was packed. Students, assorted Political Science faculty, VIPs and others crammed themselves into every available inch of space, filling the aisles and sitting cross-legged in front of the polished wooden debate table. The scene reminded me of the 9/11 commission hearings, journalists squatting en masse, trying to get the best shot of Condoleezza Rice or Madeline Albright as they testified. Two spotlights, one in each corner of the room, converged on the table. Two cameramen, filming the debate for C-SPAN 2, took their positions.

Nye started. 9/11, he said, had been like a flash of lightning.

Before 9/11, foreign policy was barely on the radar at all. It made nothing more than a cameo appearance in the October presidential debates. 9/11 changed everything. It called for new thinking, new tactics.

briefly illuminating the outlines of a new landscape, and then leaving us in darkness. Terrorism itself was nothing new, but it had become "more lethal and more agile." 9/11 ushered in a change in U.S. foreign policy. Suddenly we had new goals, and we needed the means to reach these goals. And it is the means that disturb Nye, not the ends. For him, it is a question of strategy.

In pursuing what Charles Krauthammer had called the "New Unilateralism," the Bush administration had become "one dimensional thinkers in a three-dimensional world." If we think of international relations as a three-dimensional chess game, he argued, the Bush administration, by pursuing military force as a means, was only playing on the top board. They completely ignored "soft power" as an option; they weren't concerned enough with winning hearts and minds.

Kristol took the stage. Where Nye had been soft-spoken and a bit pedantic, Kristol was loose. He cracked jokes. We laughed. After the banter, he opened his bag of tricks and started the show. He talked about the Cold War, "the 90s," and now. "The 90s ended on Sept. 11," he said. We are now in a new era, "a new moment." Before 9/11, foreign policy was barely on the radar at all. It made nothing more than a cameo appearance in the October presidential debates.

9/11 changed everything. It called for new thinking, new tactics. Bush has made mistakes. "It's hard when you're in a new moment," Kristol said. We live in a dangerous world with threats on all sides, and Bush "reacted appropriately" by launching wars in Afghanistan and Iraq. "Bush," he said, "does not get enough credit." Kristol went on to say that terrorism had decreased as a result of Bush's policies; that the Afghan elections are "impressive"; that what is now happening in the Middle East is "hopeful." Hard power is still necessary, especially when you're trying to "promote democracy and freedom." I watched and listened, sitting in my black leather swivel chair, clutching my tape recorder and I felt sick.

Kristol finished his statement with a riff about Iraq. "We all thought he had weapons," he said with a smile. "He certainly had connections to terrorists." With someone like Saddam, Kristol explained, we couldn't afford to do nothing: "We had to make a choice." We had to get rid of him; we had to give him a taste of America's hard power. The risk was not that we would act too fast, but "that we'll be too slow." Kristol's parting thought fit the script nicely: "The world is better off because America is powerful." When it was all over I asked Mr. Kristol a question. What did he think about the 12 years of sanctions that had killed over half a million Iraqi children? "It was a tough choice," he said. Then he left the room.

Stephen Post is a Collegian columnist.

Every issue is a women's issue

Erin McNamee

A small feature about women's voting habits recently ran in the November 2004 issue of "Glamour" magazine, although you'd be hard-pressed to find it amidst the cloying perfume ads and articles about how to please your man. Apparently, "Glamour" staffers went out and asked a random number of women when they last voted, although the geographical location and sample size of the women polled was not published. Seven women were pictured holding placards proclaiming their voting histories. A woman holding her infant child wrote, "Never!" Another wrote, "I don't agree with Democrats or Republicans so I don't vote!" Thankfully, the positive responses outweighed the negative: one woman proclaimed, "I will vote as soon as I get citizenship" and another dryly inquired, "I voted in Florida. Did it count?"

The point is, all the women interviewed should have said, "November, 2000." "I always vote," or "I'm planning to vote on Nov. 2." There is no excuse for women not to vote, especially when George W. Bush is practically on the verge of reviving the 1950s, a time when women had little control over their bodies or lives. The President has proposed the reversal of Roe v. Wade, the pivotal 1973 Supreme Court decision granting women the right to a safe abortion. Not only was Roe v. Wade a significant stepping-stone in the quest for women's rights, it also legitimized women's healthcare as a serious issue in politics and society. The possible overturn of Roe v. Wade not only threatens the rights a woman has over her own body, but it jeopardizes the quality of healthcare available to women all across America.

On Oct. 25, the Vatican released a handbook for business, political and cultural leaders outlining Roman Catholic beliefs on current political issues. The handbook calls abortion a "horrendous crime" yet conveniently avoids answering the question of whether a Roman Catholic can morally and ethically vote for a candidate who believes the opposite to be true. President Bush, an evangelical Christian, staunchly opposes abortion, while Democratic presidential candidate John Kerry, a Roman Catholic, says that he personally opposes abortion but would never deny a woman her right to choose.

It's no secret that President Bush has allowed his religious beliefs to dangerously intermingle with his politics, and whether we like it or not, religious leaders carry a significant influence over voters and politicians. This influence is particularly great in the current election. While I do believe that every person is entitled to his or her own religious beliefs, I disagree with the way President Bush has allowed his beliefs to influence his political decisions.

Women's rights are greatly threatened as the line between church and state fades into oblivion. A political leader, especially the President, carries a great responsibility to lead with the people's interests at heart not just his own.

In addition to opposing same-sex marriage, embryonic stem-cell research, sex education and reproductive health programs, President Bush frequently uses evangelical language in his speeches. At a recent rally in Colorado, President Bush attempted to justify the war in Iraq by saying, "Freedom is not America's gift to the world; freedom is the Almighty God's gift to each man and woman in this world." Apparently President Bush didn't get the memo about it being his duty to uphold the Constitution — mandated separation of church and state.

Women's rights are greatly threatened as the line between church and state fades into oblivion. A political leader, especially the President, carries a great responsibility to lead with the people's interests at heart, not just his own. One person should not make decisions determining how millions of people should live their lives based on his personal or religious beliefs, especially when one group, like women, is continually finding itself at a disadvantage. This is not "compassionate" conservatism — in fact, it's about as far from compassion as you can get.

The 19th Amendment took over 70 years to pass, yet something tells me it took much more effort to pass the law than it takes for some women not to vote at all. The activists involved in the women's rights movement weren't called "Suffragists" for nothing — they endured public ridicule, imprisonment, beatings, and even death to guarantee that future generations of American women, like us, have the opportunity to get involved and control our own lives and bodies. Suffragists sacrificed their lives so we could live ours in freedom and yet 25 out of every 30 women either have no knowledge of this history or simply choose to ignore it altogether.

To "Glamour" magazine's credit, Editor-in-Chief Cindi Leive published a letter in the November, 2004 issue urging women to vote, citing the alarming statistic that only one in five women under age 30 votes regularly. Considering that over 80 years ago women didn't have the right to vote at all, this statistic is not only an embarrassment, it's an outright travesty.

I recently saw a flyer posted on campus that said, "Every issue is a women's issue." On Nov. 2, take control of your life, take control of your body — get out there and vote, and let your voices be heard. Both past and future generations of American women are counting on you.

Erin McNamee is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

"TRICKS & "TREATS

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hellfire Hero

Getting all Dolled up

By Johnny Donaldson

The Dresden Dolls with Count Zero and the Ditty Bops

Pearl Street

Northampton

Oct. 31

Northampton Film Fesival

Northampton

Oct. 27-31

'Woman' moves audiences

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"Woman Thou Art Loosed" is the movie version of a play and self-help guide from the Christian evangelist Bishop T.D. Jakes, who also gives himself ample screen time. Jakes is a charismatic presence — if not a great actor — but still, you have to ask yourself if you really want to see a movie based on a self-help book. What's next, "Chicken Soup for the Moviegoers Soul?"

Not exactly. "Woman" is as clunky, clumsy and simple a morality play you could easily imagine, but it's also a watchable and compelling morality play. Even as you laugh off its plainness, you find yourself moved by it.

Kimberly Elise, from "The Manchurian Candidate," plays Michelle, a young woman on death row for murdering her lazy stepfather at one of Jakes' tent revivals. The bishop visits her in prison, and she tells him her story, represented by a flashback of what lead her to face execution.

The movie floats from one tragedy to the next in Michelle's life. She's sexually assaulted by her mom's boyfriend (Clifton Powell), grows up to become a stripper and crack addict who returns home from a stint in jail to get her life together. She's attacked by her former pimp, and betrayed by her mother (Loretta Devine), who refuses to accept that her boyfriend raped her daughter.

"Woman Thou Art Loosed" is often cheesy, loaded with melodramatic dialogue, stock characters and obvious symbolism. The camerawork is shoddy and cheap, made with grainy film stock, and the writing often resembles an after-school special gussied up with grown-up allusions to sex and drugs.

The movie is often silly, and hampered by repeated cutaways to Jakes' revival meetings. Not only that, the characters often refer to the meetings and watch videos of it, making this a veritable infomercial for Jakes' ministry.

What makes the film effective is its acting, which is uniformly convincing even when the script isn't. Elise, in particular, gives a stirring performance as the troubled, but healing, Michelle. Heretofore a minor actress stuck in bit parts in big movies, finally gets the chance to run with a real role and she makes a fine impression.

"Woman Thou Art Loosed" is an imperfect film that is as simplistic as it is riveting, as cheesy as it is harrowing. This film is a surprisingly gritty Christian drama that does not back away from its R-rated themes, and yet still as the good-vs.-bad, white-vs.-black ideals of a bamboozle morality play. But the acting makes it compelling no matter how rudimentary the filmmaking is.

Woman Thou Art Loosed
Directed by Michael Schultz
Starring Kimberly Elise, Bishop T.D. Jakes, Magnolia, Rated R, 94 mins, Grade B

Clifton Powell, who also is slated to appear in the biographical story of Ray Charles, played Reggie in "Women Thou Art Loosed."

'Future Perfect' three years in the making deemed to be a success for Autolux

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

It's not very often that a debut album is three years in the making. It's just as rare for a band's first album to be so cohesive, mature, and spotless. However, on "Future Perfect", Los Angeles space-pop purveyors Autolux hit on both of these rare occasions.

"Future Perfect" is truly a special album amidst the sea of faceless corporate rock bands. Autolux takes off somewhere in between My Bloody Valentine and Sonic Youth but, especially when compared to indie and alternative rockers who are stealing all the magazine covers, seem to orbit around a completely different sun.

Bassist/vocalist Eugene Goreshter's airy, androgynous voice takes some getting used to but, after a couple spins, seems to be the key to Autolux's ethereal atmosphere. That's not to discredit the other two members, though: guitarist Greg Edwards (formerly of the criminally overlooked and underrated space-rockers Failure) and drummer/vocalist Carla Azar (formerly of Edna Swapt are obviously, and audibly, equal parts of the band. It is the dynamic of the three players together that make Autolux so unique and extraordinary. Edwards' swirling riffs range from relentlessly buzzing bursts of feedback to spacey drones. Edwards lets Goreshter's bass playing form the shell of the song while he completely fills it in. Azar's intro to the opening track, "Turnstile Blues," makes it clear that her drumming is the backbone of the band, and just as stylistic and cool as anything Goreshter and Edwards do. Azar's occasional vocal excursions, such as the chorus of "Sugarless," all rank among the album's best moments. "Future Perfect" is breathtaking in many ways — and the respect it commands is increased by the fact that it is the debut album by a relatively new band.

Granted, people around Los Angeles, and fans of the members' previous bands, have known about Autolux for three years and have been awaiting "Future Perfect" since the band released their demo in 2001.

The band too has been waiting a long time for this day to come as Edwards explained in a phone interview a week before "Future Perfect's" long-awaited release (the album is finally in stores now), with the Collegian.

"I was touring with Failure and ... Edna Swap and that's how Carla and I met and I was pretty blown away by her drumming. And then after that tour Failure broke up four or five [months later] and Carla just left [Edna Swap]. Soon after that I just showed up at Carla's door one day, just to say hi, and Eugene was at her house, and that was the first time I met Eugene. And then sometime soon after that [Carla and I] were having a conversation and she brought up that her and Eugene wanted to start a band and were wondering if I had any interest in that."

From there the band began to play shows and record their demo. Not long after they started playing musician/producer T-Bone Burnett, most famous recently for the soundtrack to the "Coen Brothers' film "O Brother Where Art Thou," came to them and talked to them about a record label he was starting up.

At that point things were looking up for Autolux but it took a long time and many delays before "Future Perfect" was completed. The band hit many hurdles, including a serious injury to Azar's arm that almost halted her drumming career.

"It's been kinda rough — it's hard to wait that long," Edwards sighs, "it took a while to make and then to actually finally finish making it to have to wait for the record to come out is kinda hard on the band. We finished it in February or March. We recorded the basic tracks in about two months and then we sort of attempted to mix it in different places with different configurations of people and it took a while to find a good mix. The hold up with the release ... the record company would push it back because they think there's gonna be an optimum time to release it. Mainly, probably, it's bullshit."

Edward's apathy towards record company priorities certainly extends to his bandmates and, although non-tangible, seems to be a big part of what makes Autolux, well, Autolux. The band has shown to be a collective of musicians who care about music and art, not radio success. Because of this the band is allowed to, and able to, experiment in ways few so-called artists do. Still, though, Edwards doesn't quite understand why the press treats them as inaccessible art-rock aliens. After all, Autolux features choruses with heaping quantities of light-hearted 'do-do-do's ("Angry Candy") and "Sha-la-la"s ("Here Comes Everybody").

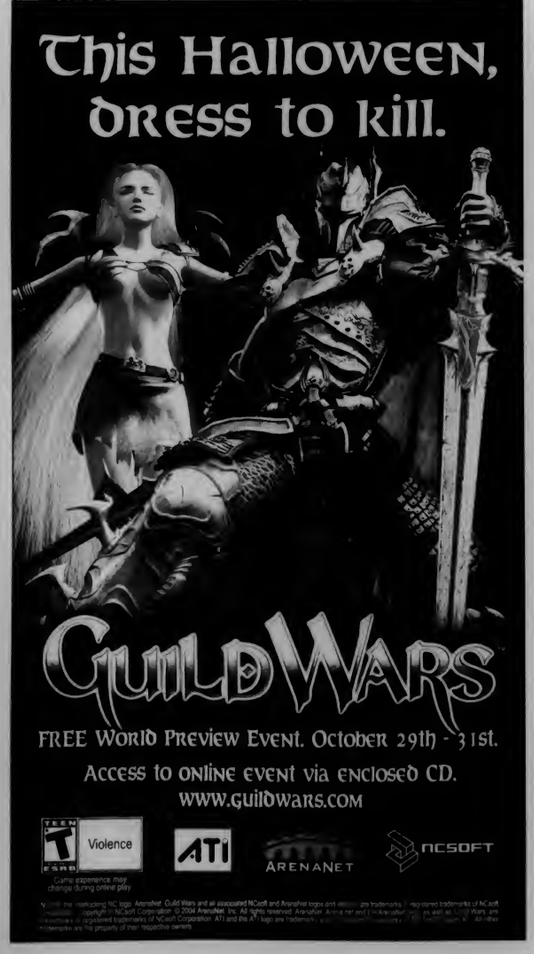
"I think [the combination of pop-rock and art-rock] was always the idea. We wanted to be really unique and otherworldly and definitely not sound like a 'rock band' or an American rock band but at the same time we wanted there to be some level of simplicity and directness. And also we ... wanted to be the band that, in a perfect world, would be a really popular pop band."

To the mainstream, though, Autolux will always represent the alien factors more then the pop factors.

"It's all a matter of perspective. I hear our music and I'm always thinking 'God, this is so safe, this is boring. We should be weirder'. We're always pushing for something a little more extreme but in the end we want to be really enjoyable to play and to listen to. That's our ultimate goal. We don't set out to be intentionally weird or difficult."

However Edwards realizes that his band probably won't be getting heavy rotation on traditional rock radio anytime soon.

"There's this sound, I don't know what you call it – Sumetal maybe, this Linkin Park kinda...this sound on the radio. I find it so grating and obnoxious and you get the whole society of radio listeners used to it...anything that doesn't like that is 'strange'. If you aren't trying to make a recording that sounds like all the stuff that's on the radio people think you're intentionally trying to not be commercial. Whereas that's not the case at all, we [just] don't particularly enjoy the way those recordings sound.



"We're kind of weary about the whole idea of pushing a single song and waiting for it to pop at radio. It's kind of scary. I would much rather tour a lot, have people come see us live, enjoy the band live, buy the record, live with the record, grow into it and really love the band through that kind of process. The whole opening weekend mentality of the record label — I'm not sure that they view us (that way but of course they're a big company, that's what they want. And I don't think it can happen right now for Autolux."

Indeed Autolux is not quite as difficult as a lot of the hype makes them out to be however it can take multiple listens to really get into the band – and countless more to discover every detail of the songs and get the entire picture.

"I don't know if we aim for that," Edwards commented, "but I know that whenever we write something we make sure it's something we're enjoying more and more as we work on it and if it doesn't have something about it that grows on us when we work on it then we drop it. It makes sense that it grows on people. Your first listen wouldn't be your most intense experience."

While all the tracks on "Future Perfect" have a certain charm upon first listen they all deserve a fair chance to grow on the listener and it is well worth it. Multiple listens reveal Autolux to be interesting, fascinating and addicting. Autolux is one of those rare bands that can restore your faith in music and "Future Perfect" is one of those few albums that has to be heard to be believed, as well as understood. Autolux definitely is not for everyone but for those that enjoy smart, original art-rock mixed with a perfect dose of pop Autolux will be the discovery of the year. "Future Perfect" isn't the only CD of 2004 worth having, but from start to finish, it definitely blows most stuff out of the water.

Autolux
Future Perfect
DMZ/Columbia

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
From "Saturday Night Live" and the movies "Anger Management", "Happy Gilmore" and "The Wedding Singer"
KEVIN NEALON
NOV. 12TH
"Jeff Greene" on HBO's "Curb Your Enthusiasm"
JEFF GARLIN
NOV. 13TH
a.k.a. "Dr. Dirty"
JOHN VALBY
NOVEMBER 5TH

McMurphy's
7th Annual
Kegs & Eggs
Homecoming Celebration
Saturday October 30th
Doors Open at 10 am NO COVER
Free food and prizes!
Breakfast Buffet
Proof of Age Required

Fancy NAILS
Inside Hampshire Mall
413-584-0210
Walk-ins Welcome
FREE French Manicure w/ full set only
Holiday Special
$2 OFF
w/ fell set or fill
with coupon only

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for 10/29/04 & 10/31/04 & 11/4/04
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
Narc (R) 155 445 740 1015
Ladder 49 (PG13) 110 400 710 1005
Saw II (R) 115 435 715 1020*
Shark Tale (PG) 120 405 630 845
The Forgotten (PG13) 420 920
Saving Grace (PG13) 130 455 745 1010*
The Grudge (PG13) 115 435 715 1020*
Birth (R) 140 450 750 1030*
Saw (R) 145 410 730 955*
Friend Number One (PG) Show Preview 7:30 -N-
Shall We Dance? (PG13) 125 415 955
Team America: World Police (R) 135 430 720 1025
Fahrenheit 9/11 (R) 105 425 705 1000
Taxi (PG13) 150 735
Ray (PG13) 100 440 800*
Shrek Shrek Nov 4
Friday Night Fights Nov 5
Control Midnight
*NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
Details & showtimes available at cinemark.com

Pittsburgh hosts A-10 XC championships tomorrow

By Martha Powers and Eric Athas
Collegian Staff

Tomorrow, the Massachusetts men's and women's cross country teams will travel to Pittsburgh to compete in the Atlantic 10 Championship.

The men's team is currently ranked No. 4 out of 11 teams, and over the course of the season, Massachusetts has been climbing in rank.

"At the beginning of the season, we were ranked seventh and rightfully so because our team performance last year in the meet put us in seventh place," coach Ken O'Brien said. "The last couple of weekends, we have made some improvements in our consistency so we have moved up the ladder."

The Minutemen will face some tough competition. The championship favorite is LaSalle, who have won the past three years.

"I have a sneaky feeling that Duquesne is really ready to pull a big upset over LaSalle. They have five or six very good distance runners who have been together a couple of years, and they have improved each year," O'Brien said.

The meet will be held at Duquesne's home course, which gives the team an advantage.

"The question isn't whether Duquesne wants it badly enough or if they have the ability, but whether it will happen," O'Brien said.

St. Joseph's is ranked third, right above Massachusetts.

"I know we have the ability to get third place, but as a coach, you condition yourself not to think that seven out of seven runners are going to have their best day," O'Brien said. "I think our real, more accurate competition is with Dayton and Richmond for the fourth spot. I think it would be a nice accomplishment for us to grab fourth."

There is a lot riding on just one race. The regular season performances don't count for any standing in cross country, rather, the conference champion is determined by the meet on Saturday.

But the team is ready.

"We have had some good meets and some meets that weren't our best. I feel as though the last two weeks have been our best performances of the year," O'Brien said.

"I have been really impressed with how the team has learned the past two weeks. They've learned some things that some teams don't pick up in a year," O'Brien said. "I think we've made a ton of adjustments since September. I'm extremely happy with the team, how they have approached things and how they've commited themselves."

Massachusetts hasn't raced against any of the teams in the conference this year except for Rhode Island so the unfamiliarity with the other teams is just one challenge of the race.

"There are a lot of returning runners in this meet," O'Brien said. "That is highly unusual because normally you would expect 25 percent of the kids would graduate, but 17 of the top 20 kids from the meet last year are coming back so that makes the quality of the competition really excellent. Therefore, many teams will have the upper advantage of experience, something that the young Massachusetts team does not have.

"The conference is going to be interesting this year because the group of schools from third to seventh I think will be very, very close," O'Brien said. "The teams are so close that at any point they could shuffle position. It's a great championship situation to be in because the team that performs the best on that one day will get the best reward."

"Whether we finish fourth or seventh, we're a better team than last year, and this year's team is much better prepared going into the meet," O'Brien said.

Trying to predict the outcome of the Atlantic 10 women's race is as difficult a task as trying to figure out who will win Tuesday's presidential election. The Minutewomen go into tomorrow's meet ranked fifth overall out of a total of eleven A-10 teams. The top five ranked teams are all very close to each other in terms of competition.

Richmond and LaSalle will most likely by vying for first place while Duquesne and Rhode Island are looking for the next slots. That leaves UMass as the wildcard, and coach Julie Lafreniere hopes that they can earn a spot in the top five.

"I really think we can get to that fifth spot," Lafreniere said. "The team is truly ready and very excited for the meet, but we need to have a very good day."

The team has not competed in a meet since the Albany Invitational back on Oct. 16 and have had plenty of time to prepare for this ever-so-important meet. Among those leading the pack include freshman standout Christina Derosa, who has been the number-one runner for UMass all year.

Derosa earned her second consecutive Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award following her performance at the Albany Invitational and hopes to add to her storybook rookie campaign. Senior captain Alexis Anzelone has been exceptional during the latter part of the season, placing second among UMass runners in the previous two meets.

"Alexis looked fantastic all week in practice," Lafreniere said. "She has really been outstanding and should be a major factor at the championships."

Sophomore Cuisle Kierans and senior captain Amanda Dahlberg also look to make their impact as top runners. While the top four runners will be a major factor, Lafreniere feels that it will be the next five runners who could be the deciding factor tomorrow. Made up of Erin O'Donnell, Ashley Davidson, captain Tricia Silva, Kara Gillette and Amanda Bodette, these five runners have been running separated by only 13 seconds but are a distance from the top four spots. Lafreniere hopes that they can close the gap between the top four runners and the following five.

During their extra week of practice, the team continued to work hard to prepare physically for the meet. Lafreniere also focused on working on fast leg turnover to adapt to the course they will be running tomorrow. The first mile of the course is downhill, but what goes down must come up, and the route goes uphill towards the end of the race.

"There is a change of pace, but I love this course," Lafreniere said. "This team has done a lot of work to get ready for this meet."

Halloween weekend begins with a trip to 'The Coffin'

The Massachusetts Minutemen are set for their first Hockey East home-and-home of the season. UMass travels to Providence tonight and plays host to the Friars tomorrow night at the Mullins Center.

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

There might be a message behind the fact that the Massachusetts hockey team is playing in a place nicknamed "The Coffin" two days before Halloween, but for the Minutemen, ghosts and goblins are not the things to be worried about.

Rather, the specter of an early-season losing streak looms, after what some might call an embarrassing loss, and what most would call a bad sign for the season ahead. Coming off their disappointing 3-2 overtime loss to Connecticut on Sunday, the Minutemen (3-2-0, 1-0-0 Hockey East) travel to Providence tonight to take on the Friars in Game 1 of a home-and-home Hockey East weekend.

UMass coach Don Cahoon, who has classically never put much emphasis on the past, said his team is ready to move on from the loss to the Huskies.

"There's no sense in letting that mentality linger," he said. "We've got to get over it and move on. Every weekend's going to be tough for us."

The Friars (2-1-0, 1-1-0 HEA) are once again one of Hockey East's great unknowns, a team that struggled to a 16-14-7 record (7-11-6 HEA) and an early exit from the playoffs via New Hampshire, who they took to three games before losing 1-0 at the Whittemore Center on March 13.

The Friars also produced the most shocking news of the Hockey East offseason, when goaltender Bobby Goepfert was dismissed from the team for violating team rules. Goepfert, who transferred to St. Cloud State in August, won 21 games in his two seasons as a Friar, with a .921 save percentage and a 2.46 goals against average. Goepfert turned aside 21 shots in the Friars' lone win over UMass last year, a 6-2 victory at the Mullins Center on Halloween, and made 29 stops on 32 shots two weeks later when the Minutemen dropped Providence 3-2 at Schneider.

That leaves David Cacciola, a senior who was on the losing end for five of his 11 games played (four ties), but posted a 2.06 GAA and .933 save percentage in 2003-04. Cacciola is averaging 28 saves per game, but has allowed nine goals in his three contests this year.

"Goepfert was a highly regarded goalie," Cahoon said. "But I always liked Cacciola there, he played at St. Sebastian's and had success there. It didn't seem to diminish quality of team, and although Goepfert is certainly a big loss, they've still got a solid goaltender there."

What is on the Minutemen's side is recent history. Since 2000, UMass has won four of its seven games at Schneider Arena, including both of last year's clashes.

"I don't think you can look at anything and think much into it," Cahoon said. "Certain teams, you have a run and do well against, and that can get flipped right around. The rink isn't a bad rink for us, that's for sure, and when we're going down there, we feel as though we can be successful."

NOTES: Senior Tim Warner will start tonight's game in goal, while junior Gabe Winer is set to man the crease tomorrow night back in Amherst. ... The Minute-men were temporarily evicted from the Mullins Center Practice Rink this week because of the Bill Cosby show scheduled to play the big house tonight, but practiced at Amherst College's Orr Rink all week, which comes a little closer to Schneider's 200 x 85-foot dimensions.

Worship at Dwight Chapel
We are an Interdenominational Evangelical Church serving the entire valley since 1886.
Sunday morning worship at 8:30 & 10:45
FREE SHUTTLE FROM UMASS (HAIGIS MALL @ 10AM)
If you are interested to know more about the church, visit us at www.DwightChapel.org
For more information call 413-256-8059
Dwight Chapel, 885 Federal Street, Belchertown, MA 01007

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
The # 1 place to develop your Halloween Pictures
Try our NEW disposable digital camera
•Print your digital pictures and put them on CD!
We feature many discount packages- JUST ASK US!
Also, ask about our student discount (Valid Student ID required, Amherst locations ONLY).

This is the "HOT" Yoga
BIKRAM YOGA Amherst
www.bikramyoga.com
665-yoga
The room is heated to open you...
The series is powerful to challenge you...
The yoga is BIKRAM to change you...
Designed for all levels, BIKRAM yoga will challenge you physically...focus you mentally... and allow you to relax on a very deep level.
TRY IT FOR 10 CONSECUTIVE DAYS FOR ONLY $20!!!
Rt. 116 across from Cinema Arts
Open 7 Days with generous student rates

Sunraise PRINTING & T SHIRTS across the street from Walmart
$6 EACH
YOUR ART HERE!
CUSTOM Shirts
* FREE MINIMAL ARTWORK
* 24 MINIMUM
* SCREEN(S) EXTRA
586-7133

Never have another disappointing date...
With a variety of fine cuisine from our dinner menu and a seat at a table in our elegant and romantic atmosphere....
We aren't just take-out. Come see our classy side.
We also feature catering for all occasions
$5.00 off on purchase of $25.00 or more (One coupon per party)
www.pinocchiosamherst.com
La Cucina Di Pinocchio
Downtown Amherst
(413) 256-4110
fax: (413) 253-3702
www.pinocchiosamherst.com

FREE RIDES HOME ON HALLOWEEN WEEKEND!
SPONSORED BY MERCY HOUSE
WWW.MOMMERCY.ORG
STREETS ON AMHERST TOO SPOOKY TO DRIVE?
TOO DRUNK TO DRIVE?
JUST PLAIN LAZY?
OCTOBER 30 & 31
10PM-4AM
DOOR TO DOOR SERVICE
CALL 413-687-8848 & 413-687-8865

UMass' backs against the wall

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Throw out all the clichéd, overused metaphors. This isn't do-or-die time, nor is it crunch time or time to cowboy up. If things don't happen this weekend, they never will, plain and simple. This is the end of the line.

Depending on the outcome, this weekend's road trip to St. Bonaventure and Duquesne may be the last time one will see the Massachusetts women's soccer team gear up and take to the field in 2004.

If the Minutewomen (6-9-0, 4-5-0 Atlantic 10) are to return home to Rudd Field, where they will host the A-10 Tournament next week, winning these final two games is absolutely vital. If they want to continue playing, there can be no losing or tying. However, they enter the weekend short a few more players than usual.

Two promising freshmen will not be seeing action this weekend. Midfielder Kaelyn Caldwell is still out with her ankle injury while defender Kristina Nunes has suffered her second concussion in the last week-and-a-half and will be sidelined.

Amy Maffucci is a question mark, too, having only been able to go at half-speed in practice for most of the week. Tiffany Hamill, after taking the brunt end of a brutal collision Sunday against LaSalle, is not at 100 percent. Another freshman, Tina Rodriguez, has struggled with nagging leg injuries. Chelsey Hoffman has been sick. Yet another, Morgan Czaja, will miss this weekend due to a mandatory field trip.

When it all adds up, the Minutewomen will have their work cut out for them.

"We're approaching this road trip as seriously as we can. We're in some trouble right now," coach Jim Rudy said.

There is reason for the Minutewomen to have faith for these girls. The LaSalle Explorers, who remain slightly ahead of UMass, have Dayton and Xavier this weekend. The Explorers are not favored to win over Dayton, but should they lose to the Musketeers as well, and UMass takes two victories on this road trip, the Minutewomen are in.

The last hurrah begins today in Olean, N.Y. where St. Bonaventure is 5-1-2 in 2004. Playing on what Rudy calls one of the worst playing surfaces in the A-10, they will be led by the goal-hungry tandem of junior Heather McDougall and sophomore Kerry O'Malley. Together, the two forwards have accounted for 24 goals on the year, more than half of the team's scoring (41 goals in 2004).

Alone, McDougall has 15 goals and four assists on the year for 34 points. The Minutewomen, meanwhile, have scored just five more goals as a team (20 goals) on the year. Throw in St. Bonaventure's notoriously rowdy crowd, and the Maroon and White are up against some stiff competition.

UMass wraps up the 2004 regular season on Sunday in Pittsburgh, Pa. taking on yet another physically tough in the Duquesne Dukes.

Playing on fieldturf, yet another surface unfamiliar to the 2004 Minutewomen, the Dukes will most likely be the most physical team the Maroon and White have faced all year.

Like UMass, the Dukes carry a few young guns in their arsenal. They are led in scoring by a senior Katie Schwaeger and freshman Audra Mathews, who have both tallied seven goals on the year. Two more freshmen, forward/midfielders Faye Rasmussen and Kelly Reed, have both netted six scores on the year. There are plenty more freshmen and sophomores contributing on offense to make for a well-rounded attack.

Either way, the Minutewomen return home after this weekend for some more soccer. Whether they want to be on the sideline in yellow jackets marked "staff" or whether they want to be on their home field making a run to upset heavily favored Dayton will be up to them.

UM trying to sneak into A-10 playoffs

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

It's now or never for the Massachusetts men's soccer team.

After a season of ups and downs, several position changes and the most overtime games in the history of UMass (7-7-2, 4-2-2 A-10) men's soccer, the Minutemen have three games between them and the post season.

This weekend, UMass will host on St. Bonaventure (7-7-1, 3-5-0 A-10) today, and current No. 1 seed Duquesne (10-6-0, 6-2-0 A-10) on Sunday. The Minutemen need two wins to secure a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament and with only three games left, every second counts.

Last year, UMass was in a very similar position. Hanging on to the final playoff spot, the Minutemen split their final weekend series, putting them on the brink of elimination. This set them up for a demoralizing 3-0, season-ending loss to Rhode Island in the last game of the season.

This year, the scenario is the same, and so are the main characters as UMass will travel to URI on Nov. 5, for its final game.

"To be honest with you, I don't even remember last year. We're just concentrating on this year and our games," UMass coach Sam Koch said in reference to the coincidence. "All I know is we've got to win one to be in the running for the tournament and both to be in the tournament. So I'd say this weekend is pretty important."

Putting a damper on the Minutemen's attack will be the absence of Ralph Pace during the St. Bonaventure game. Pace was given a red card in the final ten minutes of the first half against La Salle on Oct. 24. UMass lost the game 2-0, which dropped it from third to fifth in the A-10.

Koch understands the severity of losing a talented player such as Pace, who is third on the team in the points with three goals and four assists. However, he is confident in a variety of unspecified players to pick up the burden.

"Obviously, you're without the services of a very good player but we'll have 11 guys out on the field doing everything they can to make up for it," Koch said. "We have a good idea of who's going to be out there, but I'd just as soon keep it in the team right now."

Along with losing the offensive ability of Pace, the Minutemen will need to put able bodies in the defensive midfield in order to slow down a speedy St. Bonaventure attack. The Bonnies are ranked ninth in the A-10 right now but are a mere win away from being right back in the playoff mix.

Leading the way for St. Bonaventure has been Andy Garcia, who is a goal-scoring distributor that leads the team in points (18) and assists (10). Garcia and his wingman Konrad Paszkowski have contributed a third of the points this year for the Bonnies.

"They are very skillful, and they have a lot of team speed, but they've had some tough results," Koch said. "They aren't consistent, but when they play their style, they are definitely a tough opponent."

Koch is confident that his team can come away with a victory if they don't fall victim to the "slashing" offense that the Bonnies play.

"Against St. Bonaventure, if we get stretched, they have the speed and the skill to slice and dice you so we want to make sure that that doesn't happen," Koch said. "It's just like the [St. Louis] Cardinals. They had two huge blunders on the basepaths [in the World Series]. We want to make sure we don't make those kind of mistakes that can turn the game around."

Duquesne brings a much different animal to Rudd Field as they are currently the first-place team in the A-10 and are riding possibly the strongest defense in the conference.

The Dukes haven't exactly been lighting up the scoreboard, as they've averaged a mere 1.38 goals per game. It's their stymieing defense that has been putting numbers in the win column, they are tops in the A-10 with .94 goals allowed per game, and have five shutouts (tied for second in A-10).

Minutewomen jockying for position

By Dave Quinn
Collegian Staff

Let's get one thing straight. When the Massachusetts field hockey team travels to Kingston to take on the Rhode Island Rams (4-13, 1-4), it won't be a do-or-die, win-and-get-in situation. The Minutewomen have clinched a spot in Atlantic 10 playoffs. Saturday's noontime game, however, will be a defining moment for the field hockey team as it sets the tone for next weekend's A-10 championships.

The Minutewomen are coming off a loss to conference leader Richmond on Oct. 24. Senior Day ended on a sour note as the Spiders dominated Massachusetts in every way en route to a 7-0 victory. When the team returned to practice on Tuesday, UMass coach Patty Shea acknowledged the past but turned the team's attention to the future.

"You can't change ancient history. The only thing you can really do is learn from it. We needed to take the Richmond game and learn from it, both individually and collectively, as a team. Now, our focus needs to be the Rhode Island game," Shea said.

This game has significant ramifications. With a win, the Maroon and White would clinch second place in the conference and would not face No. 10 Richmond until the finals. A loss would mean that the Minutewomen could finish anywhere from second to fourth, potentially setting up the dreaded first round match up with the Spiders. At this point, the Rhode Island game has become the most important game of the season.

"I think the Rhode Island game was the one that we knew was really going to be the focus," Shea said. "This game really solidifies where we are in the conference. With this game, we could slide from the No. 2 seed to the No. 3 seed or even to the No. 4 seed. It's nice to be in control of your own destiny, and you can't ask for anything more than that."

So what is the key to locking up the second seed? Preaching "the simple" is a concept that Shea has been driving home since day one. In any sport, substance always defeats style, and Shea believes the Richmond game drove home that-point to her crew.

"Richmond didn't do anything we weren't prepared for," said Shea. "Richmond took advantage of two pretty critical mistakes that we made in the first five minutes of the game. We had simple opportunities but we tried to do the most difficult things. We have to be patient and realize it might take two passes to get where we want to go instead of trying to thread the needle all the time. I always tell them, 'the more simple the decision, the more correct it is.'"

The Rams have struggled immensely this season, winning just one out of their last eight games. The lone victory came against West Chester on Oct. 10, 3-2 in penalty strokes. Rhody is lead by two freshmen in scoring; Lauren Kerr with four goals and Jeannine Records, who has registered three goals and two assists. Another freshman, M.J. Britt, has been busy in front of the net, saving 112 shots while allowing 41 goals. Thirteen of Rhode Island's 20 players are either freshmen or sophomores. In short, it is a rebuilding year for the Rams.

Despite the limited highlights, Shea notes that the Rams always play with a lot of emotion and intensity, which provides for a very challenging game for the Minutewomen. Rhody does have two other advantages in Saturday's game. The first advantage is that it is Senior Day, which usually tends to bring out the best in teams. The second is the grass playing field on which the ball plays much differently than the Garber Field turf that Massachusetts is accustomed to.

"If you let the different surfaces get under your skin, you're going to be in trouble," Shea said. "The grass game does play a little bit on our strengths because of our team speed, so we can throw the ball into spaces, and we have people who can run on to it and get to it first.

"It plays to your biggest disadvantage on the corners because your corners are such a precise piece of the game that and you have the variability of the bounces and the divots in the grass. It's also dependant on the weather, where it could be wet or it could be sloppy."

Interested in a Chanllenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?

Consider a career in Clinical Social Work!

To find out more, attend the Smith college School for Social Work

OPEN HOUSE

Including small group discussions with faculty and information on course work, placement, financial aid and student life.

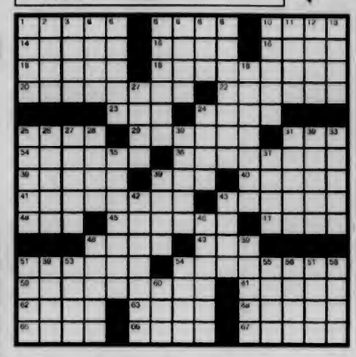
Saturday, November 13. 2004
1:00 PM - 5:30 PM
Campus Center, 2nd Floor, Smith College

For more information, call 413.585.7960
www.smith.edu/ssw

SMITH COLLEGE
School for Social Work

Quote of the Day

"So come up to the lab and see what's on the slab. I see you shiver in antici ... pation."



-Dr. Frank-N-Furter, Rocky Horror Picture Show

The Moan and Dove

The Moan and Dove will wipe it's dirty bottom with your fake I.D.

themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

Horrorscopes

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You should take off your mask. Wait that's not a mask.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
That scary attic of yours has a few skeletons in its closet.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Fake blood tastes good. Try not to make it a habit.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Go for a ride on your broomstick to get a better perspective.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't overdose on those little candy corn pumpkins.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
That black cat is going to follow you all the way home.

leo • Jul., 23-Aug. 22
A happy walk through the graveyard could have dire consequences ...

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Ill's a full moon tonight. Keep yourself in check or chains.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't steal that little kid's trick-or-treat bag you bully.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Those really are eyeballs and brains that you just touched.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
There is nobody behind you, yet.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If Frankenstein had a twin, today you'd be it.

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE
Ask for Advertising @ 545-3500

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

1 Bdrm, Util included, furnished / unfurnished 720/month 10 Min from UMass Bus Rt 665-4791 665-2203

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

Parking Attendant Part-time early evening position Must be 18 Years Old and Have your own vehicle $10.50 per hour, apply in person Eastside Grill 19 Strong Avenue Northampton

EMPLOYMENT

Driver Wanted 2 to 5 hours/week $15/hour plus mileage. Driving an elderly woman around 207-361-2695 agatool@aol.com

Part time employment, flexible hours – earn $30 per hour or more with travel benefits Call 908-431-1900 Ext 115.

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

MUSICIANS

Seeking Trumpet or Saxaphone player to complete Jazz Group Trio. Ryan 413-221-7615

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Snow Plowing It's not too early to think about snow! Call MR. PLOW today for subscription plowing. Space is limited. MR PLOW is a student run business 978-884-7102

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tout Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

TRAVEL

MONTREAL Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most Weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRMNG Online
1 800 426 7710

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

CONGRATS RED SOX

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 29, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The year is here!

COURTESY BOSTON.COM/AP

1918 - 2004

NOVEMBER

Red Sox
WORLD SERIES CHAMPS

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2004 The Massachusetts Daily Collegian SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

86 years in the making...

Believing in the power of the Red Sox

Mike Marzelli

When I was thirteen years old, I bought my first official, fitted Red Sox hat. The product of a 20-dollar bill my grandmother slipped me before a late July game at Fenway Park, I'll always remember how perfect it looked on me when I first put it on inside the Landsdowne Shop. Turning to my best friend Josh that muggy summer night, I told him I'd never take it off until we saw the Sox win the World Series. It was a promise I always knew I'd keep.

For seven and a half years, I would have preferred to sacrifice my firstborn child rather than take that hat off my head. The dark blue color faded to gray from seven summers of sun, the brim ripped and shredded almost all the way across, the inside completely gutted in an effort to help it still fit right and a strong odor of blood, sweat and tears emanating from it, the hat had a unique character all its own.

Friends and family tried to persuade me to ditch the hat over the last few years. One of my best friends asked for it as a keepsake when I went away to college, my dog Duffy tried to take it outside and lose it and my mom offered to buy me two brand new hats, but deep down they all knew that only one thing would ever make me lose that hat.

On Wednesday October 27, 2004 at 11:40 pm, that one thing came. When Keith Foulke fielded Edgar Renteria's comebacker and the Red Sox won the World Series for the first time in 86 years, the hat had

See MARZELLI on page RS4

In the end, Epstein had the right theory

Andrew Merritt

On the off chance that Messrs. Belichick and Epstein don't have it in their rolodexes, here's a number they might want to hang on to: 1-800-786-9199. It's the main number for the U.S. Patent Office, and Theo and Bill might just want to look into getting the first-ever patent for winning in modern professional sports.

Call it the New England System, or, if we're not too concerned about alienating the fans in other New England states, the Boston Method, since Foxboro gets lumped in with Beantown by every national media outlet, video game, and non-New Englander in the country.

Whatever the name is, it's definitely a significant theory — that finding the players who fit your team best, and making the team concept more important than individual achievement, is the best path to surviving the hardscrabble world of free agency, inflated egos and fly-by-night champions (see Ravens, Baltimore).

The Patriots introduced it in 2001-02, and perfected it over the next two years. The National Football League still doesn't know how to handle the Pats, and while their illustrious run of consecutive

See MERRITT on page RS4

Sox make it easy

Jeff Howe

Yeah, the Boston Red Sox did just win their first World Series championship in 86 years, but along the way, something went drastically wrong.

The last two games of the ALCS and the only four games of the World Series were just too easy.

Everything went according to script. In fact, during those last six games, the Sox never even trailed.

How, after 86 years of absolute misery – selling Babe to produce "No, No Nanette," Pesky holding onto the ball, turning down Willie Mays because there "was no room for him in the outfield" according to owner Tom Yawkey, Bucky, Buckner, Boone, the blown leads, the seven-game losses, the success of the Yankees, Clemens' blister, Joe Morgan on ESPN, Tim McCarver on FOX, Dan Duquette, Mark Bellhorn and Johnny Damon's early postseason slumps, the disappearing acts of Mo Vaughn and

See HOWE on page RS4

Warm welcome for Cosby's homecoming

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

TODAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY
• High: 56 • Low: 35	• High: 54 • Low: 50	• High: 59 • Low: 39

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Minutemen block PAT to beat Maine

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 39

Bill Cosby, administration announce scholarship for inner city students

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

Comedian Bill Cosby performed in front of a packed Mullins Center audience on Friday to benefit public school students from across the state.

The proceeds from his stand-up comedy performance, "Cosby Comes Home", as well as several large contributions from corporate sponsorships have helped the University of Massachusetts raise over $1.5 million which will be given to scholarship funds, according to University officials.

An initial endowment of approximately $340,000 from Cosby's Friday performance, as well as a 50 percent state match, will jump-start the new Cosby Commonwealth Challenge Fund, which the University announced Friday afternoon.

The fund will help recruit students interested in attending the University from many the public school systems, including Springfield and Holyoke. The program will encourage students from elementary through high school to build a strong academic base and maintain a high grade-point average, while working their way toward college.

"It's about this University opening its arms to all Americans as a state school," said Cosby. "[UMass] is the place you ought to go."

Students selected for the fund will have a contract guaranteeing financial aid toward an undergraduate career at UMass after graduation if academic performance has been strong during the elementary through high school career.

Charlena M. Seymour, Provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, said the Cosby Commonwealth Challenge Fund will bring positive attention to the University, as well as benefit the students who receive its benefits.

"Bill Cosby is one of our most famous alumni, and he is helping create a program that allows him to exert a positive influence on both the University and students who will come here to improve their education," Seymour said.

Students can attend UMass once the program is completed. The students will receive an annual award towards their tuition for four years if they uphold good academic standing at the University.

Participants will be invited to a leadership and enrichment program that will also be created by UMass, which will include an annual event to publicly recognize the students.

"[The University fund] will reach out to touch and make the young men, women, girls, and boys want to get an education," said Cosby.

According to University officials, students will be nominated from the schools by Cosby Challenge "talent scouts" or teachers, administrators, and community leaders from the partner schools in underprivileged areas. The Cosby Scholars must demonstrate motivation and a drive to succeed, and will be selected by a representative of the two school districts and the University.

MATTHEW REID/COLLEGIAN

Bill Cosby and Chancellor John Lombardi announce a new scholarship funded by Cosby to benefit lower income students.

For every $1 million raised, approximately 20 Cosby Scholars would receive tuition.

According to UMass officials, the $1.5 million was comprised of $541,000 by individuals, $218,000 from the pre-Cosby performance dinner, and $226,000 from performance tickets. The event was made possible by $150,000 in corporate sponsorships and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts' endowment matching program, adding approximately $383,500.

The performance was a gift from Cosby to the University. Cosby received his master's and doctorate in the 1970s in education.

70 people turn out for Noho peace vigil

By Jeremy Dirac
Collegian Staff

It was a cool Thursday night in Northampton this past week, when about 70 people carrying candles walked in a procession from the town's courthouse to the Unitarian church in support of peace and the soldiers and civilians who have died in Iraq.

The Western Massachusetts Interfaith Coalition for Peace and Justice, a group made up of members of various religions, organized the twenty-minute procession. The group was formed in opposition to the war in Iraq in the summer of 2002, just eight months before the war began said Rene Theberge, a member of the steering committee.

While participants walked silently, a group of Buddhist monks wearing long yellow gowns thumped on prayer drums and chanted "Na Mu Myo Ho Ren Kyo," which roughly translated means "All life is sacred."

Ninety-nine year old Phyllis Rodin made her way down the street in her wheelchair. Attached to her chair was a sign reading "Stand Up For Peace" and her sweatshirt proclaimed "Grand-mothers For Peace."

"I thought it was splendid. The thing that was thrilling was that it was truly interfaith," said Rodin.

There were some younger people involved too, including Jade Jerommon, a student at Smith College. She hadn't heard about the procession but decided to join in when she saw the group.

"I'm just feeling really sad about the political atmosphere and I wanted to get together with some people who felt the same," said Jerommon.

Also supporting the cause for peace was a couple of dogs who followed their masters in reverent silence.

Following the procession, about half of the participants remained and gathered in a circle outside of the Unitarian Church to listen to talks from members of different religions.

"We are living in an urgent moment in time," said a Jewish man, who added that we need to share a vision of peace. A Muslim man said that Islam is about submission and a Unitarian Universal-ist read a poem about the eve of war in Iraq.

Dr. Peter Kakos of The Edwards United Church of Christ related the war in Iraq to the Vietnam War in which he lost three of his high school friends.

The reverend also said that the procession was mainly for the people whom were involved in it.

"There's always a need for people who struggle for peace to

See VIGIL on page 4

'Power of Learning' attracts students to Homecoming Weekend

'Don't Worry Be Healthy' educates students on nutrition

By Matthew Reid
Collegian Staff

The health fair "Don't Worry, Be Healthy" was held in the Campus Center basement on Friday as part of Homecoming weekend's Power of Learning activity, which took place in the Campus Center throughout the day.

Key organizers of the fair were Nancy Cohen, professor and head of the department of nutrition, Mary Andrianopoulos, associate professor of communication disorders and Helene Cunningham, clinical assistant professor and director of the Nursing Learning Resource Center.

Several of the booths at the fair were organized, prepared and manned by undergraduate students.

Students from the Department of Nutrition manned two information tables, named "Good Nutrition for Good Health" and "Move Toward a Healthy Weight."

Both booths contained information about proper nutritional habits, health standards and ways to maintain a healthy lifestyle, which included a place to check your body mass index (BMI) and sample nutritional foods.

"The students worked very hard putting this all together, and they did a great job. They came up with the ideas for the displays and handouts on their own, and obtained a lot of useful experience on planning and running a health fair," Cohen said.

The School of Nursing featured an interactive mannequin, the Sim Man patient simulator for people to observe. Sim Man cost over $50,000 and is an anatomically correct male mannequin built to mimic a real life patient.

The dummy can mimic a persons real heart sounds, blood pressure, pulse, skin temperature, lung sounds and can even communicate such phrases as, "I don't feel good," and "nurse, when is it time for my sponge bath?" The school of Nursing also has a female version of the mannequin, known as Sim Annie.

"The mannequins are really incredible," said Cunningham. "They can prepare students for what they can expect from actual patients in a very realistic way."

Other students from the School of Nursing were on hand to pass out stress balls, give information on stress reduction techniques, and take people's blood pressures. People could also listen to various types of classical music and soothing sounds to induce relaxation.

MATTHEW REID/COLLEGIAN

School of Nursing students observed an anatomically correct mannequin to monitor its heart condition.

Corey Mossop, a senior exercise science major, helped run the YMCA 3-minute step test. Volunteers could take the test, which consisted of stepping up and down a one foot elevated platform for three minutes. After the time had expired, the person's heart rate was taken to indicate their overall fitness level.

Certified massage therapists from the Branford Hall Career Institute of Springfield were giving free back and neck massages.

"Seeing something like this is just awesome," said Charlena Seymore, University of Massachusetts Provost who was in attendance to see the event first-hand. "It's important to show the UMass students demonstrating their potential. This shows what is possible when you have first-class students performing at their best."

The fair featured contributions from the School of Nursing and the School of Public Health and Health Sciences, which includes the departments of nutrition, communication disorders and exercise sciences.

MicBio department generates power through bacteria, mud

By Hannah Drake
Collegian Correspondent

More than forty different academic departments from the University of Massachusetts took part in a showcase entitled "The Power of Learning" last Friday. It displayed the University's current research projects and accomplishments along with live music and poetry readings and other forms of art in the Campus Center Concourse.

The three-hour event was part of UMass Amherst's Homecoming 2004 weekend celebration.

One department featured was the Microbiology Department, which displayed its "Bacterial Batteries" research.

According to Kelvin Gregory, a post-doctoral research assistant, explained that researchers found a way to generate power from mud through the discovery of a certain type of bacteria.

The driving point of the project was to solve a problem of the U.S. Navy's large number of buoys in the Atlantic and Pacific Ocean, which monitor ocean temperature, and current among other measurements. The buoys are battery powered, which is not cost efficient in its current form.

Gregory said the Navy wants a relatively cheap, maintenance-free way to keep the buoys running. The MicroBio Department believes that Bacterial Batteries could well be the solution.

The School of Education was also featured at the event. It displayed information about the ACCELA Alliance (Access to Critical Content and English Language Acquisition,) which UMass sponsors.

Doctoral student Ruth Horman explained that UMass has collaborated with school districts in Western Massachusetts through this program in order to help students simultaneously learn English and keep up with the curriculum.

ACCELA currently has six projects aimed at improving quality of learning for ELLs, and will have nine next year as the Springfield School District joins the alliance.

The Center for Computer-Based Instructional Technology displayed one of its latest educational software developments. The program demonstrated was a CASA (Collaborative Adaptive Sensing of the Atmosphere)

See LEARNING on page 4

MATTHEW REID/COLLEGIAN

Students look inside 'Bush's Brain'

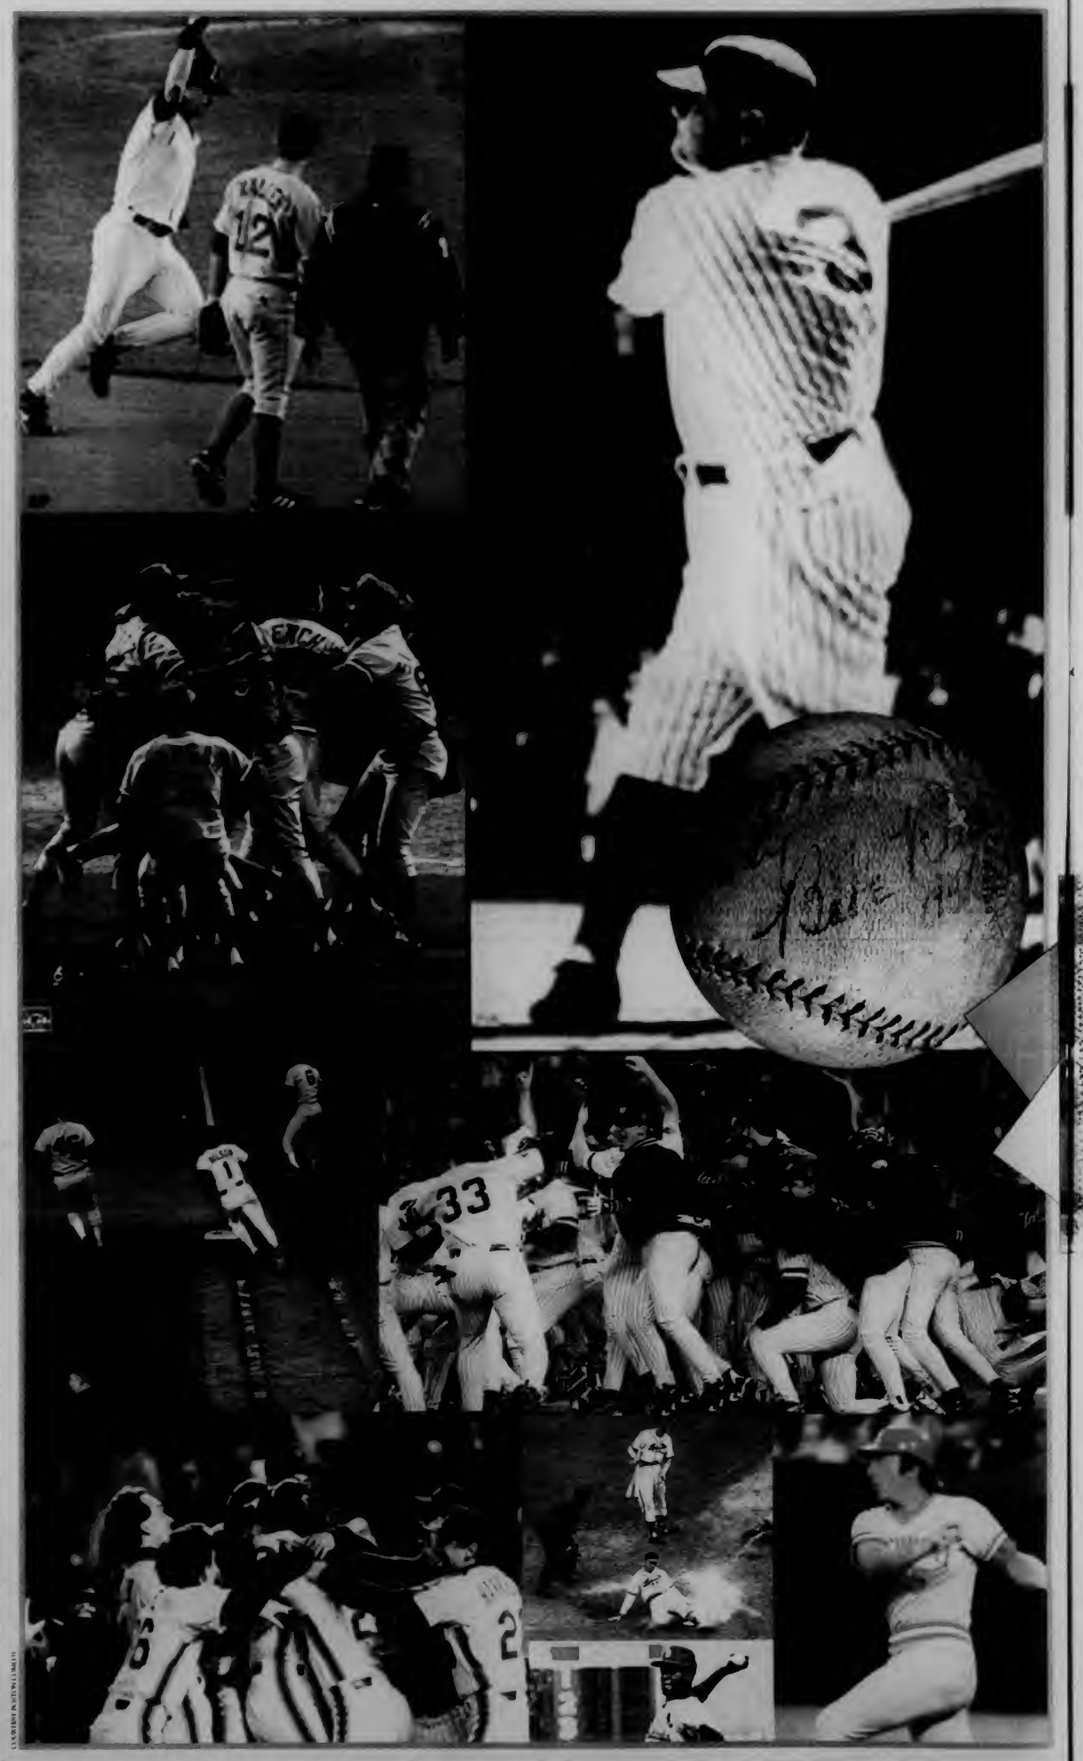
Author James Moore appeared at a DVD viewing of the movie based on his book 'Bush's Brain.'

Baby Safe Havens now legal

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Baby Safe Haven Law took effect this past Friday, October 29, making legal the act of placing newborns into the hands of officials at hospitals, police and fire stations across the state.

Massachusetts has become the 47th state to enact a law that provides places for mothers to drop off unwanted babies. Baby Safe Haven advocates say that this law is especially important because it gives a newborn's parents the ability to place it into medical care in the crucial hours following birth.



Michael Morrissey, leader of the Massachusetts-based group "Baby Safe Haven Yes!" pushed for the bill's passage in the state house. He gave one example of a Connecticut couple who followed their state's Baby Safe Haven law by bringing it to the hands of a hospital worker. The hospital was not in Connecticut, but Massachusetts where no such law existed at the time.

Morrissey said the hospital took the baby into its care anyway. He added that it was probably a better idea the parents brought the child to the Massachusetts hospital because the closest hospital to their home was located in Massachusetts. The couple lived on the boarder of Connecticut and Massachusetts.

"It was very cold when it happened," said Morrissey. "Bringing it into Massachusetts probably saved the baby's life."

The new Massachusetts law differs slightly from similar laws in other states. One main

See BABY SAFE on page 4

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE 2004

FEARED OR LOVED? CITY OR COUNTRY? DOG OR CAT?*

you have priorities.
let them guide you as you build your career.
define what's important to you and see what's important to others.

pwc.com/mypriorities

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Election 2004 only one day away

Bush and Kerry are still in a statistical dead heat

By Jeremy Dirac
Collegian Staff

The long awaited 2004 presidential election will be held tomorrow, but not all is going as planned. According to an Associated Press report, the nation is currently short 500,000 poll workers needed to meet the new demand.

Washington-based political analyst, Charlie Cook said on NBC that with this kind of turnout "all the old assumptions go out the window."

"I've been through 37 states this year. I've never seen anything like this kind of interest," Cook said.

Voter turnout in 2000 was just under 106 million. This election, Cook suggested, an additional 20-25 million people might be voting.

According to a CBS/New York Times poll yesterday, Bush has taken the lead over Kerry with 49 percent of likely voters saying they will vote for Bush and 46 percent saying they will vote for Kerry. Also according to the poll, 49 percent of likely voters think that Bush will win, 33 percent think Kerry will.

The election is still extraordinarily tight however. According to CBS, Frank Newport of the Gallup Poll said that since Harry Truman, the three incumbents who have lost, all had approval ratings well below 50 percent. The incumbents who won had approval ratings well above 50 percent. Today in many swing states, the candidates are still dead even.

Candidates Bush and Kerry are campaigning relentlessly to persuade voters to vote for them.

According to CBS, a videotape recently released with Osama bin Laden explicitly claiming responsibility for the terrorist attack on 9/11 and addressing the American people saying, "Your security is not in the hands of Kerry or Bush or al Qaeda. Your security is in your own hands."

Senator John McCain (R-Ariz.) said that he believes the videotape will give the president a boost in the polls.

"I think the undecideds are going to go into the ballot booth and vote on who they believe can protect them the best," McCain said on CBS News, maintaining that the answer would be Bush.

According to MSNBC, Bush spent yesterday in Florida where he attended services at a Roman Catholic Church. The pastor, Monsignor Jude O'Doherty gave a long tribute to Bush, then Bush went from rally to rally across the state and often highlighted the issue of terrorism, "if you believe America should fight the war on terror with all her might and lead with unwavering confidence, I ask you, come stand by me."

According to MSNBC, Kerry attended church services in Dayton, Ohio. In a speech, Kerry said that he would undertake an unprecedented "flurry of activity" to protect the nation. Kerry talked about his record in foreign affairs and said, "I will wage a smarter, tougher war on terrorism," according to CNN.

According to CNN, last week, in a speech at Sioux City, Iowa, Kerry said that Bush had allowed 380 tons of high explosives to disappear in Iraq. He said that the administration had tried to, "dodge and bob and weave in their usual effort to avoid responsibility." He also said that Vice President Cheney was becoming "the chief minister of disinformation."

According to CNN, Bush said that Kerry did not have the information available to him to make claims that the president had ignored the site that the explosives are missing from. He said that, "The senator is denigrating the action of our troops and commanders in the field without knowing the facts. Unfortunately, that's part of the pattern of saying anything to get elected."

Bush has been working to get votes from Democrats, according to MSNBC. He said that Kerry stood in contrast to former Democratic presidents who had waged wars like Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman and John Kennedy.

Meanwhile, according to CNN, Kerry has been working to get middle class votes. He said Bush, "has failed middle class families with almost every choice he's made. We need a fresh start. Because the truth is, middle-class families can't afford four years of a Bush economy." Kerry said that Bush had rewarded companies that shifted jobs overseas, allowed HMOs and drug companies to make huge profits at the expense of patients, and raided Social Security to pay for tax cuts for the wealthy.

Both candidates have elicited the help of "heavy hitters" on the campaign trail. Former President Clinton campaigned for Kerry in Nevada on Friday, New Mexico on Saturday, and Arkansas yesterday. Bruce Springstein appeared with Kerry on at a rally in Miami on Friday. Governor of California, Arnold Schwarzenneger was at a rally in Ohio with Bush on Friday night. Also, Boston Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling, has voiced his support for Bush but was unable to attend a rally with him in New Hampshire due to injury.

Two things that have traditionally been very effective in determining the next president have given opposite results this election. Students from grades K-12 recently participated in a weekly reader poll where over 60 percent of the votes cast went to President Bush. Since 1956, Weekly Reader students have correctly picked the president 11 out of 12 times according to the website.

Another, traditionally accurate predictor of the presidential election is of all things, a football game. According to Snopes.com, in the previous 15 elections, if the Washington Redskins have lost their last home game prior to the election, the incumbent party has lost the White House. When they have won, the incumbent has stayed in power. As the Green Bay Packers won, Senator Kerry should therefore win the election. If anything can be so definitively, it is that anything can happen tomorrow.

COURTESY JOHNKERRY.COM

John Kerry speaks during a campaign volunteer kick-off event in Appleton, Wisconsin.

COURTESY OF GEORGEWBUSH.COM

President George W. Bush shakes hands with supporters while campaigning in Manchester, New Hampshire.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-2500 •
• Fax 413-545-3909 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Peter Fousekis
Managing Editor Andrew Merritt
Business Manager Rich Pacheco
Production Manager Cory Rosenberg
Night Supervisor Cameron Woods
Advertising Manager Tiffany Sumfield
Editorial Production Samantha Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Meghan Healy
Comics Editor Alyson Zillmann
Editorial Editor Paige Cross
News Editor Erika Lovley
Photo Editor Matthew Reid
Sports Editor Mike Marzelli
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Merry Pappas
Distribution Manager Josh Kippins
Finance Manager Hiruk Shah
Accounting Clerk Virginie Frecaut
Human Resource Sandra Marquet
Assistant Operations Linda Wallach
Assistant Advertising Josh Greenberg
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Finance Thomas Hecht
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Mike Bunsick
Asst. Arts & Living Monique Jemmott
Assistant Editorial Yousef Mansoyyer
Assistant Editorial Allison Edlin
Assistant News Julie O'Donnell
Assistant News Dan O'Brien
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern
Assistant Sports Jeff Howe

Production Crew
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Mike Marzelli
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrenne Bossi
COPY EDITOR
Matt Elder
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Ali Zilman & Amanda Allen

For the record:

Due to a reporting error, an Oct. 25 story about Columbia professor and Nation columnist Patricia Williams' lecture incorrectly identified the Brown v. Board of Education Supreme Court Decision. We regret any confusion this may have caused.

Due to a reporting error, the Oct. 22 story titled "Rock out in 'Rocktober'" misidentified Sex Pistols' bassist Sid Vicious, replacing his name with the name of the band's frontman, Johnny Rotten. We apologize for the error.

Bin Laden's chauffeur moves toward dismissal of terror charges

By Paisley Dodds
Associated Press

GUANTANAMO BAY NAVAL BASE, Cuba (AP) — In a challenge that could make or break upcoming trials by a special military commission, defense lawyers are moving to dismiss terrorism charges against Osama bin Laden's chauffeur and an Australian cowboy who joined the Taliban.

Hearings on the motions beginning Monday will test the boundaries of international law on the eve of U.S. elections that could ultimately change the mission that has detained some 550 terror suspects from more than 40 countries in a U.S. military base in Cuba, most without access to lawyers or official charges.

Only four of the detainees, classified as enemy combatants, have been charged with war crimes and face trials before a special three-member military panel starting in December.

The first pre-trial hearing is for David Hicks, an Australian cowboy who joined Afghanistan's ousted Taliban regime. He is charged with attempted murder, aiding the enemy and conspiracy to attack civilians, commit terrorism and destroy property. Hicks has pleaded innocent.

Before his Jan. 11 trial can start, the panel must hear a series of motions disputing the charges and challenging his nearly three-year detention at the remote U.S outpost.

President Bush ordered the military commissions about three years ago, the first time the United States ordered such trials since World War II.

But defense lawyers contend the U.S. military can't charge someone for a crime they committed before the president ordered the commissions. They also allege that bin Laden's al-Qaida organization isn't a state, so international laws of war don't apply.

If Democratic Sen. John Kerry wins Tuesday's election, he could abandon the presidential order. Kerry's running mate, John Edwards, has said he would scrap the commissions and establish a new system modeled on established military courts-martial.

If defense pre-trial motions are accepted, it also could throw the whole process into turmoil and possibly disrupt or postpone further trials at Guantanamo.

"There won't be a lot of drama in these hearings but the questions get to the heart of whether these commissions can be fair," said James Ross of New York-based Human Rights Watch, one of the groups of international observers monitoring the hearings.

Defense attorneys say Hicks has been denied a right enshrined in the U.S. constitution to a speedy trial, unfettered access to attorneys and the right to fair proceedings. They also challenged a rule prohibiting him from being present for classified parts of his trial, saying he can't properly defend himself unless he knows the allegations.

Earn a Certificate in Criminal Justice

apply now for the

CRIMINAL JUSTICE PROGRAM

Criminal Justice Concentration
Department of Sociology

UMassAmherst Continuing Education
www.umassulearn.net

For students who plan a career in some aspect of the criminal justice system: police officers, probation and parole officers, paralegals, public and private criminal attorneys, district attorneys, judges, etc.

Applications are now being taken for the program.

For more information, and to apply to the program, contact Sarah O'Keefe, Sociology Department, Thompson 524, 545-0475 or email cj@soc.umass.edu

To register for winter and spring courses, go to www.umassulearn.net or the Division of Continuing Education Registration Office, 358 N. Pleasant St., 545-3653

Priority will be given to registered Criminal Justice Program students.

HOMETOWN HIGH

• DO YOU WANT TO VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL, BUT CAN'T THINK OF A GOOD REASON WHY?

• ARE YOU AN OUTGOING PERSON WHO LIKES TO INTERACT WITH GROUPS OF PEOPLE?

• DO YOU WANT TO AFFECT THE LIVES OF OTHER PEOPLE IN A POSITIVE WAY?

• IF YOU ANSWERED YES, THEN UNDERGRADUATE ADMISSIONS HAS THE PERFECT OPPORTUNITY FOR YOU!

GET INVOLVED WITH HOMETOWN HIGH

•VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL AND EXPRESS YOUR WISDOM GAINED AT UMASS AMHERST TO HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS LOOKING AT COLLEGES!
•TALK ABOUT YOUR PERSONAL EXPERIENCE, YOUR CONCERNS DURING YOUR FRESHMAN YEAR, AND SHARE WHY YOU DECIDED TO COME TO UMASS AMHERST!

COME SEE US ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE TO SIGN UP!
MON 11/1–FRI 11/5
9:00 AM–3:00 PM

FOR MORE INFO EMAIL KERI AT KDEJONG@EDUC.UMASS.EDU OR CALL KERI OR SARAH AT THE ROBSHAM MEMORIAL CENTER FOR VISITORS–545-0306

ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS:
- FILL OUT AN INTEREST SHEET
- ATTEND A 1 & 1/2 HOUR TRAINING SESSION
- SET UP AN APPOINTMENT
- VISIT YOUR OLD HIGH SCHOOL

RECEIVE A FREE UMASS AMHERST T-SHIRT FOR YOUR EFFORTS

UMASS AMHERST

Baby Safe Haven law hopes to prevent infant deaths

BABY SAFE from page 1

Lt. Governor Kerry Healy signed the Baby Safe Haven law July 31, 2004. The bill took affect this past Friday.

note in the law says that an newborn must be placed – specifically – into the hands of someone working at a hospital, fire, or police station.

"The Mass. Baby Safe Haven law decriminalizes the act of safely surrendering a newborn, under 7 days old that has not been abused, into the hands of fire fighting personnel at a city or town manned fire station, into the hands police personnel at a manned police station anywhere in the state, or into the hands of hospital personnel at any hospital in the state," said a Baby Safe Haven Law Yes! press release.

The new law has gained much support on the local levels of Massachusetts politics, according to Morrissey.

"I just went to Lowell General Hospital, Leominster Hospital and a couple others. Everyone I've talked to has been extraordinarily receptive. A lot of firefighters and police officers are in favor from experience," Morrissey said. "The town level support has been about 99 percent."

Morrissey said the Baby Safe law took three years to pass because a bill can easily get delayed on Beacon Hill. He claimed the legislative support was still there, adding that there was bipartisan support for the measure.

"In Beacon Hill, to keep a bill from passing all someone has to do is stop it by one day," he said. "Both Neral and Mass. Citizens for Life were in support of this. It is highly unusual to get a bill supported by both those groups."

Nationwide, the bill has shown bipartisan support as well. Governors that have signed a Baby Safe Haven Law include George Pataki (R-NY), Gray Davis (D-Calif.), Craig Benson (R-NH) and Jesse Ventura (I-Minn.). The first governor ever to sign the bill into state law was our current President, George W. Bush when he was Governor of Texas.

The Massachusetts bill has gained support from Hollywood as well. Patricia Heaton, who plays Deborah on the CBS sit-com "Everybody Loves Raymond," is featured in radio public service announcement supporting Baby Safe Havens in Massachusetts. The PSA is being distributed by MP3 to high school, college and commercial radio stations across the state. Heaton is the spokesperson for Baby Safe Haven laws across the country.

Since the idea of the bill was first created in 2000, there have been a total of 13 babies abandoned in Massachusetts, 6 of whom died. Two of the 13 newborns were found this summer. One was found at a fire station in Southampton and another on the steps of a church in Martha's Vineyard.

One of the six babies that died was killed on the UMass Amherst campus in 2002. The baby belonged to Jennifer Paluseo, a 19-year-old freshman. The Plymouth, Mass. native allegedly gave birth to her baby in a James Hall dormitory shower stall and later placed her baby in the trash. The child was discovered deceased by a custodial worker the next morning. Paluseo was found guilty of manslaughter in April of 2004 and was sentenced to two and one half years in prison.

Morrissey says the most important information to release to the public is that this law has been passed, so parents can know of such a law beforehand. He urges those who need to find a place for their newborn to visit the Baby Safe Haven's Website, http://www.babysafehaven.com/ or call the New York Children Hope Hotline at 1-877-796-HOPE.

'Power of Learning' educates students

LEARNING from page 1

outreach component. The program can synchronize high bandwidth video with power point presentations.

Ken Watts, who works in Ripples Laboratory on UMass campus, explained that the program can be used in everything from professional education to engineering to distance education, as the software encompasses an entire coursework's worth of lectures and notes.

"This program enables a student to take a course anywhere in the country," said Watts.

The Chemical Engineering Department got people's taste buds jumping when it demonstrated a new, faster way to make ice cream – with liquid nitrogen.

Department head Phil Westmoreland said that the department chose the ice cream demonstration because it shows that through understanding different chemicals and their various reactions and properties, engineers can improve and streamline all kinds of "stuff," which is what chemical engineers work with.

Also present were representatives from Massnanotec, UMass's Nanotechnology research department, which is ranked in the top ten nationally for the extent of its research. This ranking places UMass alongside schools like MIT, Harvard, UCLA, and the University of Ohio.

Mike Wright, Staff Managing Director at UMASS, explained why nanotechnology research is important.

"What we don't know about nanotechnology would fill a lot of books," said Wright, adding that its benefits are waiting to be discovered.

The Robotics Laboratory brought a self-balancing robot to the event. Department representative Avi Herscovici explained that the robot balances itself on two wheels because of its incline sensors, which send messages to the wheels about which direction they should turn to right the robot.

The current model can achieve speeds between 10 and 15 miles per hour.

"The robot has more horsepower than a football player," Herscovici said.

Herscovici added that the larger robot might have a future in space exploration and smaller versions as expensive toys.

The Student Assesment, Research, and Evaluation Office (SAREO) presented their research about why students feel the need to riot about certain sports. According to their presentation board, it involves the students' belief in "the right to party."

The Business School was represented by professor Alan G. Robinson. He has published eight books, which have been translated to multiple languages and adapted for the needs of each country.

The books "help organizations set themselves up and manage so they are constantly learning and getting better," said Robinson, who teaches Management 301 at UMass.

The Anthropology Department displayed their findings from this past summer's excavation of a Native American site in Deerfield, Mass. They found a variety of pottery fragments and maize kernels, which supports their theory that the site was a native trash pit.

Local churches hold peace vigil come together and be strengthened by one another," said Kakos.

VIGIL from page 1

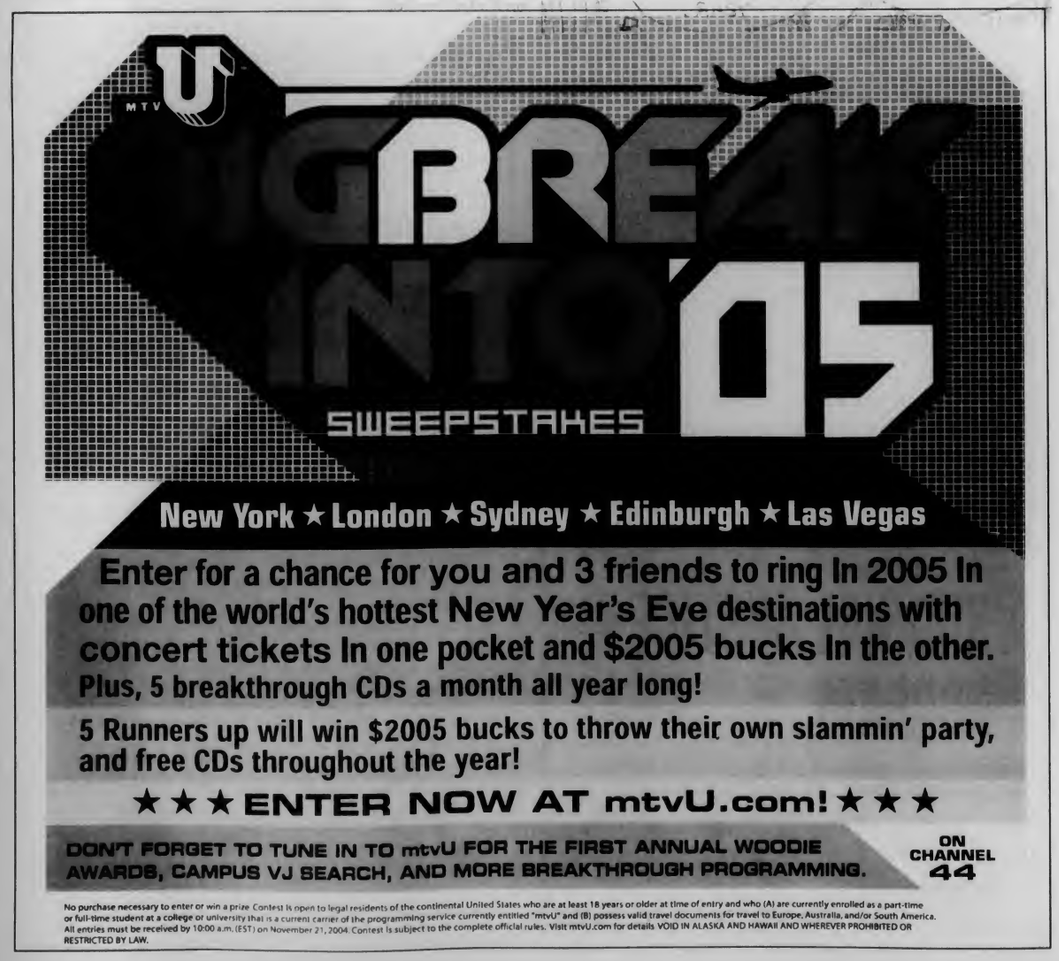
After the talks, a member of the Interfaith Coalition read a letter that was sent to various Iraqi media by American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) members Rick McDowell and Mary Trotochaud, who have been working in Iraq. The AFSC is a humanitarian Quaker organization.

According to the AFCS Web site, over 13,000 people from 50 states and Washington, DC signed the letter. Following the reading of the letter some of the responses from Iraqis were read, then the group read their Declaration of Conscience together.

Most of the people who participated reacted positively to the event. A Buddhist said that he hoped to see a bigger crowd, however, not everyone shared that opinion.



"We have a saying in America. Good things come in small packages," said Kakos.

According to Rene Theberge, the group has a mailing list of about 300 people. There are monthly meetings of about 25-50 people, and events which typically have between 50-100 people.

"We're a pretty genile group of people. We work hard to talk to people with different points of view," Theberge said.

According to Theberge, a goal of the group is to represent itself as a faith community that does not support the Bush administration.

"There's been a lot of talk about the faith community that is for the purposes of war," said Theberge. "We think it's really important to have an interfaith voice that's speaking for peace."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2004 "Fight for your opinions, but do not believe that they contain the whole truth, or the only truth." -Charles A. Dana EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Educated voting key to Tuesday's election

With Election Day just around the corner, and with favoritism of the two main candidates pretty much split down the center, the importance of each person's vote is becoming more and more vital. However, the reasons behind each vote are more essential to this election than just the checking of a box or pushing of a tab. When people find themselves at the voting booth, it is important to keep in mind why it is that one candidate is favored over another in their minds, regardless of which candidate that may be. In this election, the names of Bush and Kerry have been tossed about so much that it can be very easy to lose sight of what it is the American people are voting for. Therefore, on the eve of the election, it is owed to this country by all its citizens to take the time to examine what it is exactly that we're voting for and not just the men in the suits laid out before us.

It is strongly encouraged for every person even considering voting in this election who has not already done so to actually research each candidate's stance on key legislative issues. The research is easy and, especially living in such a computer-savvy society, there is no reason why someone would not be unable to obtain at least a basic knowledge of where each candidate stands and where they are coming from. Each candidate has their own website that outlines what their plans are and what they hope for in the future. Americans were given the privilege to decide on whom they choose to lead them. Only by educating ourselves on the candidates' positions are we doing that privilege justice.

Given the way the media has presented the democratic and republican candidates to the American public, it is easy to assume that those are the only two people in the running. However, there are many other political parties throughout the country who have nominated candidates to run for the office of the presidency.

Oftentimes it may feel, to voters who neither regard themselves as a democrat or republican, that they have to vote one or the other contrary to how they may feel because they want their vote to count, but don't want to "throw it away." By voting for a third party that coincides with particular beliefs not expressed by the democrats or republicans, the party is gaining one more vote toward the percentage they need to receive funding for their group. With that funding, the party will endorse another candidate who will still adequately embody everything they stand for, but will bring them that much closer to the presidency.

To many voters, one particular issue may take higher standing over the others. Or, they may have conflicting opinions with the candidate that they most favor. There are many factors that come into play when choosing to vote for a presidential nominee. However, it is vitally important to examine all the sides to the contender, if for no other reason than to know what to expect in the years to come if they get elected. With a society that is very hung up on visual portrayals and expects the highest from their public speakers and representatives, it is imperative that, as a nation, we give equal, if not more, focus on what is coming out of the candidates' mouths in addition to how they appear while they are speaking.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

STUDENT-RUN FOOD SERVICES ADDRESS STUDENTS

Over the past months of business, we at the food service student run businesses; Greeno Sub Shop, Earthfoods Café, Sweets and More and Sylvan Snack Bar, have encountered many rightfully disappointed students expecting to pay with transfer swipes for their food. We apologize, for we fully expected to be authorized to accept your swipes by now, but unfortunateiy have been forced to turn them away.

Last spring, the SGA passed an act to officially include food service student business as venues on campus that will accept YCMP transfer swipes. It was the absence of Vice Chancellor Mike Gargano's signature from the act that introduced the problem we now currently face. Upon further investigation, it became evident that the Vice Chancellor was advised by Joyce Hatch, the Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance, to not sign this act because, "transfer swipes were not designed to be used in student run businesses and therefore not priced to support the option for use in the student run businesses." While this is understandable to some extent, every freshman and sophomore student that is required to pay for their meal plan each semester knows that auxiliary services is in no legitimate financial distress.

The student-run businesses are a unique feature of our University. They represent a diverse range of students from the School of Management to Sustainable Agriculture who come together in cooperation, eager to learn the principles of small business ownership. From donating tip money to creating a sense of community on campus, we try our best to make positive contributions. Yet, the reluctance of Auxiliary Services and others to help financially support us, as demonstrated in the act's rejection, is an example of how we feel misunderstood by some of the administration.

This most recent policy issue is in the context of many policies initiated by Auxiliary Services that aim to deemphasize the presence of student run businesses on campus. An example of this is how in a regular YCMP meal plan, where a swipe is worth $6, student businesses are reimbursed only 90 percent of each $6 swipe. The fact that Auxiliary Services has the power to pass such policies emphasizes the point that we are no legitimate competition to the monopoly that they have over student dining.

The motto of the student businesses is "students working for students." We at the businesses want the same things out of this University that you do. In light of all the challenges we face, we are fortunate to have loyal customers who appreciate us and therefore it is very important that we clear up this misunderstanding. We also encourage you to help fight for flex swipes in the upcoming semesters by petitioning your area government senators to rewrite and reissue the act.

Sincerely,
Greeno Sub Shop, Earthfoods Café, Sweets and More, Sylvan Snack Bar
In support: People's Market, Campus Design and Copy, Tix Unlimited and Bike Co-op

Costuming politics

Ramzi Kanazi

I wonder what everyone will wear for Halloween this year. I think that it is likely to be a bit more political. As I write this column, it is the eve of Halloween and just three days before the presidential election. You will be reading this after the holiday but a day before Americans pretend to elect the president. Maybe you will have seen some of these costumes that I'll mention.

First, though, let's begin with a brief history of Halloween, a holiday that is currently celebrated in America as an amalgam of Pagan Celtic, Roman and Christian traditions. One historic explanation of Halloween suggests that people dressed up and celebrated to drive away demons that could wreak havoc on their villages. This, however, is not true. Halloween has, in fact, always been celebrated as a political holiday on which people would parade in costumes to ward off evil politicians, illustrating their true nature by dressing up like them and getting really drunk.

Halloween has, in fact, always been celebrated as a political holiday on which people would parade in costumes to ward off evil politicians, illustrating their true nature by dressing up like them and getting really drunk.

Not all of the costumes are actually of the politicians themselves; they may consist of people affected by them, their pets or even their instruments of deception. An example of such a costume would be a Diebold machine. This device is one that laughs in the face of freedom by pretending to record voters' choices while clandestinely giving the majority of votes to the incumbent president, George W. Bush. While this mechanism was actually crafted in hell by Satan, it is currently marketed by a company that, in the past, has disproportionately supported the Republican Party, a party disproportionately supported by Satan.

People who would wear broken televisions on their heads or a box around their waists may be the same who would wear this type of costume. They would also be the people walking with scissors surreptitiously cutting the bottom of children's trick or treat bags to steal their candy. After all, they can't steal votes on Halloween.

What would this holiday be without the candidates themselves: Dubya and JFK? A costume of President Bush would entail a flight jacket, a tee-shirt stating "mission accomplished," and a copy of My Pet Goat. In his case, the attire is much less important than the expression. One donning a Bush outfit would be proficient in imitating his characteristic smirks and stutters. He would also call you an "evil doer." John Kerry impersonators would wear enough hair spray to deplete the ozone layer in less than an hour while soporifically discussing the Clean Air Act. He would be stiff and pedantic while, of course, wearing flip-flops.

This Halloween, you might have seen Osama bin Laden who, in a recent video, looked surprisingly well-kept considering his continuous flight from warlords cooperating with Uncle Sam. If you saw bin Laden, it may not have even been a costume. Apparently, he's so elusive that the most powerful country in the world doesn't know if he is in Tora Bora or Lincoln's bedroom. He would be promoting John Kerry while exploiting the struggles of Iraqi's and Palestinians.

What would Halloween be without a Pat Robertson? This former presidential candidate and founder of the Christian Broadcasting Network hosts the "700 Club" and can actually heal you through your television. He'd preach the Evangelical word of Armageddon and probably hang out with his antithetical ideologue, Osama bin Laden. They would openly discuss strategies to destroy the world with religion. Kudos.

Two familiar faces walking around during the holiday could be Yasser Arafat and Ariel Sharon. By Halloween, Arafat would probably have ditched his recent hospitalization episode to go spend money slated to the Palestinian people with his wife in Paris. They would be wearing Yves Saint Laurent. Sharon would just be wearing the blood of the Palestinians.

Some other political costumes that could be seen this Halloween would include an unemployed web developer who lost her job to outsourcing, a child left behind, Bush's dog Barney, an uninsured veteran, a minority voter turned away from the polls, a strung-out Bush twin, some of the fabricated people on Nader's petition to be on the ballot, a stem cell, Laura Bush smashing a bottle of Heinz Ketchup (she just needs to tap it at a 45 degree angle), Bob Dole reaching for candy and Tucker Carlson calling people "buttboys."

Hope you all had a safe and happy Halloween. Remember to go out and vote tomorrow.

Ramzi Kanazi is a Collegian columnist.

Loss of female respect

Becky Martins

There is more to being a woman than sex appeal.

I love being a female. There is no denying that it takes me a while to get ready, that I can be emotional on occasion, and sometimes, chocolate is my ultimate cure-all. But I also pride myself on my intelligence, my work ethic, my ambitious goals, and being a successful member of this society. To me, the future has no boundaries. My life will be what I make it. I will be above common stereotypes that state what is acceptable or expected from a woman.

But when I look around at my fellow females, I cannot help but feel disappointed. While I may have realized what course my life will take, others fail to see their full potential. They live life with a lack of respect for themselves, thus, hindering the efforts many have made proving what women are capable of.

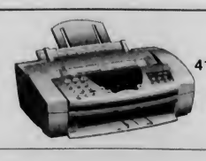
At a time when women should feel empowered to be their own people, they live for the man, and not themselves.

It has become too common of an occurrence for females to be disrespected, whether the culprits are men or other women. In the media, women are often portrayed as sex symbols, such as on video games when we are dressed scantily, have un-humanlike proportions and yet are expected to perform athletically. When we put on the radio, women are referred to as "ho's" and are spoken about as if we simply exist for men's pleasure. Even at UMass, it is becoming a rare occurrence to meet a guy whose intentions are genuine. Males are constantly whistling and cat calling at girls, as if we are purely sexual objects. Campus events are never complete until someone from the crowd yells, "show your tits" and a sea of men rush to the front for a better view.

It is angering to realize such thinking still exists in today's society. So much blood, sweat and tears have been poured into the effort to achieve equality in regards to our male counterparts. Because of certain people's commitment to the cause, women have gained the right to vote, the opportunity to have any career we choose and the option of living a fulfilling life. Yet, after all that has, and is still being done, some females still take huge steps back for their gender. At a time when women should feel empowered to be their own people, they live for the man, and not themselves.

Girls complain that good guys are rare, especially during our college years. Although we want to be treated right, however, many give off the wrong impression. We respond to guys who grab or call out at us. We dress provocatively, showing off as much skin as possible while competing for the most attention. Others participate in activities like amateur dance and stripping contests at parties, clubs, etc. in which the reward is a minor cash prize. How can we expect to be respected when we carry ourselves with such little dignity? It becomes too easy for guys to justify their sleazy actions when they view such behavior. Many must likely wonder, "Why treat a girl with respect if she has none for herself already?"

I am not a die-hard feminist. I like to look nice, have fun at parties, etc, but I also choose to carry myself with a self-respect and self-worth. I would never get on a stage and strip for a crowd of drunken guys just because they were cheering me on. I would never get on a guy's shoulders and flash thousands just because the Red Sox won the World Series. However, as we have all witnessed during the past weeks in particular, some people have no shame. Maybe they like the positive reaction they receive when performing such acts? What exactly is their accomplishment though?



Women, and people's perceptions of this gender, have changed over the decades. We have gained equality in the home, at the workplace, in athletics, etc. Some females are still ignorant to these things. I guess they have never been discriminated against in terms of their gender. Many must have forgotten the lessons they learned about behaving properly, as well. Women need to realize they are more than physical objects. We are people too: capable of accomplishing as great of things as men. There is no need to degrade ourselves just to feel good. If we believe this is the only way to feel accepted, than we are only fooling ourselves.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A warm welcome back for Bill

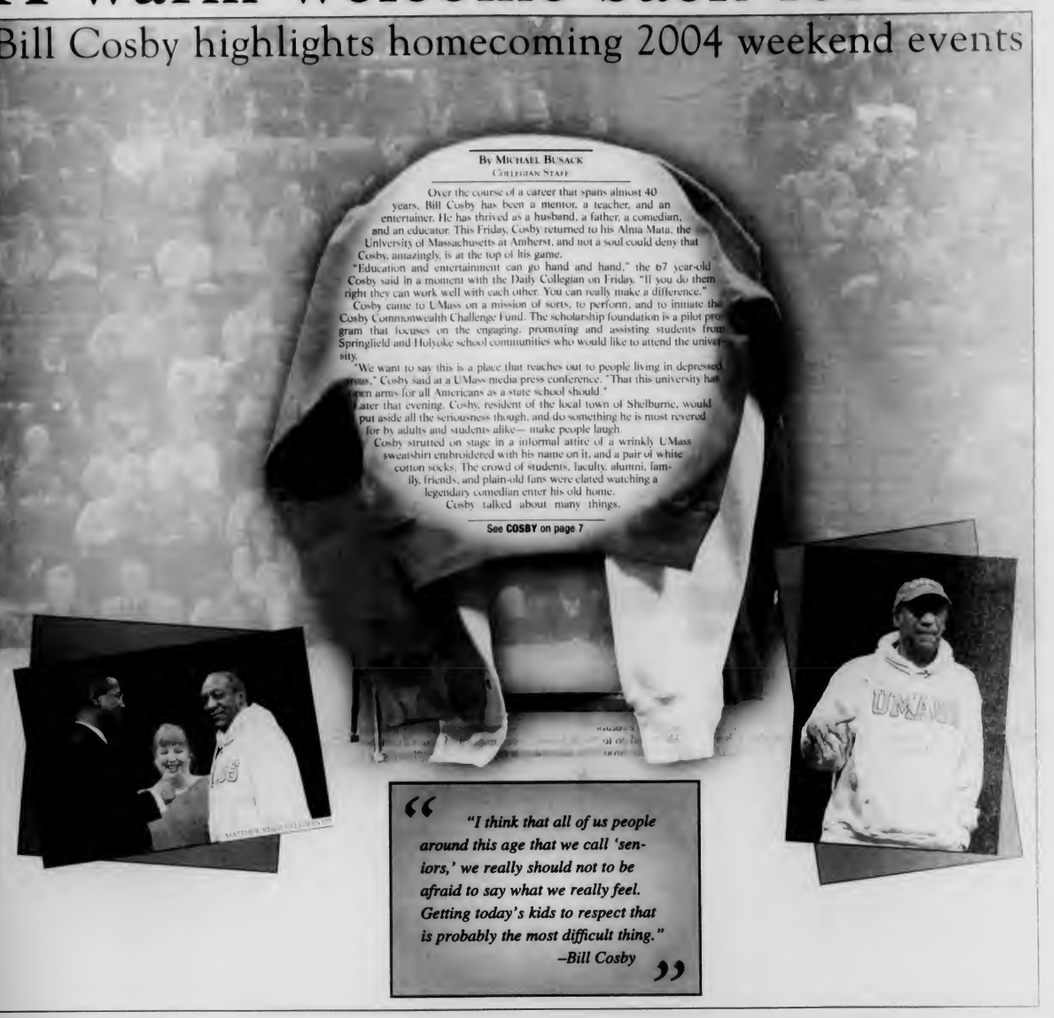
Bill Cosby highlights homecoming 2004 weekend events

By Michael Busack
Collegian Staff

Over the course of a career that spans almost 40 years, Bill Cosby has been a mentor, a teacher, and an entertainer. He has thrived as a husband, a father, a comedian, and an educator. This Friday, Cosby returned to his Alma Mata, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, and not a soul could deny that Cosby, amazingly, is at the top of his game.

"Education and entertainment can go hand and hand," the 67 year-old Cosby said in a moment with the Daily Collegian on Friday. "If you do them right they can work well with each other. You can really make a difference."

Cosby came to UMass on a mission of sorts, to perform, and to initiate the Cosby Commonwealth Challenge Fund. The scholarship foundation is a pilot program that focuses on the engaging, promoting and assisting students from Springfield and Holyoke school communities who would like to attend the university.



"We want to say this is a place that reaches out to people living in depressed areas," Cosby said at a UMass media press conference. "That this university has open arms for all Americans as a state school should."

Later that evening, Cosby, resident of the local town of Shelburne, would put aside all the seriousness though, and do something he is most revered for by adults and students alike— make people laugh.

Cosby strutted on stage in a informal attire of a wrinkly UMass sweatshirt embroidered with his name on it, and a pair of white cotton socks. The crowd of students, faculty, alumni, family, friends, and plain-old fans were elated watching a legendary comedian enter his old home.

Cosby talked about many things.

See COSBY on page 7

"I think that all of us people around this age that we call 'seniors,' we really should not to be afraid to say what we really feel. Getting today's kids to respect that is probably the most difficult thing."
–Bill Cosby

Monday November 1

LECTURE

Smith College's Seelye Hall (room 106) will host Elizabeth Marting Treuhaft Professor and Dean of the School for Social Work Carolyn Jacobs when she brings her "Spirituality: Transformative Moments in Life Stories" discussion to the Northampton campus today, at 4:30 p.m.

Jacobs will present the ways in which people use spirituality in their lives, and how people use it to decide what is meaningful. This event, part of Smith's chaired professor lecture series, is free and open to the public.

Tuesday November 3

CONCERT

The Opus One String Ensemble will perform tonight, at Bezanson Recital Hall on the UMass Amherst campus. The program, coordinated by faculty member Kathryn Lockwood and performed and directed by students, is set to include pieces by Haydn (Cello Concerto in C Major, featuring Michael Jao, cello), Britten (Lachrymae, featuring Sheridan Rudolph, viola) and more Haydn (Violin Concerto in C Major, featuring Julia Koo, violin). This event, sponsored by Stacey Styles Violin Restoration, is free; the ensemble begins at 7:30 p.m.

Thursday November 4

LECTURE

"Talking About Music: Thursday Midday Theory Lectures" continue this afternoon with Mark McFarland's "Was Debussy a Twelve-Tone Composer?" the discussion will, "explore the musical relationships between Claude Debussy and Arnold Schoenberg." The lecture, to be held at Bezanson Recital hall on the UMass Amherst campus, will begin at 12:20 p.m. and last 50 minutes. This event is free.

Thursday November 4

READING

Pulitzer prize-winning author and UMass Amherst Professor James Tate will read from his new book, Return to the City of White Donkeys, tonight at 8 p.m. in Memorial Hall (UMass Amherst campus). Tate has written a number of books, including 1970's "The Oblivion Ha-Ha," 1994's "Worshipful Company of Fletchers," 1997's "Shroud of the Gnome," and 2001's "Memoir of the Hawk"; his "Selected Poems," published in 1991, earned him the Pulitzer. Following the reading, a reception is to be held where Tate will sign books. This event is free and open to the public.

Friday November 5

EDUCATIONAL

Have you ever found yourself digging board games from more than just a cerebral level? Well, you're not alone. Tonight in Moore (Southwest Residential Area, UMass Amherst campus), all are welcome to get in on a good, old fashioned game of "Sex Pictionary," at 7 p.m. Participants will form teams, and compete to see who can guess the sexy words and phrases quickest. Demonstrations and explanations on safe sex will also figure into this classic game; the Health Education Division brings this free event to you.

Saturday November 6

DISCUSSION

Come to Mount Holyoke College and experience this exhibition of highlights, of more than 40 Japanese woodblock prints, known as ukiyo-e; all recent major gifts of William Green and Howard Hamilton to the permanent collection. Prints in vivid color are rare and many have never been publicly displayed. Subjects include prints depicting kabuki actors in major roles by Hiroshige, Toyokuni, Shunsho and other noted artists. The epic tale Chushingura (The Storehouse of Loyalty) is illustrated in a series of woodblock prints by Sadahide, accompanied by additional prints by Toyokuni and Hiroshige. The Mead is open Tuesday through Sunday from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., and Thursday evenings until 9 p.m. All events are free and open to the public.

COURTESY FAITHLANDINTL.COM

THE WAILERS

This Saturday don't miss this chance to check out the greatest reggae band of all time, the legendary Wailers as they intoxicate you with their influential reggae sound tonight, at Northampton's Pearl Street Night Club. Known best for backing up reggae great Bob Marley the have helped to spread a message of peace, love and understanding to the masses. The show begins at 8:30 p.m.; tickets are $20 in advance and $23 at the door including children, his wife, and his childhood. He even pitched in a humorous bit about a trip to the dentist.

Famous UMass alum comes to Mullins

COSBY from page 5

Cosby and his wife, Camille has raised five children together, four daughters and one son — Ennis, who was killed in 1997. The University of Massachusetts created a scholarship fund for special education students in memory of their only son.

While discussing his wife, Cosby jokingly warned the young men of the crowd that no matter what they do, their wives would always have a reason to be angry with them.

"I can be sitting down and not saying anything and still get in trouble," Cosby said. "My wife will say 'see this room? I just straightened it up." He jokingly replied "I must be the mess then." For nearly three hours, the 67-year-old man jumped, marched, giggled, and even rolled around on the ground for a bit. Some people just never lose their touch.

Cosby shared a piece of his own vivid memory when spoke about his childhood as a six-year-old boy. He recounted how he fought with his parents once because they did not have the money to buy him a toy car that you order with 15 cents and a cereal box top.

"The demons inside me said 'how can two people, who both work full time, not afford 8 cents apiece?' " Cosby said.

He told the crowd in the first person voice of the six-year-old boy how he went upstairs and locked his father out of his room until his father broke the door down.

"He sat down next to me then and said 'son, I'm going to tell you something that I want you to remember for the rest of your life.' He then knocked me out," Cosby said as the entire crowd roared with laughter.

Cosby has, for many years, been revered by fellow comedians and up-and-coming stars for his ability to formulate masses of new material. Much of this success has been built on "The Cos'" ability to react quickly during his routine. At one point in the show, Cosby was listing off items that were going to be at a party he was going to as a child. As he named off a few things, a young college punk from the crowd interjected with the predictable shout of "jello!". Without missing a beat, Cosby responded "You've been waiting all night to yell that haven't you? No there wasn't any jello there, There was no puddin' pops," he said in a sort of self-mocking tone. Once again the crowd was impressed.

Cosby was born in 1937 in Philadelphia. He would later join the Navy after his sophomore year in high school. He finished his high school career through a correspondence course. He then went to Temple University on an athletic scholarship.

Later, Cosby was discovered by a man named Carl Reiner. He became a familiar comedian, performing on popular television shows such as the "Ed Sullivan Show."

In 1965, Cosby began his stint as Alexander Scott on the television show "I Spy." He won multiple Emmy Awards for his role on the show.

In 1969, after creating numerous records that topped the Billboard music charts, Bill Cosby was given his own show, "The Bill Cosby Show." The show was cancelled after just two years, but Cosby did not stop there. He then created a cartoon called "Fat Albert and the Cosby Kids" that premiered in 1972. The cartoon was based on most of his own childhood friends with characters like Mushmouth and Dumb Donald.

In the 1970s, after a performance at UMass, Cosby decided that he would come to the city of Amherst to finish his education, and in 1976, Bill Cosby received a doctorate in Education.

He moved on to star in a number of movies through the next few years, before "Fat Albert," drew to an end in 1984. This however, led Cosby to create what is considered by many to be his shining moment in television, "The Cosby Show."

The show was considered to be the most progressive African American show of all time. It featured a blue-collared African American family and the happiness, struggles, and laughter of their everyday lives. "The Cosby Show" had a run that lasted 8 years, until the show was cancelled in 1992. The final episode of "the Cosby Show," featured Cosby in the midst of a Los Angeles riot. Never conceding to his opinion that the black Americans were not represented equally on television, Cosby's last moment on "The Cosby Show," featured the man begging for harmony during the same time as the controversial Rodney King race riots.

Cosby later performed in many other movies, including "Jack" with Robin Williams. He would also star in another sitcom featuring Phylicia Rashad, titled "Cosby" in 1996. The show would last another successful reign of four years.

Since the end of "Cosby," Dr. Cosby has been involved the production of films and television shows including "Men of Honor," and the Nickolodeon Televison show "Little Bill."

Through all that he has accomplished, there is still something electric about Cosby's ability to speak to his crowd from a wiser, more knowledgeable and caring point of you. Often times it feels as if you are listening to a parable that you grandfather is telling you, other times it just might be parable your grandfather did tell you, just with a hilarious touch.

Now matter your age group, race, sex, handicap, or (the show was translated into a sign language for the hearing impaired) religious denomination, there was something for everyone to be impressed with during the legends show.

As the clock past the second hour of the show, Cosby moved on with his routine. Looking out to the crowd, it is not what you would expect. Every seat was still taken; every eye had a twinkle, because for one night only, Bill Cosby was home.

Study shows art is good for brain

By Matthew Abbott
U-WIRE

HANOVER, N.H. — Thanks to a recent grant from the Dana Foundation, researchers at Dartmouth College and several other institutions will soon be studying the correlation between education in the arts and brain development.

Dartmouth has been named the lead institution in the study and will receive $1.8 million over three years in order to perform research that could potentially change the role that arts education plays in schools across America.

Professor Michael Gazzaniga, who recently stepped down from his post as dean of the faculty, will serve as the director of the Dana Arts and Cognition Consortium and will help to coordinate the research performed at the six institutions that comprise the consortium.

"Up till now there have always been good correlations between children who take part in the arts and their academic performance," Gazzaniga said. "Now we hope to see if the relationship is causal. If it is, there will be a strong case for reintroducing the performing arts back into our schools."

A diverse group of individuals ranging in age from four to over 80-years-old will serve as participants in the study. Researchers plan to use a variety of methods to study the subjects, some of which include fMRI scans and other imaging technologies.

The key focus of the study is to determine what effect, if any, an arts education has on cognitive processes and certain regions of the brain. The results of the study could change our understanding of information acquisition and brain function.

Two Dartmouth professors will be directly involved with the research aspect of the study. The first group will be led by education professor Kevin Dunbar and will study college-aged students with varying degrees of arts education. The center of the study will be to see if students with a higher degree of arts education have improved focusing capabilities.

Education professor Laura-Ann Petitto, the head of the second group, will study children and adults who have been bilingual from birth to see whether more extensive arts education helps to broaden their linguistic and reading skills.

The results of the study will not be known for several years, but hopes are high that they will yield a great deal of information that will be useful in understanding brain functions.

"Whatever the findings, we know that the research will help advance the fields of cognitive neuroscience and arts education," President of the Dana Foundation Edward Rover said.

Lagerfeld to design for H&M stores

Style 101
Monique Jemmott

Last week as part of my weekly docs of pop culture, I took a trip through the worldwide web, and visited all of my favorite sites pertaining to music, television, and of course—fashion. It was when I got to Style.com, the website for just about every fashion magazine worth a look — Vogue, In Style, and W magazines, that I felt the blood literally boil in my veins. Not in a bad way, but in the way when your heart starts to race so fast, that this is just the inevitable next step. I had to read the headline three times, before it actually sank into my head. They were serious, there was no April Fools disclaimer or some imaginary clone of the website. It was true – Karl Lagerfeld Partners with H&M.

For those of you who are not so familiar with the inner belly of Haute Couture, allow me to take this time to enlighten you. Karl Lagerfeld is the undoubtedly one of the most iconic designers of contemporary fashion today. He is known most famously for his stints with the fashion houses of Chanel, and Yves Saint Laurent, and is credited with launching Hip Hop's royal highness Kimora Lee Simmons as a supermodel in the early 90s when he proclaimed the 15-year-old his muse for many of his designs during this time. In a nutshell, Mr. Lagerfeld is the creme de la creme of the fashion industry.

It was for this same reason that I became worried about what may happen if the designs

See STYLE on page 7

BBC's hit comedy 'The Office' DVD brings witty British humor to American viewers

By Tim Lowery
U-WIRE

MILWAUKEE —The first series of "The Office" — the critically acclaimed BBC comedy — nudges and occasionally pinches at its audience, capitalizing on the most awkwardly deadpan scenarios to tweak viewers' funny bones.

And with the fresh U.K. export "The Office: The Complete Second Series" now on DVD, writer/directors Stephen Merchant and Ricky Gervais have upped the ante, offering a full slap in the face: Pauses are more uncomfortable, topics more taboo, drunken escapades more pathetic and melancholy more heartfelt.

Of course, that's not a bad thing.

Much in the tradition of "The Larry Sanders Show" the series — a verite style mockumentary of a paper manufacturer in Slough, London concentrates on delusional boss David Brent (played by Gervais), self-proclaimed comedian, entertainer and philosopher-poet who feels his major task is "to keep the troops happy" with office gags that result in yes, awkwardness.

But with the recent installment of Swindon employees into his Slough barracks and new boss Neil to boot, David's managerial jargon such as "If we're facing in the right direction, all we have to do is keep on walking" won't suffice as he begins noticing rolling eyes and the "gutting" epiphany that he's just not funny, sending him on a blaze of pathetic and humiliating stunts to try to capture the attention he assumes he once had.

Most memorably, he attempts to befriend a black employee by telling him Denzel Washington is a brilliant actor and later, wanting to inspire a workshop, speculates, "If you have lost both legs and both arms just go 'at least I'm not dead' — though I'd rather be dead in that situation to be honest."

David's circular logic and ridiculous philosophizing on his greatness, complimented by his homophobia and new tell-it-like-it-is rock star facade, digs him into deeper and deeper social holes, making for a hilarious character amidst the dreary office routine (if only they'd only come out with a David Brent quote book).

Unlike David, senior sales clerk Tim (Martin Freeman), completely aware his job's futility, keeps his heart set on receptionist Dawn (Lucy Davis) and spends his spare time torturing his desk-sharing coworker Gareth (Mackenzie Crook), an obtuse Territorial Army lieutenant whose idea of being suave is pointing to girls' crotches and propositioning for sexual favors.

But what distinguishes this sitcom — and was surprising, to be honest —is its emotional tenderness, delving deeper into Tim and Dawn's relational strains and even developing David into a sympathetic character (unfathomable in the first series) with an eye-swelling, goose-bumpy last episode.

Though a U.S. version of "The Office" is well underfoot, this is the last fans can latch onto from the original; admirably, both creators want to move on to other projects before the [illegible] becomes sub par.

In a mere two [illegible] and a mere 12 episodes [illegible] counting two Christmas specials for BBC1 "The Office" has already attained a cult status with its blend of surreal comedy and emotionally potent narratives and will undoubtedly go down as one of television's best.

BBC hit comedy "The Office" releases its first season on DVD to positive reviews from critic...

Haute Couture goes bargain-basement

COURTESY STYLE.COM

Lagerfeld with Erin Wasson, spokesmodel for his new line.

STYLE from page 5

of this fashion genius ended up on the racks of Hennes and Mauritz's trend discount emporium. Don't get me wrong, it's not that I don't love the H&M movement, I mean where else can you find a one stop shop for all of the trendiest weekend, work and evening wear for such modest prices?? H&M is part of my regular shopping repertoire.

I've always regarded the designs of Lagerfeld to be unreachable, and for some reason I like that idea, because it gave me a reason to have something to look forward too. Today I'm a H&M girl, then tomorrow a couture diva who can afford the designs of one of the most sought after couturiers in the world, and now there has been an affordable medium wedged into my fantasy—so why am I not ecstatic??

It could be a few reasons. One, I question the quality of the garments to be produced by the clothing giants with Lagerfelds name on them; and the other less noble reason being that I'm a pure unadulterated labor-whore. It's no secret that I have a love for fashion. Being that I have never been one to follow the masses, it has never been my thing to purchase items such as logo t-shirts, or signature bags, and I've always felt that meant that I do not care about designers, but this very experience proves to me that I do. I have had to admit to myself that there's always a sick sense of satisfaction whenever I purchase a pair of designer jeans or shoes, as opposed to something I may buy that is of a less prestigious name; and yes, sometimes I do associate designer names with a better quality, therefore justifying why I may spend the ridiculous amount of money that the retailers are asking, despite my phone bill, car insurance, and credit card bills that could use equal, if not more attention from my weekly paycheck.

But does that make me a bad person??

I haven't quite figured it out yet, but I am sure of one thing, being entrenched in the consumer culture of today's society is not something I'm necessarily proud of, in fact the entire mentality of the need for material things is one of my most shameful personality traits. In a perfect world I would be someone who never worries about what I have, and appreciates life for what it is. I would never feel as though I have to always dress to impress, because I would rely on my personality and self-confidence to get me through whatever situation presents itself— and in this same world there would be world piece, and no hole in the ozone layer.

Everyone has their insecurities, they also have their weapons of choice—some people drink, some do drugs. I spend my money on designer clothes, and support millionaires who wouldn't care if I dropped off of the face of the earth tomorrow. Maybe one day I can move past this stage in my life, but until then, thank goodness for H&M.

COURTESY STYLE.COM

Laggerfeld is known for designing for major fashion houses such as Chanel and Yves Saint-Laurent. Now he brings his style to H&M.

THAT ROOTS
AMHERST ONE STOP REGGAE & CULTURE SHOP
LARGE SELECTION OF REGGAE & HIP HOP MUSIC
DJ EQUIPMENT & ACCESSORIES
A WIDE VARIETY OF TIES & HATS
AFRICAN & JAMAICAN CRAFTS CARVINGS & PAINTINGS
POSTERS, BOOKS, CARDS, SOUVENIRS, JEWELRY
$5 OFF 2 CDS OR ANY $25 PURCHASE
320 NORTH PLEASANT ST NEWTOWN AMHERST 253-4082

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Get your Bar Code® Certification
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW!
SPACE IS LIMITED!
November 19th-21st
The Garden Room
Lord Jeffery Inn
Boltwood Ave., Amherst
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Minutewomen get postseason invitation

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team has had one goal all season: qualifying for the Atlantic-10 Tournament.

After splitting a pair of games against A-10 opponents this weekend, the Minutewomen have achieved their goal.

UMass traveled to St. Bonaventure and defeated the Bonnies 3-0 on Friday. UMass lost its final game of the regular season at Duquesne 4-2 on Sunday.

Despite the loss in the finale, the Minutewomen captured the No. 6 spot in the conference tournament. The tournament begins Thursday at UMass' Rudd Field. Richmond, the No. 3 seed, will take on The Maroon and White at 11 a.m. Thursday.

UMass lost 1-0 to Richmond at home on Oct. 8 in the only meeting between the teams this season.

UMass (7-10, 5-6 A-10) finished tied with George Washington in the league standings but won the tiebreaker because they defeated the Colonials 2-0 when the teams met Oct. 10.

"The team really deserves to be in the tournament," Rudy said. "They worked hard all year and improved each game."

The Minutewomen were forced to play shorthanded in both games this weekend. In Sunday's game, there were only two healthy substitutes on the UMass bench.

Against St. Bonaventure (8-10-2, 1-8-2 A-10), the Minutewomen saw another player go down when defender Amy Maffucci left with an injury 12 minutes into the game.

Although they were forced to play without their defensive leader, the Minutewomen were able to stay in the game before the offense broke out in the second half.

Early in the half, the freshmen duo of forward Britt Canfield and midfielder Jenny Roehrig each scored within a three-minute span.

Canfield got UMass on the board by beating the goalie one-on-one. Canfield's team-leading 10th goal of the season provided all of the offense that UMass would need.

Roehrig added an insurance goal two minutes later after collecting a failed clearance by St. Bonaventure and converting the turnover into her fifth goal of the year.

Sophomore midfielder Nadia Villarroel scored her first goal of the season late in the game off of a rebound of her own shot.

The shutout was the fourth of the season for sophomore goalie Kristin Walker. Walker made a couple tough saves late in the game to preserve the shutout.

Sunday's game started on a positive note for the Minutewomen as they struck first six minutes into the game.

Villarroel notched her second goal in as many games with the help of some nice passing. Junior forward Adair Blyler passed the ball to Roehrig, who spun past a defender and led Villarroel. Villarroel got to the ball and lobbed a shot over the Duquesne goalie.

Duquesne (9-10-1, 4-6-1 A-10) then took control as the Dukes scored the next four goals of the game.

Katie Schwager recorded two goals for the Dukes, and Ashley Stelmak and Caitlin Holmes each added a goal.

UMass battled back and mounted some pressure late in the game, but the three-goal deficit was too much to overcome.

Canfield scored her eleventh goal of the season with nine minutes to play, beating the defense and putting the ball past the keeper.

Rudy was pleased with the team's efforts, especially considering how undermanned the team was this weekend.

"They could have dropped their heads with all the injuries, but they didn't," Rudy said.

The changes made in the lineup due to the injuries resulted in Villarroel being more of a force on offense as she scored two goals after coming into the weekend with none this season.

"Villarroel has been good for us out on the flank all year," Rudy said. "She really played well this weekend."

Rudy was disappointed with the loss on Sunday, but with the Minutewomen qualifying for postseason play, he kept the loss in perspective.

"I didn't feel that the last game of the season was the most important," Rudy said. "We did enough during the season to get there, and we got the points this weekend that we needed. All of the games count the same, and the team understood that."

The focus for the Minutewomen now is to get as healthy as possible by Thursday.

Maffucci's status for the tournament is not certain. The team will also be looking to get freshman midfielder Christina Nunes back. Nunes missed this weekend's games due to a concussion she suffered last weekend.

While the team was able to battle through the injuries this weekend, it will need to be at full-strength if the Minutewomen are to advance in the A-10 Tournament.

UMass will need help to earn playoff birth

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team may have kept its playoff hopes alive with a weekend split at home.

Entering Fridays contest with St. Bonaventure (7-8-1, 3-6-0 Atlantic 10), the Minutemen (8-8-2, 5-3-2 A-10) were tied for third in the A-10 and made an impressive showing as four different players scored in a 4-0 Bonnie shutout.

The outcome was reversed on Sunday, as A-10 leading Duquesne (12-6-0, 8-2-0) came into Rudd Field and handed the Minutemen a 4-1 loss in UMass' final regular season home game.

With one game remaining against Rhode Island, the Maroon and White may need outside help if they are going to make the playoffs.

On Friday, UMass scored three goals in the second half and outshot the Bonnies 14-8 to put the game out of reach.

Freshman Matty Lemire scored the lone goal of the first half for his third score of the season. Tim Kitchel set up Lemire on a free kick that followed a St. Bonaventure yellow card infraction. Kitchel sent a shot towards the net that grazed off Lemire's forehead and was redirected to the right corner of the goal in the 18th minute.

The Minutemen extended their lead to two on a bang-bang play that started at midfield in the 59th minute.

Sophomore defender Todd Skelton gained control of a loose ball, outmegged a defender and sent a short touch-pass to Rob Charest. Seeing a last break opportunity, Charest split two Bonnie defenders with a breakaway pass to Bullen, who chipped the ball over charging St. Bonaventure goalie Jon Blanchard into the open net.

The goal was Bullen's team-leading ninth of the season and tied him with Jeffrey Gonsalves of Rhode Island with the second most goals in the conference.

"All game we tried looking for the open man and catching them off guard with the transition game," UMass coach Sam Koch said.

In the 74th minute, Tyler Pagano scored on an empty net after three quick UMass shots caught Gonsalves and the Bonnie defense out of position. Freshman Robby Charest and sophomore Greg Cirillo were credited with assists for blocked shots leading up to the rebound goal.

Charest closed out the scoring less than two minutes later, beating Blanchard with a shot to the top right corner from 10 yards out.

Blanchard finished the day with 10 saves, while UMass senior goalie Colin Burns made five in his third career shutout and last start at Rudd Field.

"It was a good performance and exactly what we needed. The A-10 is so competitive. We knew there was no room for mistakes," Koch said.

Their wasn't much for the Maroon and White faithful to celebrate on senior day; the Minutemen came out flat against the Dukes and soon found themselves in a 2-0 hole in the first 10 minutes.

Travis MacKenzie got the Dukes got on the board just eight minutes into play off a header from Jason Sourbeer.

Andrew Bell added to the lead when he booted a shot from 20 yards out that grazed off the crossbar just out of reach of stretching Massachusetts goalie Nick Billman.

"We had talked about [St. Bonaventure] liking to shoot from outside," Koch said. "They scored their second goal because we left their player unmarked. We knew what they were going to do and knew how to defend it but just weren't in the right position."

Mike Mingione scored the lone Massachusetts goal in the 23rd minute off a Bullen cross. Bullen gained control of a blocked corner kick and sent a pass to Mingione for his third goal of the season.

The Dukes took back their two-goal lead in the 32nd minute when Brian Bartek capitalized on a Steve Mellor assist for his first goal of the season.

"Once we fell behind, we had to push everyone up and take chances on the offensive side," Koch said. "We made a few little mistakes, and they made us pay every time."

With nine minutes left to play, UMass was called for a foul for tripping a Bonnie offender. On the ensuing free kick, Mike Mehler found the back of the net once Billman committed to a side.

"[St. Bonaventure] played well and deserved to win. I just hope we get a chance to play them in the tournament because I know we are better than we played," Koch said.

The Minutemen return to action on Friday when they travel to Rhode Island for the final regular season match.

Matthew Reid/Collegian

UMass captain Stephen Werner waits for the puck during hockey action at the Mullins Center on Saturday night. Werner and the Minutemen salvaged a victory at home after combing out flat on the road on Friday.

Winer shuts out Providence to salvage weekend split beaten UMass at Schneider in over a year, dating back to a 2-1 victory on Feb. 1, 2003.

HOCKEY from page 10

"It left a rotten taste in our mouth, and the guys were definitely hungry," Anderson said. "We needed to get the ball back on track."

The Minutemen, who entered the weekend with questions swirling around them after losing to Connecticut 3-2 on Oct. 24, answered none of them Friday, as they were out skated and outworked by the host Friars.

Colin McDonald was the headliner with two goals in Providence's scoring show Friday, including the game-winner.

With under three minutes to go in the first period, Eric Lundberg fired a shot at the Minuteman goal from the top of the right-wing face off circle, but it went well wide of Tim Warner's net. However, McDonald was on the spot when the puck bounced off the end board and just past the left wing post, and he sent it back into the gaping net for Providence's third goal of the period and the eventual game winner.

However, the Friars were far from done, even after their explosive first period. The hosts scored four straight goals that went unanswered until freshman P.J. Fenton scored his second of the game just two minutes into the third period. Although it seemed that Fenton's goal would give the Minutemen some of the momentum they had been lacking throughout the contest, Providence soon ended those hopes. Jamie Carroll scored the sixth and final Friar goal with 10:24 to go after Vince Goulet stole a pass in the UMass zone and quickly sent it over to him in the slot, where he converted to cement the result.

Still in Pain? Try the alternative that's Natural, Healthy, and Smart!
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
549-1500

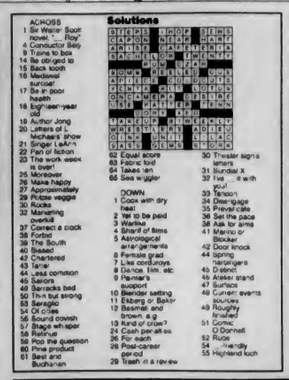
AMHERST
Open 11AM to 4AM Daily
tel # 256-8911
3 medium 1 topping pizzas only $5 EACH*
Domino's Pizza

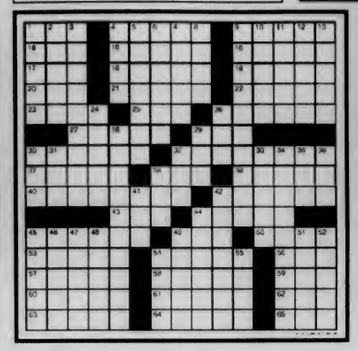
Campus Parking Notice

Due to the end of Daylight Savings Time, effective Monday, November 1, 2004 any vehicle with a valid UMass parking permit may park in any unrestricted, non-reserved space starting at 4:00 p.m. on weekdays instead of 5:00 p.m.

Parking is still prohibited in tow zones, handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces, and reserved vehicle spaces. Also excluded are lots which require 24-hour permits-21, 22, 29, 44, 47, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apartments and Lincoln Apartments.

This parking policy will remain in effect through April 3, 2005. Parking meters will continue to be enforced for payment 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m.





Quote of the Day

"I watch the heavens but I find no calling/Something I can do to change what's coming/Stay close to me while the sky is falling/ I don't wanna be left alone, don't wanna be alone."

-Sarah McLachlan

Solutions

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
One day you are going to grow up to be a very pretty princess.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You need to take a few risks. Gamble on something.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
That slip-up you made today was priceless.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You better be good if you want to go to Disney World.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't worry, no one is going to notice that zit.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
This has been the best week of your life. Everything is falling into place.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You let Captain Morgan loose this weekend.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You should have stuck around this weekend. Your friends missed you.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You better be registered to vote.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you don't think about it, it will all go away.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Time for you to get out of bed. You've caught up on all your sleep.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will never know where you got that large bruise from.

JUNGLE RED
Full Service Hair Salon
SPA MANICURE
BRAZILIAN WAXING
UP-DOS
COLORING
Student Specials Daily!
FREE Spring Break Getaway
All Inclusive Vacation to Acapulco!
Stop by Salon to Register

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE
Ask for Advertising @ 545-3500

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

Apartment for Rent

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January – May, r_korol@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

Auto for Sale

Chevrolet Malibu 2000 70,000 loaded, excellent condition $5,300 / best offer 413-687-4449

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

Employment

Driver Wanted 2 to 5 hours/week $15/hour plus mileage. Driving an elderly woman around 207-361-2695 agafool@aol.com

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Employment

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

Instruction

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

Musician

Seeking Trumpet or Saxaphone player to complete Jazz Group Trio. Ryan 413-221-7615

Roommate Wanted

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Travel

1SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

MONTREAL Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most Weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Travel

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

Travel

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRMMG Online
1 800 426 7710

Wanted

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

Collegian Advertising: 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SportsMonday

Monday, November 1, 2004 — Sports@dailycollegian.com

Block party

Minutemen win Homecoming thriller against Maine in OT

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

In the game's first possession, the Maine football team (4-4, 2-3 Atlantic 10) marched down the field on the Massachusetts defense, running 10 plays and eating up almost five minutes of the clock, only to see its methodical drive ended by a blocked field goal.

It was a sign of things to come.

The Minutemen (4-5, 2-4 Atlantic 10) defeated the Black Bears 35-34 in overtime at McGuirk Stadium on Saturday by blocking Mike Mellow's extra point attempt, capping off a roller coaster ride of a game and giving UMass its 11th Homecoming win in the last 13 seasons.

UMass	35
Maine	34

"Sometimes, you just have that gut feeling that things aren't going to go according to script," UMass coach Don Brown said. "It was one of those days. It was two teams that were totally committed to winning the football game."

The Minutemen will return to action on Saturday at Northeastern at noon.

UMass scored on its first overtime possession when Steve Baylark ran for a three-yard touchdown and Michael Torres, who was back after a one-game suspension, kicked what proved to be the game-winning extra point to put them up 35-28.

"Thank God we made the extra point which has been an adventure for us [this season]," Brown said.

Maine running back Marcus Williams, an Amherst native, scored on the team's first play in overtime on a 25-yard touchdown run up the middle.

"They catch us in a blitz and gash us up the gut, and Marcus goes into the end zone," Brown said. "But to the players' credit, they knew that the game was still in the balance."

On the extra point attempt, L.A. Love and Ola Sanusi made a push up the middle of the line and combined for the block.

"The A-gap was open all game," Love said. "(Mellow) saw me coming. His eyes were real big, and it was no good from the get-go. You know that on defense, every play is a chance to make a big play."

As soon as the ball was blocked and hit the ground, the entire UMass sideline erupted and ran out onto the field to celebrate with the special teams unit.

"Victory," UMass wide receiver Jason Peebler, who caught six balls for 101 yards and a touchdown, said to sum up the feeling. "We ran out on the field. We worked hard all week, like coach said, in practice, and that was our outcome. That's what we deserved, and that's what happened."

Williams, who rushed 28 times for 175 yards and four touchdowns in his return trip home to Amherst, tried keeping things in perspective after scoring what he thought was going to be the tying score in overtime.

"I never try to celebrate too early," Williams said. "As soon as I scored, I was excited, but I immediately tried to get focused because I know we still had to make the kick."

In a game that went back and forth throughout, the Minutemen were able to rally for 14 unanswered points to take their first lead of the game at 28-21 with 12 minutes remaining in the fourth quarter. With just under six minutes remaining, though, Tim Day was intercepted by Joan Quezada.

"We're just trying to go out there and play defense and try to force a turnover," Quezada said. "Everybody was covering everybody, and I just picked the ball off."

Maine used a nine-play, 80-yard drive that was capped off by a nine-yard touchdown run by Williams with just over two minutes remaining in regulation to knot the score at 28.

Maybe the biggest reason why Massachusetts was able to pull off the victory was the second half adjustments made on defense in terms of covering wide receiver Christian Pereira, who caught three passes for 41 yards and a touchdown in the first half but was missed a couple more times. He only caught one ball for 24 yards after halftime.

"They mixed it up," Pereira said. "They played a lot of bump-coverages, a lot of man-coverage, and [the defensive backs] will come down and fake bump and just bail.

"In the second half, they were bailing more. They didn't want to get beat deep. They had a good defense and a good game plan."

R.J. Cobbs, who was assigned to Pereira early in the game but was limited with an injury after the first quarter, was able to intercept a 25-yard jump-ball pass to Pereira at the UMass four-yard line on Maine's second offensive possession.

Courtesy Karen Winger

UMass tailback Steve Baylark carries the football during Saturday's 35-34 overtime victory over Maine. Baylark ran for over 100 yards for the third consecutive week to help carry his team to victory.

Linebacker Serge Tikum led the defense with 11 tackles, and defensive lineman Keron Williams had four tackles for loss and a sack to highlight the defensive statistics for the Minutemen.

Offensively for the UMass, their key contributors all showed up together on Saturday for the first time since the game against Colgate on Sept. 11.

Day was 17-for-29 for 201 yards and four touchdown passes. Wide receiver J.J. Moore contributed with four catches for 37 yards and two scores, and Baylark ran the ball 33 times for 159 yards, his third consecutive 100-yard performance and fourth of the season.

"You look at it offensively, Stevie Baylark again gave us a great performance with 150-plus yards," Brown said. "Obviously, Jason (Peebler) had a big day again so we've finally gotten him back into the flow on offense. I thought Timmy (Day) was pretty solid today again. I'm really happy for our offense."

It was also Brown's first victory on the sideline at McGuirk Stadium due to sanctions that kept him in the press box for the first three games of the year.

"I couldn't be more proud of a group of guys with the way they've continued to fight week-in and week-out," Brown said. "Our guys show up every Saturday to play. I'm just really proud of their effort. They've been an absolute fun group to coach."

Tale of two teams against Providence

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

Getting blown out, especially on the road, can do a lot of things to a hockey team. For Massachusetts this weekend, it was apparently the perfect wake-up call for a team that can't afford to give up home-and-home sweeps.

Providence	6
UMass	2

After losing 6-2 to Providence on Friday night at Schneider Arena, the Minutemen turned the tables on the Friars Saturday, winning 2-0 on the strength of Gabe Winer's 20-save shutout and a banner evening for the tandem of Matt Anderson and Garrett Summerfield.

UMass	2
Providence	0

With the salvaged weekend, the Minutemen maintained a winning record, improving to 4-3-0 overall, and 2-1-0 in Hockey East play. The Friars, meanwhile, fall to 3-2-0 on the season and 2-2-0 in the conference.

Anderson opened the scoring Saturday, taking a feed from Summerfield in the slot just before the midpoint of the first period. With a Providence defender in hot pursuit, Anderson deftly spun and made available a wrist shot, which he put under PC goaltender David Cacciola's right leg. It was Anderson's fifth goal of the season and his ninth point.

Anderson returned the favor to Summerfield in the third when he left a drop-pass for the trailing winger, who quickly fired a one-timer that slipped past Cacciola on the short side to make it 2-0 with 12:53 to go.

Winer, though, only needed one of the goals to earn his third win of the season as he turned aside all 20 shots the Friars produced. Although it won't be the highest shot total he will see all season, it was still an important achievement for Winer and the team in the early stages of the season.

"Gabe is known to be a good solid goaltender," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "That can help the team play up to the next level. He's a quality goalie, and when he keeps his focus on things and stays aggressive, he can be very good."

That the Providence shot total was 14 less than Friday night's was a testament to the fact that the Minutemen won a lot of the one-on-one clashes that don't get mentioned in a stat column.

"We won more puck battles, and I thought we played our system a little better than [Friday] night," Cahoon said.

What did appear on the stat sheet, and ended up being a big difference between the two games, was the penalty tally. UMass was called for 12 infractions to Providence's eight on Friday night, but the teams were each whistled five times on Saturday. Although they didn't get any goals out of it, the Minuteman power play set the pace for much of the game.

"We're getting more people involved in the power play. There's more balance, more puck touches," Cahoon said. "The power play last year ran off of [former defenseman] Tommy [Pock]. I'm very happy about the balance this year."

For UMass, it was the perfect answer to Friday's drubbing, which was the first time the Friars had

See HOCKEY on page 8

Matthew Reidy/Collegian

Goalie Tim Warner and the Minutemen had a tough time in Providence on Friday night, but they were able to turn things around in time to earn one victory over the weekend against its Hockey East opponent.

For the first time in over a year, the Patriots return home losers

By Alan Robinson
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH (AP) – The New England Patriots are no longer perfect, all because of a rookie quarterback who still is.

Ben Roethlisberger, who doesn't know what it's like to lose an NFL game, drove the Steelers to four scores following uncharacteristic New England turnovers, and Pittsburgh ended the Patriots' two long winning streaks with a remarkably easy 34-20 victory Sunday.

The Patriots (6-1) had won 21 straight counting the playoffs and a league-record 18 in a row in the regular season but were all but out of this one after Roethlisberger threw two touchdown passes to Plaxico Burress during a 21-point Steelers first quarter.

Maybe all this winning was too much to ask of Boston-area teams. With running back Corey Dillon (thigh) sitting out and Pro Bowl cornerback Ty Law (foot) sidelined for all but a few plays, the Patriots' record run ended only four days after the Boston Red Sox won their first World Series in 86 years.

"It was never about the streak. That was never part of our preparation," linebacker Mike Vrabel said. "It wasn't this week against the Steelers, either – we just didn't play well enough to win, that's it."

This was supposed to be the game that exposed Roethlisberger as a rookie – taking on New England's defensive mastermind, coach Bill Belichick, and the Patriots' unpredictable defenses. Instead, Roethlisberger ran his own winning streak to 18 – his last 13 games at Miami of Ohio and his first five in the NFL.

Only former Steelers quarterback Mike Kruczek's 6-0 start while subbing for the injured Terry Bradshaw in 1976 is longer than Roethlisberger's since the 1970 NFL merger. But Kruczek never threw a TD pass in 10 games this season.

Roethlisberger already has nine scoring passes in what is fast becoming the best season by an NFL rookie QB since Dan Marino threw 20 touchdown passes and only six interceptions in 11 games for the 1983 Dolphins.

"It's only been five games," Roethlisberger said. "We keep saying it over and over again. Let's not get too excited."

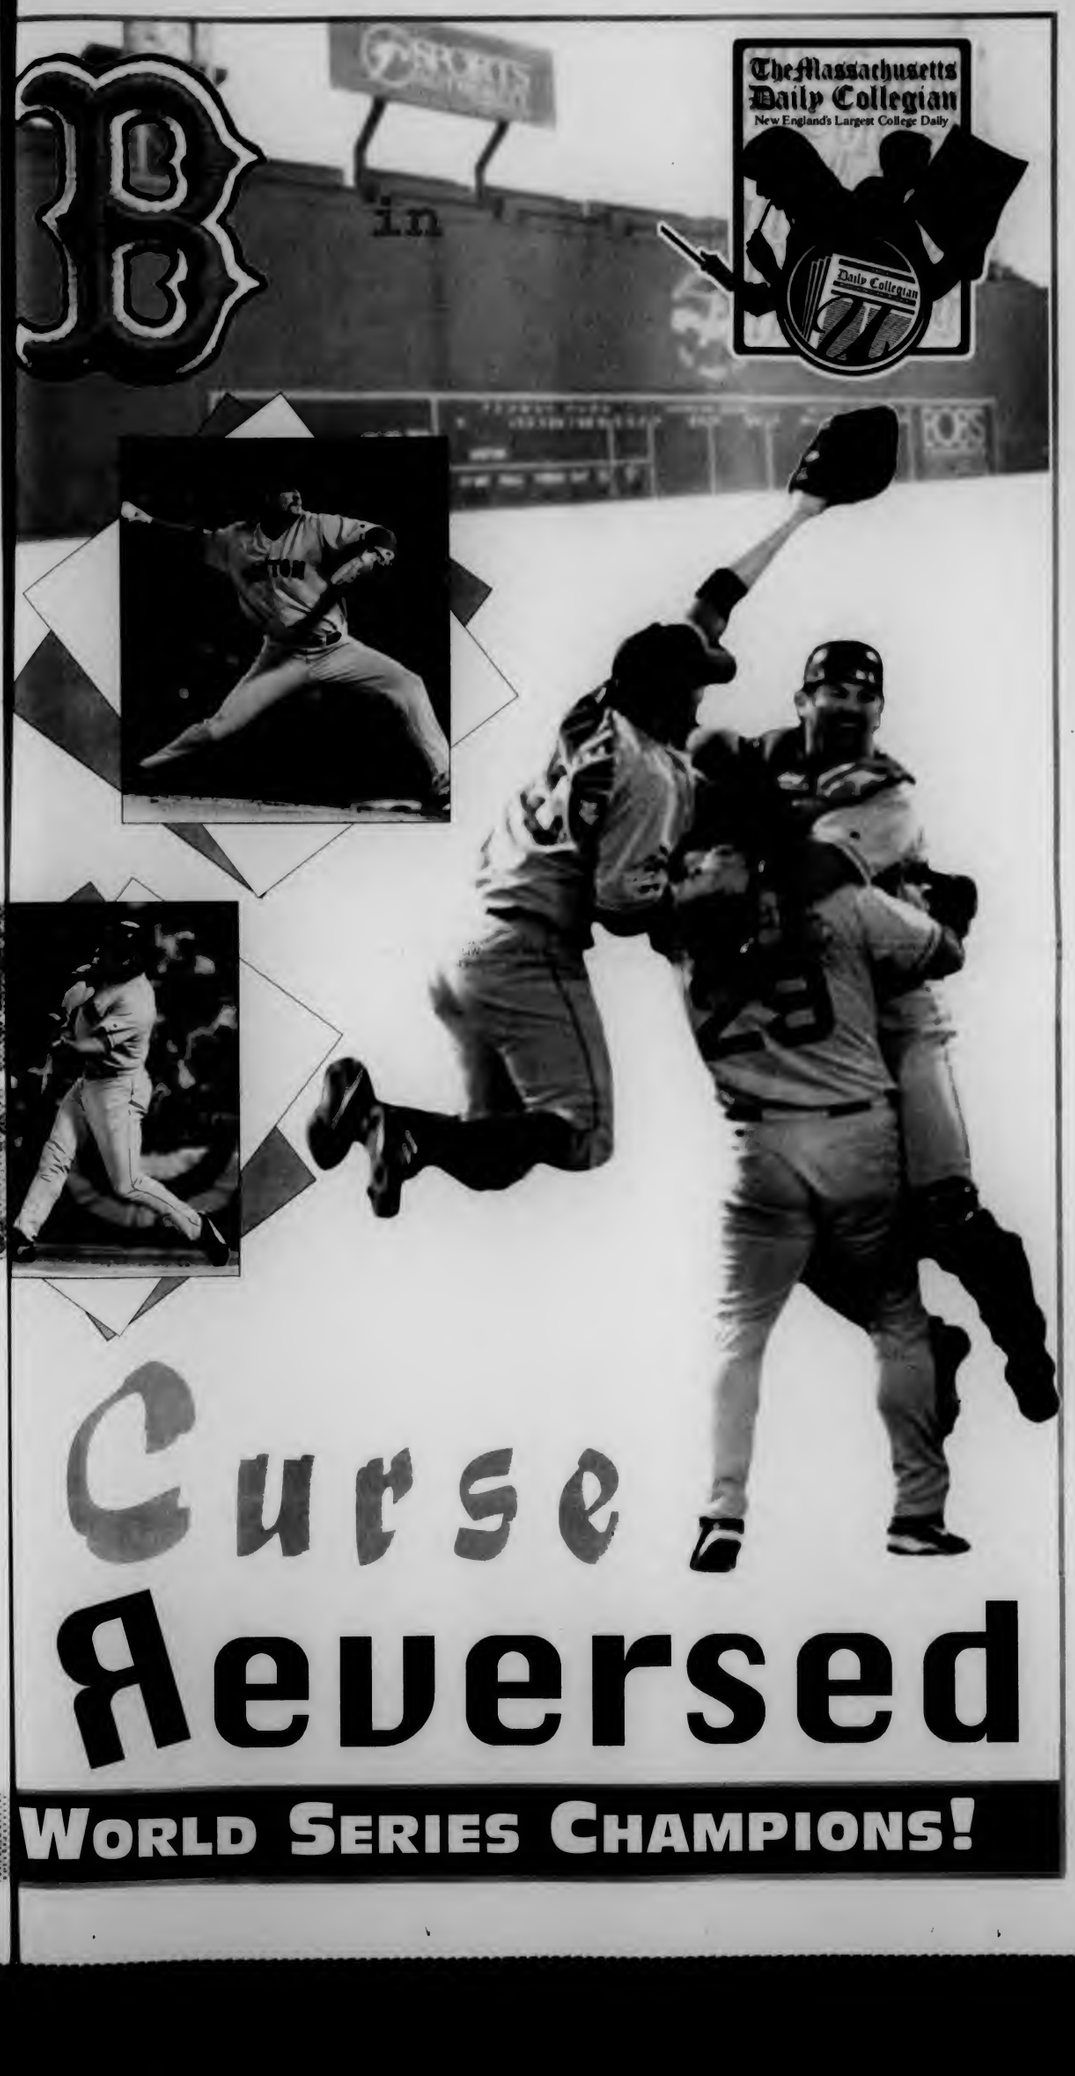
His teammates certainly are excited, with the Steelers (6-1) off to their best start since their 1978 team was 7-0. Roethlisberger was 18-of-24 for 196 yards and no interceptions Sunday and is 39-of-49 in his last two games.

"You can't describe his effort," wide receiver Hines Ward said. "He's 5-0, and he's earning a lot of respect on this team. The guys on this team are fighting hard for him."

Rather than Roethlisberger, it was the Patriots' Tom Brady who looked like the rookie, throwing two interceptions and losing a fumble in New England's first loss since a 20-17 defeat to Washington on Sept. 28, 2003.

"It's not weird at all (to lose). We knew it was a possibility every week," linebacker Tedy Bruschi said. "That's why we played so hard and prepared so hard every week. But a couple of things happened, a couple of mistakes ... and they were rolling."

Everything looked status quo early for the Patriots, who overcame Dillon's absence following two consecutive 100-yard games to drive for Adam Vinatieri's 43-yard field goal, the 15th straight game they've scored first.



After that, it fell apart.

Roethlisberger hit Ward for 21 yards ahead of a perfectly thrown 47-yard scoring pass to a stretched-out Burress, who quickly shed backup Randall Gay two plays after he came in for the injured Law.

"He (Gay) was a lame duck out there, so we just went right at him," Burress said.

It never got any better for the Patriots, playing here for the first time since upsetting Pittsburgh 24-17 in the AFC championship game in January 2002.

On New England's next play, Brady fumbled after a hard hit from Joey Porter, leading to Roethlisberger's four-yard pass to Burress and a 14-3 lead.

Can you Believe it?

Believe it: Red Sox made winning easy

HOWE from page RS1

Jose Canseco in the 1995 ALDS, Curt Schilling buying Drew Bledsoe's old house and the rest of the cursing errors – could the Red Sox win the world championship with such ease?

How could they let such a pessimistic fan base with the alleged passion for agony sit through five stress-free days of World Series baseball?

Was the curse broken immediately following the final out in Yankee Stadium on Oct. 20 rather than after disposing the Cardinals?

This isn't an area where things happen easily. Sure, the Celtics did have a pretty nice 30-year dynasty, but have you seen the team since? Rick Pitino set the organization back by ten years after literally running that team into the ground a few years ago. Now, Green 17 looks more like a joke than a mission statement.

The Bruins will never win anything as long as Jeremy Jacobs – whose wallet isn't just staying closed, it's dead bolted and guarded by a small army – stays in town.

The Patriots have been the model franchise in professional sports over the past three years, but they haven't made anything look easy. They found it in themselves to blow a 14-point lead against the Rams in their first Super Bowl win, and they let a pesky bunch of Panthers kick them around through most of the second half in last year's Super Bowl. And don't forget the snow bowl against Oakland.

How about that 21-game winning streak?

That certainly wasn't easy. There were goal line stands, final-minute scoring drives and enough injuries to keep Boston's hospitals in business by themselves.

No, the Red Sox didn't make it easy on themselves by falling down 0-3 to the Yanks. They didn't make it easy by being three outs away from a sweep with the best postseason closer in the game's history on the mound.

But Curt Schilling made it look easy, albeit very painful, by pulling out a performance reminiscent of Michael Jordan's "flu game" when he dropped 38 points on the Utah Jazz in Game 5 of the 1997 NBA Finals.

I don't think Hollywood – or even FOX – would have scripted the World Series to play out the way it did. Every media source in the planet was hyping the championship series to last the full seven games.

It was supposed to go into the bottom of the ninth with the Red Sox trailing by a run with Cardinals closer Jason Isringhausen on the mound. Johnny Damon and Orlando Cabrera would have both been retired fairly easily before Manny Ramirez knocked a single up the middle.

David Ortiz would have come up next and swung and missed badly at two low breaking balls. After fouling off a dozen pitches and working the count to 3-and-2 – with FOX showing every desperate, half-alive but mostly dead face in the Fenway crowd, and Tim McCarver saying something completely meaningless but self-inspiring like, "Red Sox Nation has suffered for so long, but I truly do believe that they love losing" – Big Papi was supposed to launch a rocket over the Green Monster to cause the biggest celebration in the city since colonial America's Boston Tea Party.

Fenway Park was supposed to collapse, and Boston was supposed to explode.

It just didn't work out that way, though. The finale wasn't written by any Hollywood directors, but I guess Stephen King will do just fine.

On a night that the sun, earth and moon all lined up in perfect order to create a lunar eclipse, the Red Sox scored exactly three runs (Babe Ruth's number) and shut out the Cardinals to go off quietly into the night.

Well, the celebration still happened, grown men still cried and everything, as far as I know, is still standing in Boston.

Maybe it should have been easy. There will be no asterisk, and no one can ever doubt that the Red Sox were the best team in baseball in 2004. They knocked off the two winningest teams – both this season and historically – on their way to the crown.

This is something I never thought that I would get to say, let alone write.

The Boston Red Sox won the World Series. And they made it look easy.

A World Series championship for the ages

MARZELLI from page RS1

finally come full circle. After filling it with victory champagne, I put it on my head proudly, as a World Champion. It was perfect.

On Saturday, as one of three million members of Red Sox Nation, I traveled to Boston for a victory parade I often wondered if I would ever see. On my head, for one last time, was my hat. I had debated all week whether I should wear it or not, but in the end I don't think I could ever forgive myself if I hadn't. After all those years, all those games, all those moments and all that disappointment, my hat deserved one last blaze of glory. It just wouldn't have been right without it.

On my way home, my dad bought me a brand new hat, complete with the World Series emblem on the side. My old hat with the worn out "B", the floppy brim, the stains of sweat and the word "BELIEVE" written on the underside of the brim was officially retired.

In retrospect, my hat represented everything that was right about true Red Sox fans. For those of us who love the Sox more than you could ever imagine loving anything, this World Series title was never just about winning, but instead what makes this team winning so special. It was about all those times and moments, both good and bad, that reminded you of how special it was to love this team, this ballpark and this city. It was about sharing a common bond with three generations of your family, and watching it all come together on one glorious October evening in Missouri. It was about time, and how fast it goes. It was about growing up, but not old.

It was never about one single, amazing moment, but rather a series of moments and times that add up while life passes you by. Moments that fly by so quickly, until one day when it hits you that it's been that long. No matter how hard to try, you will never be able to give up those moments, or the feelings those times will forever give you. They are who you are, who you will be, and what makes you all you ever wanted to be. They are what make you a baseball fan, and a Red Sox fan.

For myself, winning the World Series was never about Bucky Bucker or Boone. It's about Tom Brunansky's sliding catch to clinch the division in 1990 – the first time I ever realized I loved the Red Sox. About my first glimpse of Green with my grandfather in the summer of 1991, and about perfect evenings in the first base grandstand with my parents as a child. It's about pretending to be Mo Vaughn in my back yard, and wearing my Roger Clemens jersey to school as often as I could. It's about my dad bringing binoculars to games, and showing me the Morse code on the manual scoreboard.

It's about skipping school to go to Opening Day, and doing it with my best friend. It's about dropping $325 dollars driving nearly 10 hours round trip for the day and game of a lifetime, and about knowing it was all well worth it. It's about knowing that my grandfather, who was born in 1915 and was the first person I ever regularly watched the Red Sox with, finally saw the World Series come back to Boston, and that somewhere my grandmother is smiling down on me, knowing the happiness that this moment brings.

It's about the Green Monster, Pesky's Pole and the red seat in section 42. It's about Fenway Franks, bags of peanuts from George the vendor and hot cocoa on frigid April nights. About starting games with "Centerfield", knowing the words to "Sweet Caroline" and about loving that Dirty Water. It's about riding the T to Kenmore Square. About Rally Caps, the Wave and chants of "Let's Go Red Sox." It's about the Yankees making you sick.

It's about your first Red Sox jersey, souvenirs and buying a program to keep score. It's about listening to Joe and Jerry on warm summer nights when you can't make the game, and knowing there's nothing you'd rather be doing. It's about the roar of the Fenway Crowd, and the sights, sounds and smells of the ballpark. It's about the game you love, the friends and family you're with, and the team in which you will always have faith.

In the end, these are the moments and memories that add up to make the World Series mean what it does to a 21-year old college junior – the types of memories that, like my hat, are an inseparable part of you that will always feel just right. Memories that are now that much fonder for those of us who always have, and always will, believe in the power of the Red Sox victories ended in Pittsburgh last night, it's not like anyone can go around claiming that they're failures. The Patriots could still run off another seven to nine victories and own the AFC title again. And yet through it all, they're mostly the same group of attention-avoiding players who don't try to grab the spotlight like the Terrell Owenses of the world do.

A winning theory takes Sox to the top

MERRITT from page RS1

While the Pats are led by a playboy quarterback and a notoriously egotistical running back, Tom Brady wasn't exactly one of those high draft choices that litter the NFL now, and Corey Dillon seems to have completely bought in to the team's philosophy. It's still not a team of superstars, even though Brady, Dillon, Bruschi, Law and a few others show up posters.

What the Boston Red Sox did this year was add to the case for the philosophy that Belichick introduced. They were a bunch of idiots, not a bunch of stars. They were a team full of misfits and has-beens, guys who wallowed in the misery of also-ran ballclubs like David Ortiz and Orlando Cabrera, guys who had lots of potential but nowhere to go with it, and guys like Kevin Millar who didn't come in with much talent or credibility, but found an identity in the uniform.

They were, in a lot of ways, the New England Patriots, circa August 2001. Signing David Ortiz and Mark Bellhorn was the baseball equivalent of the Patriots drafting Richard Seymour; an action that drew a lot of blank stares and frustrated sighs from fans. Other than the hardball freaks who have multiple fantasy teams and take notes on every episode of "Baseball Tonight," did anyone know a thing about Ortiz? Was Bellhorn anything but some guy who filled the right-middle infield for the Cubs?

To be fair, there most certainly will be some superstars showing off their ostensibly Rhode Island-sized rings on April 11. Curt Schilling made a strong case for a bronze bust in Cooperstown in a half-dozen years or so, though that will be debated throughout the winter. Pedro Martinez is still dominant when he wants to be, and Manny Ramirez effectively penned himself into the history books as one of the best hitters of his generation.

But that is a product of the game. Baseball teams need at least a few stars now. Football teams can get by with mostly no-names and a few really good players, but baseball teams have to have a couple of real studs — a starting pitcher with a 90 mile-per-hour-plus heater, a slugger who hits balls hard enough to qualify for frequent flier miles, a fielder with a glove made by the Hoover company. The Red Sox, who could never plead poverty with their gigantic payroll, are certainly a successful ballclub in the modern age, and that means spending gads of money on one-year contracts. But when you look at the roster, and consider the differences between the Sox and their chief rival, they can almost pull off the underdog. Bad News Bosox schtick.

Their run to the promised land — and it's been promised for quite a long time — was kept alive by players like Cabrera and Ortiz, guys who would either be deadwood bench bums on the Yankees, or unused talents on small-market teams. Even the superstars had to contribute in the style of the dirt dog, whether it was Schilling sucking up the pain and pitching one of the greatest playoff starts in history, or Ramirez shaking off two errors in the most important series of his life and still coming up with key hits.

To draw even more similarity to the Patriots, the Red Sox completed not one, but two huge comebacks, first waking out of their midseason coma to take control of the wild card, and then making history after being up against the weight of a juggernaut.

The Patriots, you'll remember, were 5-5 after their first 10 games in 2001, but rattled off nine straight victories to become champs, including the memorable Super Bowl win, and this was after losing their franchise quarterback to a season-ending injury. The Sox did the same, digging themselves a ridiculous hole and coming out of it because they stuck with a strategy that Epstein and Terry Francona decided on going in. They climbed out as a team, not piece-by-piece, and that gave them the momentum to push to the World Series.

Curtis Leskanic, Terry Adams, Lenny DiNardo, Mike Myers, and Doug Mirabelli will all get the same royal treatment that Schilling, Martinez, Ramirez, Ortiz, Damon, and Varitek will get on April 11, because they're a team, and because the contributions of every player, no matter how small, made a difference. It was substance over style, unless the "hockey hair" of Bellhorn and the Christ look of Damon count as style.

Sounds a lot like the other championship team from New England that overcame the odds, doesn't it?

King releases seventh and final chapter of epic

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

TODAY: High: 51, Low: 41 — WEDNESDAY: High: 55, Low: 28 — THURSDAY: High: 50, Low: 35

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

An outsider respects Red Sox victory

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

Tuesday, November 2, 2004 — New England's Largest College Daily • Est. 1890 — Volume CXIV Issue 40

Homecoming bonfire and pep rally attracts 1,000 to Campus Pond

By Teri Barrows
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts football team's 35-34 overtime win against Maine on Saturday may have been partially attributed to the energy created at a bonfire and pep rally held at the Campus Pond on Friday night, according to attendees.

Amherst police estimated that approximately 1,000 students and alumni gathered around a blazing bonfire to show their support for UMass football.

"When they first lit the fire at 9:45 p.m., the flames must have been a few stories high," said UMass junior Hannah Drake.

The night kicked off at 10:45 p.m. with a performance by the UMass Marching Band. Cheerleaders dispersed themselves throughout the crowd and raised the level of energy. With the crowd chanting "Go UMass," coach Don Brown and the UMass football team got on stage to request the crowd's support at Saturday's football game against Maine. The Marching Band concluded the pep rally with two more songs.

Despite rainy weather, students still came out to the game on Saturday. "We saw about 200 students come to our beach party tent in MinuteMan Park," said UMass Homecoming Steering Committee co-chair and UMass senior Nathaniel Jewell. From 11:00 a.m. to kickoff at 1:00 p.m., the tent featured sand, free Hawaiian pizza donated by Domino's, patio heaters to keep episodes projected onto a large screen.

Karen Weinraub/Collegian

The UMass Minuteman Marching Band performes at halftime during the Homecoming football game on Saturday. UMass beat the University of Maine, 35-34.

Courtesy Amanda Nelson

Patrick Arsenault and Michelle Price are the co-chairs of the Bonfire Committee and members of Alpha Phi Omega fraternity.

UMass junior Josh Oelschlegel was the lucky winner of a free spring break trip for two to Cancun, sponsored by STA Travel. Oelschlegel, like many other students, dug for small plastic shells in a kid-pool filled with sand. Each shell he found in the allotted 10 second time period represented the number of entries he had in the contest. The Homecoming Steering Committee also gave away free t-shirts and thunder-stick noise-makers under their tent.

"We're really happy with the turnout," said HSC Member and UMass senior Jessie Day. "A lot of campus went home for the Red Sox parade on Saturday, and the weather was terrible, but patio heaters kept everyone under our tent warm."

Weather for the bonfire was perfect, however the night's activities started later than expected due to the late ending of Bill Cosby's comedy show. "The crowd was small until after 10:30 p.m. when people started coming up from the Mullins Center. Not a lot of people stuck around for the band performances due to the late start, however those that did stay had a great time," said Jewell.

After the pep rally a second wave of entertainment began. A mix of hip hop lyrics and funk beats characterized the performance by Cold Duck Complex, who have performed at UMass several times over the past few years. Boston-based West Entrance also performed until 12:30 a.m. when the Amherst Fire Department extinguished the bonfire. DJ Hipnotiq, who also performs at the Amherst Pub every weekend, provided hip-hop mixes during band transitions.

This is the second year that the HSC has been planning events for students. The committee recruits volunteers starting in the spring and works throughout the summer to get everything in order. "It takes a lot of planning to get the entire UMass community involved and for everything to run smoothly," said Jewell.

The committee would like to see audience sizes increase over the next few years, add more events during the week before Homecoming, and bring back the Homecoming parade. "We'll be back again next year to make Homecoming even more UMassive!" said Jewell.

MassPirg to provide student rides to polls

By Janet Jock
Collegian Correspondent

Although many University of Massachusetts students are registered to vote at the polls today, many voters are unsure where they can cast their ballot in the Amherst area.

In the past month, any student walking by the Student Union and dining halls across UMass could spot activists encouraging student-voter registration. There have also been several publicized efforts encouraging young people to vote this year, including the MTV "Rock the Vote" and hip hop artist P Diddy's "Vote or Die" campaigns.

However, the important question now is how many registered voters are actually going to find the polling stations?

Organizations like MassPirg and the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy are trying to make it easy for the students to get to their voting locations by providing buses to go to the three different polling stations in Amherst.

According to Thomas Locke, Campus Organizer for MassPirg, there will be buses running every twenty minutes from Franklin Dining Hall and parking lot 43 behind Northeast Residential Area to bring students to their respective polling locations.

The polls open at 7 a.m. today, and buses run from 2 p.m. until 8 p.m. tonight. Students who live in Southwest can catch a bus outside of their dorm to their polling center in the Bangs Community Center behind Rao's Coffee Shop in the center of downtown Amherst.

All students registered to vote in Amherst who live in Sylvan and Northeast are scheduled to vote at the Emmanuel Lutheran Church, while students living in Central and Orchard Hill are expected to vote at the Wildwood Elementary School on Strong Street.

Students need to bring a proof of residence and their I.D. in order to vote and can only vote in Amherst if they are registered in Amherst. If they are not registered in Amherst, they need to vote in their hometown.

While it is possible that college students are too busy to vote, junior Danielle Kelleher said that the students "are too lazy" to vote. "They don't think any of the issues apply to them," said student Spencer Ziegler.

Historically, students in the age group of 18 to 24 have not voted in high numbers. Last year only 16 percent of Massachusetts students in that age group voted in the 2000 elections, and 36 percent of them voted nation-wide, according to Locke.

Locke emphasized that, in fact, it is just the opposite. He says that the reason why politicians aren't paying attention to students' needs is because there has been such a low voting rate among the age group in the past.

This year seems to be a different story. Sixteen hundred new voters are registered at UMass, and MassPirg has registered half a million voters nationwide. Additionally, MassPirg is going around to the dorms and reminding people to vote and bring their identification and proof of residence to the polls.

Dennis Canty, a senior at UMass, is driving to Westford to vote. "I place a lot of importance on the elections at a local level. Often the candidates for state senate and state rep are overlooked, and that can be a downfall in politics. State policy tends to affect us equally to national policy," he said.

While Dennis is voting in his hometown, his brother, junior Brendan Canty, is registered in Amherst and is voting at the Bangs Community Center. "I'm voting locally because it's closer, and I really wanted to have my vote count in my area. Where you go to school really affects the way you vote and the sides you take on certain points of view," he said.

Wherever the location, Locke encourages students to go out and vote. For additional information, students may contact MASSPIRG at 413-545-0199 or call a national hotline, such as Election Protection Program's 1-866-OUR-VOTE or Common Cause's 1-866-MYVOTE1.

Distinguished nursing alumni recognized

By Kaitlin Barry
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts School of Nursing presented Distinguished Alumni Awards to MaryAnn Hogan '76, Elizabeth Howard '77, and Maureen Farley Sroczynski '68 at its Annual Alumni Buffet Luncheon on Saturday in the Cape Cod Lounge in the Student Union.

The luncheon included a presentation by Associate Professor Genevieve F. Chandler and Assistant Clinical Professor Kathleen Newman titled "The Web of Mentoring: Prescription for Empowerment."

"There is no greater recognition than that which comes from your peers," said Sroczynski upon receiving her award. Sroczynski is founder, president, and owner of Farley Associates, Inc., a management consulting firm focused on creating positive work environments for healthcare professionals.

She is currently working on the development of the Massachusetts Center for Nursing and the Nursing Career Ladder Initiative to examine the nursing faculty shortage and to unite nursing organizations throughout the state in recruiting and retaining nursing professionals.

With over 35 years experience in healthcare, she has practiced in senior-nursing-leadership and executive positions throughout New England, including high-level administrative positions at the UMass Medical Center Health Care System in Worcester. She was also an associate faculty member at the UMass Worcester School of Nursing.

Sroczynski served as president of the Massachusetts Organization of Nurse Executives from 1996-1997. She earned a bachelor's degree in nursing from UMass Amherst in 1968 and a master's in nursing administration from Boston University in 1985.

MaryAnn Hogan has been a Clinical Assistant Professor at UMass since 2001. She teaches undergraduate students in a clinical setting through an academic partnership with Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton and is chairperson of the Curriculum Committee for the School of Nursing.

"I am thrilled that my career has taken me in the direction of nursing education, because by helping to nurture the generation of nurses to come, we are also indirectly making a huge and powerful impact on the health of people here and now," she said.

Hogan is the president of her own company, Nursing and Health Education Resources, Inc., which conducts programs to assist nursing graduates in preparing for the NCLEX-RN licensing exam. She has written over 20 books in the field of nursing in addition to test banks, study guides, and other materials. She is currently coauthoring a pharmacology textbook.

Hogan has taught at Holyoke Community College, Elms College, and Bay State Medical Center, is certified as a clinical specialist in medical surgical nursing, and has experience in critical, medical surgical, and neuroscience nursing.

She earned a bachelor's degree in nursing from UMass Amherst in 1976 and a master's in nursing from Anne Maria College in 1985.

Elizabeth P. Howard shared her experiences at UMass in her acceptance speech, including her first encounter with a nurse practitioner when she was treated at Health Services on campus. "I can remember how the nurse practitioner was able to assess, diagnose, and treat me without consulting anyone else," Howard said. "She moved so smoothly and confidently. I thought, 'I'd sure like to be one

See NURSING on page 2

DNA legislation signed into law by President Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rape victims and convicted felons will have greater access to DNA testing under a new five-year, $1 billion program signed into law by President Bush.

The law, hammered out in the final days of the Congressional session, ensures access to post-conviction DNA testing for those serving time in prison or on death row. It provides $775 million in grants over the next five years to clear the backlog of some 350,000 untested DNA samples in rape evidence kits.

It also provides an additional $350 million to improve legal representation in death penalty cases.

"Think of the human costs when an innocent person is executed or spends long years in jail," said Rep. William Delahunt, D-Mass., a key author of the bill. "Imagine the scars when a victim waits years to know the identity of their assailant. We are not talking about hypothetical scenarios. We are talking about real people, ordinary Americans facing the most extreme miscarriages of justice."

Bush signed the legislation Saturday.

In recent years, 111 people in 25 states have been released after spending years on death row for crimes they did not commit, leading to more than 50 convictions of the real perpetrators.

-Associated Press

Today's focus for Massachusetts is to get out the vote

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Election officials expect a high turnout in Massachusetts for Tuesday's elections, but the outcome of the hardest fought legislative races could hinge on three key factors: field, field and field.

Field — the political art of getting your voters to the polls — requires obsessive organizational skills, small armies of volunteers and lots of phone lines and strong coffee.

It also can mean the difference between winning and losing.

With polls set to open Tuesday morning, Democratic and Republicans candidates for the House and Senate are revving up their field operations with the help of state party officials, hoping to pull in those few extra votes.

There are plenty of voters to chase. Massachusetts has 4,098,634 voters eligible to cast ballots on Tuesday, including 90,000 who have registered since the last presidential election.

Secretary of State William F. Galvin predicted Sunday that the election could draw the most voters in state history — probably exceeding 3 million — in part because Massachusetts Sen. John F. Kerry is the Democratic presidential candidate. The state record was set in 1992, when 2.8 million Bay State voters went to the polls.

"We think it will be higher (than 1992)," Galvin said. "We have a native son, and an intense race."

Poll workers were trained to check identification of voters who registered after January 2003. There will be new machines in 30 municipalities, including Boston, where the city's electric lever machines used in 2000 were replaced with optical-scan paper ballots.

Also, for the first time, Galvin is launching a voter advisory system, with hourly radio updates detailing crowd conditions at polling stations statewide.

Playing a key role in the get-out-the-vote drive on the Republican side is Gov. Mitt Romney, who has pledged to help elect more Republicans to the overwhelmingly Democratic Legislature.

On Monday, Romney will sweep through seven key Senate districts on a bus tour, hoping to encourage voters to back Republican candidates.Democrats have their own big name get-out-the-vote cheerleader.

Democratic U.S. Sen. Edward M. Kennedy has recorded automated telephone calls for at least 10 Democratic candidates in an effort to thwart any Republican gains.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugalski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
CAMPUS EDITOR Alyson Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marzelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kuggins
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCounting Clerk Virginie Frecinat
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Busack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSOCIATE EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL AND SPRING TERMS. THE COLLEGIAN IS AN INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ASSABET LIFE. RENAMED THE COLLEGE SIDING IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1950. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARD SWEEP SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 DAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron J. Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Alex Demosthene
COPY EDITOR
Sarah Marples
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Nate Freedman, Eliott Chong

want to cover UMass Boston?
Call Erika
545-1809

Baghdad deputy governor murdered

By Jim Krane
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Militants kidnapped an American, a Nepalese and four Iraqi guards in a bloody assault on their office in the capital Monday, and gunmen assassinated Baghdad's deputy governor in a drive-by shooting, new violence that came as voter registration began for vital January elections.

West of the capital, U.S. troops clashed with Sunni insurgents, and American artillery pounded suspected insurgent positions in Fallujah, witnesses said.

U.S. forces are gearing up for a major offensive against Fallujah, the strongest bastion of Sunni insurgents. The order to launch what would likely be a bloody assault must come from Prime Minister Ayad Allawi, who warned Sunday that his patience with negotiations was thinning. U.S. and Iraqi officials hope to curb the insurgency in time for national elections at the end of January.

A handful of Iraqis showed up for the first day of voter registration in central Baghdad on Monday. They refused to allow TV cameras to film them for fear of future retaliation.

To help protect the voting, Iresh American soldiers arrived in the capital Monday — reinforcements that push the total U.S. military presence in Iraq to around 142,000, the highest level since the summer of 2003.

The latest in Iraq's wave of kidnappings came when gunmen stormed the offices of a Saudi company in the upscale Mansour district of Baghdad, sparking a battle with guards during the evening iftar meal when Muslims break their day-long fast in the holy month of Ramadan, police said.

One attacker and one guard were killed in the fight before the gunmen made off with their captives, police said. Police Lt. Col. Maan Khalat identified the captives as an American, a Nepalese and the four Iraqis. U.S. Embassy spokesman Bob Callahan confirmed that the fourth victim was an American.

"We heard gunfire. I went outside to see what was going on when a man pointed a machine gun at me and said: 'Get in or else I'll shoot at you,'" said Haidar Karar, who lives in the neighborhood.

COURTESY CNN/AP

A security guard inspects the car of the deputy governor of Baghdad who was assasinated in an attack on Monday.

MATTHEW BRIDGEMAN/COLLEGIAN

Super supper scare
Worchester Dining Hall employees serve up lobsters last Friday for a special Halloween dinner.

Curt Schilling delivers his endorsement for Bush

WILMINGTON, Ohio (AP) — Curt Schilling hobbled onto a stage inside an airplane hangar to introduce President Bush for the first of two campaign appearances Monday.

The Boston Red Sox pitcher, who canceled a scheduled campaign stop with Bush in New Hampshire last week, saying he was unable to travel because of his ankle injury, is also endorsing the incumbent on automated phone calls in three battleground states.

Schilling wore a protective boot over the ankle as he and his wife, Shonda, made their way to the stage. He told thousands of supporters that they should elect a president who supports the troops "every step of the way."

America needs "a leader who makes sure they have everything they need to get the job done, a leader who believes in their mission and honors their service, a leader who has the courage and the character to stay on the offense against terrorism until the war is won."

"That leader is our commander in chief, George W. Bush," Schilling said.

Later, in Burgettstown, Pa., just west of Pittsburgh, Schilling said he was proud to be a member of the championship team. Then he added: "I'm proud to be on a team with a more important mission — the team that's going to get George Bush re-elected."

After his sore ankle prevented him from attending Bush campaign rallies Friday, Schilling recorded endorsements that are being used through Election Day in New Hampshire, Maine and Pennsylvania.

Bush spokeswoman Nicolle Devenish said the pitcher "must have been feeling better. He reached out to our campaign and offered to help."

Meanwhile, Democrat and Red Sox fan John Kerry countered the Schilling effect by recruiting the team's principal owner, John Henry, part-owner Tom Werner and general manager Theo Epstein to appear with him Sunday at a campaign stop in Manchester, N.H.

Schilling endorsed Bush in a TV interview Thursday, a day after the Red Sox won the franchise's first World Series in 86 years.

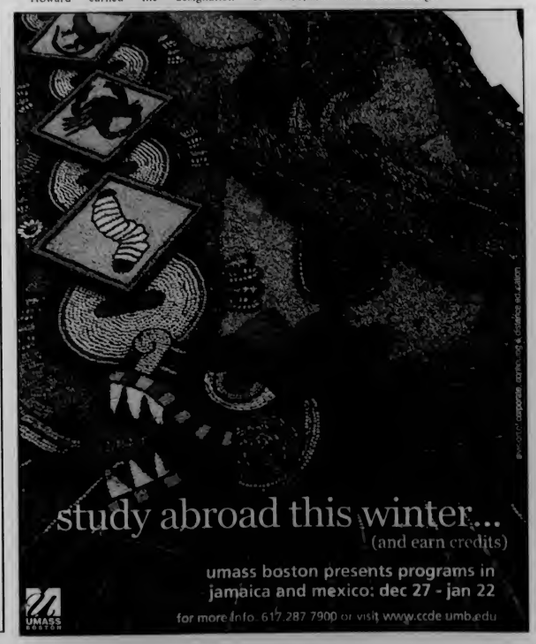
He won Game 2 of the World Series and Game 6 of the American League championship series with his ankle stitched to protect a torn sheath around a tendon. He's expected to undergo surgery this week.

-Associated Press

Award recipients served as professors of nursing

NURSING from page 1

of those!'"



Howard has been an Associate Professor at Northeastern University Graduate School of Nursing since 1989. She has worked in the Urgent Care Department at Vanguard Medical Associates in Wellesley since 1995.

Recognizing the need for licensed, advance-practice nurses to staff neonatal intensive care units in Boston-area hospitals, Howard established the first Neonatal Nurse Practitioner program in New England at Northeastern University in 1993.

Howard earned the designation of Distinguished Research Fellow in 2004 after securing over $2 million in grant funding for training and research programs and serving as project director of graduate nurse practitioner programs.

Howard's career began after graduating from UMass as a coronary nurse at Hartford Hospital. She was an assistant professor of nursing at Simmons College from 1980-1987. She also earned certifications as an Adult and Acute Care Nurse Practitioner.

She earned a bachelor's degree in nursing from UMass Amherst in 1977, a master's in nursing from Boston College in 1979, and a doctorate in 1986, also from Boston College.

C3 DAY • COMMONWEALTH COLLEGE • COMMUNITY DAY

Looking for one place to get information about scholarships, study abroad, internships, community service learning opportunities or what to do after ComCol-- graduate school, med school, law school, a job search*-- AND have some fun with fellow Commonwealth College students, staff and faculty?

Today is the last chance to RSVP for Dinner.

*Check out www.comcol.umass.edu/c3 for a complete listing of presenters, other information and to RSVP for dinner.

NOV.8 2004
C DAY: COMMONWEALTH COLLEGE COMMUNITY DAY

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2004

"Fight for your opinions, but do not believe that they contain the whole truth, or the only truth." -Charles A. Dana

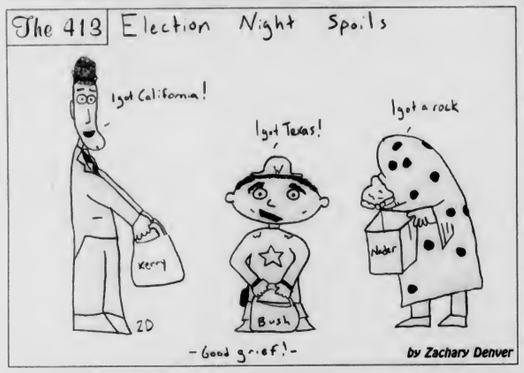
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Forget all the politics: every vote still counts

After the 2000 election, everyone claimed that the tight race proved that each and every vote counts, but so many people it proved just the opposite. To a large population of the country, only the votes in Florida really counted for anything.

The Electoral College is a complicated institution. While its purpose is to insure that the little states get attention, too, the side effect is that primarily liberal or conservative states are the ones that get neglected.

Massachusetts is inarguably one of the most liberal states in the country, and people seem so confident that it will always go democratic that they become apathetic to the voting process. They assume that regardless of their vote, the outcome will go a certain way. While that may tend to be true, what would happen if everyone thought that way? Remember that Massachusetts does have a Republican governor – anything can happen.



Today's election will probably be one of the closest in history, so regardless of the fact that you live in a traditionally liberal state, get to the polls and voice your opinion. When it comes down to the end tonight, every single vote is going to count.

It is also important to remember that the presidential seat is not the only one up for grabs. When you look at your ballot, you will see several other prominent positions up for reelection, including state representative for the Amherst district. Whoever holds that seat will be responsible for fighting for UMass' funding for the next two years.

If that isn't reason enough, how about proving to the politicians that this generation of youth will not be ignored as previous ones have been? For so many elections, the 18- to 25-year-old age bracket has respectfully abstained from participating in their government and as a result, our government no longer feels a need to represent our interests. People have been registering in record numbers this year, but being registered doesn't do any good if you don't make that final effort today.

It can be overwhelming to think of the rules and loopholes in the election process that could make your vote meaningless. But we at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian recommend that you don't think of it that way. Instead, choose to have faith in the system that was established so many years ago to ensure that we all have a say in selecting our leaders. Choose to believe that your vote may just be the one that decides it. Choose to make this election the one where the youth population regains its political power and most importantly, choose who you want representing you and your interests for the next few years. Your vote not only counts, but it's the only one that does.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Voters, what say you?

Yousef Munayyer

We are the most powerful nation on earth. We are the richest nation on earth. We have the capability to destroy almost any enemy. We are a nation at war. Today the future of the United States hangs in the balance of space and time like a Floridian chad, and the entire world is watching.

Surely, only American citizens will vote in the national election today, but the outcome of this election will affect billions around the world. The citizens of the United States, or at least its voting age population, will flip switches today to determine the future of people across the planet. The questions that remain are the outcome of, but perhaps more importantly, the degree to which we acknowledge this life-changing power.

Let there be no doubt that this election is for not only the leader of the United States of America, but also the leader of the most powerful hegemony on earth. Today, as the networks report predictions, voters trudge to their polling stations, and the candidates wait in suspense, the greatest audience will be watching from across oceans having no power to influence the outcome. The world will sit and wait idly as their future is determined for them by the election of the most powerful man on earth.

Four years is a long time, and eight years is even longer, but the burden of knowing that your actions will affect billions across the world makes the decision you make today of colossal importance. This is the only instance in history when an empire with such great influence stands on edge every four years. Make no mistake about living in an empire. Denial is the first part of the problem. Embrace the reality of living in the world's most dominant empire, and make a difference.

After four years of President Bush, who came to office under great controversy, the world is a more dangerous place. Our troops are deployed across the globe and are being reshuffled to adjust to the realities of war. More people across the world have learned to hate the United States because of its policies, and the most dangerous reality is that the world that hates the United States believes that we the people of the United States approve of the belligerent hegemony that this administration has brought on the world in the past four years.

Today is your chance, my chance and America's chance to prove to the world that they are mistaken. Or, similarly, prove to the world that they are absolutely right. Soon we will know what America thinks; we will know what the world thinks, and the players in the chaotic world of international politics will have geared up for another run.

The starving, dying and oppressed around the world wish they could vote in this election the same way we can. To ignore this awesome duty is to show the world that we do not care, not only about them, but also about ourselves.

Some may immediately respond to this by saying that we do not need to prove anything to the world, we do not need permission slips, and we do not need a global test. To those critics, the answer is simple: prove nothing to the world, but rather prove to ourselves that we can make positive steps toward securing our own future. There may be many that make the aforementioned point, the argument that the United States need not consider the rest of the world when making foreign policy decisions. The pundits may make this argument by persuading an ignorant population to believe this fallacy, but the reality is that even they do not believe it. The educated analysts do not believe it either.

There is no one on this earth with half a brain who can honestly argue that the United States can afford to act completely unilaterally. This attitude, as we have seen in the past years, gets us into trouble. Not to mention that this attitude is the first step to the classic and tragic flaw in every empire: overreach.

This is a foreign policy election, and the man elected today will be a foreign policy president for the next four years; that much is not at issue. What is at issue is how that policy will look.

So there are three possible outcomes as I see it. We the people can choose to abruptly shift the foreign policy of this country by expressing our disapproval of the Bush administration. We the people can vote for that very administration and show that we stand firm with their decisions of war and preemption. Or lastly, we the people can do nothing at all, ignore our civic duty, ignore our right to dissent and sit at home continuing the overall downward voting trend we have seen since the 1950s.

The greatest fear is that America chooses the last option. The starving, dying and oppressed around the world wish they could vote in this election the same way we can. To ignore this awesome duty is to show the world that we do not care, not only about them, but also about ourselves. Ignoring the polling stations shows the world that the greatest hegemony on earth is a loose cannon, erasing whatever dignity we had as a democracy that holds its leaders accountable for their actions and sending the world into a dark uncertainty that would make the past few years seem hopeful.

Today, America, the world is listening and is waiting to hear what we have to say. Do not make the mistake of being silent just because your life doesn't hang in the balance today; tomorrow it very well may.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian editor.

A great month remembered

Dan McDonnell

Wow. What a month. October 2004 is a month that I will never forget. The drama. The excitement. The heartbreak. The celebration. The severe beating that the student body's collective GPA took (personally I think every UMass student should have at least a full point added to their GPA). You just can't beat this. Not even the best Hollywood movie writers could have scripted this any better.

Then came the big one. It was the Red Sox going head-to-head with the Yankees for the American League Championship. It was a rematch from a year ago, and everyone remembered what happened in 2003. Would we see the same result?

Superstition made its way across Massachusetts. It spread like a forest fire. We stopped shaving and wore the same clothes every day. Some people even stopped showering. We lost the first three games of the series. Actually we didn't just lose, we were embarrassed. I even began to give up. There was no way in hell that we were coming back from a 3-0 deficit, especially against the Yankees. It was impossible.

I reluctantly watched Game 4, and for the first time in the playoffs, didn't have even a sip of beer. We won the game with a David Ortiz walk-off homerun. "Big Papi" came through in the clutch for the 3,545th time in his Red Sox tenure. Then the next night Papi did it again, clutch performance number 3,546.

I started to believe again. I thought it was over, but once again they sucked me back in. It's like the lyrics from the song Hotel California: "you can check out any time you like, but you can never leave." Over the next two days I had 38 heart attacks, two aneurysms, 14 strokes, and I threw up twice for no real reason.

Then we won Game 6. Like I said, I had stopped drinking after Game 3, and the Sox had won 3 in a row (here comes that superstition again). This meant that I had to watch Game 7, the most intense, dramatic, terrifying night of my life, without alcohol, all because of the chance that I might jinx it (talk about your signs to stop drinking). I sat at my buddies' house drinking Poland Springs and Starbucks coffee (not a good idea, because by the seventh inning I hit a coffee high combined with the nerves already going crazy. Let's just say I was a nervous wreck, and I was twitching a lot).

Maybe this team is just a "bunch of idiots." Have you honestly, though, ever been more proud of a bunch of idiots?

Long story short, we won Game 7, beat the Yankees, and were going to the World Series. As soon as the last out was made I poured my first beer in four days — the best tasting, most relaxing, most enjoyed beer I have ever had in my life. It tasted like a combination of sweetness, victory, satisfaction and Bud Light.

Everyone knows how it ended. The Red Sox won the World Series! The Curse was over. Everything was erased. Finally, there will be no more Babe Ruth references. Bucky Dent became just another ballplayer, the same with Aaron Boone. Bill Buckner can finally live a normal life. And the rest of Red Sox Nation can live a normal life. There's no more suffering. It's finally over. It all ended on the night of a lunar eclipse. What a metaphor. On the same night the light of the moon was eclipsed, 86 years worth of bad memories were also eclipsed.

Sox fans finally don't have to see any more negative clips during big games. Now we are going to see Curt Schilling pitching in Yankee Stadium wearing a bloody sock (that is going to go for at least $50,000 on eBay next month) with his ankle being held together by string and staples. We are going to see David Ortiz's walk-off hits on back-to-back nights in Boston. We'll see Pedro Martinez throwing like his arm had been soaked in holy water from Vatican City. We'll see Derek Lowe winning all three clinching games of the 2004 postseason after everyone had completely given up on him. This team made us all feel like we were a part of something special, and we definitely were. We witnessed history. Whether or not you're a sports fan, you understand what has happened.

Maybe this team is just a "bunch of idiots." Have you honestly, though, ever been more proud of a bunch of idiots? They're a bunch of guys that you just want to hang out with. Can't you just picture them hanging out at a college party? I can see Kevin Millar and Trot Nixon holding someone up for a keg stand, Jason Varitek and Johnny Damon funneling beers, and Pedro, Manny, and Ortiz sitting on the couch going through the old "puff, puff, pass" routine.

Years from now we are going to be able to say that we witnessed the first World Series win for the Red Sox in 86 years. We will be able to sit and tell our kids about how we saw the Sox end the Curse while we were at UMass. There's no better feeling in the world.

Dan McDonnell is a Collegian columnist.

Costumes raise questions

Stacy Kasdin

I've always loved Halloween. I'm an actress at heart, so I love the idea of getting dressed up and pretending to be someone else for a night. Over the years I've been everything from a mouse to a pumpkin to a clown to a witch to Little Red Riding Hood, and so many more I don't even remember them all. However, it seems that recently the whole concept of Halloween has been changed. People aren't dressing up like pumpkins and clowns anymore. Now everyone is dressing up like Playboy bunnies, naughty schoolgirls and French maids. It seems that Halloween has become simply an excuse to go out in public wearing as little as possible.

I went to a few Halloween stores in the mall to check out the costume selection and was overwhelmed by the amount of poly-vinyl halter-tops and mini-skirts being passed off as Halloween costumes. Isn't one of the main points of this holiday to be scary? Sure, a few places offered the typical Freddie and Jason costumes, but it was hard to find them hidden in the back behind racks and racks of barely-theres. I didn't witness it myself, but I heard there was even a girl on campus walking around in just her bra and underwear. She was supposed to be a Victoria's Secret model. 60-degree, rainy weather doesn't seem like the best environment to be walking in around naked, but I guess when you're on a college campus, health and safety aren't your main concerns.

Recently, the whole concept of Halloween has been changed ... It seems that Halloween has become simply an excuse to go out in public wearing as little as possible.

I actually spent my Halloween at a friend's house in a family housing community. I was pleased to see the true spirit of Halloween alive and well in the many children who came to trick or treat at his house in super hero, princess and animal costumes. I was even more pleasantly surprised when the majority of children took one piece of candy and politely thanked us and wished us a happy Halloween before going on their way.

It breaks my heart to think that these are the Playboy bunnies and pimps of 2017. I hope that prediction never comes true, but the few kids I saw trick or treating in mini-skirts claiming to be pop stars make me awfully worried. I fear that by that time the entire, original meaning of Halloween may have been forgotten. No one will have any idea that Halloween was originally a day of honoring one's ancestors. By then it may have even been declared National Nudist Appreciation Day.

Now honestly, I really don't care what people are wearing at their private parties in their own houses or dorm rooms. I would certainly never want to be in public in just my underwear, but if you do, that's your prerogative. What bothers me is when people are out in public wearing these next-to-nothing costumes because believe it or not, no matter how attractive you may think you are, or how attractive you may in fact be, some of us just don't want to see that. Underwear models are for catalogs. When they leave the studio they wear normal street clothes just like the rest of us. Furthermore, there are children living on this campus. Wear whatever you want in your rooms, but keep yourself covered on the way there.

I'm fairly surprised there was no sexual assault reported on campus over this weekend, or at least none that I'm aware of yet. I would imagine that an intoxicated man, or group of intoxicated men, might like nothing better than to harass a girl walking across campus in a tiny, little vinyl skirt. Besides, walking around in the cold rain of Saturday night couldn't have been very comfortable with nothing covering you. But then again, I guess it would give you that wet look that the Sports Illustrated swimsuit models have mastered so well, so it might be worth it in the long run, right? Save some money on hair gel.

In short, it definitely bothered me that the majority of people's costumes this Halloween included the words naughty, slutty or whore. I feel like this holiday has substantially lost its meaning, and that makes me really sad. Of course, I did get a somewhat sheltered view of the holiday, living on a college campus in the five-college area.

I just hope that the rest of the people in this country are keeping the Halloween spirit alive, tricking and treating, watching scary movies and bobbing for apples.

I hope that my friends and I were not the only ones that toasted our ancestors on this holiday weekend. I hope that in 2017 there are still people doing the same.

Stacy Kasdin is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

2, 2004

EVEN BOOK EPIC DRAWS TO A CLOSE

After 22 years, Stephen King concludes 'The Dark Tower' series

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

It has finally come to a close. Perhaps the greatest and most involving epic series of fiction of modern times has come to the clearing at the end of the path.

The technically retired master of horror Stephen King released his seventh and final installation in his "The Dark Tower Series," aptly entitled "The Dark Tower." The series that began over twenty years ago with "The Gunslinger," a western/science fiction/fantasy tale of a young man pursuing a wizard, across a vast and nearly lifeless desert, drew to a rather twisted and anticlimactic close this fall.

The seven part series followed the trail of Roland Deschain, the last of a profession known as Gunslingers: a mixture of diplomat, knight, emissary and cowboy, who just so happens to be the last remaining descendant of the mythical King Arthur. Over the first six novels the reader saw Roland draw allies from different points in time from a world that is very similar to our own. Allies who we as readers would come to love and at times despise.

Readers learned of Roland's past allies and how closely his new band of friends resembles his old one is constantly commented on within the text. Though his friends have changed, Roland's goal never wavers, he is hell bent on reaching the Dark Tower. The tower is essentially the center spindle upon which all of the multiple universes are stacked, much like a pack of CDRs with the plastic dowel in the center to hold them all in place.

He seeks the tower because his world and all the subsequent realities are in jeopardy and the tower itself is set to topple over unless someone ascends it and wills all of creation back to order from its pinnacle.

There is the recovered heroin addict, Edward Dean, from the '80s whom Roland is always reprimanding for being flippant and a bit disrespectful. There is Susanah Dean who married Eddie. Readers watched her character emerge as a fusion of two personalities that used to divide her mind into the highly educated but overly pathetic, Odetta Holmes and the bitchy cruel Detta Walker. Then there is Jake Chambers, plucked from New York in the '70s; he becomes the surrogate son of Roland. The final character of the main band or "ka-tet" as King calls them, is a creature called a billybumbler, visibly close to a mixture of small dog and raccoon, named Oy.

His limited ability to speak is first used as a comic note in the story but later turns out to be far more than just mimicry. By far one of King's most novel and innovative characters, Oy is as honorable and deadly as any of the other characters in the series, and proves to be a vital element in Roland reaching his ultimate goal.

With all of the background set and all but a few key characters introduced the seventh installation of the "Dark Tower Series" is a very swiftly moving novel that changes everything that King has established. Though it is riddled with action scenes and plot twists there are only a few points where King actually attempts to genuinely surprise the reader.

As is par for the course with this series "The Dark Tower" is filled with portrayals of epic gunfights, littered with foreshadowing and packed with characters and elements from Kings other works. In previous installations King brought in his villain of villains Randal Flagg, from such works as "The Stand" and "Eyes of the Dragon." He also brought in Father Pere Callahan from, "Salem's Lot" and most recently Ted Brautigan from "Hearts in Atlantis." Beyond this interweaving of his created worlds King brings a fictionalized version of himself into the story.

Some would baulk and taut King as a hack for putting himself into his own work and making himself such a powerful character, an avatar of the higher being that created everything, but he portrays himself as such a lousy individual the exercise seems more masochistic than narcissistic.

All of the books in the series have been littered with convenient coincidences that have saved the characters from certain peril, technological items that transported them to safety, mystical telepathic abilities that are reminiscent of those used in "The Shinning" and several incidences where it seemed like sheer luck that kept the characters alive. In "The Dark Tower" King puts a new level of aid in affect for his characters. He, as the character, who is writing the story as you are reading it, writes his characters notes and creates items of aid for them. In one scene in particular King writes a note to Susanah which reads, "Don't worry the deus ex machina is on its way."

The fact that he is very conscious of everything he has written in the book almost justifies all of the cheesy saves and blatantly unbelievable revelations his characters have. King moves this story forcefully towards its one and only possible ending, Roland's reaching The Dark Tower.

So with a forceful hand King drew to close his epic adventure that dwarfs so many other literary series in its size alone standing at over 6000 pages. It is a massive amalgamate of genres, characters and settings that some readers have made a part of their lives for more than two decades.

True to form though King supplies no happily-ever-after ending for this tale. Though he does warn readers, with a note from the author, that they should not read the final segment of the epilog unless they are ready to be outraged. In the last five pages Roland Deschain proclaims the names of all his fallen comrades and climbs the tower reaching its precipice thus ending the whole adventure on a tremendously bitter sweet note.

"The Dark Tower" may have been the conclusion to "The Dark Tower Series" but it may also stand as the last novel from the desk of one of contemporary literatures living legends. As the "Dark Tower" now makes its way to print for its paper back release in relative obscurity, one may rest assured that it is a series that will echo and possibly explode sometime in the future much like JRR Tolkien's "The Lord of the Rings" has in recent years.

TIES are new fashion hit

By Jean Patteson
The Orlando Sentinel

Want to get a guy riled up? Insult his taste in neckties.

We did that last year, when we suggested in a fashion column that clip-on ties are "tacky."

Boy, did that get readers' necks in a knot!

We heard from guys who love clip-ons. And we heard from guys who hate them–but defend the right of the convenience-conscious, fashion-challenged or klutzy to wear them.

The vehemence of the responses left no doubt: Whether they knot or clip their ties, men care about neckwear. Even those who have sworn off wearing ties have an opinion about them.

Now that fall is upon us, and summer's casual dress codes are going the way of autumn leaves, the time seems right to check on the evolving status of neckwear. Sales of men's ties are on the upswing, say trend-watchers. And women's ties, which pop up as a quirky accessory every few years, also are expected to be a popular item this fall.

Ties were the crown jewels in the men's power-dressing movement of the 1980s, says Jerry And-ersen, spokesman for the Men's Dress Fur-nishings Association, a trade group in New York.

But neckwear fell out of favor during the dress-down 1990s, he says. That's when Casual Friday morphed into Casual Everyday. When "business casual" was defined, debated and redefined. When even the most tradition-bound bankers and lawyers swapped their suits and ties for khakis and polo shirts.

Now the tide is turning.

"There's a return to dressed-up style, especially among younger customers," says Andersen. "We saw it first with the specialty-store customer, who spends more money on clothes and is more tuned in to fashion."

The first ripple of change came in 1999, when ABC-TV game-show host Regis Philbin scored a double-whammy. His "Who Wants to be a Millionaire" show was a huge hit–and so were the solid-colored, metallic ties he wore with his dark shirts. Men started buying dress shirts again, just so they could team them with "Regis ties."

But the dark, tone-on-tone look didn't last long. "Too dreary," says Andersen.

It is being replaced this fall by a flood of striking patterns and brilliant colors, including hot pink. Andersen expects these lively new looks to sweep even the most ardent no-neckwear advocates back into tie departments.

"Our neckwear business is up," says Craig DeLongy, an owner of John Craig clothiers in Winter Park, Fla. "I think we're on a run."

"There are men who love wearing neckwear," DeLongy explains. "They find adding a new tie to an old shirt is a great way to update their wardrobe. And the neckwear right now is irresistible."

Orlando, Fla., attorney David Paul is one of those men who are crazy about ties.

"If I really like a tie, I'll buy it," says Paul, 34. "I can spend $200 or more on a tie, which is completely irrational. But a really good tie is unique. It ties differently. It sets on you differently."

He is especially fond of seven-fold neckties by Robert Talbott, which he buys at Christopher Jude clothiers in Orlando for $210 a pop. Fashioned entirely by hand from a single piece of luxurious silk, the tie is folded seven times into itself. The volume and quality of the silk creates a substantial knot and exceptionally elegant drape.

A necktie "is one of those things you can wear and make a fashion statement without really doing a whole lot," he says. "Everybody notices your tie. Not everyone likes them, but everyone notices them."

Nothing kills an outfit like a bad tie, says Carson Kressley, one of the Fab Five hosts on Bravo's hit show "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy."

In his just-published style guide, "Off the Cuff" (Dutton), Kressley offers a couple of tie-buying tips:

"People ask how to find a good tie," he writes. "It's kind of like when you see a puppy at the animal shelter: When it's the right one, you'll know it."

When shopping for neckwear, "Give the tie a good feel," Kressley advises. "A good tie will have an inner construction that is actually tangible. If you took it apart, there would be something like a piece of mesh or screen that gives body to the structure. A bad tie is wimpy and soft."

The most useful tie knot is the four-in-hand, which works with all collar types, except the widest spread collar, he says. (Coachmen who drove a team of four horses, or four-in-hand, knotted their neckwear in this fashion, hence the name.)

Bow ties should not be worn with regular suits, he believes. That look is "just a little too Orville Redenbacher." And when worn with a tuxedo, they should be hand-tied.

Which brings us back to clip-on ties. Style gurus do not like them. But some guys appreciate the convenience of clip-ons, especially if medical conditions such as arthritis or dyslexia make knotting a tie painful or difficult. (JCPenney, Sears and Big & Tall Men's Wear are among the few stores that carry clip-on ties for adults.)

Men who work close to machinery with moving parts often wear clip-ons as a safety precaution. If the tie gets caught in the machinery, it pops off. The tie may get chewed up, but not the wearer.

Police officers also wear clip-ons, usually made from the same material and the same color as their shirts.

"If someone were to grab them by the tie, he couldn't swing them around or use it to choke them. The tie would simply come off," says Sgt. Brian Gilliam, public information officer for the Orlando Police Department.

If a police officer wears a regular wrap-and-knot tie with his uniform, it means just one thing, says Gilliam: "He's top brass, and he's in a formal setting."

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2005

The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST
will be offered on:

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8 @ 7pm in HASA 124
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9 @ 7 pm in HASA 124

This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112/113, College Writing.

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
· a grade dispute?
· teacher, roomate or job concerns?
· billing problems?
· harassment?
· ...or any other University related problem?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0847
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

New products in time for fall

By Kim Ossi
Knight Ridder

We know some ladies go to great lengths to beautify themselves. We aren't necessarily that type, especially if it involves creatively organizing teeny-tiny rhinestones on top of our nail polish. But we've seen some ladies who have had this done and it's quite impressive. Now you can try it for yourself with Nailene's Jewels & Gems Rhinestone Nail Art Kit.

We tried out the kit, which comes with 175 assorted rhinestones in a carrying case, an application tool and a top-coat polish. While tedious sounding, it's much easier than you may think.

The application tool is a true hairsaver (as in, you're not tearing it out in frustration!). One tip the box does not mention: Be sure to use regular, old-fashioned, slow-dry nail polish unless you're aiming to be the fastest rhinestone applier in the region. Also, thinking about the design and pulling all the necessary parts out right-side up before painting your nail saves precious surface time. Lastly, don't forget that top coat. That seals everything in and prevents it from chipping off as easily.

Get your kit at drugstores and places like Target and Wal-Mart for $5.99.

PSYCHIC SIM

If you've ever been on a road trip, you've surely heard the following question from someone in the car: "Is it an animal, vegetable, mineral or other?" Always a classic, 20 Questions goes high-tech for the 21st century.

The new chip-powered version of the game was created by Robin Burgener in 1988, with Burgener running the game from a 5 ¼-inch floppy disc. But you don't need to lug a PC around to play this game today. The artificial intelligence is available in a portable version called "20q."

It's hard to believe that a little ball could read your mind, but be prepared to be amazed. Try out the online version of the game at www.20q.net.

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?
Come to the MAJORS FAIR!
Wednesday, November 3, 2004
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS; representative from more than 90 departments & programs in one location.
Sponsored by Commonwealth College, Pre-Major Advising Services, & Career Services, with generous support from alumni and friends.

Hadley Sunoco
"Specializing In All Your Automotive Needs."
457 Russell St.
Hadley MA. 01035
(413) 253-4623
HadleySunoco@yahoo.com
Front Brake Special
*$69.95
*Includes Brake Pads. Labor and inspection of front rotors and calipers
Most Cars, Light Trucks & SUVS
GET A FREE TIRE ROTATION WITH ANY BRAKE JOB!!!!!!
Regular Price: 84.95
Offer valid with Collegian AD only. Not to be combined with any other Brake discounts or offers
Offer expires 11/01/04
SPECIAL
10% Student Discount On Labor With a Valid College ID
WE WILL BEAT ANY COMPETITOR'S WRITTEN ESTIMATE!!!!!
Come try us out today
FREE ESTIMATES!
Some of the many other services we specialize in are:
Brakes, tires, C.V. shafts, alternators, starters, belts, tune-ups, timing belts and exhaust repair.

HOMETOWN HIGH
· DO YOU WANT TO VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL, BUT CAN'T THINK OF A GOOD REASON WHY?
· ARE YOU AN OUTGOING PERSON WHO LIKES TO INTERACT WITH GROUPS OF PEOPLE?
· DO YOU WANT TO AFFECT THE LIVES OF OTHER PEOPLE IN A POSITIVE WAY?
· IF YOU ANSWERED YES, THEN UNDERGRADUATE ADMISSIONS HAS THE PERFECT OPPORTUNITY FOR YOU!
GET INVOLVED WITH HOMETOWN HIGH
•VISIT YOUR HIGH SCHOOL AND EXPRESS YOUR WISDOM GAINED AT UMASS AMHERST TO HIGH SCHOOL SENIORS LOOKING AT COLLEGES!
•TALK ABOUT YOUR PERSONAL EXPERIENCE, YOUR CONCERNS DURING YOUR FRESHMAN YEAR, AND SHARE WHY YOU DECIDED TO COME TO UMASS AMHERST!
ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS:
· FILL OUT AN INTEREST SHEET
· ATTEND A 1 & 1/2 HOUR TRAINING SESSION
· SET UP AN APPOINTMENT
· VISIT YOUR OLD HIGH SCHOOL
RECEIVE A FREE UMASS AMHERST T-SHIRT FOR YOUR EFFORTS
COME SEE US ON THE CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE TO SIGN UP!
MON 11/1–FRI 11/5
9:00 AM–3:00 PM
FOR MORE INFO EMAIL KERI AT KDEJONG@EDUC.UMASS.EDU OR CALL KERI OR SARAH AT THE ROBSHAM MEMORIAL CENTER FOR VISITORS–545-0306
UMASS AMHERST

A Floridian shows respect to the Sox

MCGOVERN from page 8

much to the chagrin of my New York friends. Then they went into the World Series and totally wiped the floor with the Cardinals who, up until then, were considered the best team in the land.

I couldn't believe what I was watching. At that place at that time, when I just happened to be 1,000 miles from where I grew up, at a school I didn't even intend on attending, the most publicized curse in athletics was being broken.

That night I went out to Southwest to revisit the front quad of my old building and saw something I never expected: thousands of drunk, happy Bostonians ... peaceful, happy, and in a state of collective shock like I've never seen.

I walked around and gave fake high fives, as I've grown accustomed to, so not to have any altercations. It was so unusual, yet so perfect for what just happened. All the chaos and build up that I anticipated was released in a long, fine flash. I looked around and saw 20-year-old men reduced to a 10-year-old's jubilance.

So now as I sit and reflect on a championship that means so little to me, it makes me happy to know that I was here in this tiny crevice in time. I was here to see the greatest athletic victory in the history of New England. As much as I never thought I'd ever say this to Red Sox fans, and as much as I may regret it later, here it goes.

Congratulations.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian Editor

Memoirs of a Sox fan

HALL from page 8

instead.

We still went crazy, though. Having been in Boston last week for the two wildest nights of the week (Friday and Saturday), the atmosphere was euphoric — in a speechless kind of way.

As the gang and I hopped from costume party to costume party dressed in normal clothing, you could sense it in everyone's eyes.

The next day at the parade, the people still lunged for their place along the fence at sunrise, still screamed to the high heavens when Big Papi hoisted the gold above his head. Curt Schilling, with crutch and spit cup in one hand, dip under his lip and free hand waving to the crowd, still took everyone's breath away with his unrivaled courage.

But it was a lot tamer than any of us could have predicted, and a lot of that has to do with the fact that there is this predestination enjoined with our boys from Yawkey Way. The Sox are supposed to fall disastrously at the most inconvenient times. It's their destiny, we've been told since birth.

So we accept it, and with that notion come the crazy thoughts. The anticipation had been so exaggerated that when the time finally came, we didn't know what to do. How are you supposed to prepare for something that hasn't happened in 86 years, by a team that has fallen short so often that you still don't believe it?

Should I sit here and let it sink in, letting all of my emotions overcome me without saying a word?

Whatever came to mind, we can all agree upon one thing: that regardless of our feelings in the aftermath of this great victory, we're all going to be sleeping a lot easier.

There is joy, for once, in Mudville, because Mighty Casey has gone yard.

Brendan Hall is a Collegian Columnist.

Roethlisberger gets off to a fast start

By Alan Robinson
Associated Press

PITTSBURGH (AP) – He wasn't yet born the last time the Pittsburgh Steelers won the Super Bowl. That isn't preventing rookie quarterback Ben Roethlisberger from bringing back the memories of the greatest times — and the greatest teams — in franchise history.

The Steelers are 6-1 after ending New England's 21-game winning streak with a dominating 34-20 victory Sunday in which Roethlisberger improved to 5-0 as a starter. In a fitting throwback to the days when the Steelers won four Super Bowls in six seasons, Roethlisberger is off to the best start by an NFL rookie quarterback since Pittsburgh's Mike Kruczek was 6-0 in 1976.

"We have a rookie quarterback who is playing tremendous," linebacker Joey Porter said.

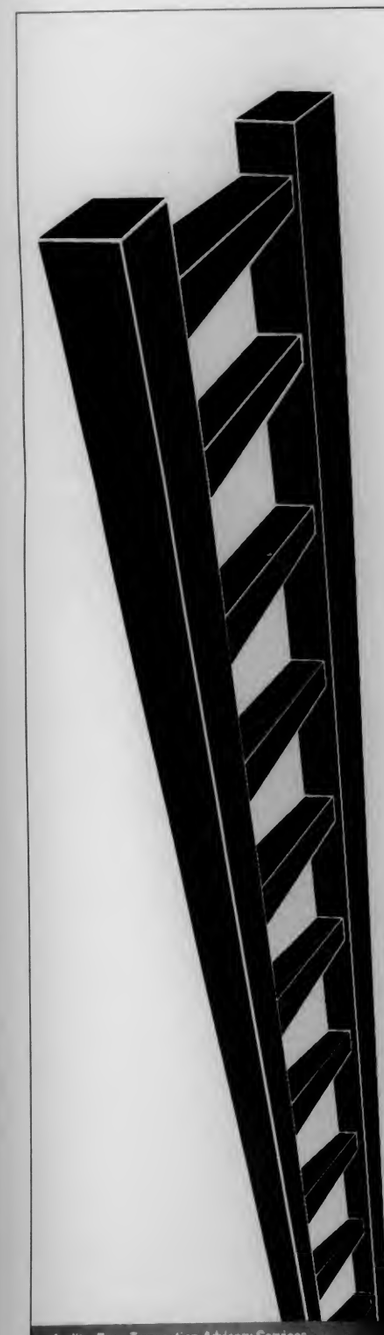
The Steelers need him to keep playing that well Sunday against the Philadelphia Eagles (7-0) as they try to accomplish something no NFL team has done so late in a season: beat undefeated teams in successive weeks.

Just playing unbeaten teams in consecutive games past the early weeks of a season is rare enough; it hasn't happened since the Detroit Lions lost twice to the undefeated Chicago Bears to close out the 1934 season. It also occurred in 1921, when Dayton played Akron (7-0-1) and Buffalo (7-0-2), and in 1920, when Canton met Buffalo (7-0) and Akron (6-0-1).

"Everybody's antennae across the country are starting to go up a little bit," wide receiver Plaxico Burress said, referring to the Steelers' new-found notoriety.

That's largely because of a 22-year-old quarterback who plays like he's much, much older. Because of Roethlisberger, the Steelers, an out-of-the-running 6-10 only a season ago, are hearing about all this ancient history:

—They are off to their best seven-game start in Bill Cowher's 13 seasons as coach; they've been 5-2 five times. It's also their best start since a franchise-best 7-0 in 1978, the season they won the third of their four Super Bowls.



—The Steelers have made the playoffs every other season they were 6-1 or better (1978, 1975, 1974, 1973) and won the Super Bowl three of those four seasons.

—Coincidentally or not, the Steelers will recognize the 25th anniversary of their last Super Bowl championship team by saluting the 1979 Steelers on Sunday. Hall of Famer Terry Bradshaw was the quarterback of that team, yet his 1970 rookie numbers (six touchdowns, 24 interceptions) can't compare to Roethlisberger's (70.1 completion percentage, a 104.7 passer rating, 9 touchdowns, four interceptions, one interception in his last 116 passes).

"We keep saying it over and over again: Let's not get too excited," Roethlisberger said. "We're just trying to keep our focus, keep our mind on the straight and narrow, and focus on Philadelphia."

With former Eagles running back Duce Staley coming off his fourth 100-yard game, it all adds up to arguably the biggest Eagles-Steelers game since 1947. Back then, the Eagles won 21-0 in Pittsburgh in a special Eastern Conference playoff game staged after the teams tied for the regular season title.

The only comparable regular season game since the teams moved into separate conferences in 1970 came in 1979, when the Eagles surprised the Steelers 17-14. The Steelers, who would go on to win the Super Bowl, were 4-0 at the time and the Eagles, who would lose in the Super Bowl a year later, were 3-1.

At Ernst & Young the climb starts here.

You've just completed four years of college and the last thing you want to do is end up in a mindless job. At Ernst & Young we challenge our employees from the start and then encourage them to grow throughout their career. We offer some of the best professional development programs in the country. And we've built an inclusive environment—one that Fortune® magazine has recognized as one of the "100 Best Companies To Work For" six years in a row. So if you're not interested in starting at the bottom, think about starting at one of the Top 100. ey.com/us/careers

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2004

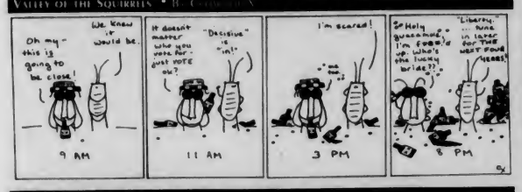
Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Find out how all your favorite

www.dailycollegian.com

fancy NAILS
Walk-ins Welcome
FREE French Manicure w/ full set or fill
Holiday Special
$2 OFF
w/ fell set or fill
with coupon only

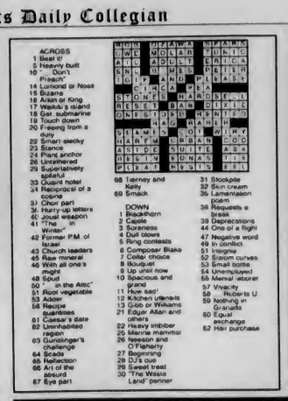


Leslie Hooper • [illegible]

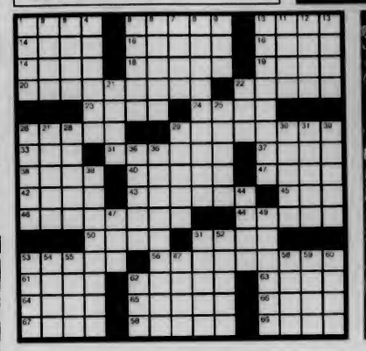
Over the Hedge • By T. Lewis

Valley of the Squirrels • By Connector

Franco the Clarinetting Navy Bean • By Ross Shafer



Out of My Head • By Scott Gwaltney



Quote of the Day

"Half of the American people never read a newspaper. Half never voted for president. One hopes it is the same half."

-Gore Vidal

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You need to actually focus while you're reading.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You're a little nervous today, but there is no need to be.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Watch out for something really bizarre today. You've never seen anything like it before.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Watch out for big-sized rocks. There is a good chance you will trip.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You need to start fixing that relationship. Apologize if necessary.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't forget to smile. Everybody likes to see you in a good mood.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will be stuck in the middle of something scandalous. Do what you know is right.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Look at the pretty leaves outside. Some of them are absolutely enormous.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You should dress up a little today. There is no special occasion, but it would be fun

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Try to take a breath while you're talking today.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Whatever you believe has the potential to come true. Don't give up just yet.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't pet the squirrel. He'll think you're trying to steal his nuts.

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE
Ask for Advertising @ 545-3500

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

Apartment for Rent

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January – May, r_korol@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

Auto for Sale

Chevrolet Malibu 2000 70,000 loaded, excellent condition $5,300 / best offer 413-687-4449

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

Employment

Driver Wanted 2 to 5 hours/week $15/hour plus mileage. Driving an elderly woman around 207-361-2695 agafool@aol.com

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

Instruction

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

Musicians

Seeking Trumpet or Saxaphone player to complete Jazz Group Trio. Ryan 413-221-7615

Roommate Wanted

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Services

Transcription Services Experienced, Fast, Reasonable rates Karen 413-834-2505

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Travel

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas, and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts Information/ Reservations 1-800-6484849 or www.ststravel.com

Travel

1SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

MONTREAL Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most Weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today

Travel

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PROMO Online
1-800-426-7710

Wanted

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Respect from the outside

Bob McGovern

Last Wednesday, in the comfort of my newly redecorated living room, a Mets fan, a Yankees fan, and myself (a Marlins fan) watched the end of one the most historical postseasons in baseball history.

Oddly enough, as Keith Foulke threw out Edgar Renteria at first, the three of us, who are usually quick to make a snide comment about the Sox, had one thing in common.

We were all shocked, into silence.

Four years ago I came to this University with no knowledge of "Red Sox Nation," or "The Evil Empire." I was just another Floridian looking to get away from home. Then, in a seemingly random World Series, the Yankees lost to the Diamondback, and all hell broke loose.

I watched the biggest gathering of youthful drunkenness my eyes had every seen. Fights, chants, fires, and riot police were all mixed into the quad right outside the door of my humble 22-story abode. I watched and thought to myself, "Wow, these kids are friggin' crazy."

I dealt with it over the next three years. I lived with Red Sox fans, listened to their obnoxious ramblings about this and that, and over time I began to detest a team that I had never cared about in the past.

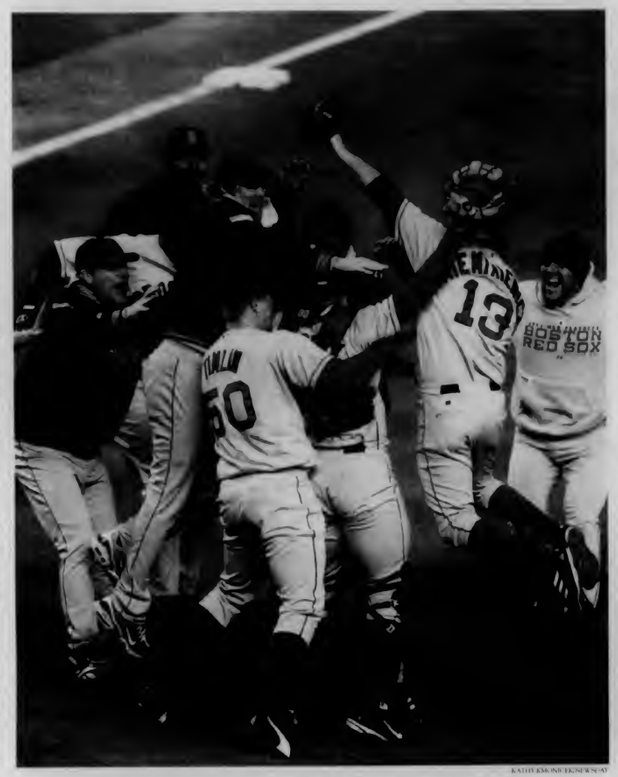
At a Red Sox game my sophomore year, I wore a Marlins hat, figuring it was fair game and no one would bother me. My girlfriend at the time and I sat in our seats and by the time you could say "1918" I had three of Boston's finest talking r-less trash about my sllly team from the south.

This, on top of every other drunk, angry fan I've come across during my time here, has left a bitter taste in my mouth. I was pulling for them to lose. I talked trash when my Marlins won their second World Series in 10 years, and I found myself finishing arguments with a numerical phrase that I never used in the past.

"Oh yea? Well how about 1918?"

This year was no different, just ask the one Red Sox fan that I currently live with. I just wanted this to be over, I couldn't stand another three-week Red Sox conversation that I was almost sure was going to end with an angry, angry riot.

They were down three games to the Yankees; it looked like another dose of the same old. My Mets fan roommate didn't care, the Yankees fan was happy, and the Red Sox fan, well he was pretty much going through the motions of being a Boston fan.



Up and down my buddy list, profiles were changing. People started replacing "We Believe," with, "Go Patriots," and it looked like alliances were changing with the seasons.

This wasn't everyone of course; there were still real Sox fans out there. There were fans that had the same away message up for weeks (For example, the prayer of the Red Sox fan which I'm sure you've seen), there were those that wore the same hat, and there were those that wouldn't go out, nor move from their normal seating position.

Then things switched, something very eerie started happening, and the Red Sox started winning.

Slowly they took four-straight from the Yankees,

See MCGOVERN on page 6

KATHY KMONICEK/NEWSWEEK

Boston Red Sox players celebrate their 10-3 victory over the New York Yankees in game 7 of the ALCS at Yankee Stadium on Oct. 20, 2004. The Red Sox went on to sweep the St. Louis Cardinals in the World Series.

Sox spurn celebration

We have all heard it at least everyday since our respective first days here at school.

"Dude, when the Sox win the series this place is burning down to the ground!"

"Forget UMass bro, the entire New England region will fall to ashes! It's gonna be totally sick!"

And here we are now, still standing here — still living, breathing organisms. We are still the same rabid fans we were before — still the same stark raving mad statisticians who've memorized every obscure fact about even the most meaningless player (for ladies, still the same free spirits who would "so wicked marry Kapler in a hahtbeat").

Brendan Hall

The towers are still in place. Tom Menino hasn't declared martial law. We haven't drugged ourselves to the grave. I haven't lit myself on fire. Some of us even went to class the day after.

The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse never rode through the night sky, followed by a Biblical storm, a great pilgrimage to the holy land. Gregorian chanting and a fire in the stratosphere like no other. Jesus never descended from the heavens to judge upon all thee and take those who hath remained holiest with him back to the clouds, while the rest of us burned. Satan never rose, laughed and spread his wings.

The sinners are still sinning. Bill Buckner still sleeps at night, but now he can get rid of the bulleiproof glass, barbed wire fencing and attack dogs.

Funny how 86 years puts maniacal thoughts in your head, making you go absolutely senile.

We were all expecting the worst. It was supposed to be a scene out of one's imagination, complete with an epic musical score. We were supposed to step out of the dark, dusty basement and into somebody else's wildest dream.

But we didn't.

For most of us that have been through all the heartbreaks; all the Buckners, Dents and Aaron "Public Enemy No. 2" Boones; all the tragic downfalls; all the annoying Yankee-gloating from fans who couldn't tell a baseball diamond from a sushi bar; there was a sense not of urgency, but of relief

See HALL on page 6

Minutemen in a familiar situation

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

On Friday, the Massachusetts men's soccer team (8-8-2, 5-3-2 A-10) will find out where they stand. A win will get them in the playoffs, and a loss will possibly knock them out.

They will be on the road facing nationally ranked (21st) Rhode Island (10-7-1, 5-4-1 Atlantic 10) and the nation's leading goal-scorer, Sasha Gotsmanov (19 goals). UMass is currently fourth in the conference entering Friday's regular season finale with the understanding that only the top six teams make the league tournament.

Duquesne, the team that beat the Minutemen 4-1 Sunday on the road, has clinched the league title with an 8-2-0 A-10 record. Dayton (7-3-0 A-10) and Temple (6-2-2 A-10) have clinched the second and third playoff spots respectively. George Washington and UMass are tied with 5-3-2 league records, and the Rams are one point behind the Minutemen at 5-4-1.

"We have known all along that every game is important, especially games in the league," UMass coach Sam Koch said. "We have played almost every team close this season and know we can be successful if we play the way we're capable of."

UMass has played in a school record of eight overtimes this season. They have gone 5-1-2 in those games and showed an amazing ability to maximize scoring chances in the final phase of games.

MATTHEW RUDSCOLIER/DC

Sophomore Michael Donnelly has been a defensive threat for the Minutemen this season.

Koch credits their overtime experience with being the key to their success in extended play. He believes that UMass doesn't feel added pressure to score in OT, so the team is able to stick to their game plan and not over-commit on the offensive end.

As a rule, UMass has spread the ball around on offense, with 14 players having tallied at least one point. Friday's win against St. Bonaventure was a perfect example, as four different players scored in a 4-0 Bonnie shutout.

But there are three players of special interest entering the playoffs. Junior captain Oral Bullen is certainly one. Bullen's goal on Friday was his team-leading ninth of the season. It also moved him up into a third-place tie for most goals in the Atlantic 10.

Unfortunately for the Minutemen, the only two players with more goals and points then Bullen are on Rhode Island. In Sunday's 2-1 loss to St. Bonaventure, Gotsmanov scored his nation-leading 19th goal of the season.

The senior has been virtually unstoppable and has 10 more goals than teammate Jeffrey Gonsalves, who is second in the A-10 in scoring.

Sophomore Robby Charest will also be looked upon to help catapult the Minutemen into the playoffs. He is second on the team for scoring with six goals and two assists.

With four goals and nine points, sophomore Richie Higa has come on strong as of late. Two weeks ago he was named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week after scoring a total of three goals in wins over Dayton (10/15) and Xavier (10/17).

At home versus Dayton, Higa scored the second goal to give UMass a 2-0 lead in the eventual 3-2, overtime win. Against Xavier, Higa scored a pair of goals — the game's first and the tying score with 16 seconds left in regulation to force overtime. Freshman Mike Mingione went on to score the golden goal to give the Maroon and White a 4-3 victory.

The stage for Friday's match is eerily reminiscent of last year's UMass/Rhode Island match. In an almost identical position to this year's squad, the Minutemen traveled to Rhode Island to face the Rams in their regular season finale.

Only able to record six shots, the Maroon and White were shutout by a score of 3-0 and missed making the conference playoffs by one game.

Soccer is an unpredictable game however; UMass won convincingly over St. Bonaventure on Friday, but the Bonnies came back to upset Rhode Island on Sunday.

XC places fifth in A-10

By Martha Powers
Collegian Staff

On Saturday, the Massachusetts men's cross country team finished fifth in the Atlantic 10 Championship out of 11 teams.

Finishing first for the Minutemen and 16th overall was Ryan Corbett. Andy McCarron was 24th, Paul Noone 30th, Ryan Durkin 37th, and Matt Klypka 39th. Rounding out the top seven for UMass was Matt Clark in 39th and Mark Kenwood 51st.

Dominating the meet was LaSalle, followed by Duquesne, Xavier, and Richmond respectively. UMass was right behind Richmond, finishing just three points away from fourth place.

It was a big day for the Massachusetts freshmen. Three of the top seven Minutemen runners, Durkin, Klypka, and Kenwood, are freshmen.

"Having freshmen who step up when an upperclassman is having an off day is what makes the team better," Corbett said.

The race was held in Pittsburgh on a challenging course.

"The first two miles or so are downhill. The tough part about the course is that it is an out-and-back loop, so on the way back you hit long, gradual hills," Corbett said.

Even though the Minutemen had been looking to place better, the team is positive about the results.

"I think the team ran well; we took another step. When we woke up the day of the race, everyone was upbeat and ready to go. The guys had smiles on their faces and they were focused; that is huge step for a team to make," Corbett said. "We were really excited, and maybe we went out a little too fast, but we tried something new."

"Every time we race this year, we finish the meet and our first reaction is 'we can do better.'" Corbett said. "This team has a lot of room for improvement and we know we have room for improvement; we know what we can be. It's learning as you go."

UMass has two weeks before its biggest meet of the season, the NCAA Regional Championship. "This team is prepared for what it is we're going to go after. We just have to make one more step, and it is mental," Corbett said. "The physical part is there, we just have to add that one mental part."

"We've been working towards this all season, and there's not much you can do now. You can do workouts here and there, kind of to shake out your legs and loosen them up," Corbett said. "We do what Coach calls 'sharpening workouts' to get our legs feeling fresh for when we hit that line in two weeks."

Boone relieved with Sox win

CLEVELAND (AP) – Aaron Boone is happy he no longer has to feel the wrath of Boston Red Sox fans.

"I'm kind of off the hook," he said Monday. "I've run into some people from Boston who have said, 'Hey, it's all right now.' I've been amazed at how many people love the Red Sox or the Yankees — or hate them — there's not much in between there."

Boone, whose 11th-inning homer in Game 7 of the 2003 AL Championship Series put the New York Yankees past the rival Red Sox and into the World Series, hasn't played since injuring his left knee in a pickup basketball game last January.

"In a lot of ways, it has been a very long year," he said.

Boone said that at the time he didn't realize his $5.75 million, one-year contract with New York prohibited him from playing basketball. He got only 30 days termination pay — $417,553 — from the Yankees. He then signed a two-year contract with Cleveland as a free agent in June with the hope of joining the Indians in August, but needed another knee operation.

"People are under the misconception this was a setback, but it was totally unrelated," the third baseman said. "This was something I felt over time. I felt it when I played in Cincinnati before I even went to the Yankees [in 2003]. They said I could try to play through it or get it fixed and be 100 percent ready for spring training in 2005."

Boone said it would be special to win with the team that last won a World Series in 1948 — the year his late grandfather Ray was an Indians rookie. Ray Boone, the senior member of the first three-generation major league family, died Oct. 17 at age 81.

"Gramps was a baseball junkie," Aaron Boone said. "He passed on so much to all of us from a baseball standpoint."

- Associated Press

Dresden Dolls: Frightful Halloween Delight

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

WEDNESDAY THURSDAY FRIDAY

• High: 55 • Low: 28 | • High: 57 • Low: 38 | • High: 52 • Low: 38

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

A reflection on the Red Sox World Series

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 41

BUCKEYE STATE BATTLE

Election too close to call

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush and challenger John Kerry sweated out a tension-packed conclusion to the race between an embattled incumbent and a Democrat who questioned the war he waged in Iraq. Ohio loomed as this year's Florida, the decisive state, with Kerry's options dwindling.

Bush won Florida, the state he nailed down four years ago only after a 36-day recount and Supreme Court decision. Kerry hung on to the Democratic prize of Pennsylvania, but had precious few places to pick up electoral votes that went Republican in 2000. He took New Hampshire from Bush, but it has only four electoral votes. That leaves just Ohio and Nevada.

"I believe I will win, thank you very much," Bush said while awaiting results from the hard-fought Midwest and Florida with his family and dog Barney.

Kerry, a four-term Massachusetts senator, allowed himself to muse about the problems he might face in the White House, including a soaring deficit and a war that has claimed more than 1,100 lives.

"I'm not pretending to anybody that it's a bed of roses," the Democrat said.

The Electoral College count was excruciating: With 270 votes needed, Bush won 27 states for 249 votes. Kerry won 16 states plus the District of Columbia for 221 votes.

In the early hours of Wednesday, with several battleground states still unsettled, Kerry was still on the hunt for electoral votes the GOP won four years ago. The states' won by Democrat Al Gore in 2000 are worth just 260 votes this year due to redistricting — 10 short of the coveted number.

Kerry could pick that up plus some in Ohio with 20 electoral votes. Without the Buckeye state, he could only turn to Nevada (5 votes).

A 269-269 tie would throw the presidential race to the House.

Sen. Byron Dorgan, D-N.D.: "Obviously the presidential race is going to keep us up most of the night."

Bush lost Pennsylvania, a major blow after courting voters with steel tariffs and 44 visits in a bid to steal it from the Democrats. The loss raises the stakes in Florida and Ohio, both won by Bush in 2000.

Independent candidate Ralph Nader could play the spoiler in Nevada.

Republicans moved toward increasing their majority in the Senate, winning Democratic seats in Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina and Louisiana while Democrats took GOP-held seats in Colorado and Illinois. State Sen. Barack Obama won easily in Illinois; in January, he will be the third black U.S. senator since Reconstruction.

Republicans extended their decade-long hold on the House for another two years, knocking off four veteran Texas Democrats.

Alongside the White House and congressional races, a full roster of propositions and local offices kept voters busy. But all eyes were focused on Kerry's bid to make Bush the first president voted out of office in the midst of a war.

"I've given it my all," Bush said after voting in a firehouse at Crawford, Texas, hoping to avoid being the first wartime president bounced from office.

The race showed signs of being as close as 2000, when Bush lost the popular vote to Gore but won the Electoral College count and the presidency after a ruling by the Supreme Court gave him Florida. The incumbent hoped to avoid the fate of his father — former President George H.W. Bush, who was bounced by voters in 1992 after waging war against Iraq and overseeing an ailing economy.

Braced for a replay of the 2000 recount, legions of lawyers and election-rights activists watched for signs of voter fraud or disenfranchisement. New lawsuits sought clearer standards to evaluate provisional ballots in Ohio and a longer deadline to count absentee ballots in Florida.

While complaints were widespread, they weren't significant. "So far, it's no big, but lots of littles," said elections expert Doug Chapin.

Voters were torn over the presidential race, in ways all too familiar.

Exit polls suggested that slightly more voters trusted Bush to handle terrorism than Kerry. A majority said the country was safer from terrorism than four years ago, and they overwhelmingly backed Bush.

Among those who said they were very worried about a terrorist strike, Kerry held a slight lead. That was a troubling sign for the incumbent as was this: A majority of voters said things were going poorly in Iraq, and they heavily favored Kerry.

With nearly 1 million jobs lost in Bush's term, Kerry was favored by eight of 10 voters who listed the economy as a top issue.

President George W. Bush visited Florida for some last minute campaining yesterday, a key swing state which he later won.

Senator and presidential hopeful John Kerry gives a thumbs up to his Massachusetts supporters last night.

Students encounter voting problems

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

AMHERST — Several students who flocked to the town polls to vote in yesterday's Presidential election were turned away from area precincts because there was no record that they were registered, despite claims that they had registered on campus just last month.

Problems with voting occurred all over the country; people complaining about long lines, not being informed of having the proper identification and not having documentation that they were actually registered.

Hundreds of students registered to vote this past September after a number of local campaigns worked to get people informed and registered at the University of Massachusetts community.

Pre Katti, an 18-year-old chemical engineering major, was disappointed to find out that she was not allowed to vote.

"It just doesn't make sense," she said, "this is my first time that I was able to vote and I always just wanted to vote."

Katti, along with friend Kristin Lindquist, 18, who was also turned away from the polls, was equally as frustrated. The two thought that they had registered during one of the voting campaigns set up outside of the Worcester Dining Commons, but, to their dismay, there was no record of them ever registering.

"It's like they were all gung-ho for it," Lindquist said, "and now we find out that we're not registered? It is just hypocritical."

Lindquist also mentioned that she wanted some way to check or confirm that she indeed was registered, but was unsuccessful. The two were advised to fill out provisional ballots. These ballots were sent to the Town Clerk after the polls closed and if indeed the students were registered then their votes would count; however, if they were not registered, their votes would not immediately be counted, but may be tallied at a later date if the race was too close to call.

Students were not the only ones who anticipated problems with the polling station; volunteers manning the polls and answering

See STUDENTS page 2

Long lines in Boston don't stop voters from casting ballots

KRISTEN GRILLEY/COLLEGIAN

Boston voters waited in lines all day yesterday to cast their vote at a local Y.M.C.A.

By Joseph Padell
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON — While some Boston voters fear yesterday's election will mirrior what happened in 2000, many are prepared to endure legal challenges by both parties to ensure accuracy and fairness.

"I hope it's more decisive [than 2000]," said Michael Gillespie while waiting in a 45-minute line to vote. A registered democrat, Gillespie believes both political parties should take legal action if the result is not decisive.

"If there's legitimate issues to bring to the courts they should be pursued," he said.

Voters said yesterday that they had good reason to believe that this year's presidential election could be just as close as that of 2000. A Gallup pole released on Monday showed a statistical dead heat in five "battleground" states. Ohio, Iowa, Pennsylvania, New Mexico, and Florida were all too close to call on Monday, according to Gallup. Controversy in any one of these states could produce a repeat of the month long legal battle for the White House that occurred four years ago.

Not everyone thought the election will be that close. Susan Ellerin, a registered democrat voting at the Benjamin Franklin Institute of Technology on Tremont Street, believes an influx of new voters and increased turnout makes any poll suspect.

"The high turnout may belie many of the assumptions made in the models the polls are based on," she said.

Ellerin thinks the outcome will be decisive but if she is wrong, "and there is reason to suspect foul play, I hope we will tolerate the ambiguity to ensure that the outcome was truly voted."

Alex Nelson, a registered republican waiting to vote at the same polling station as Ellerin, said he also believes the election will be decisive but for different reasons.

"At the end of the day people are going to vote security," Nelson said, "rather than a change of leadership in the middle of a war."

Nelson said he wants the outcome to be fair and accurate, but he also wants the candidates to act responsibly following the election.

"I really hope, no matter who it is [losing the election], they capitulate graciously and accept defeat," he said.

Newly registered voters stand to figure prominently in this election. In February 2004 Massachusetts had just over 3.9 million registered voters, according to a report from the office of the Massachusetts Secretary of State. That number rose to just under 4.1 million by October, a 4.9 percent increase.

Alexander Albregts lived in Europe before moving to America

See BOSTON on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugalski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
COPIES EDITOR Alyson Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marrelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kuggans
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginie Frecaut
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Busack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Jake O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Erika Lovley
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrew Roberts
COPY EDITOR
Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Molly Eggleston
PRODUCTION STAFF
Lauren Egavian, Melody Natal

Write for NEWS!

Due to a reporting error in Tuesday's homecoming article, Patrick Arsenault is the president of Alph Phi Omega, not the Bonfire Committee.

Michelle Price is the treasureer of Alph Phi Omega and is not on the Bonfire Committee.

Additionaly due to a reporting error, the UMass junior mentioned is Zach Oelschlegel not Josh Oelschlegel.

Many Bostonians voted for change in the White House several years ago and voted in his first election in the U.S. this year. A registered democrat, he hopes the outcome won't be that close.

BOSTON from page 1

"I heard the polls they use are based on registered voters the last time around," he said, believing this may produce faulty results.

Kim Szeto, another first time voter and a student at Wheaton College, believes the election will be even closer than in 2000. Waiting in a 55-minute line to vote at the Y.M.C.A on Berkeley Street, Szeto avoided the question of whether or not the losing candidate should pursue legal action in the event of a close election.

"That's gonna be tough depending on who's losing," Szeto, a registered democrat, said.

The majority of voters at the polling stations on Tremont and Berkeley streets were democrats or independents, not surprising in a state where republicans make up less than 15 percent of the electorate, according to registration data released by the Massachusetts Secretary of State's office.

Democrats and independents at these polling stations tended to focus on domestic issues like Supreme Court appointments, health insurance, and some mentioned restoring America's international standing, as reasons for voting.

The few republicans at these polling places focused almost exclusively on the war on terror and national security as their reasons for voting.

"I'm here to vote for Mr. Bush," Katherine Ryan, a registered republican, said. "Terrorism is number one."

Alex Nelson defended Kerry as, "line guy and clear on what he has to offer," but says he is living in the wrong world fighting the wrong war.

"Bush recognizes that Pakistan and Egypt are now more important to our future than France and Germany," he said.

Democrats waiting to vote in Boston don't see Bush's foreign policy in quite the same light.

"America has ostracized itself with this current administration," Alexander Albregts said.

The polls close in Boston at 8 p.m. but are required by federal law to remain open until everyone in line to vote at 8 p.m. has done so. The line to vote at the Benjamin Franklin Institute of Technology on Tremont Street was close to two hours yesterday morning, and was slightly less than an hour long at 1 p.m. At the Y.M.C.A on Berkeley Street people were waiting about 45 minutes to vote at 2 p.m.

KEITH PARKS/COLLEGIAN

Hundreds of Bostonians gathered to cast their votes yesterday for the 2004 Presidential Election.

Student voters turned away

STUDENTS from page 1

any questions, encountered "dozens of students" with this same problem.

"I am really cross with a professor and UMass," volunteer Rose Quinton said, "they were going around telling kids to fill out forms and then not sending them — it's terrible."

Quinton estimated that nearly two-dozen students came in to the Wilwood Elementary School (precinct nine) complaining of the same problem.

At the Lutheran Church on North Pleasant St., volunteer Shirley Brown felt optimistic about the turnout, but also felt sorry for the few students who could not participate.

"The students are beautiful," she said, "their demeanor is so positive but hopefully their provisional ballots will be authorized and their votes can count."

Brown estimated that over one-dozen students experienced the same problem.

Although several students were affected by missing registrations, many people actually were successful, speedy and happy upon visiting their precincts.

"I am willing to stand in line longer to have more people voting — it's nice to see so many young people voting," Paul Peelle said, a 31-year resident of Amherst who gladly waited in the line that stretched out the door to cast his ballot.

Volunteer Carol Birtwhistle at the Bang's Community Center (precincts 4,5 & 10) was ecstatic about the number of voters who had already turned out to vote by 3:30 p.m.

"One-third of the precinct has voted approximately 600 voters," she said.

Today's Majors Fair to showcase UMass academic programs

By Nicholas Belanger
Collegian Staff

Tonight in the Student Union Ballroom pre-major advising, career services and the Commonwealth College will be co-hosting the annual major's fair.

The traditionally busy event runs from 6 to 8 p.m. and is open to anyone interested in any of the Universities' dozens of majors. Each major will have a table, with a faculty member of the department willing to answer any and all questions.

Undergraduate advisors as well as a number of graduate and undergraduate students will also be available to answer questions and speak with students about various departments, as well as the tremendous amounts of academic opportunity at the University of Massachusetts.

The event is geared to undeclared students in an attempt to provide an informal setting to point students in an academic direction as early as possible. Pre major advisor Susan Machala is one of the individuals responsible for organizing the major's fair. Machalu who was named outstanding academic advisor of the year in 2003, has worked tirelessly to put together this event and she said that she hopes students take advantage of having close to one hundred different majors being represented under one roof.

"I often find that freshmen are shy to see an advisor. At a fair it's more informal students can browse, and the faculty becomes more approachable."

Machala also stressed the importance of attempting to "look at what else is at the University." She said that she feels that one of the biggest advantages to such large school is the "academic smorgasbord" that lies before students.

"Students who attend this [fair] will be more aware of resources at the university," Machala's office as well as pre major advising is located in 615 Goodell, and she always encourages students to meet with her, especially with class scheduling for the spring semester rapidly approaching.

Career services is also co-sponsoring tonight's event. Career services, located on the fifth floor Goodell helps prepare students for a career plan. Advisors usually help students second semester freshmen and sophomores understand what to study to be successful.

Associate director for career planning Ginger Goldsbury also partook in the daunting task of organizing this evening's event. She encourages those attending to "have some idea where you want to go, plan ahead and know who you want to talk to before coming," Goldsbury also talked about the importance of choosing the right major.

"It's important for students to choose and be successful in a major where there is a real interest, It's important to get involved right away." She went on to say, "Students need a sense of what they like, so they can enjoy the course they are taking." Information regarding courses in specific majors will be available at the fair.

Peter Woodson advisor for Commonwealth college will also be attending the fair, information about the honors program will be represented, as well as information regarding the five college, and international programs.

In addition there will be tables set up with scholarship merit information, research opportunities as well community service learning.

Woodson feels that this event is not only beneficial to undeclared students, but it also "It is a good place to go for information to supplement a major." He also recommended coming with questions, ask about internships and "Try to look at the overall scope of a major."

Tonight's major fair should be an exciting event with something for everyone. This is the only time where every major (from Aerospace studies to Women's studies will be represented in one room.

Advisors urge students to come be part of an exciting event tonight 6 to 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

www.dailycollegian.com

Still in Pain? Try the alternative that's Natural, Healthy, and Smart!
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle St - Amherst (next to Bertucci's)
549-1500

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2005
The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on:
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8 @ 7pm in HASA 124
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9 @ 7 pm in HASA 124
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Engwrit 112/113, College Writing.
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
• a grade dispute?
• teacher, roomate or job concerns?
• billing problems?
• harassment?
• ...or any other University related problem?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
523 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0847
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Time To Put On Your Party Shoes At Northampton Bowl
Where you can party and Still hear a pin drop!
College Rock N Bowl
Every Thursday night...9pm-Midnight
Includes: Unlimited Bowling * Shoe Rental * Music & Laser Lights
Full Service Lounge * Snack Bar & Gameroom
OPEN LANES EVERY DAY CALL FOR AVAILABILITY
Northampton Bowl
525 Pleasant Street
Northampton 584-4830

THE HARP
"Come party like you're Irish!"
NEW!! Wireless Internet Do your homework...surf the net...WIRELESS INTERNET!!!!
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
Amherst's last great neighborhood pub!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900
Check out our new covered deck!
www.theharp.net
MON. - "Bad Karaoke" with Paulie V
TUES. - Our Famous Trivia Night
WED. - Reggae Night (NO COVER)
TH. - Special Brew (NO COVER)
FRI. - Traditional Irish Sesiun
SAT. - Live Music (all for bands) (NO COVER)
Molsen Pints $2.00
Pitcher $6.50
VOTED BEST NEIGHBORHOOD PUB EAST OF THE RIVER

NEED HELP FINDING A MAJOR?
Come to the MAJORS FAIR!
Wednesday, November 3, 2004
6:00 - 8:00 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom
Don't miss this unique opportunity to explore the impressive range of majors & resources available at UMASS; representative from more than 90 departments & programs in one location.
Sponsored by Commonwealth College, Pre-Major Advising Services, & Career Services, with generous support from alumni and friends.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2004

"Fight for your opinions, but do not believe that they contain the whole truth, or the only truth." Charles A. Dana

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cosby scholarship may change UMass image

Comedian Bill Cosby performed at the Mullins Center on Friday, October 29, as part of homecoming activities. Earlier in the day, University of Massachusetts officials announced the creation of the Cosby Commonwealth Challenge Fund, a program that will help to recruit and assist students from elementary, middle and high schools in both Springfield and Holyoke who are looking to attend the University.

Not only will many underprivileged students benefit from the program, but the University will benefit as well. Such a vast program, which is said to have already raised $1.5 million to go towards scholarship funds, will shine a positive light on the University when it needs it the most.

This idea was best described by university provost and Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Charlena M. Seymour, who said that the program will, "bring attention to the University in a very positive way."

"Bill Cosby is one of our most famous alumni, and he is helping create a program that allows him to exert a positive influence on both the University and the students who will come here to improve their education," said Seymour. Hopefully this program will be the first step in creating a positive image for UMass.

The several disturbances following the success of the Red Sox in the recent playoffs were just the latest in a series of events that gives UMass a bad name. Dozens of people were arrested on at least three separate nights, and some reports had the number of arrests on campus surpassing the number of arrests in the city of Boston.

Earlier in the year, photographs depicting Student Government officials posing besides Ku Klux Klan caricatures surfaced and led to a firestorm of controversy and racial accusations.

The only reason to bring up these past Incidents is to point out an alarming trend, which is that too often UMass is put into the national media for the wrong reason. In reality, there are countless reasons why UMass would be recognized on a national scale, and only a few of these reasons are negative. This institution boasts some of the most qualified and successful faculty members of any college or university, there are award winning athletic teams, state-of-the-art scientific breakthroughs being made and numerous cultural and artistic groups to enjoy.

Why then do the negative reasons end up being the ones that get publicized? This is not an easy question to answer. By their very nature, acts of violence or racism make for sexier, more sensational news. And when negative things do happen on campus, they are at such a high level that they have to be covered. This still doesn't change the fact that UMass has so much to offer, and so many reasons to be displayed positively in the news.

The new scholarship program started by Bill Cosby has a great deal of potential, and is off to a great start with the money initially raised. With any luck, the Cosby Commonwealth Challenge Fund will begin a new trend, one that finds UMass in the news for the right reasons.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Bill and Cliff: one and the same?

S.J. Port

First, I must thank Bill Cosby for the years he has dedicated to the educational development of American youth and for his unparalleled donation of celebrity support to the University of Massachusetts. Unfortunately, now I must admonish Cosby for his unexpected, veiled stereotyping of women during his performance Friday night at the Mullins Center.

When the announcement arrived that Bill Cosby was "coming home" to UMass, my roommate and I, both long-time fans, rushed down to the Mullins' Center box office and eagerly handed over two $10 bills for tickets.

"The Cosby Show" taught me, and continues in re-run form to teach me. The series, which ran from 1984 to 1992, is one of only a handful of sitcoms that have ever meant anything to me. Cosby endowed his scripted family with many of the morals my own father tried to instill in me about truth telling, respecting yourself as well as the rights of others, and, of course, doing one's homework.

Cosby's sitcom wife, Attorney Clair Olivia Hanks Huxtable, played by Phylicia Rashad, remains my ideal mother, wife and professional. With dignity and elegance, she maintained a potent femininity despite her accomplishments in the masculine profession of law. A modern woman, she worked in and out of the home, managing to have both a successful professional life and a satisfying private life. "Cliff" Huxtable and their five children respected her intellect as well as looked to her for comfort and care. Through all of this, Claire maintained humor, charm and a whit not often found on the faces of exhausted working mothers.

This success was made possible in a large part due to the dedication of her partner and, of course, her status as a fictional character. Ironically, her character was created and written largely by Cosby and named in part for his real-life wife, Camille Hanks Cosby.

The four Huxtable daughters told disrespectful beau's to get lost, attended institutions of higher education, told the truth, put family before extracurricular activities and managed careers. The sitcom's writers respected these women's characters, and so did the audience.

The Cosby women are exemplary role models — developed by a man I believed to be an equally fabulous role model, both as a man and as a man who respected women.

Friday night when Cosby sauntered on stage in a personalized UMass sweat suit and baseball cap, my roommate, her boyfriend and I stood and cheered. Smiles broke out across our faces as we settled in for a night of laughs.

But when Cosby, began to stereotype women, characterizing them as little more than domineering variables in men's lives, I stopped laughing. So did my roommate, who looked at me with an equally disappointed face and said she "didn't get it." By "it," she meant, she didn't understand why Cosby would tell the stories that he did. His stories seemed irrelevant to our situation as students in a time of political crisis, irrelevant to our roles today, and incorrect in their assumption of the female's role in parenting, dating and marriage.

Cosby portrayed his mother as a woman of her generation, but also as a foolish lady prone to overreaction and eager to castigate both her husband and son. Cosby's perpetuations of the patriarchal perception of women, as irrational shrews is just the kind of stereotype that women like Claire Huxtable continue to fight in the masculine workplace.

When Cosby, began to stereotype women, characterizing them as little more than domineering variables in men's lives, I stopped laughing

In regards to dating, Cosby gave sound advice that contained the message to stop when a women says "stop." Unfortunately, Cosby suggested through tone and context that women today were not saying "stop" the way women once did. While this may or may not be true, it does imply that men have been and continue to be the sexually assertive gender.

This implication generates two more problematic messages: women should not be sexually assertive and women are responsible for the morality of our species (since morality and sexual assertiveness are inextricably intertwined in American culture). It may seem trite, but it has been said that we've yet to accept a female presidential candidate because as a society we continue to hold women to higher moral standards, which no candidate could uphold. Nor do we like to see women condemned as immoral or evil: just look at the disparity between the numbers of women in prison to the number of men.

Cosby's Illustration of men who get into trouble with their respective female companions for doing little more than breathing at times, did make me chuckle. However, the stereotype of the overly attentive or controlling wife made me feel sorry for both the subservient old men and their wives.

Supposing I marry and raise children, caring for my husband as if he were a dependent child is certainly not something I look forward to, especially after the other children have "left home." Nor do I know many elder husbands who have given up such autonomy to their wives: could anyone respect a spouse that lay down and rolled over like the trained pet Cosby suggested in his stories? It certainly wouldn't fly in my household.

And as if the divorce and absentee-father rates weren't high enough, Cosby proceeded to make women out to be the bad guys in marriage by warning the young men in attendance that, "once you get married, the female is no longer playing around." Cosby claimed this warning label was not meant to dissuade young men from marriage but merely suggest what they are, "getting themselves into."

As if women don't carry enough with our double burden of nurturer and professional, now we've been portrayed by one of America's father figures as the bad guy. Perhaps Cosby should have realized by the ripe old age of 67 that women "aren't playing" because they're too busy caring for the additional child in the home: their husbands. That is if their husband or the father of their children has taken responsibility and stuck around. Cosby's depiction of irrational controlling women gives young men the idea that this is how all women are, and, consequently gives men the excuse to leave, fool around or be less than equal partners.

At its peek "The Cosby Show" had an estimated 70 million viewers. Thankfully, not as many folks were in attendance for Cosby's performance last Friday. The images of women that Cosby projected to the largely undergraduate audience in attendance were archaic and sexist. It may have been unconscious — I hope it was — but it was certainly unfortunate. These images were not relevant or appropriate suggestions of the roles the women of our generation will play in life.

This is undoubtedly an unpopular stance. I've taken it because I expect more from Bill Cosby — just as he expects us to know, "more than 74 percent of our stuff."

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

Trapped inside the emotional cage of political correctness

Jake Monte

In today's society, most everyone has a built in self-monitoring device called "political correctness." It stems from the atrocities committed upon minorities throughout history. It is like a badge of shame, a constant reminder that we owe something to those who have been less fortunate.

Each and every person lives with the watchful eye in the back of his or her head, and this eye directs us towards being kind and generous towards minorities who have been wronged by white males and females. African Americans, homosexuals, Jews and Asians are some of the people we feel obligated to.

But when, if ever, does this self-monitoring device hurt us? Where does one draw the line between political correctness and the other desires that pull us in the opposite direction?

As a young freshman, I was approached by a man on the street who said he liked to meet people who he thought were interesting and to go out for coffee with them. He was friendly and charming so I acquiesced. Soon enough, I began to form a friendship with him. I realized quickly that he wanted to be more than just friends, but I was trapped.

The political correctness was like a cage and I couldn't break free of it. I kept telling myself I didn't want to be homophobic. I wanted to tell him off. I hated him for putting me in such an uncomfortable position and I hated him for not understanding that I was straight. He seemed to want to believe that everyone was bi-sexual, as if this simple piece of information one obtains in an anthropology course is enough to convince anyone to have homosexual sex with you.

The problem was that I wasn't sure what I owed him. And that was the only accurate word: owe. I felt the watchful eye in the back of my head. It was giving me a stern glare, and I kept thinking that I simply didn't know how to get along with a gay person. I had never had a homosexual friend before.

I had hardly ever known any homosexuals in my entire life. I felt I owed him an explanation for not wanting to be around him. But what could I say?

He wasn't coming onto me. He was just making me uncomfortable. And I wasn't going to turn bisexual just because some anthropology teacher said it was a basic fact of human nature.

Sexuality may be something that is determined by society (or it may not be) but my sexuality had already been decided long ago.

In truth, I hated him, but my feelings seemed irrational and unjust. So I continued to hang out with him, and I felt more and more frustrated with my situation by the days. What did I owe him? A polite thanks, but no thanks? Did I owe him an explanation or should I simply have told him I was going on vacation and never spoken to him again? Would that even work?

Our emotions are too important to be ignored. It is imperative that one breaks free of the cage that is political correctness.

He had so many arguments against it and he was the type of person who wouldn't take no for an answer. He would evade it. He would say he was sorry that he was making me feel uncomfortable, and continue down the same path he was on. Did I owe it to my own feelings to cuss him out over the phone? Where does one draw the line, political correctness or natural impulse?

I tried political correctness at first. But just as I suspected he said he just wanted to be friends. The cage grew smaller and smaller. Finally, one night on the phone I told him I didn't like being around him and I didn't want to be friends anymore.

"So you don't call me and I won't call you," I said. He told me that was fine and called me a week later to try to explain that he didn't mean any offense. This time the anger was so intense that I went with it. I told him off in the most disrespectful way possible, and like that, the relationship was over. I was left feeling so much anger I couldn't express. I felt violated, emotionally raped. But I learned something about what I owe people.

I realized I don't owe people anything. I'm not homophobic, a racist, or a sexist, and it is possible to kill that watchful eye in the back of one's head by simply affirming to oneself that one is not prejudice. Our emotions are too important to be ignored. It is imperative that one breaks free of the cage that is political correctness. That watchful eye gets us in trouble. If one treats everyone with respect, one's boundaries will invariably be violated.

This is something one learns with age. But if you meet a homosexual who makes you feel uncomfortable for whatever reason, you may have to decide between your emotions and political correctness.

Choose your emotions. In today's society, all we have are our feelings and our own personal truth to make our decisions with. Everything else is a form of imprisonment. Break out of your cage and see how much better freedom feels.

Jake Monte is a Collegian columnist.

Words are louder.
Write for EdOp.
Be heard.

The rich keep getting richer

David Lewis

The old saying, "the rich get richer and the poor get poorer" has never been more true than it is today in the United States. Even before the economic recession of 2001, the gap between the rich and the poor was wider than it has been since 1929, and steadily increasing. By 2000, the top one percent of the population was richer than the bottom 40 percent combined. Since 2001, the rich have continued to profit from tax breaks and corporate welfare, while the poor have experienced a dramatic loss of jobs and public funding.

If your family income is under $71,000 per year, then you are in the 80 percent of the population that has experienced no significant economic gain in the past 25 years. From 1979-2000, the lower half of the population experienced a very slight growth of 13 percent to bring them up to an average $21,000 income.

Meanwhile, by 2000 the top one percent of taxpayers averaged over $850,000 income, which had tripled since 1979. The lowest 20 percent of the population still average under $10,000 income with little change, while the top 20 percent has almost doubled from $82,000 in 1979 to $144,000 in 2002. The gap between the wages of a high school graduate and a college graduate has tripled. Wages for high school grads and dropouts have both fallen, while wages for college grads have risen. (All figures adjusted for inflation.)

One can argue that these are just numbers. But the 2.7 million jobs that were lost over the past four years are more than just numbers. For the record number 1.6 million Americans who filed for bankruptcy in 2003, these numbers are signs of a declining quality of life in this country. They reflect the reality that the interests of large corporations and the very small wealthy elite outweigh those of the vast majority of American people.

Whether under Bush or Kerry, we must demand that the government represents all Americans, not just those who can afford the $30,000 per plate campaign fundraising dinners.

President Bush has stated that the economy is strong and growing. It is true that the economy is growing, but only for the very rich. The only evidence of a strong economy is increases in corporate profits and figures of total wealth that hide the reality that the actual gains are only going to a tiny percentage of people. If the economy is so strong, then the American people would not be losing their livelihoods in record numbers.

In an era of growing economic uncertainty for American workers, it is no accident the rich have prospered. The idea behind graded, or "progressive," taxation is that the rich have greater income and can afford to contribute more, so they should be taxed at a higher rate. But there has been a conservative shift away from progressive taxation that has allowed the rich not only to get richer, but also to pay lower taxes along the way.

From 1979 to 2000, the top one percent paid 3.8 percent less total taxes (a large amount of money when you deal in billions of dollars). By contrast, tax rates for the poorest 20 percent fell only 1.6 percent. Bush's tax cuts have also heavily favored the rich, at a time when the national debt has skyrocketed and social services have been drastically cut.

The federal government has been helping the rich to get richer in other ways. "Corporate welfare" or subsidies have also been continually increasing. The Cato Institute, a conservative watchdog organization, projected corporate subsidies at $87 billion for the 2005 fiscal year. One has to question the fairness of giving corporations $87 billion of taxpayer money, compared to $64 billion for public education. Better public education is by far the most proven way to create jobs.

The job market has been rapidly changing in the US. There is a shortage of highly skilled workers (college grads) and an abundance of unskilled laborers. College grads make up about one fourth of the work force. Even college grads are having difficulty finding jobs that fit their skills and qualifications. But for the remaining 75 percent of the population, many people feel lucky to have a job at all.

A major factor contributing to the recent loss of 2.7 million jobs is the "outsourcing" of jobs by big companies. "Down and out" has a distinctive meaning for those Americans who are losing their jobs to downsizing and outsourcing. All over America, companies increase their profit margins by shutting down their US factories and building new ones abroad. Building factories in less developed countries allows these corporations access to cheap labor and freedom from environmental regulations.

The Bush administration has effectively lowered the standard of living for 80 percent of Americans. Bush tells us stories of how the economy is growing while privately patting the backs of corporate CEO's and stockholders.

Whether under Bush or Kerry, we must demand that the government represents all Americans, not just those who can afford the $30,000 per plate campaign fundraising dinners. The people who have been hit hardest by the lagging economy are the unemployed, the growing underclass and workers oppressed by an unlivable minimum wage. But the middle class has also been inflicted by the problems of an economic policy that caters to the wealthy. We cannot allow the rich to get richer by degrading our society's infrastructure and trampling on our lives.

David Lewis is a Collegian columnist.

I am a Republican, not a Nazi

Ben Duffy

This summer, I had the pleasure of exercising my political freedoms in Manhattan. When the Republican National Convention came to New York City, I knew that there would be a massive anti-war protest, and I wanted to be part of the action. I knew that I would never forgive myself if I sat home and watched it all on TV.

I didn't go to protest the war, however. I went with a small but growing group of right wing activists known as Protest Warriors. The group specializes in infiltrating large anti-war protests with signs that mock the opposition. One sign showed a picture of an assault-rifle toting Che Guevara and the words "War is Not the Answer! Unless You're a Socialist Guerilla."

Some might call Protest Warriors crazy, and I'm inclined to agree. I questioned my own sanity when I first infiltrated a demonstration of approximately 200,000 vehement protesters with only the protection of a handful of allies. But I did it anyway, and I must say that democracy is a rush.

I was pushed and shoved a few times. A few of my fellow Protest Warriors were spat upon and had their signs ripped away from them, and one group was even pepper-sprayed by some teenage anarchists. But for the most part, the abuse thrown at us was nonviolent.

The bulk of the insults involved accusations of Nazism or fascism. Within the first 30 seconds of entering the march, an older gentleman pointed to our group and announced the arrival of the Hitler Youth. Another guy mocked us with a Nazi salute, and third man bellowed repeatedly that, "Protest Warriors are right wing fascists!"

I paused to debate with a self-proclaimed Jew who hardly waited two minutes before he played his trump card — the ever so witty "Nazi" epithet.

Lucky for me, there were three practicing Jews among the Protest Warriors, and one of them (wearing a yarmulke) came over and set the man straight. Without missing a beat, the man chastised my fellow Protest Warrior for cooperating with Nazi thugs such as myself.

I didn't let any of it phase me because I know that I am not a Nazi. I wasn't going to let some stranger on the street convince me that I was indeed a Nazi. I dismissed these insults as the last resort of people with no rational arguments.

Just recently, I began to wonder what the modern Nazi and White Power movement thinks about President Bush and the war in Iraq. If the self-righteous protesters I met in New York were correct, then the Nazis of this world would fully support their new fuehrer, George W. Bush, and his blitzkrieg through the Muslim world. After looking into it, I found quite the opposite. In fact, when the neo-Nazis speak, they sound a heck of a lot like the anti-war protesters themselves. I couldn't be entirely sure if some of the quotes I was reading were written by a skinhead thug or a Moveon.org contributor.

It is totally absurd to point to a Protest Warrior, or any unabashed supporter of the Iraq war, and call him a Nazi.

On the website of the (Nazi) National Socialist Movement, www.nsm88.com, I found the following quote, accompanied by a photo of flag-draped coffins:

"Do not waste our time on National Television with your false 'patriotism,' 'weapons of Mass Destruction' lies, and your fake alligator tears. No one is falling for your Jewish lead and inspired reasoning for conducting an illegal war against a once sovereign "Nation! BUSH, CHENEY, POWELL, SHARON, and BLAIR. The true Axis of Evil."

On www.Stormfront.org, a white pride site that boasts of town hall meetings with David Duke every Sunday, I found this quote from a man calling himself "Long County Rebel":

"Damn you George Bush, and particularly, damn your puppeteers. Damn the ones who caused our suffering of Sept. 11, then caused others to suffer this [Iraq war], and will cause more suffering in the future, by all of us."

Truth be told, most Nazi sites I found weren't too concerned with the war in Iraq. Most mentioned it only briefly, as proof that Jews run the world. Only the previously mentioned (Nazi) National Socialist Movement website had a significant amount of propaganda aimed at the Iraq war, although many featured political cartoons unfavorable to bumbling Bush. Try as I might though, I couldn't find a single site that supported the war in any way.

Perhaps you're thinking that I'm accusing every single anti-war protester of being a Nazi. As despicable as I might find them, I wouldn't make that accusation. People can agree on the same thing for very different reasons.

What I am saying is that it is totally absurd to point to a Protest Warrior, or any unabashed supporter of the Iraq war, and call him a Nazi. The Nazis are on the other side, I am proud to say. I would suggest to the numerous protesters who impugned me personally, or those who on this campus who engage in the same activity, that they should do their homework the next time they call someone a Nazi.

Ben Duffy is a Collegian columnist.

College of disenfranchisement

Andrew Freeman

I can't remember exactly when I learned that our government wasn't the perfect democracy that youthful minds are encouraged to envision. The Founding Fathers of our country didn't want "one man, one vote," which obviously (to them at least) would have led to disastrous, uneducated mob rule, so they structured a multi-tiered government. The House of Representatives was chosen through direct elections by white, propertied, male citizens; the Senate was elected by state legislatures, and the Electoral College, a body of wise and disinterested men, would choose the President.

Gradually the whole system was democratized: the vote was first given to poor citizens, then to African-American males and ultimately to women, although it took longer for voting rights to be guaranteed. Eventually the Constitution was amended so that the Senate would be chosen by direct election, rather than by state legislatures. After this arduous democratic revolution, only one institution remained unreformed — the Electoral College.

The Electoral College essentially reduces the presidential race to a conflict over states: whoever wins a state wins all of its electoral votes (usually), and these votes are apportioned on the basis of congressional representation.

Each state has an electoral vote for each senator and congressman, meaning that smaller states have more electoral representation for their population. This creates situations in which the president loses the popular vote but wins in the Electoral College, most notably four years ago, but also in 1876 and 1888.

Moreover, because of the winner-take-all nature of Electoral College, minority party voters are effectively disenfranchised. Republicans in Massachusetts might as well have voted for the Democrat, since the majority of the state's voters will vote that way, and the electors would likely follow.

Also, the electors — the individuals who actually cast the electoral votes — are often free to ignore the popular results, although 24 states have penalties if they do so (including Massachusetts). There have been 156 of these "faithless electors" over the course of American history, the most recent of which came in 2000, when Elector Barbara Lett-Simmons of the District of Columbia abstained from voting to protest her district's lack of congressional representation.

Our current system privileges the voters of a small handful of states, and effectively disenfranchises the rest.

Finally, if neither candidate wins 270 Electoral votes, the requirement for victory, then the House of Representatives decides the president, with each state getting one vote.

There have been attempts at eliminating the Electoral College, but none have succeeded. Any lasting change in the system would require a constitutional amendment, which usually requires widespread dissatisfaction and strong movements to effect changes. But the removal of this system is unquestionably in America's best interests.

Without the Electoral College, every citizen's vote would be equally worthwhile, and equally desirable. Under our current system, over 30 states are solidly in the camp of one of the major parties — accordingly the major candidates avoid these states, except for the purposes of fundraising.

Moreover, only a few of the "swing" states could go either way. As a result, here in Massachusetts there are no ads on local television networks for either candidate, while Ohioans are bombarded incessantly with political messages. Is Ohio (or Florida or Iowa or New Hampshire) inherently better than Massachusetts (or Texas or California)? Do its undecided voters deserve greater scrutiny than those in decided states?

It is only because of the Electoral College that states are prioritized this way. Voting is most valuable, and most rewarding, when it is clear that the outcome of one's vote matters, but our current system privileges the voters of a small handful of states, and effectively disenfranchises the rest.

Eliminating the Electoral College in favor of a direct presidential election could have some negative consequences, including a major increase in campaign spending, as candidates seek to reach all voters, and a rise in "dirty tricks" nationwide rather than simply in Florida or other swing states.

However, it would be the correct thing to do, as each vote would be equally valuable and there would be no possibility of the second most popular candidate being elected, let alone the election being thrown to the House of Representatives.

Sadly, for all the complaints about the Electoral College, there has been little movement to replace it. After all the progress our country has made in casting off its eighteenth century shackles, it would be a shame to halt at the highest office in the land.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

Blink and you might miss it

Bob McGovern

Fast food, Fast Pass, fast lane and so on.

Americans love quickness. We love things that are easy, fast and right there for our enjoyment. When things are slow and tempt the demons of our three-second attention span, we get bored, shrug it off and, in many cases, change the channel.

So it's no surprise to me that America is finally embracing the one sport that adheres to our collective case of A.D.D. It's the sport that gives us basketball-like scores, in basketball arenas, with the bone-jarring tackles that evoke the slap-your-buddy-on-the back feeling months before the first snap of the NFL.

Ah yes, the Arena Football League.

Last summer, the AFL had it's crowning achievement. In front of over 17 thousand fans at the America West Arena in Phoenix, NBC broadcasted the highest rated Arena Bowl in the 18-year history of the league.

One must wonder why NBC would buy the rights to a league that has more no-names than the Tampa Bay Devil Rays farm system. How could NBC really think this thing would work while baseball, football, hockey and basketball are in the midst of summer conversation?

Just ask the two team competing in Arena Bowl XVIII, the San Jose SaberCats and the Arizona Rattlers. The two teams battled in the highest scoring Arena Bowl ever, with the final score at 69-62 in favor of the visiting SaberCats.

That's right. 131 points, in a football game.

So there's the catch right off the bat. You can sit down in front of the television and at any given minute see a touchdown. It's this consistent scoring that keeps people interested in the game. I guarantee if you polled all the viewers who watched this game, or any given AFL contest, you would get a similar response:

"Oh yea that was an awesome game, this one guy dove in the end zone and got hit by this other guy. He knocked him against the padding, it was awesome."

So where does this impersonal strive for entertainment stem from? It seems that Americans are not able to simply enjoy a game for the game itself. There needs to be fireworks and consistent action. If it's not a live highlight reel, no one cares.

Maybe it's just the nature of the beast. Perhaps the American sports fan is just not capable of sitting down and watching a whole hockey, soccer, or most recently, a baseball game. There isn't enough scoring, and strategy is not entertaining enough to sustain viewers.

I believe it's a combination of conveniences that keeps us changing the channels, looking for a touchdown, home run, or goal to pacify our athletic palate. The main convenience is that of ESPN, the monster that digests all sports and then regurgitates it in quick and sexy little blips that show only the exciting parts of every game.

Don't get me wrong, I'm not knocking ESPN, in fact I'm just as guilty as every other Joe and Sally American who gets their sporting news from this sports mega-station. It's just so easy. Why would you watch a whole game when you could see all the "cool" stuff in less than 30 seconds?

The only problem is, as we watch the highlights of the day pass by in another telecast of Sportscenter, we begin to lose the relationship we're supposed to have with our teams and players. To be honest, we're also losing the connection with the sports themselves.

I used to be interested in hockey; I would follow it all the way through the playoffs. I knew the best players, the best teams, and what trades were going to go down. If you are an avid watcher of Sportscenter, you almost forget that there is a hockey season.

Yes, they put a cool goal in the top 10 plays, but there is no in depth coverage. Basketball dominates the headlines and transactions in other sports even push hockey down a notch on the athletic Varna system.

It seems that Americans are not able to simply enjoy a game for the game itself. There needs to be fireworks and consistent action.

The same goes for soccer, which anywhere north, south, east or west of America is the biggest sport. All that "The Leader in Sports" provides is coverage on David Beckham, the figurehead of soccer around the world. We don't get to see the great teams of the world; instead we are exposed to poor MLS soccer highlights and the occasional Beckham goal.

But those are sports where there is more anticipation than action, and Americans don't care enough to look any deeper than the half hour with Stuart Scott. It's an unfortunate reality of the American fan; it's the unfortunate reality of American culture.

There is no altering a collective mindset. I know that I can always see, "what's important," by flipping to ESPN and I'm not going to change that. I like seeing a combined 15 touchdown passes in a game (see: box score from the Arena Bowl), and I like the lights, music and fireworks that accompany almost any athletic event.

I have to admit though, I miss sitting down and watching a whole game. I miss having a knowledgeable relationship with the athletes who give their all to entertain us.

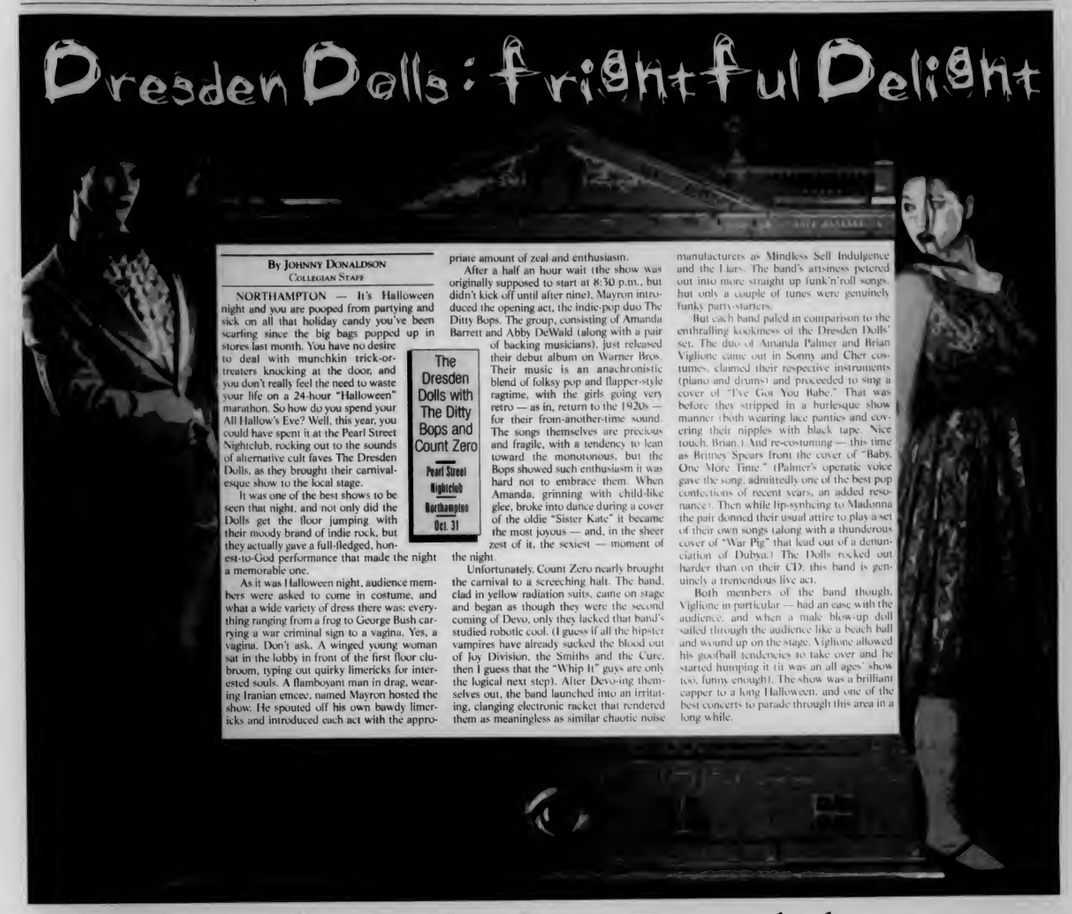
And when it's all said and done, I think I'll miss everything I missed when I selected to hastily change the channel.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian editor.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699



Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dresden Dolls: frightful Delight

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

NORTHAMPTON — It's Halloween night and you are pooped from partying and sick on all that holiday candy you've been scarfing since the big bags popped up in stores last month. You have no desire to deal with munchkin trick-or-treaters knocking at the door, and you don't really feel the need to waste your life on a 24-hour "Halloween" marathon. So how do you spend your All Hallow's Eve? Well, this year, you could have spent it at the Pearl Street Nightclub, rocking out to the sounds of alternative cult faves The Dresden Dolls, as they brought their carnival-esque show to the local stage.

The Dresden Dolls with The Ditty Bops and Count Zero
Pearl Street Nightclub
Northampton
Oct. 31

It was one of the best shows to be seen that night, and not only did the Dolls get the floor jumping with their moody brand of indie rock, but they actually gave a full-fledged, honest-to-God performance that made the night a memorable one.

As it was Halloween night, audience members were asked to come in costume, and what a wide variety of dress there was: everything ranging from a frog to George Bush carrying a war criminal sign to a vagina. Yes, a vagina. Don't ask. A winged young woman sat in the lobby in front of the first floor clubroom, typing out quirky limericks for interested souls. A flamboyant man in drag, wearing Iranian emcee, named Mayron hosted the show. He spouted off his own bawdy limericks and introduced each act with the appropriate amount of zeal and enthusiasm.

After a half an hour wait (the show was originally supposed to start at 8:30 p.m., but didn't kick off until after nine), Mayron introduced the opening act, the indie-pop duo The Ditty Bops. The group, consisting of Amanda Barrett and Abby DeWald (along with a pair of backing musicians), just released their debut album on Warner Bros. Their music is an anachronistic blend of folksy pop and flapper-style ragtime, with the girls going very retro — as in, return to the 1920s — for their from-another-time sound. The songs themselves are precious and fragile, with a tendency to lean toward the monotonous, but the Bops showed such enthusiasm it was hard not to embrace them. When Amanda, grinning with child-like glee, broke into dance during a cover of the oldie "Sister Kate" it became the most joyous — and, in the sheer zest of it, the sexiest — moment of the night.

Unfortunately, Count Zero nearly brought the carnival to a screeching halt. The band, clad in yellow radiation suits, came on stage and began as though they were the second coming of Devo, only they lacked that band's studied robotic cool. (I guess if all the hipster vampires have already sucked the blood out of Joy Division, the Smiths and the Cure, then I guess that the "Whip It" guys are only the logical next step). After Devo-ing themselves out, the band launched into an irritating, clanging electronic racket that rendered them as meaningless as similar chaotic noise manufacturers as Mindless Self Indulgence and the Liars. The band's artsiness petered out into more straight up funk'n'roll songs, but only a couple of tunes were genuinely funky party-starters.

But each band paled in comparison to the enthralling kookiness of the Dresden Dolls' set. The duo of Amanda Palmer and Brian Viglione came out in Sonny and Cher costumes, claimed their respective instruments (piano and drums) and proceeded to sing a cover of "I've Got You Babe." That was before they stripped in a burlesque show manner (both wearing lace panties and covering their nipples with black tape. Nice touch, Brian.) And re-costuming — this time as Britney Spears from the cover of "Baby, One More Time." (Palmer's operatic voice gave the song, admittedly one of the best pop confections of recent years, an added resonance). Then while lip-synching to Madonna the pair donned their usual attire to play a set of their own songs (along with a thunderous cover of "War Pig" that lead out of a denunciation of Dubya.) The Dolls rocked out harder than on their CD; this band is genuinely a tremendous live act.

Both members of the band though, Viglione in particular — had an ease with the audience, and when a male blow-up doll sailed through the audience like a beach ball and wound up on the stage, Viglione allowed his goofball tendencies to take over and he started humping it (it was an all ages' show too, funny enough). The show was a brilliant capper to a long Halloween, and one of the best concerts to parade through this area in a long while.

Alternative rockers Further Seems Forever lack uniqueness

By JOHNNY DONALDSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It isn't uncommon for a band — whether up and coming or long established — to go through major personnel overhauls. Drummers, bassists, and guitarists — they come and go, until the right alchemical combo is formed at the right time. Changing your lead singer is a different business all together. The vocalist is the voice and, usually, the face of your band. If a band can't find the right vocalist, then a band can't find its center.

Further Seems Forever 'Hide Nothing'
Tooth and Nail

Post-hardcore, emo-tinged weepers Further Seems Forever have yet to find that center. The group is on their third vocalist in as many albums, with Jon Bunch, formerly of major label causalities Sense Field at the helm.

They began with a young, heavily tattooed, sensitive boy named Chris Carraba — who left and later became part of a little act called Dashboard Confessional. Later they moved on to Jason Gleason, who left when the Carraba comparisons became too much. Now they're on to Bunch, but his arrival manages to erase the bands original identity. FSF now sounds less like FSF and more like the new Sense Field album.

"How To Start A Fire," the second album and the first to earn the band any kind of media profile, wasn't a great album — it was a promising work-in-progress by a band still trying to get their footing in the emocore underground — but it had its fair share of hooks.

"The Sound," in particular, had the kind of naggingly insistent hooks that remain lodged in your brain for weeks. There's nothing on "Hide Nothing," the new follow-up and the first record to feature Bunch, which has a similar memorable appeal. It's hopeful, anthemia and optimistic, but it tends to drift form the mind even as you listen to it.

Does it have anything to do with Bunch replacing Gleason? Neither are particularly memorable frontmen, and I don't mean that in a bad way, it's just that both willingly surrender to the music rather than ego or personality: it's just that Gleason's voice had a grittier timbre compared to Bunch's smooth, slightly high pitched voice. Gleason had the yelp that, though an emo cliché, is as much an identifiable trait of the genre as spiky hair is to punk. Bunch's velvety vocals act like sandpaper — they rub the edges off the bands filting assault.

Or maybe it's just that the band filts too much. Only on a few tracks does FSF's instrumentalists (guitarists Joshua Colbert and Derick Crodoba, bassist Chad Neptune and drummer Steve Kleisath) swing with the kind of crunching assault that marked "Fire." Change isn't a bad thing, but "Hide Nothing" is entirely too smooth, too polished, and gleams just a little too perfectly.

"Hide Nothing's" lyrics are feel-good and optimistic, a far cry from the angsty whining of their genre (FSF began on the Christian scene), but the music is far too antiseptic to allow it to have any impact. In short, "Hide Nothing" is impeccably made, but rather lifeless. On their third album and third vocalist, they drift into space. Instead of being up-and-comers they've become merely footnotes to Carraba's career.

Further Seems Forever still struggles to find their signature sound as they release their new album.

Austrian business owners fear cultural abandonment

By GEORGE JAHN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Beethoven drank here. So did Brahms. Freud, and more recently Bill Clinton and Sophia Loren.

But vintners in Grinzing — the wine district in a hilly pocket of northern Vienna — warn that their age-old role as hosts to wine lovers is being threatened by unfair competition, generational change and a cold shoulder from City Hall.

They say a vital part of Vienna's cultural heritage is at stake. After all, the Austrian capital's image as a livable city is due in great part to unique traditions like Grinzing's leafy, village-style inns serving their own light wines, many made from grapes grown within city limits.

"How can it be possible that Vienna is profiting from Grinzing, the world's most famous wine region, while allowing us to perish?" laments innkeeper Franz Hengl, the district showman who heads the Union of Grinzing's Friends.

The whites and reds of Grinzing — and the vineyards stretched over the sun-kissed hills overlooking Vienna — have served as inspiration to artists and ordinary folk since the first vines were planted more than 2,500 years ago.

Histories of Grinzing claim Beethoven, Brahms and Haydn hit upon some of their best musical ideas while strolling the hills above the district — or imbibing its wines.

Gustav Mahler is buried in Grinzing's cemetery, and the district is immortalized in dozens of songs. The legendary German operatic soprano Lotte Lehmann recorded Ralph Benatzky's famed "I must be in Grinzing once again" in the 1940s, warbling: "It's just like being in heaven, with the wine, the wine, the wine!"

Photographs of more recent fans displayed on the walls of Hengl's low-roofed inn include Clinton, Pope John Paul II and dozens of actors and actresses.

Hengl's battle pits him and half a dozen other traditional innkeepers against what they see as two main enemies: huge, corporate-owned ersatz wine inns and city officials indifferent to Grinzing's plight.

Speaking at his centuries-old inn as waitresses in traditional garb put the finishing touches on a dazzling buffet of roasts, salads, sausages, cheeses and strudel, Hengl says that over the past 20 years, dozens of traditional innkeepers have given up the fight against banks and insurance companies that run sprawling new establishments seating hundreds of tourists who spill out of buses from Italy, Germany and the Czech Republic.

These inns serve cheap wines bought by the tanker load and sold as Grinzing's traditional Heurige brands — a designation originally reserved for young reds and whites made from the innkeepers' own vineyards.

No more than five of the 17 remaining inns in Grinzing serve their own wine, and that number could shrink further because Vienna's Chamber of Agriculture has determined it is impossible to grant innkeepers a trademark for locally made wine.

Hengl complains City Hall has shrugged off pleas from traditional innkeepers for financial aid, help against unfair competition and special protected status for genuine old inns and their wines.

"We have no one to turn to. Every department says, 'We're not responsible,'" says Hengl, who claims his family's vintner roots stretch back to the 12th century.

Some ordinary Viennese agree Grinzing isn't what it used to be.

"We haven't gone to Grinzing for years," says Leopoldine Wacher, 57. "Too many tourists, and too little Gemuetlichkeit!" — which roughly translates into English as "coziness."

City officials dispute Hengl's view of their efforts. Spokesman Christoph Ronge says Vienna does everything possible to help Grinzing and the other wine districts through advertising and financial support allowed by European Union constraints.

"We paid out over 250,000 (euros — more than $310,000) to cover hail damages alone last summer" for vintners working 2,000-plus acres of land within city limits, he says.

A time to remember

RUGBY from page 8

time. It was the most confusing thing I'd ever witnessed, then, all of a sudden ... practice started.

I was all over the place that first day, relying on whatever instincts football provided me with. I got chewed up, spit out, run over, and then it was time to do sprints. It was like nothing I'd ever experienced, just a mass of confusion with me square in the middle.

After awhile I got the hang of it, I started to learn the game piece by mind-numbing piece. Season+ started to come and go and before I knew it, I was a respected part of the team.

I can never fully describe what this team has meant to me over the past four years. I have seen dozens of kids come and go, some for a few days, some since I've been here (thanks Mario).

I've been on a team that lost in a championship game, a team that won a championship, a team with no direction, and recently a team with a special tight-knit bond that a full newspaper couldn't describe. It's all been a blur, a long flash of hitting, partying, winning, and brotherhood that I will never be able to duplicate during this lifetime.

I sat in my backyard on Sunday morning and started to let my mind wander. I started to think of all the faces, moments, teams, and places I had seen along the way. There were images of past captains and victories that made me tear up more than any injury I've acquired along the way.

I could almost smell the septic factory that is situated conveniently next to our pitch, a smell that is masked only by dirt-encrusted clothes that have gone weeks without washing. I couldn't believe that I played my last regular season game on that field, as I ran off for what might be the last time, I ran off victorious.

We swept Norwich University, A-side, B-side, and C-side, and as our team gathered on the sidelines I took one last look around. This was the last time this team would play together; it was the last time I would play for our devoted captains and our demanding coaches at the same time.

That night we made sappy speeches on the bench in front of my house, drunk with happiness, and sad that things would never be the same. I tried to say a thing or two, but it wouldn't come out right, so I figured out a way to set things right a few days later.

This one's for you team.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian editor and a UMass rugby player.

Canfield paces offense

DUGGAN from page 8

Canfield was named the Atlantic-10 Rookie of the Week for the first time in the week following the Temple game. She was again named Rookie of the Week two weeks later.

The emergence of Canfield as the team's primary scoring threat was one of the biggest developments for the Maroon and White this season.

Canfield scored a goal in the first game of the season and never looked back. The freshman sensation led the team in points (22), goals (11), shots (61), and shots on goal (34). Canfield will certainly be in contention for the A-10 Rookie of the Year Award.

UMass played its best stretch of soccer in the middle of the season winning six of nine games and thus putting itself into the A-10 Tournament race.

A big reason for UMass' better performance was the improved play of sophomore goalie Kristin Walker.

Walker, who did not see any action as a freshman, recorded four shutouts in a span of six games. She was honored as the A-10 Rookie of the Week after recording the first shutout in almost two years for UMass on Oct. 10.

UMass finished the season with splits in the last two weekends of play. Although the team is not necessarily riding a strong wave of momentum, the Minutewomen did enough during the season to make it to the postseason.

MATTHEW BRIDGMAN/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore back Tracy Razzano plays the ball against St. Joseph's on Oct. 17 in Philadelphia.

While the odds may be stacked against them this weekend, the Minutewomen are now just three wins away from an improbable NCAA Tournament berth.

Dan Duggan is a Collegian columnist.

A numbers win for UM

HOWE from page 8

Mississippi State, who beat Florida.

Is it science? No, but in the world of sports, the only things that can be scientifically explained are knuckle balls and corked baseball bats.

So, what would happen if these two teams coming from opposite ends of the college football spectrum ever met up on a football field that will always be 160 feet wide and traverse 100 yards from end to end?

"That's the thing with football; any day can be anyone's game," UMass All-American wide receiver Jason Peebler said. "It's whoever comes to play that day."

But is UMass a better team?

"We've been talking about that a lot," sophomore wide receiver Brandon London said. "Technically we are (a better team), but one day, hopefully, we'll get to line up against Florida and really show who's the better team."

Senior captain and offensive guard Rob Kane didn't understand that beating Maine would really prove UMass' superiority to the Gators.

"No, I didn't know that," Kane said. "I never looked at it that way. I guess it's a good way to look at it, but I don't think you can draw too much comparison between us and Florida."

Or can you?

Florida currently sits on a 4-4 overall record while UMass has a 4-5 record. Both teams, however, share an identical 2-4 record in their respective conferences.

UMass quarterback Tim Day has amassed 1,950 passing yards and 17 touchdowns on this season while Leak, a preseason Heisman Trophy candidate, has had a slight advantage with 2,078 yards and 19 touchdowns.

Florida halfback Ciatrick Fason has rushed for 880 yards and eight scores, but UMass tailback Steve Baylark is right behind him with 877 yards and seven touchdowns.

Peebler has led the Minutemen with 780 receiving yards and seven touchdowns, well ahead of Florida's best statistical receiver, O.J. Small, who has 496 yards and only four touchdown catches.

The Minutemen even have a better defense, only allowing 22.7 points per game while the Gators have given up an astronomical 22.8.

When I asked defensive back Tracy Belton what would happen if the two teams were playing down in Gainesville and Leak tried going deep to Caldwell on him, he just laughed and responded with a simple answer.

"Interception."

So, bring on the Gators?

"Yup," London said.

Jeff Howe is a Collegian editor.

UMass turns season around

FIELD HOCKEY from page 8

Execution will also be key for the Minutewomen against St. Joseph's. After Monaco scored 30 seconds in to the game, Massachusetts was unable to put another goal on the board until the stroke off. Their offense as a whole struggled posting just seven shots in regulation while drawing just three corners. Back Katelyn Woolfrey and goalkeeper Christine Tocco lead the defense that held the Hawks to just one goal in regulation. It will be the simple things, however, that will jumpstart the offense.

"I think we just need to start moving toward the ball. I think if we move to the ball we'll be that much quicker. That will also help us in our passing as well. If we keep up the energy and intensity on top of that, we'll be able to win," Sophomore Gina Sanders explained.

The Minutewomen have several distinct advantages going in to the A-10 tourney. The first is that they will be playing on their home turf, literally. All games will be played at Garber field this weekend. Secondly, the junior and senior class all have A-10 tourney experience including a trip to the finals in 2002. One current member, Patricia Bonneo, was even named to the 2002 A-10 All Tournament team.

Finally, and maybe most importantly, the members of the team who haven't been to the tournament aren't intimidated by it. "I'm excited. I've never really thought of it being my first A-10 tournament. I've just seen it as another game," Sanders explained.

"I'm nervous to an extent, but after playing with the team for a while you tend to get comfortable and the freshmen have played a very big role. I'm more excited than anything else," Phalen added.

It's amazing how much things can change in a month, but it will be very interesting to see how much they can change over a weekend. Regardless, the Minutewomen will be prepared, focused and ready to go.

Real Sox fans stay true

QUINN from page 8

present.

There is however, one small irritating thing about becoming World Champions and that is how full the bandwagon gets towards the end of the ride.

Patriots fan's know all about this except not to the degree where everybody and their sister jumped on after Game 7 of the ALCS. These latecomers are the types of people who would become your buddy if you hit the lottery and drop you flat if you gave the proceeds to charity.

It's ironic because going in to Game 4 the Sox had a two percent chance of winning the World Series. The Yankees hadn't lost four games in a row since April 22-25. The bandwagon, which was chock full after the Angels series, was now filled with people yelling "Believe" while they were frantically searching for a way off. Meanwhile Red Sox Nation kept a frustrated, disappointed, yet steadfast vigil watching their "lover" on life support.

By the ninth inning the fair weather fans had turned on Leno as the Nation prayed for a miracle while the baseball equivalent of Dr. Kavorkian trotted out from the bullpen. Then a funny thing happened, love found a way. Millar drew a walk, Roberts stole a base, Mueller got an RBI and the rest as they say, is history.

I think I first knew this might get out of hand when Jimmy Fallon, a New Yorker who made a mockery of Boston fans with the NOOMMAAHH skit on "Saturday Night Live", and Drew Barrymore, who probably couldn't tell the difference between the Red Sox and the White Sox, were shown running around the field in St. Louis as the Sox celebrated.

Nowadays you can't go 20 feet on campus without running in to somebody with Red Sox gear on. Usually the more decked out the "fan," the less time they've spent in Red Sox Nation, and the more likely they are to emigrate from when the team hits a bumpy stretch. The true members of Red Sox Nation wear decrypted looking hats and Pedro Martinez t-shirts with fading letters and mustard stains.

The bandwagon jumpers don't understand that being a Red Sox fan isn't something that you wear on your chest, but something that runs deep inside your veins. So be patient with all those wearing pink Red Sox hats or home jerseys with names on the back, they'll be helpful chanting "Year-Two-Thousand" at the Sox home opener April 11 against, who else, the Yankees.

David Quinn is a Collegian columnist.

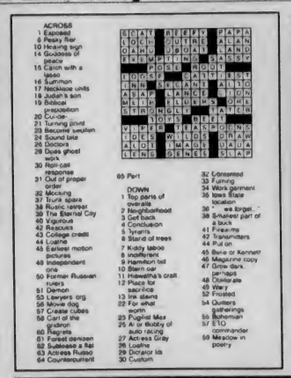
Student Activities Center
UP TO THE MINUTE
©Matchbox

Wednesday, November 3rd
Music Injection Wednesdays
Bring your lunch and receive a healthy dose of music between classes!
Cape Cod Lounge, 11am-1pm

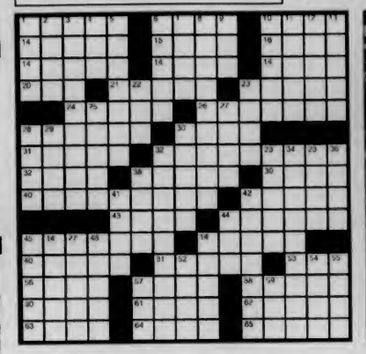
Friday, November 5th
Live Entertainment at the Bluewall: Barry Kingston and the Screaming Souls
Co-sponsored with Campus Center/Auxiliary Services
Bluewall, 9pm-11:30pm
FREE
Something Every Friday Anchorman with Will Ferrell
Top of the Campus Center, 9 pm & 11 pm
FREE

Saturday, November 6th
Harvest Night: The Many Faces of Africa
The African student association celebrates the achievements of the different regions of Africa and features cultural food, dance, music, fashion, and a skit.
Campus Center Auditorium, 8pm
$5 Pre-sale, $8 Door.

Sunday, November 7th
Sunday Night Movie: Anchorman with Will Ferrell
Top of the Campus Center, 8 pm.
FREE



UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Get your Bar Code® Certification
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
November 19th-21st
The Garden Room
Lord Jeffery Inn
Boltwood Ave., Amherst
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com



GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 FREE sample start-up contact lens solutions
4 Same day replacement of disposable contact lenses, in many cases
5 Contact lenses mailed directly to your home or office
6 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*
"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"
* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.
Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services
For appointments or questions, call 577-5383
UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

fancy NAILS
Inside Hampshire Mall
413-584-0210
Walk-ins Welcome
FREE French Manicure w/ full set only
Holiday Special
$2 OFF
w/ fell set or fill
with coupon only

The Moan and Dove
Ask yourself, is the beer in my hand the best I can do?
themoananddove.com
460 West St • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You are going to continue to find leftover surprises from your fun weekend.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You are going to be faced with a decision. You should consider it very carefully.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your boss is going to give you an unexpected compliment today.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
You should just throw away the rest of that Halloween candy.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Today you are going to have trouble saying things. It could be because you are so tired.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You need to go on a date. Make someone go on a date with you.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
That advice you gave your friend was brilliant.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You need a gallon of coffee. Drink as much as you can without tweaking out.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Today you are going to feel guilty. Just say what you think and you'll feel better.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You have undergone quite a transformation. You are hardly the person you were last year.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Sometimes a coincidence isn't just a coincidence. That was freaky.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
It's time you bought yourself a little something.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I'm in the woods in my negligee and my cell phone only has two bars left. HELP!"

-Miranda Hobbs, Sex and the City

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE
Ask for Advertising @ 545-3500

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Cheap heating oil! Join the PIONEER VALLEY COOPERATIVE. Call 545-0865 or come by Commuter Services, Room 428 Student Union.

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January - May, t_korol@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

AUTO FOR SALE

1998 Jeep Cherokee Classic Auto 4x4 Excellent Cond. 5K by 413-772-6855

Chevrolet Malibu 2000 70,000 loaded, excellent condition $5,300 / best offer 413-687-4449

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

Driver Wanted 2 to 5 hours/week $15/hour plus mileage. Driving an elderly woman around 207-361-2695 agabool@aol.com

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

MUSICIANS

Seeking Trumpet or Saxaphone player to complete Jazz Group Trio. Ryan 413-221-7615

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Legal Questions? The Student Legal Services Office offers free legal assistance to fee-paying students. Contact us at 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Transcription Services Experienced, Fast, Reasonable rates Karen 413-834-2505

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling out Immigration forms.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

MONTREAL Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most Weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica. From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

Spring Break 2005. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Hop & Send or Use Code: PRMNG Online
www.sunsplashtours.com 1.800.426.7710

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

Egg Donors Needed. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Ages 21-32. Non-smokers only. For more information please visit our website at www.fertilityhelp.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Get off the bandwagon

October 27, 2004 will be a day that I will never forget so long as I shall live. It was the day the drought ended, 86 years of futility over. Some people believe the curse was lifted that day, it wasn't. The curse never existed. It was the manifestation of sports writers who used this so called curse to explain why the Red Sox lost.

Dave Quinn

The real problem was inept managing decisions.

Aside from the obvious joy winning World Series itself has brought me, the next best thing is that we won't have to see all those low lights anymore.

Fox and ESPN won't force us to watch clips of Bucky Dent's popup catching some extra wind or see Billy Buckner feebly hobbling over the weak grounder to first only to have it scoot under his legs, all of that is over.

It's old news and no longer relevant. Those clips will be replaced with ones like Dave Roberts sliding in to home in Game 4, David Ortiz's numerous blasts to save the day, and the industry standard, the final out of the World Series where Keith Foulke flips the ball to Doug Mientkiewicz turns to Jason Varitek and says, "We fin' did it."

The stigma of loser that was associated to Sox fans for so many years has finally been erased. Save me the garbage about Sox fans being upset that they're nothing to complain about. One might think we sadistically enjoyed all the losing as well as being the target of people's mockery and faux sympathy over the last century. Give me a break.

We didn't root for the Sox to get a badge of honor; we did it out of passion and love, for the game and for the uniform.

Loyalty and passion are how we true Sox fans define ourselves. The media created this "Charlie Brown" loser mentality of Boston fans, tagged on the curse, and somehow it became accepted as the truth.

Instead, for most members of Red Sox Nation, our relationship with the Sox is a similar love affair. Beginning in April, the Sox become our little lovers on the side that usually leave us by Labor Day but sometimes tease us in to October before leaving us bruised and broken hearted for the winter. Yet, we Sox fans always returned each March with a newly rejuvenated love for the team that hurt us so badly the year before. It's a marriage, for better for worse, for as long as you both shall live. When the Sox won the World Series, it was like a second honeymoon. The past and the future were unimportant. All that mattered was that we savored and took in every moment of the

See QUINN on page 6

LAURA SKRIVAN / L'BOSTON POST DISPATCH

Boston's Johnny Damon celebrates after hitting a home run in the first inning of game four of the World Series on Wednesday, Oct. 27 in St. Louis, Missouri. The Red Sox would win the game and the series.

Women's soccer poised for A-10s

The Massachusetts women's soccer team qualified for the Atlantic-10 Tournament this past weekend. The Minutewomen (7-10, 5-6 A-10) are set to open play on Thursday at 11 a.m. against No. 3 seed Richmond at Rudd Field.

With the postseason about to begin now is a good time to look back on some of the highs and lows from the regular season.

Dan Duggan

No one knew quite what to expect this season as UMass lost six players from last year's team that went 4-12-1.

Coach Jim Rudy was hopeful that his revamped team would be able to compete in the Atlantic-10. But before starting conference play, the Minutewomen had to play a very difficult non-conference schedule.

UMass opened the season with five consecutive losses and the season appeared to be going nowhere. The Minutewomen were plagued with injuries, inconsistency, and some bad bounces.

The Maroon and White lost seniors Carly Turman and Erica Wideberg for the season due to injuries sustained in the first week of play.

With only one senior, Lindsey Fairweather, on the active roster Rudy was forced to play a large number of freshmen. The young players struggled early in the season, making some mistakes due to inexperience, but the team showed signs of progress.

The turning point in the season came when UMass traveled to Central Connecticut State and upset a strong Blue Devils squad.

In the game against CCSU on Sept. 21, Fairweather turned in the play of the year. The slick ball-handling forward was able get the back of her foot on a crossing pass in front of the goal and get enough on the shot to push the ball past the goalie.

The win seemed to give the young team a spark. It was also the final game of a season-long four game road trip. The Minutewomen then began a five-game homestand during which they began to show vast improvement.

In the first game of the homestand the team defeated Holy Cross giving Rudy his 200th win at UMass. Rudy currently has the fourth most wins in Division I women's soccer history.

UMass continued its winning ways on the homestand posting a 3-2 record. The Minutewomen turned in their most dramatic win of the season during the homestand, a 3-2 overtime win over Temple.

UMass battled back from 1-0 and 2-1 deficits to force overtime. Freshman Britt Canfield scored the tying goal to force overtime and netted the game-winner with just over a minute remaining in the first extra session.

See DUGGAN on page 6

Ode to a rugby team

Bob McGovern

As I sit here on this brisk November evening, I have a silver-dollar-sized scab on my right ankle, a bruise to the likeness of Texas on my thigh, and my knee has a lump on it that makes me walk much like the ducks in our campus pond.

And man, it all feels so good.

I'm a rugby player, and I have been for the last four years here at this University. I've seen it all; I've been hit in every possible direction, I have played in almost any kind of weather condition you can fathom, and on Saturday, I may have played my last game.

When I was a freshman I came to this school with images of high school sports fresh in my head. I was sure there was nothing better than a Florida high school football game under the lights on a Friday night. I thought my days playing competitive sports were over.

Then one fateful day I made an embarrassing decision that turned into the best sequence of events that has happened to me in college.

I decided to buy a UMass rugby shirt. I wasn't on the team, but hey it was a cool shirt. That day I put it on, got in a packed dorm elevator, and before the door closed the kid behind me tapped me and said, "Hey man, you aren't on the team."

I looked at him, and the five or so girls that were smirking at the awkwardness of the situation, and said, "Hey don't worry I'll be out there." It stumbled off my lips, it sounded so fake and stupid. When the elevator reached the floor I got off and this kid walked next to me and said, "I'd better see you out there."

The first day of the spring season I went out for the team and watched as these short-shorted huge men beat the hell out of each other, pad-less, fearless, with mouth guard grins the whole

See RUGBY on page 6

Why UMass is better than UF

Jeff Howe

Sports are funny.

On any given day, anything can happen. Stories can shape up through the course of a season that one could never dream about.

In a world where the Detroit Pistons can take down the mighty Los Angeles Lakers, the Boston Red Sox can stair straight into the eyes of a devilish curse, the United States basketball team can fall flat on its collective face and a group of blue collar football players can win 21 consecutive games, the Massachusetts football team can certainly compete with the Florida Gators.

Yes, I'm talking about the Division I-A and historical SEC juggernaut that plays its home games in The Swamp, one of the most intimidating atmospheres any sport has seen this side of the Roman coliseums.

I'm talking about the same team that continuously produces professional talent and currently has one of the nation's poster boy quarterbacks in Chris Leak plus up-and-coming receiver Andre Caldwell, whose older brother, Reche, is a Florida alum and current San Diego Chargers wide receiver.

I'm also talking about the same Massachusetts Minutemen who have lost to teams like James Madison and Rhode Island.

Why can the Minutemen take down the Gators? If you can try following me, it's relatively simple.

UMass outlasted Atlantic 10 foe Maine 55-34

COURTESY/KAREN WINGER

Quarterback Tim Day hands off the ball against Richmond. UMass went on to lose the game 24-14.

in overtime on Saturday at McGuirk Stadium. Maine traveled to Mississippi State on Sept. 18 and returned to Black Bear country with a 9-7 victory, and for the final degree of separation, Mississippi State held serve at home to beat Florida 38-31 on Oct. 23.

In short, UMass beat Maine, who beat

See HOWE on page 6

A tale of two seasons

By Dave Quinn
Collegian Staff

One month ago today, the Massachusetts field hockey team sat at a miserable 2-10 record fresh off a 6-1 defeat at the hands of the Huskies of Northeastern. What a difference a month makes as the Minutewomen won six of their last eight games in route to a 4-2 A-10 record as well as a second seed in this weekend's conference tournament.

MATTHEW REDER / COLLEGIAN

Sophomore back Kwylan Jaggassar prepares to defend a Richmond attack on Oct. 24.

Who would have thought this was possible? Well the Minutewomen did for one.

"I delinitely did," Senior Adrianne Monuco said. "Our out of conference schedule is a little tougher. You play those games to prepare yourselves for the conference."

Not that the preparation was easy to swallow as the Maroon and White lost their first six games of the season. Four of those losses were against nationally ranked teams.

"We had a tough schedule and wasn't easy to lose all the time," Senior Jamie Bawden recalled. "But, I had faith and I knew that the coaches were doing it for some reason. I understand now because once we got in to our conference schedule, we were ready and we pulled together."

Massachusetts's second place finish matches them up against the Hawks of St. Joseph's. The two teams squared off earlier this year on October 17 as the Minutewomen defeated the Hawks 2-1 after two overtimes and two sets of penalty strokes. While any victory is a good victory, there Maroon and White don't want to have to play extra frames. To do so, they'll need to make several adjustments.

"I think we need to play with confidence. We came out strong against them but they responded well. We went to quadruple OT against them last time; we don't want it to come down to that again. We need to take it to them right at the beginning of the game" freshman Nicole "Never" Phalen stated.

Bawden echoed the mindset factor saying, "I just think we need to go out there and have fun. When we have fun out there we tend to play really well."

See FIELD HOCKEY on page 6

Dayton stays perfect in A-10

By Daniel Hillman
Collegian Staff

For the Dayton women's soccer team, junior forward Reba Sedlacek netted two goals, including October 29. Sedlacek also added an assist in a helping Dayton beat La Salle and maintain a perfect season in A-10 play (11-0-0). In the win Sedlacek also helped Dayton run the nation's longest win streak to 18. Her performance gained her the nod as the last A-10 Player of the Week for the conference season.

Sedlacek led the Flyers this season in goals (13) and points (32). The Flyers will head into this weeks A-10 Tournament as the Number 1 seed.

Rams Sneak into Two Seed

After winning two home games this week, Rhode Island passed Richmond and grabbed the number two seed in this weeks A-10 Tournament. URI's freshman forward, Debra Nelson snagged A-10 Freshman of the week honors for her performance over the weekend. She scored the Rams two goals on Friday's 2-0 win over Duquense, and assisted on the team's lone goal on Sunday in a 1-0 win over Saint Bonaventure. Nelson ranks third on the team in points with 15.

Richmond Stumbles to Finish Line

Going into this weekend Richmond controlled its own destiny in gaining the number two seed for the tournament, yet after splitting two away games this weekend, they find themselves in the third seed. Richmond lost Friday's game to Saint Joseph's 3-1. Saint Joe's improved to 5-4-1 in conference play, and clinched the fourth seed for the tournament. Richmond bounced back on Sunday by going to Temple and beating them 2-0 on the Owl's Senior Day. Richmond scored in the first five minutes of both halves to account for the offense in the match.

A-10 Tournament Coming to UMass

Starting this Thursday at Rudd Field, UMass will be hosting the 2004 Atlantic 10 Women's Soccer Tournament. Thursday at 11 a.m. the Richmond Spiders (#3) will take on UMass (#6).

'I Heart Huckabees' has philosophical flavor
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

THURSDAY High: 52 Low: 39 | FRIDAY High: 48 Low: 32 | SATURDAY High: 51 Low: 36
DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

UMass to battle intra-state rival Northeastern
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 42

President Bush wins four more

Bush claims mandate for war and tax agenda

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush claimed a re-election mandate Wednesday after a record 59 million Americans chose him over Democrat John Kerry and voted to expand Republican control of Congress as well. He pledged to pursue his agenda on taxes and Iraq while seeking "the broad support of all Americans."

Kerry conceded defeat in make-or-break Ohio rather than launch a legal fight reminiscent of the contentious Florida recount of four years ago. "I hope that we can begin the healing," the Massachusetts senator said.

Claiming a second term denied his father, George H.W. Bush, the president struck a conciliatory tone, too. "A new term is a new opportunity to reach out to the whole nation," he said, speaking directly to Kerry's supporters.

"To make this nation stronger and better, I will need your support and I will work to earn it," he said. "I will do all I can do to deserve your trust."

It was a warm-and-fuzzy close to one of the longest, most negative presidential races in a generation.

Bush didn't use the word mandate, but Vice President Dick Cheney did, and the president's intention was clear as he ticked off a familiar list of second-term goals: overhaul the tax code and Social Security at home while waging war in Iraq and elsewhere to stem terror.

Bush stands to reshape the federal judiciary, starting with an aging Supreme Court that voted 5-4 to award him Florida four years ago. In all branches of government, the GOP now holds a solid, if not permanent, ruling majority.

Bush's vote totals were the biggest ever and his slice of the vote, 51 percent, made him the first president to claim a majority since 1988 when his father won 53 percent against Democrat Michael Dukakis. Like Dukakis, Kerry is a Massachusetts politician who was labeled a liberal by a Bush. This president also called Kerry a flip-flopping opportunist who would fight feebly against terror.

None of that rancor was evident Wednesday, when Kerry called Bush to concede the race. He told Bush the country needed to be united, and Bush agreed. But the numbers suggest the country is deeply split.

Bush's victory ensures Republican dominance of virtually every quarter of the U.S. political system for years to come — the White House, Congress and the federal judiciary. Democrats pored over election results and sadly determined that the GOP base was bigger, more rural, suburban and Hispanic than they had ever imagined.

They looked within their own party, and found plenty of Democrats to blame — Kerry, his running mate John Edwards, their layers of consultants and legions of former Bill Clinton aides. The jockeying began in earnest for the 2008 race, with Edwards signaling his ambitions by pressing Kerry to wage a legal fight for Ohio. Democrats love to light the GOP particularly those Democrats who vote in primaries and caucuses.

"You can be disappointed, but you cannot walk away," Edwards told supporters at Kerry's concession. "This fight has just begun."

Supporters of Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, herself a potential candidate in 2008, accused Edwards of posturing.

Kerry himself showed no signs of exiting the political arena. "I'll never stop fighting for you," he told backers.

Still, it was a grim day for Democrats.

Party strategists had longed hoped to supplant their political losses in the Midwest and South with growth in the Hispanic-rich Western states, but those plans were put in doubt Tuesday night. Exit polls suggested that Bush had increased his minority share of

See BUSH on page 2

TROY DESCHENAUX / COLLEGIAN

President Bush delivers his victory speech in Washington after winning the presidential election yesterday.

Students react to Bush victory across the campus

By Matt Elmer
Collegian Staff

The aftermath of the most highly anticipated election night began yesterday at the University of Massachusetts as students and faculty weighed in on the results.

"I'm a little dizzy and tired this morning," said journalism professor Ralph Whitehead to his Election Coverage class yesterday.

Whitehead said that this election went very similar to the way the 2000 election went. However, he said that he thought the difference in the number of votes that Bush got was the fact that Karl Rove, Bush's chief strategist, went out and got a large number of voters for the Republican candidate.

"We re-ran the 2000 election," he said of the fact that neither candidate stole any states. Because of that, he said, Bush just needed to get more people to the polls.

Whitehead said Bush's camp thought they lost over four million evangelistic voters four years ago, and Rove helped him bring those people to the polls on Tuesday.

"I'm disappointed," said junior philosophy and history major Alexandra Bannister. Bannister said that she thought the country was fed up with Bush, namely with Iraq and the Patriot Act.

"It seems like he's done something to offend everyone," she said.

Tristan Brown, a sophomore history and political major, said that he thinks there is a lot of anger going on around on the UMass campus about Bush.

"I'm fairly afraid," he said, referring to the thought that Bush is going to run our country for four more years.

Brown said some of his professors claimed that if Bush is re-elected he will initiate the draft. Drafting people into military service ended with the Vietnam War, and it was highly criticized when it was implemented.

However, not everyone was upset about the incumbent taking the election.

"Obviously I'm happy," said Michael Ames, a senior political science major and member of the Republican Club.

See STUDENTS on page 2

Bustamante says textbook rental system ready to go

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association President Eduardo Bustamante announced in last night's Senate meeting that the process of getting a textbook rental system for the campus is ready to begin.

"I have some great news," Bustamante said, "We are in the beginning phases of getting a textbook rental system."

Initially proposed at the beginning of the academic year, Bustamante and other members of the SGA designed a proposal that would alleviate that hassle of purchasing expensive textbooks from the annex and allow students to rent them for the semester.

Currently, the Follett company has a contract with the University of Massachusetts that extends through this summer. If the proposal passes through the faculty senate and the administration, then the initial phase of a potential rental system could be in place by next fall.

To Bustamante's dismay, the idea had temporarily been put on hold because of the recent scandal involving photographs taken of SGA members in a University office, drinking alcohol and mocking a caricature of a Ku Klux Klan Grand Wizard.

Bustamante said that he hopes that bringing in a rental system would have a greater impact on affordability and access to the University, although he stressed that he does not want to take away business from locally-owned bookstores in Amherst like Food for Thought and Jeffrey Amherst.

"[Textbook rental systems] are done successfully at other large universities all over the country and they face these same objectives, and if it's something that they can overcome, then we can too," Bustamante said.

The first proposal was introduced to the Faculty Senate last month and members approved of the idea and agreed to move forward. The next step is to meet with consultants from other universities that currently use this system successfully.

"We met with the faculty senate subcommittees," Bustamante said, "They support the ideas and we have the initial step. Now we need to bring in consultants to review our new textbook system."

Bustamante mentioned that the legislature in California has already proposed to initiate a system similar to the one SGA has proposed in all state universities.

"I am very excited as you all should be as we have seen such

See SGA on page 2

MATTHEW REDER / COLLEGIAN

President Bustamante hopes a textbook rental system will make books more affordable for University of Massachusetts students.

Students protest against war in Iraq with 'die-in'

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

Corpses with picket signs appeared yesterday in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center concourse as part of a protest against the war in Iraq.

Roughly a dozen individuals, some bedecked in fake blood, gathered in the concourse around 12:30 p.m. for the "die-in," declaring, "This is democracy," and holding plackets that pertained to the 100,000 people who have already died in the United States conflict in Iraq. The University of Massachusetts Antiwar Coalition planned the event.

"We meant this to be a sort of memorial to the 100,000 dead as much as it was about letting the student body know that there is a representative solidarity on campus who is willing to speak out against the war," said UMass graduate student Todd Evans.

During the protest members of the Coalition were handing out flyers announcing their next meeting, which is free and open to the public. Though they are not yet a Registered Student Organization, they are attempting to become one, Evans said.

On the reverse side of the flyers, the Coalition provided a number of bulleted items of interest about the war. One such item was that the $151 billion spent to fund the war could have covered the cost of two years worth of food for half of the world's hungry, a comprehensive global AIDS treatment and prevention program and childhood immunizations for all the children in the developing world.

In order to become an RSO, the Coalition will have to go through the Student Government Association's application process. They will also need to present a mission statement, a written account of their future goals and create a constitution that is in accordance with the by-laws of the SGA.

COURTESY/STEPHANIE LOVE

Students pretend to be corpses in protest of the war on the floor of the Campus Center yesterday afternoon.

Student reactions to the "die-in" were mixed. Though some interest was shown by a handful of students the majority either passed by without comment or shouted derogatory comments at the protesters.

The next meeting of the UMass Antiwar Coalition will be Monday, Nov. 8 at 4 p.m. in rooms 804-808 of the Campus Center.

For more information on the Coalition, contact Evans via E-mail at wtoode@ soc.umass.edu or Jonathan Murr at jmurr@english.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NEWS SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugelski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
COPIES EDITOR Alyson Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marzelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kiggans
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCounting Clerk Virginie Frecaut
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT OPERATORS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Josh Greenberg
ACCOUNT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Huggins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Banack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jeanmot
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS UNDERGRADUATE SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATED AND ADVERTISING REVENUE SUPPORTED. SINCE 1890 THE PAPER IS KNOWN AS THE COLLEGIAN, AS THE COLLEGIAN AND MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIAN IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROAD SHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 5455 DAILY BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Jamie Liu
COPY EDITOR
Michael Banack
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Caitlin Kidekel / Tom Heslin / Jodi Weisser

Write for News
Call Erika, Julie, or Dan at 545-1809

Professor says Kerry win not 'in cards'

STUDENTS from page 1

Ames said that he thinks Bush winning again and the GOP gaining seven seats in Congress is good for the country. After all votes were counted, they gained four Senators and three State Representatives.

Ames said that he thought Bush did a good job in taking a continued stance throughout his first term. He said that he has helped out the economy recently, especially in the past 13 months.

When the dust settled, everyone had an opinion as to what went wrong for Kerry.

"In retrospect, it might've not been in the cards for a Democrat to win," Whitehead said.

Whitehead said he thought that the events of Sept. 11, 2001 probably helped the President's cause for re-election.

"This election occurred in the shadow of 9/11," he said. Whitehead added that because candidates cared about morals and terrorism, Bush won. He said that if the voter's main concerns were health care, education and the war, Kerry would've pulled through.

"All we needed was someone to pick up the ball and throw it to first base, not someone to let the ball go between their legs," Brown said.

Specific groups who turned out for the election had a serious impact on who eventually won, reported.

SHEETAL MANKODI/ COLLEGIAN

Kerry supporters hold signs outside Faneuil Hall in Boston yesterday urging Kerry to continue supporting young people in the Senate.

Initial reports showed that Kerry was helped greatly by the youth vote, but not as many younger voters turned out as expected.

Professor Whitehead said that he thinks that the numbers will show more young people voted than the last election, but it wasn't enough to give Senator Kerry the win.

"I think that the youth vote should've been bigger," Brown said. He said that he was surprised at how many people concentrated on morals and not the war.

Another huge concern going into the polls was that there would be some sort of fraud in a key battleground state. Other than long lines across many states, there weren't any major problems

Ames, however, said that he was upset at the way that the media handled the exit polls.

He said that they gave misinformation to the public when they originally estimated that Kerry would win in a landslide. He said that their ratios were off and their target demographics were skewed.

Brown said that he thought the media targeted minorities in rural areas, and that they typically vote Democratic.

Despite all this, Professor Whitehead had a simple reason for Kerry's loss.

"Kerry was never able to persuade a majority of the people to pick him as our chief commander," he said.

Ohio gives Kerry big blow of defeat

BUSH from page 1

the Hispanic vote since 2000.

One-third of Hispanics said they were born-again Christians and nearly 20 percent listed moral values as their top issue, suggesting they have more in common with Republicans than Democrats.

The election also vindicated Bush's unorthodox strategy of governing from the right and then targeting his voters with a volunteer-driven organization run through his campaign headquarters. Kerry played to the center and relied on a loosely knit conglomerate of liberal groups who paid get-out-the-vote workers.

Americans Coming Together, the Media Fund and other liberal special interest groups spent more than $200 million to defeat Bush. Kerry spent tens of millions more, and what did he get? Just one state won by Bush in 2000, New Hampshire, switched to the Democratic column this year.

Young voters didn't increase their turnout as Democrats had hoped. Neither did blacks or union members, two keys to the party's base.

Bush, meanwhile, saw a surge in rural and evangelical voters, according to strategists on both sides. The rural vote, once reliably Democratic, swelled in size and supported Bush over Kerry. In Ohio, exit polls suggested the rural vote increased from 15 percent of the electorate in 2000 to 25 percent on Tuesday. Rural voters backed Bush over Kerry 60 percent to 40.

In Ohio and Florida, the two most important states Election Night, Democrats said they met their turnout targets, only to see Bush's forces trounce them. They said state ballot measures to ban gay marriage may have driven GOP voters to the polls.

The most stinging defeat was in Ohio, which may no longer be considered a swing state. With 232,000 jobs lost under Bush and state voters uneasy about Iraq, it was as ripe as it will ever be for Democrats, strategists said.

Ohio's 20 electoral votes gave Bush 279 in the Associated Press count, nine more than the 270 needed for victory. Kerry had 252 electoral votes, with Iowa's seven unsettled.

Bush beat Kerry by more than 3 million votes in the national popular tally.

Majors Fair draws scholars seeking a future

By Nicholas Belanger
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Pre-major Advising, Career Services and Commonwealth College collaborated to host the annual Majors Fair in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday. The event, which ran from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m., brought together close to 100 departments to provide students with the opportunity to explore all the academic majors University has to offer.

In an interview earlier this week, pre-major advisor Susan Machala stressed the importance for all undergraduates to attend the fair.

"Students who attend this will be more aware of resources at the University," Machala said.

Students seemed to take Machala's advice, despite the cold weather. Attendance at the fair was estimated to be more than 1,000, not including the hundreds of advisors, professors, faculty members, and graduate students on hand to represent various departments.

Tables were arranged all around the ballroom, with similar majors clustered together to allow for easier exploration of the aisles of displays. The event attracted a wide range of students who asked an equally broad range of questions. Many of those attending already had a major in mind, and were simply looking for advice from faculty within that department.

Freshman Chris Nute came into the fair wanting to speak to a representative from the Building Materials and Wood Technology program. When asked what he thought about the fair, Nute said, "It's a good way to see all the different opportunities, to see things that they [students] wouldn't normally get to see." Nute said that the fair is "less pressure" than making an individual appointment with someone associated with any given major.

Dave Damery was on hand representing the Building Materials and Wood Technology major. Damery said he was excited to use the fair as a way to inform students about a major that many at the University are unaware of.

"We're a small major with a very high demand for graduates ... we serve a very broad industry," he said.

Damery and many others associated with the smaller majors used the fair as a way to sell their departments to undeclared students looking for a niche at UMass.

Sarah Ryan of Needham, a freshman with an interest in early childhood education, said she attended the fair "to explore the different majors offered here, and to figure out the direction my life is heading."

Commonwealth College students worked the Help Desk at the entrance all night where they could direct students to particular tables inside. Amanda Baldi was among those working the help desk. However, she was eager to get inside. "I want to go in and look at the writing program ... I never thought about being a writing major before," she said.

For those who were unable to attend the Majors Fair, Pre-major Advising and Career Services are available with an appointment and faculties within specific majors are generally willing to talk to students during office hours.

MATTHEW REID/COLLEGIAN

University of Massachusetts students visit different major displays at the Majors Fair yesterday.

System could be in place by fall progress here," he said, "by July we must have some decision."

SGA from page 2

Some of the questions and concerned raised by the Senate dealt with the cost of the system and the renewal and updating of the textbooks. Some were concerned that students would not have the option to buy their textbooks at the end of the semester.

"At the end of the semester, students will still have the option of buying their books at a reduced price," he said.

A similar sort of system currently in place at the university is Books for Books, a non-profit organization that enables students to call a phone number at the beginning of the semester to trade their books.

Bustamante said that he has no plans to get rid of Books for Books, however, he told the Senate that if the rental system does not pass, then SGA will have to work to expand Books for Books.

"My sense is that it will generate great profit," Bustamante said.

International Students!

Are you thinking of employment in the United States?

These Workshops will Help You!

Job Searching in the U.S.
The process of searching for employment may differ from culture to culture. This session will reveal some differences that may affect your job search process and give you a chance to discuss strategies with a career professional.

TODAY! November 4
5:00 pm
508 Goodell

and...

Addressing Immigration Issues During the Job Search
How familiar are you with your immigration status? How comfortable are you explaining the process to change from F1 to H1B? It is your responsibility to confidently address your status and benefits to potential employers at any time in the job search process. This workshop will assist you in increasing your comfort level in this critical area.

Tuesday, November 9
4:00 pm
508 Goodell

CareerServices

For more information contact
Satomi Yaji, Assistant Director for Career Planning
413-545-6264 or syaji@acad.umass.edu

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS

333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date 11/4 - 11/10
Not responsible for typographical errors.

Beer

Miller Lite & M.G.D. 30 pk Cans $18.49
Molson 2.12 pk Bottle $16.99
Keystone Light 30pk Cans $13.49
Coors Light & Red Light 30pk Bottle $12.99
Milwaukee Best 30pk Cans $10.99
Busch & Busch Light 30pk Bottle $10.99

Wine

Moet & Chandon 750 ml White Star $29.99
Black Box 3 lt Chard, Cabernet, Merlot.....$16.99
Forest Glen 1.5 lt Chard, Cabernet, Merlot..$10.99
Ruffino 750 ml Aziano Chianti.....$10.99
Chandon Fresco 750 ml Brut, Extra Dry.....$8.99
Chandon Terazzas 750 ml Chard, Cabernet, Merlot $7.99
R.H. Pillips 750 ml Chardonnay, Shiraz.....$6.99

Liquor

Hennessy X.O. Cognac 750 ml.....$104.99
Hennessy V.S.O.P. Cognac 750 ml.....$36.99
Grand Marnier 750 ml.....$29.99
Hennessy V.S. Cognac 750 ml.....$25.99
Ciroc Snap Frost Vodka 750 ml.....$24.99
Jose Cuervo Traditional Tequila 750 ml..$22.99
Seagram's 7 Whiskey 1.75 lt.....$15.99
UV Vodka 1.75 lt.....$15.99
Rubinoff Vodka all flavors 1.75 lt.....$9.99

Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

policelog

20-year-old arrested for allegedly kicking bonfire organizer

Wednesday October27

1:44 p.m. A caller reported receiving threatening emails in Baker Hall from an unknown subject. An incident report was filed.

9:54 p.m. A large disturbance involving 3,000 people in Southwest was reported. Multiple arrests were made for disorderly conduct, possession of fireworks, mistreating/interfering with police horse, failure to disperse, and resisting arrest.

11:48 p.m. A party reported a disruptive and intoxicated subject in Mary Lyon Hall. The Amherst Fire Department was contacted for medical evacuation, and transported the subject to Cooley Dickenson Hospital.

Thursday October28

1:30 a.m. A party reported a larceny in John Quincy Adams Hall when a wallet was stolen. The caller stated the wallet contained $200 in cash and ID cards.

1:44 a.m. A party reported a larceny in Kennedy Hall, where 45 DVDs and a gold bracelet were stolen from its dorm room. The party estimated the value of the stolen items to be over $1000.

8:21 p.m. Michael Lessard, 18, of Lafayette, N.J., was arrested in Van Meter Hall on a charge of being a minor in possession of alcohol.

9:13 p.m. Upon investigating suspicious suspects in front of Totman Gym, officers arrested Nicholas Philpott, 18, of South Yarmouth, on a charge of being a minor in possession of alcohol.

9:25 p.m. Upon a call from a party detecting the smell of marijuana, officers entered John Adams Hall and arrested Brain Stasik, 18, of Ballston Spa, N.Y., on a charge of possession of a Class D substance.

Friday October29

12:16 a.m. A caller reported a domestic disturbance between two subjects. Officers entered McNamara Hall and arrested Heather Eulian, 18, of Pittsfield, for assault and battery.

8:28 a.m. Jonathan Brennan, 18, of Peabody, was arrested for an outstanding warrant in Van Meter Hall.

11:31 a.m. A party reported two vehicles with a broken driver's side window and missing stereo. An incident report was taken.

4:22 p.m. Parties reported two vandalized vehicles. One vehicle had ripped upholstery and a damaged dashboard. The other vehicle had a damaged dashboard where someone tried unsuccessfully to steal the car's stereo. Incident reports and photos were taken.

8:56 p.m. Scott Lipp, 19, of West Alenhurst, N.J., was arrested in Van Meter Hall on a charge of being a minor in possession of alcohol.

Saturday October30

12:15 a.m. A party stated that a person was causing problems at a bonfire event, and the person deliberately kicked one of the event organizers. Officers apprehended Deven Reardon, 20, of South Hadley, after he fled on foot and arrested him on charges of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, disorderly conduct, and resisting a police officer making a lawful arrest.

12:34 a.m. Two males were arrested next to Webster Hall. Albert Konan, 19, of Clinton, was arrested on a charge of being a minor in possession of alcohol and Matthew Culinane, 22, of Clinton, was arrested on a charge of possession of a class D substance.

2:42 a.m. Following a traffic stop on Massachusetts Avenue, Sabino Caracciolo, 22, of Springfield, was arrested for operating a vehicle under the influence of alcohol, failure to stop for an emergency vehicle, possession of an open container of alcohol, and possession of a class D substance. Amherst Towing was contacted to tow the vehicle.

Sunday October31

2:59 a.m. Officers investigated activity at the Southwest Mall, and arrested Michael Smith, 21, of Stoughton, on a charge of possession of a class D substance.

1:04 p.m. Two vehicles were reportedly vandalized in the parking lot next to Dickinson Hall. One vehicle's driver's side door lock, rear mirror, wipers and directional signals were broken. The other vehicle's rear passenger window was smashed. Incident reports were taken.

9:37 p.m. A caller stated that all of the bikes in the bike rack outside of Cance Hall had their tires slashed. A total of 13 bikes had their tires slashed.

11:04 p.m. A party reported annoying behavior when they were struck in the face with an egg from a moving vehicle on North Pleasant St. The party had a small bruise, but no medical treatment was required.

Monday November1

8:50 a.m. A caller reportedly discovered a counterfeit $5 bill in their deposit in the campus center.

9:30 a.m. A party reported vandalism at the Fine Arts Center when student design projects were disassembled and re-assembled in different configurations.

7:10 p.m. Ryan Sinclair, 20, of Ware, was arrested for assault and battery and disorderly conduct. He was transported by an officer to Ware.

11:55 p.m. A subject was reported throwing objects out of a Baker Hall window. An officer found a computer monitor on the ground outside of the building. No suspects were found.

Patient deaths down in new cancer drug experiments

By Lindsey Tanner
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Experiments in which new cancer drugs are tested on patients are not as risky as they were a decade ago, according to a study that found a sharp drop in deaths from 1991 to 2002.

At the same time, there was also a decline in the percentage of tumors that shrank in response to the drugs being tested. But the researchers and other cancer experts said that does not mean the drugs were increasingly ineffective.

Some of the newest cancer drugs employ a more targeted approach than older medicines, attacking tumor cells while causing less damage to healthy tissue. These drugs often work by stopping but not necessarily reversing tumor growth, said Dr. Thomas Roberts Jr. of Massachusetts General Hospital, the study's lead author.

The development of such drugs plus better attention to patient safety may explain the declining death rate, Roberts said.

There were 35 drug-related deaths in the 213 studies examined, but such deaths were much more frequent in the earlier experiments than in the more recent ones. There were 24 drug-linked deaths in studies from 1991 to 1994, 10 from 1995 to 1998 and just one from 1999 to 2002.

Deaths from other causes, including cancer, also decreased — from 39 to 17 in the more recent studies.

Vila claims victory in Puerto Rico's gubernatorial race

By Leonardo Aldridge
Associated Press

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico — Puerto Rico's delegate to the U.S. Congress, who favors the island's current status as a U.S. commonwealth, claimed victory Wednesday in a gubernatorial race so close that a recount has been ordered.

"The people have given the mandate to me," said Anibal Acevedo Vila. Rival candidate former Gov. Pedro Rossello has yet to comment publicly on the preliminary results from Tuesday's vote.

With more than 98 percent of ballots counted, Acevedo Vila had 48.58 percent to 48.18 for Rossello.

State Elections Commission President Aurelio Gracia said the recount would be carried out Monday.

Another close race was for the island's non-voting congressional delegate, with the pro-statehood party's Luis Fortuno winning with 48.52 percent of the vote to 48.03 percent for Roberto Prats of Acevedo Vila's Popular Democratic Party. Prats said he wouldn't wait for a recount and conceded defeat Wednesday afternoon.

Rossello's party took control of the legislature from Acevedo Vila's party, winning 18 seats in the 27-member Senate and 34 in the 51-member House, according to preliminary results.

Rossello, governor from 1993 through 2000, had pledged a new campaign to make Puerto Rico the 51st U.S. state through a referendum on statehood, an option narrowly defeated in nonbinding votes in 1993 and 1998.

Commission to investigate death of Emerson student

By Denise Lavoie
Associated Press

BOSTON — A commission investigating the death of a college student during a Red Sox celebration will look not only at what went wrong that night, but also at police crowd control methods and weapons like the one believed to have caused the student's death, the chairman of the panel said Wednesday.

Donald Stern, the former U.S. Attorney for Massachusetts, was tapped last week by Boston Police Commissioner Kathleen O'Toole to lead an independent investigation into the Oct. 21 death of Victoria Snelgrove.

Snelgrove, 21, died hours after being struck in the eye socket with a pepper-spray pellet fired by police as they tried to control a raucous crowd after the Red Sox won the American League pennant over their archrivals, the New York Yankees.

Stern said he met Tuesday with O'Toole to discuss the scope of the panel's investigation, which is separate from a police internal affairs probe and a review by the Suffolk District Attorney's office.

"It's going to be an independent commission capable of reaching independent judgments and getting access to whatever information the commission thinks it needs — period — with no limitations," Stern said.

"We do need to understand what happened that night, there's no question about it. But we also need to look at these larger issues. ... What is this weapon that was used? What about the whole concept of less-lethal weapons? What's out on the market? What has the training been for their use?"

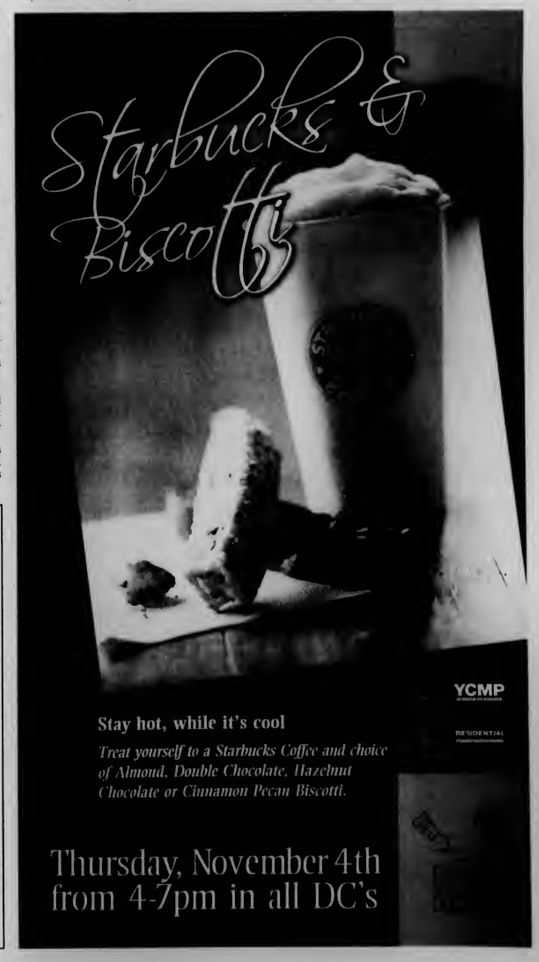
Janice W. Howe, a former state prosecutor and an expert on product liability cases, will also sit on the commission. No other members have been chosen yet, but Stern said he expects another three or four people will be named soon.

The internal police investigation will examine whether police used excessive force and whether they were properly trained in the use of the FN303, a compressed-air gun made by FN Herstal.

The guns were purchased for this summer's Democratic National Convention, but the violence expected by police during political demonstrations never materialized. Police used the weapons for the first time the night Snelgrove was killed.

Suffolk District Attorney Daniel F. Conley's office will review the results of the police investigation and determine whether the use of force was legal and whether any criminal charges will be filed.

Media reports have raised questions about whether the police commander in charge of crowd control that night — Deputy Superintendent Robert O'Toole Jr. — and other officers had proper training.



FN Herstal has said that during training, officers are repeatedly told never to aim the gun at the neck or head. But at least two other fans besides Snelgrove were hit in the face by the pellets.

ONE meeting

As ONE body with ONE voice, we seek ONE thing to know God and to make Jesus Christ known
A time of worship, teaching, and fellowship. All are welcome

Thursday, November 4th at 7:00 PM
Merrill 131

Hosted by: Campus Crusade for Christ, BASIC, InterVarsity, Mercy House and Navigators

YCMP
RESIDENTIAL

Stay hot, while it's cool

Treat yourself to a Starbucks Coffee and choice of Almond, Double Chocolate, Hazelnut Chocolate or Cinnamon Pecan Biscotti.

Thursday, November 4th
from 4-7pm in all DC's

Disbelief and relief mix in Kerry's election loss to President George Bush

By Jay Lindsay
Associated Press

COURTESY BOSTON.COM

John Kerry hugs his wife, Teresa Heinz Kerry, after his concession speech at Faneuil Hall yesterday.

BOSTON — Beacon Hill is known as a home for stately brick row houses and powerful people. The hovering news helicopters, barricaded roads and Secret Service details were a recent addition, thanks to resident John Kerry's bid for the presidency.

With Kerry's campaign over, views about whether the neighborhood will be better off without all the bustle are as divergent as those of the voters who cast ballots in the tight election.

"The closed roads and helicopters — they're around all day when he's here. I think it's an intrusion," said Paula Boyd, 64, who lives a block away from Kerry's Louisburg Square mansion. "I'm glad he lost because I want them to go away."

But for the Rev. Ben King, 29, a resident and pastor at the Church of the Advent, Kerry's defeat by President Bush didn't bring a sense of relief — only disappointment that the man Massachusetts voters had sent to the Senate four times didn't end up giving the state its first hometown son as president since President Kennedy in 1960.

As Kerry remained secluded in his 12-room home crafting a concession speech he delivered Wednesday afternoon at nearby Faneuil Hall, neighbors, tourists and the plain curious stationed themselves outside pondering Kerry's remarkable run.

"I think everybody wishes it would continue," King said. "I think the fact of his being president would have outweighed any inconvenience."

Kerry and his wife, Teresa Heinz Kerry, bought their Louisburg Square home in 1996 for $1.7 million. The home — with its six fireplaces, rooftop deck and elevator — is now assessed at $7 million; it's tucked in the corner of an elegant block of townhouses that surround a leafy, gated park.

The park was based on the London-style garden square whose design was imported by Boston architect Charles Bulfinch, according to "The Garden Squares of Boston" author Phebe S. Goodman. Only Louisburg Square homeowners have keys to unlock the gate.

Kerry, 61, lived there in relative quiet until he became the front-runner for the Democratic nomination and began receiving Secret Service protection in February. Since then, Kerry, who has several homes he owns with his wife around the country, has visited his Beacon Hill residence about six or seven times, neighbors said.

Each time, the road to the square was barricaded with metal gates that could only be crossed with proper identification and proof of residence. The streets around the tightly packed neighborhood shut down and Kerry's motorcade added to the congestion.

Karzai declared Afghan president

By Stephen Graham
Associated Press

KABUL, Afghanistan — Hamid Karzai was officially declared Afghanistan's first-ever popularly elected president Wednesday after a weeks-long fraud probe found no reason to overturn his landslide victory.

While the U.S.-backed leader made an immediate call for unity, his closest rivals refused to concede, undermining hopes for political stability in a country racked by ethnic mistrust.

The U.N.-sponsored electoral board, confirming the results of the Oct. 9 vote, said Karzai had won a five-year term with 55.4 percent, 39 percentage points more than his nearest rival. It was the first national ballot since the fall of the Taliban three years ago.

"His excellency Hamid Karzai is the winner," board chairman Zakim Shah said at a ceremony broadcast live on Afghan state television. "We are announcing the first elected president of Afghanistan."

In Washington, U.S. State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said: "We congratulate President Hamid Karzai on his election as Afghanistan's first democratically elected president and we look forward to his inauguration next month."

Britain, Germany and France also wished Karzai well.

High turnout and the lack of major violence on polling day "demonstrates the scale of the transformation that has already taken place in Afghanistan in the three years since the overthrow of the Taliban," British Prime Minister Tony Blair said.

NATO chief Jaap de Hoop Scheffer, who bulked up the alliance's Afghan security force during the poll, said he looked forward to working with Karzai "in helping Afghanistan build a better, safer future."

The election itself was delayed from June because of insecurity and logistical problems. The result was then held up by weeks of mudslinging by Karzai's challengers who threatened to boycott the outcome.

In its final report released Wednesday, the panel confirmed problems with ballot stuffing and with ink used to mark people's fingers to prevent multiple voting.

But it said there was "no evidence" that the problems were widespread or that they favored only Karzai.

"There were shortcomings," Staffan Darnolf, a Swedish election expert on the panel, said at a news conference. "But they could not have materially affected the overall result."

A spokesman for Karzai, who was in the United Arab Emirates for the funeral of its late president, said his camp was "very glad to finally have the result we wanted" and he appealed to rivals to put a bruising campaign behind them.

Voters give Representative Ellen Story sweeping victory

By Maria Varmazis
Collegian Correspondent

In the hour before the polls in the Bangs Community Center in Amherst prepared to close on Tuesday night, last-minute voters rushed to make their voices heard, despite cold and gloomy weather and prohibitively long lines.

Voters in precincts 4, 5, and 10 showed up until the very last moment, most of the time being made to wait in lines reaching out the door. The steady stream of voters, a mix of students and long-time residents alike was reduced to a slow trickle only in the last 10 minutes of polling.

Amherst voters overwhelmingly supported Democrat Senator John Kerry for president and incumbent Democrat Ellen Story as representative of the third Hampshire district. The heavy support for Kerry in Amherst was one of the highest in all of Massachusetts, according to the Boston Globe. In the entire third Hampshire district, Story had a landslide victory with about 78 percent of the overall vote.

UMass students who voted in the last hour of the Election Day showed overwhelming loyalty to John Kerry; however, that loyalty was often based in a strong desire to remove Bush from office, and not necessarily in agreement with Kerry's policies.

"He was the better of the two evils," said UMass junior Bianca Wynn, who voted for Kerry. Wynn noted that she also cast her ballot for Ellen Story, but that she was not very familiar with either candidate. "I just overheard someone say to vote for Ellen Story," Wynn said.

Joseph Shalkoski, a UMass freshman, said that the war in Iraq was one of the issues that convinced him to vote for Kerry. Shalkoski believed that Bush needed to "back off and reanalyze" his strategy in Iraq.

"I just felt like we needed a change," Shalkoski said. Regarding the election for district representative, Shalkoski cast his vote for challenger Jeanne Traester, although he admitted he was not following the local race as closely as the presidential race.

Pundits and pollsters predicted a record turnout for college-age students around the nation. However, some UMass students found that last-minute registration and identification problems prevented them from voting altogether.

"I feel like the fact that Kerry is trying to get students to vote," said Dawn-Cheri Soares, a UMass sophomore. "Bush had his turn."

Soares said she would have voted Kerry had she been able to vote. When she arrived at the Bangs Center on Tuesday evening, Soares was turned away by the pollsters, who told her she'd have to go home to vote in New Bedford.

Soares said she wondered if something did not go through when she registered to vote, noting that she never received an absentee ballot.

Some UMass students who were not familiar with the local race decided to vote along party lines in a pinch. Jo, a UMass graduate student, admitted he voted for "whoever was the Democrat" in the local race.

Jo also cast his vote for Kerry, noting that his vote was "more like anti-Bush." While he was not particularly fond of the challenger, Jo said he did not want to see Bush re-elected. "Rather than putting him in, we have no other choice, it's why I voted for Kerry," Jo said.

Not all local residents were behind Kerry. Lee Johnson of Amherst, who identifies himself as an independent voter, wrote in Ohio Democratic Representative Dennis Kuc-inich as his choice for president.

COURTESY MASSGOV

Representative Ellen Story

"As far as I know, he's the only one of the original nine [Democratic Party candidates] who voted down the Patriot Act," Johnson said. "There's a whole slew of reasons — pro-choice, Patriot Act, civil liberties in general, the whole war," he said.

"Ellen Story has done an excellent job," he said.

Another Amherst resident, Jane Winans, also voted for Story in part because of Story's Democratic Party affiliation.

According to the Associated Press, Kerry earned 9,705 votes from Amherst, more than six times the amount of votes cast for Bush, who earned 1,463 votes. Approximately 9,332 Amherst residents cast their votes for Story, the twelve-term incumbent, while the challenger, Republican Traester, received 1,522 votes.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
• a grade dispute?
• teacher, roomate or job concerns?
• billing problems?
• harassment?
• ...or any other University related problem?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
523 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 3:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Spring Break
Some experiences don't belong on your resume
Book your trip now!
Cancun, Mexico $793
» 7 nights at the Girasol
Nassau, Bahamas $659
» 7 nights at the Colony Club
(across From the beach)
Negril, Jamaica $794
» 7 nights at the Fun Holiday BeachFront Resort
Subject to change and availability. Taxes included, but other Fees are not. Fares include roundtrip airfare from Boston. Prices are based on quad occupancy
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
U of M Campus Center, Rm. 224
(413) 256.1261
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

• NIKOUKARI CHARRON MAHONEY PC •
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
• Family Law Matters
• Criminal - OUI
• Immigration
• Landlord/Tenant Matters
Mondana Nikoukari, Esq.
Samuel L. Charron, Esq.
Christopher K. Mahoney, Esq.
2 Mattoon Street • Springfield, MA 01105
737-8008
www.ncm-pc.com

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

ignite your appetite
India House
tuesday - Sunday
45 State Street
Northampton
586-6344

the food's the thing
!
cha cha cha
lunch + dinner
134 main st n'ton
586-7311

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2004

"Fight for your opinions, but do not believe that they contain the whole truth, or the only truth."
-Charles A. Dana

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Division evident as elections conclude

A choice leaves us lost

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

And so it's done: another election come and gone (and another cliché introductory line thrown into the ed/op ether). Another round of two preeminently center-right candidates trying to sell their platforms to unaligned or fringe opposition voters, and another flurry of political rhetoric and setting of the philosophical direction the country is to take for the next four years. I have voted for Kerry in the hopes that his agenda, while only marginally distinct from Bush's in terms of foreign policy, would be different enough in terms of domestic policy and rationale for action at home and abroad to warrant my endorsement.

Nevertheless, we are now left in an all-too-familiar situation: we've got an idiot in office and a questionable election to thank for it. The election appears to be more of an election, rather than a selection as it was last time, but it remains nevertheless remains controversial where electronic voting and voter challengers were involved.

Nevertheless, we are now left in an all-too-familiar situation: we've got an idiot in office and a questionable election to thank for it.

When we are back to the "banality" of non-electoral politics and we can all remove the façade of undying loyalty to anything our candidate utters, whichever candidate that may have been, and we must outline some of the more serious issues confronting the country. Notice that I say "the country" and not "our nation." We are by no means a nation united, and it is inscribed into the foundation of the system that governs us. The issues of which I speak are not the so-called "high politics" of war and flashy foreign policy jargon. I will not here address the severe social injustices and humanitarian crimes that are entrenched in U.S. democracy such as our outrageous military spending, a minimum wage well below the poverty line, institutionalized sexism and racism, the normalcy of corporate greed and political corruption, a health care system that makes some underdeveloped nations look like Sweden, voter intimidation, shady polling equipment, the electoral college, etc. Instead, it is increasingly apparent to me that all of the affairs confronting the United States, and all of the issues that will not but should be addressed, are symptomatic of the philosophical shortcomings of our state.

Such issues are important because we make them important. We ask ourselves what is the point of conducting politics, what is democracy's objective, and what makes it qualitatively unique from other political systems. What normative end do we seek from such a system? We find that the purpose of political relations, much like the point of all human systems, is the achievement of happiness; the betterment of life. Put differently, if we dedicate our lives to a system we should expect to end up better off than when we started.

Yet the truth is that our system fails to live up to its purpose. This is no fluke of historical circumstances or temporary setbacks: such failure is inherent in the composition of our polity. Our politics neither improve lives, nor express our views of and aspirations for the world. Sure, we can adapt and make our goals more synonymous with what is likely to get done or what is reasonable to hope for given the assumed framework and political dialogue, but this is all too commonly in fundamental opposition to what we would wish for in an ideal world. Though an important issue is occasionally framed in the mainstream in a reassuring way, such as the Defense Department releasing a high-profile security paper on the threats posed by environmental degradation, this is little more than a rare exception to the norm.

Every candidate this election — that's right, down to the Independents, the Green-Rainbows, the Libertarians, and the Constitutionalists — preached an intense communitarian rhetoric, steeped in archaic nationalist ideas and politically and economically protectionist foreign policy. That's how you relate to voters in the United States. As a body politic we exhibit paranoia in our concern for our own well-being, probably because after all the injustices we've committed around the world over the years we know deep down that it's only a matter of time until the other shoe drops. We are thus unable to see beyond the imaginary boundaries that protect us from the ostensible leviathan of the rest of the world and we believe that our own welfare is somehow fundamentally disconnected from that of the rest of the people around us. Instead of remedying the problem and moving toward a more global conception of community, which is the prevalent trend in the world and not one that necessarily entails forgoing core cultural values, we continue to close ourselves off to the rest of the world.

In case anyone is still unsure, let me definitively tell you that it is this self-induced ignorance about the world and its people that angers so many of them. Even in states that are friendly to Americans, there are certain assumptions that one makes when dealing with an American regarding his or her lack of knowledge and understanding of culture, his or her sense of cultural superiority, and that God somehow blesses America above other countries. From what I've seen, these assumptions continue to be well warranted. Yet there is every reason for us to move forward, embrace cultural modernity, and open up our senses to the winds of the world.

As I said before, none of the candidates in the election were sufficiently cosmopolitan in ethos to achieve this prerogative, though some were much better than others. Nevertheless, the American people have spoken, and they have not only spoken against their best interests, but have taken a step counterproductive to joining the rest of the world. The confidence in our democracy has got to go. I believe in incremental change; I believe it is more effective and less likely to cause negative counter-reactions, but there is a not-so-fine line between incremental change and symbolic gestures from the exclusive sociopolitical oligarchy that rules this country. We are definitively on the wrong side of that line. So let's march onward, America! We must wage valiant war on terrorism and not on state aggression, cultural hegemony, or systemic poverty.

We're going to hell in a bucket, but at least we're enjoying the ride.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian columnist.

It was not meant to be

Matthew Burke

George W. Bush is the winner. And I must admit I'm a bit surprised. Although I voted for Bush, I really thought it was slipping away. Democrats have laid it on thick in the past couple of months. John Kerry had the momentum at the end of the campaigning process and I assumed the Republicans would soon be out of the White House. Dragged out as if there was a Democratic undertow, but where Bush Sr. failed, "W" did not.

John Kerry is a lot better in public than the sometimes-humorous Bush, so I had figured he would win due to the more positive image he had established in the liberal media. The American people spoke however, and quieted the streets of Massachusetts by adding four more years to Bush's Pennsylvania Avenue stay, my jaw dropped. I guess I spend too much time in Amherst.

There will be no Florida of four years ago. There will be no controversy. He won by enough that Kerry has conceded. The popular vote belonged to Bush. No problems here. I will breathe easy knowing that lawyers will have nothing to do with this. We had a decisive election and I was very grateful.

Troops dying in a foreign land will decide an election and not whether Bruce Springsteen endorses you. Kerry failed to reach the average people and lost. Michael Moore had scared people away with his underwear and Ramen noodles.

As I cast my ballot, that in no way helped the incumbent President due to our blue state status, it was evident that my votes for the smaller offices would be my only voice in aspiring to elect my candidates. This was incentive enough for the process to remain important to me.

I voted for the first time Tuesday and it was a positive experience that I look forward to repeating over and over again. I can't begin to imagine that years ago people had died for the right to do what I was doing. The magnitude of voting was omnipotent until I walked out of the middle school in Sandwich. I was moved.

In the civil rights movement, African-Americans were harassed and killed by Klan members determined to thwart a large turnout. Women also couldn't vote and had to fight for that right. My dad told me that he had read a story about the elections in Afghanistan. It was very touching. When the polls opened in their country's inaugural elections the officials looked outside, there calmly waiting was a woman. She was the first in line. They weren't allowed to vote under the Taliban's rule so this is a beautiful thing. Freedom knows no bounds and I have a lot of respect for this process. People have died just to vote.

I walked into my polling place and was quickly looked over by a cop doing security. I voted and I went to a bar with a few buddies to watch the state-by-state tallies and have a couple of beers. It was interesting because my friends and I entered the empty dive and were positioned staring right across from one another. We had all voted but nobody had acknowledged it until the television coverage had gotten underway. I looked at my buddy Mike and asked, "Who did you vote for?"

I just needed to know. It was a curiosity so great that I could not contain myself. All six had voted for Bush. I wondered how Kerry had lost so many people. He was supposed to be popular in this state. One of my journalism professors had predicted a landslide Kerry victory. What had happened?

Another friend walked in and was asked, "Who'd you vote for bro?" Without pause Bush's name was spoken again. "I voted for Bush and the other Republicans," David said.

This is when it became clear to me. Kerry did not win because people looked at a man and saw empty and hollow promises and ideas. The Democrats lost ground in all aspects of our government Tuesday from the state to the federal level. Even my family, who usually votes Democrat had a small portion break away and go Republican this year. I tried to analyze John Kerry's errors and miscues, but I didn't know where to begin.

I feel his candidacy was a miscue on the part of Democrats. I guess that's all I could think of. He had been for the war and then against it because there is simply nothing else to run on. I hate to say it but people don't seem to care about the economy right now. Security is by far the main concern on the minds of all. Troops dying in a foreign land will decide an election and not whether Bruce Springsteen endorses you. Kerry failed to reach the average people and lost. Michael Moore had scared people away with his underwear and Ramen noodles.

John Kerry will forever be linked to Michael Dukakis in Massachusetts's lore. They were the "almosts" and the "could-a-beens" of Boston. Kerry will be in the Senate for a while but he will always be haunted by the fact that all the stirring of the hornet's nest couldn't make the bees come out. The voters weren't interested in electing him. It is sad today that the country will remain divided. The importance of this election was crucial for the United States and we are better off, but we need to come together again and make America great.

Bow away graciously John Kerry. Your 15 minutes of national attention is up. Try and make Massachusetts a better place to live, work, and reside. It wasn't meant to be.

Matthew Burke is a Collegian columnist.

A tale of two Americas

The polls are closed, ballots have been counted, and a concession has been made. These maybe all the certainties we have at this point immediately following the election.

An election that seemed to be heading in the same direction as the last presidential election turned into a more clear-cut victory for the incumbent, President George W. Bush. Ohio, which was expected by many to be the most important battleground state, went to President Bush by a clear margin. America, however, remains split over the election as nearly half of those who took part in the election cast their ballot for someone other than the winner.

Yesterday, Senator John Kerry conceded to the Bush campaign urging the President to bring a polarized nation together. This will prove to be one of the biggest challenges for the President over the next four years as this election has shown that our nation is sharply divided along several lines.

For many Massachusetts residents, the next four years may be very long, as the traditional blue state voted strongly in favor of the challenger Kerry. However this sentiment carries farther than Massachusetts as the remainder of New England, New York, and New Jersey joined Massachusetts in blue. The south, as expected, went to the Republican incumbent but the northern states of Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota and Illinois all went to the Democratic challenger. As expected of the "heartland of America," the Midwest was largely Republican and the west coast, like much of the East, went to the Democrats.

Furthermore, some of the most important states in this election were sharply divided. Ohio, which had 20 very important Electoral College votes, went to Bush by merely two percentage points. Florida, the state that prolonged the 2000 election for months, went to Bush by only 400,000. Key states like Pennsylvania, Nevada, Iowa, and New Mexico split almost in half.

This election was supposed to be popular referenda for the approval of the Bush administration's policy over the past four years. If that much is true, it is clear that the nation is very divided on the way it views the triumphant president and he will certainly have much work to do to bridge the gaps which exist between the many Americas we see today.

Over the next four years several issues of utmost importance will arise. It seems almost certain that one, if not two, Supreme Court justices will retire and appointments from the oval office will have to be made. Such decisions will affect our nation years into the future much after President Bush's second term concludes. The war will need to come to a conclusion or the president will have to show America a window of hope in a bloody conflict of which many are doubtful. Lastly, social and economic issues, from job loss and tax cuts, to gay marriage and abortion, have divided this nation on ideological and class levels.

With many highly conservative communities playing large roles in delivering this victory to the president, it may be hard to believe he can ignore their support and work to find the middle ground on these issues. The gap is wide, and as time progresses it only seems to be widening further. The burden now falls on the Bush administration over the next four years to move this nation forward.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Collegian editorial board.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

A MISTAKE MADE

By electing George W. Bush for a second term, America sends a frightening, narrow-minded message to the world. I am ashamed to be associated with this once-great country, ashamed that the world opinion of my nation and I will have dropped substantially by the end of the day. I did not vote for Bush, yet Republicans are telling us to "join together," for America is now more divided than ever. Kerry has conceded, and we must all "move on." Until today, that last phrase meant a victory for the Democrats, a victory for truth, true leadership, honesty, intelligence, and integrity. I, for one, will never stand behind a president or a nation that supports the following.

By electing George W. Bush, we are telling the world that America is a nation ruled by moral values and fear, and not by common sense; that intelligence has no place in our Executive offices; that we can be lied to repeatedly by the administration in power, but it won't cause us to question our leadership, much less vote against it; that the environment does not matter; that the lives of American and allied soldiers should be sacrificed not for a real cause but instead to prove a point; that the "War on Terror" is something to be won as if hatred can be quantified and made obsolete; that a woman does not deserve the right to have an abortion.

We are telling the world that homosexuals are somehow less human, and don't deserve the marriage rights granted their heterosexual counterparts; that defense spending and tax cuts for wealthy Americans are more important than funding for primary, secondary, and higher education; that strong economies with lower unemployment, is not a priority; that universal healthcare is not a priority; that the benefits from business with Islamic fundamentalists are more important than universal civil rights; that the United States is not afraid to act unilaterally in order to invade another country, even if it means sacrificing longstanding alliances; that one doesn't have to speak English properly to be president.

I was confident that America was above these things, that we expected nothing less than honesty from those whom we elect to lead us. Nov. 2 was an opportunity for us to prove, to the world and ourselves, that we would not condone another four years of such a misleading administration. Take a good look, America: it's time to raise our standards.

Alissa Thuotte
UMass Student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

i ♥ huckabees

takes viewers on an existential trip

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"I Heart Huckabees" may be the most looniest, most alienating, most what-were-they-thinking mainstream movie ever made. And I wouldn't have it any other way. David O. Russell has directed what may be called the world's first screwball philosophical comedy, and the result is something strange, chaotic, and completely, utterly nonsensical, yet at the same time it's something galvanizing, mesmerizing and absolutely wonderful. It's a film of big ideas that feels lighter than air.

Russell is juggling a lot of balls in "I Heart Huckabees," and he wants us to actually think — yes, he doesn't want us to just sit back and absorb the movie, but he wants us to sit and ponder its themes and its philosophies, which aren't symbolic, but actually laid right there, out in the open. This is unapologetically uncool, earnest, heart-on-sleeve moviemaking, which has the ironic effect of making it really, really cool.

Jason Schwartzmann, wearing a suit jacket and long hair that makes him look like a cross between an indie hipster and a grapola hippie, stars as Albert, a neurotic environmentalist who hopes to save a marsh and accompanying forest from the ravages of urban sprawl by reciting his dreadful poetry. Yep, Albert is the kind of earnest, obsessive nerd who thinks his own awful art can change the world ("You rock, rock" is one of his lines.) All that awful art does is make him be at odds with his fellow environmentalists, and when he sees the same towering young Sudanese doorman on three separate occasions, Albert becomes convinced of some giant cosmic design for his life. Are those three coincidental meetings meaningful? What will they tell him about his life?

Albert goes to see Bernard and Vivian Jaffe (Dustin Hoffman and Lily Tomlin), a pair who bill themselves as "existential detectives" — they'll follow you around to figure what's really causing the malaise in your life.

Albert's at odds with Brad (Jude Law, wearing a shaky middle-American accent) a slick corporate raider type at Hucakbees, a Wal-Mart-esque chain store that's attempting to co-opt Albert's environmental group in order to pave over the marsh (or at least part of the marsh.) Brad's having a shallow, meaningless affair with the pretty Hucakbees spokesmodel Dawn (Naomi Watts, finding new variations on manic, bug-eyed neuroticism), and soon they both come under the Jaffes' existential eye. Along the way, Albert is introduced to Tommy (Mark Wahlberg, never more brilliant) a crazed, petroleum-fighting fireman (he rides to fires on his bike) who lures Albert to the teachings of Caterine Vaubin (Isabelle Huppert), a sexy French nihilist whose nothing-matters ethos puts her at odds with the Jaffes' optimistic, everything-is-connected teachings.

"I Heart Huckabees" is a hectoring philosophical treatise, layering on one conflicting big idea after another until the whole things threatens to collapse, but it's also a brave and wholly original philosophical dissertation. Russell directs each scene with a goofy screwball zest, and he gives us images of batty incongruity (faces peel apart and morph into each other; Albert runs through a nightmare dreamworld of his most intimate fears.) Russell, in effect, is like Charlie Kaufman minus the irony.

Everything about "I Heart Huckabees" can be described as weird, but it's an invigorating weirdness. The film makes you feel better by making you question the reality of what you're seeing. There were times when it was difficult to understand the movie, but the viewer continues to want to know what will happen next. Russell keeps you in suspense wondering what new absurdity he has up his sleeve.

Fortunately, the cast jumps right into Russell's brave new world. Hoffman, wearing a graying Beatles hairdo, and Tomlin make a charming New Age married couple (contrasting Tomlin's professional yin to Hoffman's slightly befuddled, idealistic yang is a hoot) while Wahlberg unveils new shades he never before showed as an actor. He could grow into a star of real power.

Russell doesn't offer up any real answers in "I Heart Huckabees," but he does revel in his truth-seeking shenanigans. His last film was the great, idealistic Gulf War adventure "Three Kings" and once again he proves a rare filmmaker of artistic sincerity. You may hate everything about the loony-tunes madness of "I Heart Huckabees" — I loved every bizarre minute of it — but you won't leave the theater not talking about those big questions.

COURTESY MOVIEPOSTERS.COM

Latest release from Jimmy Eat World is 'future' of emo

COURTESY JIMMY EAT WORLD.NET

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Emo is not a genre of music known for its maturity. It's been classified, demonized and stereotyped for its appeal to whiny, angsty, borderline depressed teenagers who identify with the genre's perpetual sad callowness. Basically it's soft-punk music made with musicianship rather than anarchy and an emotional range that moves beyond anger into sadness and defeat. Its themes seem perpetually embedded in high school loss; girl trouble is often a well-known component of most emo songs — its this focus on bleeding heart woundedness, with passive-aggressively angry invective spit at an idealized female form that often gives emo an untruthful connotation of misogyny.

Jimmy Eat World
'Futures'
Interscope

With that, emo is often mocked by all but its most ardent fans for being a particularly puerile, juvenile and self-absorbed form of music. From Weezer, whose 1996 flop album "Pinkerton" is a hallowed example of the genre, to Taking Back Sunday and into the more aggressive emo offshoot billed as "screamo" (the land of groups like The Used and Story of the Year and My Chemical Romance), the genre has been reviled, vilified and mocked for its adherence to rather adolescent values.

It's also a genre that is known for being a fairly exclusive club. As emo gets bigger and bigger in the way of grunge, it seems to be on the verge of exploding into a truly mainstream phenomenon (rather than just huddling on the verge of cultural popularity.) Emo act after emo act debuts big on the charts, only to plummet in its subsequent weeks, and the genre hasn't produced a chart-topping, inescapable hit single in the three years since Jimmy Eat World became unexpected phenoms.

Jimmy Eat World released their fourth album, and third major label album, titled "Jimmy Eat World" (originally titled "Bleed American," after the non-starting first single, before 9/11) in the summer of 2001, along the poppy, optimistic track "The Middle." The band had already survived the major label ringer, having been dumped after their two albums for Capitol — 1996's "Static Prevails" and 1999's acclaimed "Clarity" — stiffed.

With "The Middle" they unexpectedly bounced back, claiming a ubiquitous radio hit and flowering from cult band to platinum-selling rock hopefuls (much in the way Modest Mouse did this year.) Then the quartet, usually referenced as the best in the emo genre, disappeared, with the specter of one-hit won

See FUTURES on page 7

Is he worth waiting for?

Original Sin

Eve

I felt slightly hesitant to write an article this week.

Why? Because I realize the stories I tell will inevitably hurt someone that is associated with me.

In the past year, I have upset good friends, angered ex-boyfriends and contributed to my reputation on a weekly basis. So I ask myself; why do I write? Why do I feel the need to publish my most private secrets? And as I sit and contemplate my next decision, I think back as to why I began writing in the first place. It was all due to one very nasty relationship with one very hurtful guy that I just happened to fall in love with.

When we broke up, I broke down. I vowed to remain single until someone proved worthy enough, and until then, I was on a mission to understand and correct all of the mistakes I had made in my past relationships. I spent 14 months dissecting every bit of insecurity, every emotion and every encounter with every person that came my way. All of these variables caused an explosion of thoughts that enabled me to write, so others could relate. Maybe some could even learn from my mistakes.

It has been difficult to describe some of my experiences, for not all of them are tasteful and most are offensive. I apologize. I am aware of that very thin line in which I dare cross, but I hold back for fear I might cause even more unnecessary drama. I have recently been able to admit that I might be the only one who loses in the end, maybe the only one that will remain hurt after each story. I guess I can say these stories haunt my lifestyle by preventing healthy relationships. I might emphasize a need to stay single, but my reasoning is not entirely true. I tend to misrepresent what I do want by saying I do not want it at all. But in reality, a relationship could be a possibility if I just found the right guy. And at this very moment I believe I have.

It all happened unexpectedly, though. Isn't that what most couples say? From the moment we laid eyes on each other everything seemed to make sense. He broke through my unemotional barrier and is on his way to my heart. I am confident enough to admit he was worth waiting a year for.

I feel relieved, but there is just one problem. There always is, right?

He is being very careful. His behavior ultimately led to our first serious conversation. "It is my columns, isn't it?" I said as I cringed for his response. He looked away as if my assumption was too close for comfort.

"It's not that they bother me, but I just don't want to get hurt," he replied.

And then I understood. He fears becoming yet another failed relationship in my columns. He may also fear my exaggerated reasoning for staying single. I don't blame him. When a new guy enters my life, he unknowingly walks directly into a minefield. My decisions are so fragile; the slightest mistake can turn me off, but I really believe this is because I have never felt entirely secure with the guys I meet. Maybe this one will be different? I don't know, but I have a pretty good feeling about it.

The only question is, can he overcome his assumptions and wait and see? If he chooses to, then he was really worth waiting for.

Eve is a Collegian columnist.

After 16 seasons 'The Simpsons' still get laughs

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bart Simpson is acting like himself, which is to say naughty. And he sounds like himself, with that familiar mischievous lilt.

But Bart's voice is coming out of a petite blonde wearing a fluffy, bright-pink wrap. Dumpy Homer has morphed into a lanky fellow, and mom Marge's towering purple hair is brown and tastefully cropped.

The event was a "table read," when the cast of "The Simpsons" gathered with a roomful of writers, producers and guests, using their imaginations to conjure up the animated family with the distinctive mustard hue.

It was just one of the steps toward crafting an episode of the Fox series that begins its 16th season Sunday at 8 p.m. EDT. The run is remarkable for any show — but especially for one like this.

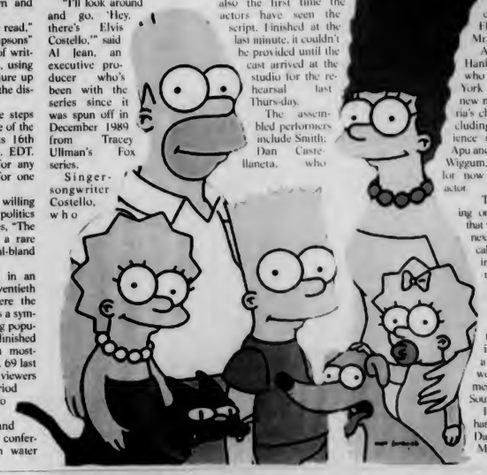
Irreverent, witty and willing to take on anything from politics to religion to family values, "The Simpsons" has provided a rare bit of spice for the oatmeal-bland bowl of TV broadcasting.

The table read, held in an oversize trailer at the Twentieth Century Fox studio where the series is produced, itself is a symbol of the show's enduring popularity. A decade ago, it finished the season as the 67th most-watched show; it was No. 69 last season with 10.7 million viewers and won its time period among the coveted 18 to 49 age group.

Actors, producers and writers sit at a massive conference table littered with water bottles and note pads. Invitation-only visitors ring the table. (Noticeably absent are the network executives who always haunt rehearsals; "The Simpsons" has a rare stipulation, won by executive producer James L. Brooks, limiting Fox meddling.)

"It's sort of the hottest ticket on the lot," said Yeardley Smith, who voices young Lisa, the wise Simpson daughter.

"I'll look around and go, 'Hey, there's Elvis Costello,'" said Al Jean, an executive producer who's been with the series since it was spun off in December 1989 from Tracey Ullman's Fox series.



Singer-songwriter Costello, who provided his voice for one episode, popped up at the table read for another.

"People often come for the fun and bring their children," said Jean.

It's a treat for observers but serious work for the cast and producers. This is the first time a script has been performed after months of writing and revision.

This particular week it's also the first time the actors have seen the script. Finished at the last minute, it couldn't be provided until the cast arrived at the studio for the rehearsal last Thursday.

The assembled performers include Smith; Dan Castellaneta, who received his third Emmy this year for voicing Homer and whose other characters include Krusty the clown and Grampa Simpson; Nancy Cartwright as Bart; Julie Kavner as Marge; and Harry Shearer, who does an array of voices including Ned Flanders and Mr. Burns.

Absent is Hank Azaria, who was in New York rehearsing a new musical. Azaria's characters, including convenience store owner Apu and police Chief Wiggum, are voiced for now by another actor.

They're working on an episode that won't air until next season, typical for a labor-intensive animated series. A roughly 21-minute episode takes about nine months to create, including the animation work done domestically and in South Korea.

In the script at hand (written by Danny Chun), Marge and Bart are engaged in unusual mother-son bonding, breezing through Springfield on a tandem bicycle and singing "Sweet Home Alabama."

Marge: "I can't remember our last outing together."

Bart: "It was to see that court-appointed psychiatrist."

Marge: "Oh yeah. He should never have let you near that letter opener."

The actors move briskly through their lines and most of the jokes draw guffaws from the room. But one shaggy-haired figure proves a tough customer, rarely even smiling — series creator and executive producer Matt Groening.

"He's not an easy laugh, so when you get a laugh out of him you feel like, 'Yes!' It's a big deal," said Smith.

Groening follows the script carefully, jotting down notes for the writers. Among his suggestions: omit a giggle from baby Maggie Simpson in one scene, and beef up another in which Marge finds herself without a partner for her new bike built for two.

"He wanted more of a visual with Marge being lonely, so we put in a parody of 'Midnight Cowboy' where Marge and the bicycle are walking around Springfield to that harmonica music," Jean said.

After all these years, Jean has developed his own script shorthand: a check mark for a joke that gets a laugh, an "X" for one that falls flat. "Something that's sweet but doesn't necessarily get a huge laugh will stay in," Jean said.

After all these years "it's a fairly well-oiled machine," observed Smith. Actors who are out of town, like Azaria, can record their lines at a convenient studio.

Jimmy Eat World marks turning point for emo

FUTURES from page 6

der looming over their heads like a never-dying raincloud.

The good news is that Jimmy Eat World is back. The bad news is that the specter is still there. Nothing on "Futures," which marks the long-running bands fifth album (as well as third label, after Dreamworks got engulfed by Interscope) has the instantaneous catchiness of "The Middle." Nothing on the album is as poppy as the best songs on "Jimmy Eat World," but the group demonstrates a forceful new maturation, not to mention confidence, on "Futures."

The album cuts the difference between the bubbliness of "Jimmy Eat World" and the spacy experimentation of "Clarity." To say that "Futures" isn't as poppy as the 2001 album isn't to say that it doesn't have it's fair share of gleaming, polished hooks. It's just that, now that they got the radio album out of the way, they can shade their hooks with dark deeper textures.

Jimmy Eat World still whine, but this time it's with the wistful longing of adulthood, romantic woes, and thoughts of alienation move out of the halls of high school into the real world of real problems.

Both the urgent, fervent first single "Pain" and the dreamy, if lethargically meandering, ballad "Drugs or Me" look at drug addiction and alienation. The best song, the gorgeously longing "Work" (with backing vocals courtesy of Liz Phair) is the song most likely to storm radio, but it also is textured and nuanced look the appeal of love. The heartbreaking "Kill" similarly looks at romance, this time though, the anguish of it ending. But beyond love it looks at regret, of saying things that should have been said, of doing things that should have been done, of the mistakes is what it means to be human. "The World You Love" illuminates themes of depression and looking back at life that once was.

"Futures" isn't all melancholy. The title song is an optimistic hymn to a better life ahead (though one with a imperceptible political undercurrent in the line "I hope for better/in November") and even when the songs look inward at heartbreak and sorrow, when the songs turn pensive and lonely, the ghost of hopefulness hovers over it all. The songs may be sad, but they aren't cynical. They seem to say that even when you feel nothing but unhappiness, at least you still feel, and that's what it means to be alive.

COURTESY JIMMYEATWORLD.NET

'Futures' is the newest album from Jimmy Eat World. The band had a hit in 2001 with 'The Middle.'

HEY YOU...
YEAH YOU...
...TE FOR ARTS!

berkstore.com
Take 20% off Your 1st Purchase
We've got the HOTTEST clothes (Juicy, 7's), the COOLEST shoes (Puma's, Uggs) & the EASIEST shopping experience!!!
Use Coupon Code: 43000

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at the Amherst locations only.
Original roll processing only.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2005
The WRITING PROGRAM PLACEMENT TEST will be offered on:
MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8 @ 7pm in HASA 124
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9 @ 7 pm in HASA 124
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112/113, College Writing.
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

Panda East 熊国
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!
Open Hours:
Mon - Thur: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Fri & Sat: 11:30am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12pm-10pm
Delivery: 413.549.0077
telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
We accept OCMP and all major credit cards.
We serve Chinese and Japanese food and also feature a sushi bar.

comedy CONNECTION TONIGHT!
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
7PM & 10:15PM!
From "Saturday Night Live" and the movies "Anger Management", "Happy Gilmore" and "The Wedding Singer"
KEVIN NEALON
NOV. 12TH
"Jeff Greene" on HBO's "Curb Your Enthusiasm"
JEFF GARLIN
NOV. 13TH
a.k.a. "Dr. Dirty"
JOHN VALBY

UMass to battle state rival Northeastern

FOOTBALL from page 10

play."

Brown, who has emphasized taking the attention from the situation away from himself and his players, continued to do so this week.

"I want to keep the spotlight on my players, who are playing hard on a week-to-week basis, and we've overcome some adversity to get back to this point," Brown said. "I'm hoping to just keep that frame of mind going."

The guys who will ultimately settle things on the field are planning on putting their necks on the line for their coach on Saturday.

"It also means a lot to us, too, because coach came here, and he's like a father figure to most of us," wide receiver Brandon London said. "So we're going to play for him, and we're going to play our hearts out, try to win these last two (games) and hopefully set the tone for next year."

Another factor that Brown added to the Huskies' program was a solid home field advantage that has spilled over into this season. Northeastern is 19-3 in its last 22 games at Parsons Field, and had a 16-game home winning streak snapped last week when New Hampshire traveled to Brookline and came away as 27-23 victors.

"That's what we're looking forward to, is another great challenge," Brown said. "They've only had one loss at home in the last 17 games during the regular season so we've got our work cut out for us."

Easily, the biggest playmaker on the Northeastern side of the field will be middle linebacker Liam Ezekiel, who has 474 career tackles and is only six shy of setting the Division I-AA all-time record. He recorded 15 tackles last week against UNH, and he has chalked up at least 10 tackles in 18 of his last 19 games.

"He's a 400-pound bencher who can go sideline to sideline," Brown said. "He's a brawler. He doesn't need you to fend people off. He's going to fend them off himself. He's got tremendous strength, and he has tremendous belief that he can get to the ball."

Ezekiel underwent surgery on his thumb yesterday, but he is expected to play on Saturday, although his contributions may be limited.

UMass senior captain and offensive guard Rob Kane is looking forward to lining up against arguably the best individual wrecking force on the defensive side of the ball in I-AA this season.

"You look forward to that match up as an offensive lineman," Kane said. "You're going to go at him, target him, look for your screens, and any chance you get, you go for him."

London, UMass' second leading receiver with 28 receptions for 375 yards, said he isn't going to let anyone on the Huskies' defense altar his approach to the game.

"I'm going to go across the middle, I'm going deep, I'm going wherever they want me to go," London said. "No one on that defense scares me or puts fear in my heart so I just hope they bring their A-game because we're certainly going to bring ours."

Northeastern, which is riding a three-game losing streak, relies mainly on the play of quarterback Shawn Brady. He threw 10 touchdown passes and only four interceptions during the Huskies' first five games.

Over the past three losses, however, he has only thrown three touchdowns, and seven picks, and his third interception last week was returned for the eventual game-winning touchdown.

"He's their leader on offense," Brown said. "There's no question about it. They're one of the leading pass offenses in America right now. As he goes, so do they."

After facing the task of defending Maine receiver Christian Pereira last week, the Minutemen will have another game-breaker to contain on Saturday in Cory Parks, who has caught 53 balls for 943 yards and 11 touchdowns through eight games.

Though his threat is comparable to Pereira's, his makeup as a receiver is very different.

"[Parks is] not as big in stature [as Pereira but is] lean, great route-runner, great catcher, quick," Brown said.

"Where Christian Pereira can dominate you with his size and strength, (Parks) is more of a quick, fast type of receiver with great hands."

Projected Starters

Offense
QB 10 - Tim Day, Sophomore
RB 5 - Steve Baylark, Junior
FB 40 - Rich Demers, Senior
WR 11 – Jason Peebler, Senior
TE 44 – Mike Douglas, Junior
LT 77 – Colin Stoetzel, Junior
LG 74 – Rob Kane, Senior
C 62 – Alex Miller, Sophomore
RG 79 – David Thompson, Sophomore
RT 68 – Matt Austin, Freshman
WR 4 – Brandon London, Sophomore

Defense
DE 95 – Keron Williams, Junior
DT 57 – Justin Schweighardt, Junior
DT 99 – Wilner Alexis, Freshman
DE 48 – David Burris, Freshman
OLB 35 – L.A. Love, Junior
MLB 51 – Serge Tikum, Junior
OLB 29 – Brad Anderson, Junior
CB 26 – Tracy Belton, Sophomore
FS 34 – Shannon James, Junior
SS 7 – James Ihedigbo, Sophomore
CB 34 – Brandon Freeman, Freshman

Special Teams
K 46 – Michael Torres, Sophomore
P 13 – Christian Koegel, Sophomore
KR 22 – Bryan Smith, Freshman
PR 87 – Nathanael Hasselbeck, Junior

Offense
QB 16 – Shawn Brady, Senior
RB 22 – James West, Freshman
FB 33 – Bobby French, Junior
WR 85 -Marc Thomas, Sophomore
TE 83 – Kevin Lawlor, Senior
LT 70 – Ryan Gibbons, Junior
LG 75 – Adam Bourget, Senior
C 67 – Bob McDonough, Junior
RG 72 – Mike Roseborough, Junior
RT 59 – Keith Driscoll, Sophomore
WR 3 – Corey Parks, Junior

Defense
DE 18 – James Abosi, Senior
DT 94 – Brandon Cook, Junior
DT 55 – Gene Rich, Junior
DE 50 – Matt Campopiano, Sophomore
OLB 1 – Mike Hall, Senior
MLB 51 – Liam Ekekiel, Senior
OLB 25 – Jay Frank, Freshman
CB 38 – Gavin Potter, Senior
SS 24 – E.J. Jackson, Junior
CB 9 – Bismark Osei, Junior

Special Teams
K 29 - Miro Kesic, Junior
P 13 - Jared White, Sophomore
KR 21 - Shawn Gyles, Sophomore
PR 3 – Corey Parks, Junior

A win Brown deserves

MARZELLI from page 8

to UMass' quest for a winning season, but there is no hiding the underlying personal nature and true ramifications of this contest.

What Northeastern did in successfully negotiating for Brown's three-game suspension was shameful, tasteless and unprofessional in the opinion of this writer. The lawsuit and suspension deliberately embarrassed a proud man and a good football coach, and effectively tarnished what should have been an exciting time for Brown and his family. After revamping a traditionally pitiful football program and bringing in some of the best players to ever play for the Huskies, it was not what Brown deserved — not what any man deserved, regardless of the situation.

With that being said, if there isn't a reason for the Minutemen to be at their best on Saturday, then good luck finding one. Football is an emotional roller coaster played out over a long, grueling season by a family of men, and reciprocation often helps keeps teams together. Brown had the backs of the Jason Peeblers and the Shannon James when it was Colgate that needed to be beaten, and now it is up to those same leaders of this team to see that Brown has that same effort coming back his way.

Brown continues to stress that his team will approach Saturday's game as if it were any other, but vengeance is not something one can ask for, it is simply carried out. As the weeks pass, Brown continues to watch his first UMass team fight from whistle to whistle, come together and become closer as a group than they have all season — that must not change on Saturday.

There is a lot more at stake than just an intrastate football game when the Minutemen and Huskies square off. Very simply, these two schools no longer like each other for a myriad of obvious reasons, and an intense, vicious and bitter rivalry has been born.

The Minutemen know they smell blood, and for the right reasons. So in the name of the coach who sophomore wide receiver Brandon London referred to as a "father figure" earlier this week, they must go for the jugular, and go hard.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli@dailycollegian.com

Rudd to host A-10 tourney

ATLANTIC 10 from page 10

in every major offensive category, and the years of playing together on the field is obvious.

Much of the hype around the tournament will be paid to the Dayton Flyers. They have dominated the Atlantic 10 all year round. Not only did Dayton finish the conference schedule undefeated, but they did it all in convincing fashion, outscoring the conference competition 27 to 3.

The Flyers' closest game of the season came against potential second round opponent St. Joe's. In that game, the Hawks took the Flyers through two grueling overtime periods before the Flyers put it away with a goal from junior Forward Katie Lowstuter.

Dayton has accomplished much of this because of junior forward, Reba Sedlacek. She leads the team and conference in many offensive categories. Her 13 goals and 53 points on the season have earned her A-10 Player of the Week honors.

Minutewomen to battle UR

WOMEN'S SOCCER from page 10

defense, and she's hanging on by just a shred," Rudy said. "Come gameday, she comes hard."

The one-two punch of speedy freshman Britt Canfield and skillful senior Lindsey Fairweather will have to create scoring opportunities on Richmond's end of the field if they are to hang tough, but it won't be easy against the Spiders' vaunted defense, especially with A-10 Defensive Player of the Year candidate Hillary Prince making the calls in the backfield.

The junior out of Plano, Texas is tied with three others on the team for most goals, with three.

"She's a great defender," Rudy said. "She's my pick for Defensive Player of the Year."

Three goals is all Richmond's highest-scoring player has on the year. Other players on other teams have five times as many goals, like St. Bonaventure's Heather McDougall (15 goals), but the Bonnies won't be at the A-10 Tournament. Richmond, however, and their defense-first approach to soccer will be.

The Spiders were the only A-10 team in 2004 to ever have a lead against the mighty Dayton Flyers this season.

On Oct. 22, the Spiders got out to an early 1-0 lead midway through the first half with a miraculous goal by junior Annette Isham. Firing a shot from about 30 yards away, the ball sailed over goalie Stacy DeLuca's head and into the net for the first goal of the game.

The Flyers responded very quickly with a goal of their own nine minutes later, however, and eventually tallied a game-winner in the second from Alicija Bredfo.

THE MONKEY BAR

Thursday
FEATURING
DJ Menace

Friday
Ladies Night
No cover
FEATURING
DJ Trend

Saturday
FEATURING
A Guest DJ

Drink Specials

Vodka & Tonic $3.00
Gin & Tonic $3.00
-Sex on the Beach $3.00
-Long Island Ice Tea $4.50
Special Beer
Bud & Bud Lite Pitcher $6.00

Private Parties:
call : 413.259.0006

The Monkey Bar 63 N. Pleasant St. 413.259.1600

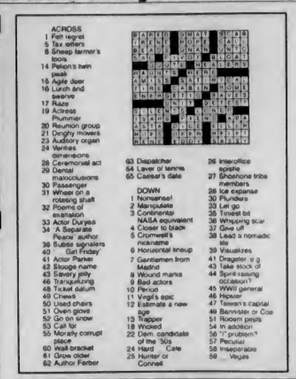
Luciana Souza: Brazilian Duos
with Romero Lubambo, guitar
Thursday, November 4th
Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.
Down Beat Critics Poll "Rising Star" for three years in a row and Grammy Award nominee for Best Vocal Jazz Album.
This performance is part of the Seventh Annual Billy Taylor Jazz Residency.
Sponsored by Fleet and The River 93.9

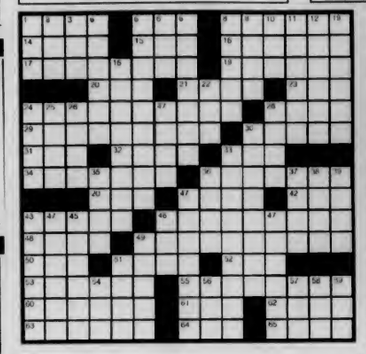
The Los Angeles Guitar Quartet
Center Series
Sunday, November 7th
Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.
Along with LAGQ favorites, the program includes works from their new "The Guitar Heros" album with tributes to Zappa, Hendrix, Michael Hedges, Pat Metheny, Django Reinhardt, Chet Atkins, Pepe Romero and more.
Sponsored by Quality Inn and the Valley Advocate

Ying String Quartet
Beethoven Quartet Cycle
Sunday, November 21st
Bowker Auditorium at 7:30 p.m.
The Quartet will perform Beethoven's Opus 18, No. 1, Opus 18, No. 2 and Opus 130. Plan to join the Quartet for a pre-concert talk at 6:45 p.m. Viennese coffee and desserts will be available for purchase.

For Tickets: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM
THE FINE ARTS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST

UNIVERSITY PRODUCTIONS & CONCERTS PRESENTS:
theNEWDEAL
5th POCKET
NEWSAY
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2004
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM, 10:00 PM
TICKETS AVAILABLE AT DOOR BEGINNING 11/3
$8 UMASS STUDENTS
$12 FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
$16 GENERAL PUBLIC





Quote of the Day

"Yesterday is not ours to recover, but tomorrow is ours to win or to lose."

-Lyndon B. Johnson

ACROSS
1 Felt regret
5 Tax letters
8 Sheep farmer's boss
14 Pelion's twin peak
15 Agile deer
16 Lunch and evening
17 Rues
19 Actress Plummer
20 Reunion group
21 Dinghy movers
23 Auditory organ
24 Vanities dimensions
28 Ceremonial act
29 Dented malocclusions
30 Passenger
31 Wheel on a rotating shaft
32 Poems of exaltation
33 Actor Duryea
34 "A Separate Peace" author
36 Bubba signalers
40 ___ Girl Friday
41 Actor Parker
42 Boogie name
43 Savory jelly
46 Tranquilizing
48 Ticket datum
49 Cheek
50 Used chairs
51 Oven glows
52 Go on snow
53 Call for
55 Morally corrupt place
60 Wall bracket
61 Grow older
62 Author Ferber
63 Dapsidcher
64 Lover of tennis
65 Caesar's date
DOWN
1 Nonsense!
2 Manipulate
3 Continental NASA equivalent
4 Closer to Blaze
5 Cromwell's nickname
6 Monumental lineup
7 Gentlemen from Madrid
8 Wound marks
9 Bad actors
10 Period
11 Virgil's epic
12 Estimate a new age
13 Trapper
18 Worked
22 Dem. candidate of the '30s
24 Hard Cafe
25 Hunter or Connell
26 Interoffice sphere
27 Shoshone tribe members
28 Ice expanse
30 Plunders
33 Let go
35 Tiniest bit
36 Whispering star
37 Give off
38 Lead a nomadic life
39 Visualizes
41 Dragster, e.g.
43 Take stock of
44 Spirit-raising occasion?
45 WWII general
46 Hipster
47 Taiwan's capital
48 Bannister or Cox
51 Rodent pests
54 In addition
56 "I" problem?
57 Peculiar
58 Inseparable
59 ___ Vegas

Amherst Brewing Company
The place where there's always fun and entertainment brewin'!
November 4th
Karoke
w/ Cloud Nine Productions
November 6th
James Ryan & Straight Up
Hard Driven Blues
November 8th
John Michaels Band
Jazz
NFL FOOTBALL ON A 27" WIDE SCREEN TV WITH FREE BUFFET RAFFLE AT HALFTIME
www.amherstbrewing.com

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
A rather obnoxious adversary wants to boss you around.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Use your imagination to fulfill an unusual request.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Money may be a little tight, but that's not going to inhibit your fun.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
For the next several weeks you'll be more involved in analyzing your future.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You are going to get advice from a loved one. Don't resist. Listen and learn.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your attention is being diverted from romance to business again.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Conditions are changing in your favor slightly, but it's appreciated.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You need to get rid of some of that stuff that's been taking up space.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Make time to sit around with your friends, and catch up on the latest news.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't believe everything you hear, especially if it sounds too good to be true.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You have a beautiful laugh that is admired by many. Don't hold back.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
This could be the beginning of a beautiful friendship.

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE
Ask for Advertising @ 545-3500

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Announcements

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

Apartment for Rent

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January – May, t_korol@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

Auto for Sale

1998 Jeep Cherokee Classic Auto 4x4 Excellent Cond. 5K bo 413-772-6855

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

Employment

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

Employment

Put up Posters
Towns and colleges. Car & References Needed. $10/Hr 10-15 hrs /wk. 6 hrs must be business hrs Excellent Attn to detail and follow up needed. Must be good w/ specific directions. postering@artspromo.org or 413-259-1227 Ext. 4

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

Employment

Substitute teachers needed. Work cooperatively as part of teaching team. High School diploma or equivalent required. Must be able to lift children up to 40 lbs. on a regular basis. Flexible able to work different shifts as needed. $7.00/hr. no benefits Send cover letter and resume to: HCAC Human Resources, 557 Easthamtpon Rd. Northampton, MA 01060 or to hr@hcac.org

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

Instruction

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

Musician

Seeking Trumpet or Saxaphone player to complete Jazz Group Trio Ryan 413-221-7615

Roommate Wanted

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

Services

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Services

Transcription Services Experienced, Fast, Reasonable rates Karen 413-834-2505

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling out Immigration forms.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Travel

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

Travel

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlessummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Travel

Spring Break 2005. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/ Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRISMC Online
Cannot be combined with any other offer. $100 off based on quad room. Only valid for trips with airfare. Expires 11/2005.
www.sunsplashtours.com
1 800 426 7710

Wanted

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Grudge match

UMass to battle Northeastern in long-anticipated contest

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

There has been a small theme growing over the past couple weeks. Last week, Maine came to Amherst with Marcus Williams, one of the nation's best running backs, and an Amherst native who played high school football with Massachusetts (4-5, 2-4 Atlantic 10) strong safety James Ihedigbo.

This week, the stakes are a little higher and maybe not as friendly. UMass coach Don Brown is returning to Northeastern (3-5, 2-3 A-10) where he revitalized a dead program. Brown registered 27 wins during his four-year tenure as head coach and only lost 20 games.

In 2002, the Huskies won a school record 10 games, won the Atlantic 10 championship, gained their first berth in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs and Brown won several Coach of the Year awards as a result.

A former UMass defensive coordinator under former coach Mark Whipple, including during the 1998 National Championship team, Brown jumped at the chance to lead the Minutemen, but North-eastern sued UMass for Brown's failure to comply with his contract.

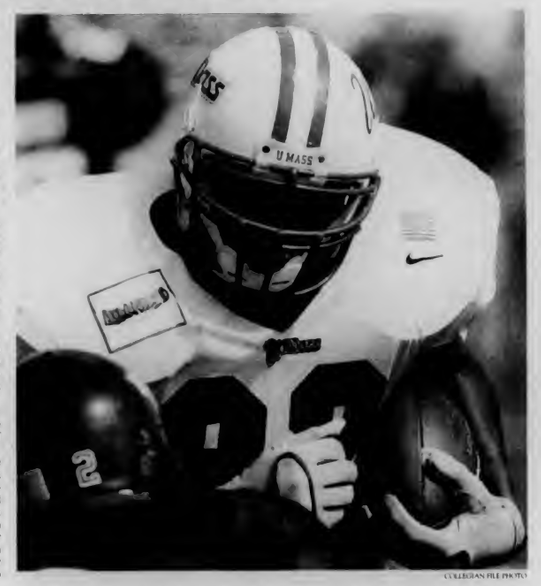
When all was said and done, UMass had to pay Northeastern $125,000, and Brown was forced to watch his first three games this season from the press box.

Now, these two teams, neither of whom have legitimate playoff hopes, will square off with tons of pride on the line.

"We're taking a little more emotional hunch on our back going into the game just knowing that there are feelings, and it's more of a rivalry now that the whole coaching situation happened," said wide receiver Jason Peebler. "But other than that, we're just going to go play the game that we know how to

See FOOTBALL on page 8

GAME DAY CENTRAL



Northeastern	Massachusetts
13-5 Overall 2-3 Atlantic 10	14-5 Overall 2-4 Atlantic 10
Last Week: Lost to New Hampshire 27-23	Last Week: Defeated Maine 33-34

Parsons Field – Brookline (7,000/FieldTurf)
Kickoff 12 p.m.

TELEVISION: CN8 (Bill Zimpfer, play-by-play, Bill Osborn, color commentary, Greg Murphy, sideliner)

RADIO: UMass Football Radio Network – WRNX 100.9 FM Holyoke, flagship (Bob Behler, play-by-play, Doug White, color commentary)
Northeastern Radio Network – WJIB 740AM Boston (Bob Rudnick, play-by-play, Bruce Ryder, color commentary)

Series record: UMass leads 24-8-1
Last meeting: UMass 28 Northeastern 24 (November 21, 2003, Amherst)

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Tight end Sean Young and the Minutemen will travel to Brookline to face Northeastern on Saturday.

This one's for coach

Mike Marzelli

Earlier this season, new Massachusetts football coach Don Brown talked about his team's Week 2 game with Colgate as one that he wanted to win for his players. After last season's Division I-AA first round playoff debacle, Brown knew when he took over the Minutemen that there was an extremely bitter taste in his team's mouth over the 19-7 loss, a taste he wanted to cleanse by coaching his team into the best possible position to beat the Red Raiders under the lights on Sept. 11.

Despite being relegated to the press box as part of the fallout from his well-publicized legal battle with Northeastern University, Brown laid out a winning game plan and led UMass to a rousing 30-20 victory. In what has evolved into an up-and-down season, it was certainly one of the emotional high points of 2004.

Now, nearly two months later, it's time for the members of the Massachusetts football team to return the favor to their coach. On the eve of their battle with NU, Brown's former employer, it's time for the Minutemen to come together emotionally in support of a cause like they did against Colgate, and continue to play like they have over each of the last three weeks. It's what their first-year coach clearly deserves.

There has been no secret made of the love lost between Brown and Northeastern, but as most football coaches do, he refuses to let himself become the spotlight. As far as he is concerned, football is always about players and never about coaches, an outlook that will not change for any opponent.

Nonetheless, this is a game that any living, breathing coach in his position wants to have at any cost. Yes, it is a late-season conference game crucial

See MARZELLI on page 8

Shannon James named to Buchanan Award 'watch list'

A three-year starter who has evolved into one of the premier defensive players at the Division I-AA level, Massachusetts defensive back Shannon James is continuing to make the case that he may be a candidate to land in the National Football League following next season.

The junior Stratford, Conn. native leads the Atlantic 10 with eight interceptions, and earlier this week was named to the "watch list" for the annual Buck Buchanan Award, given to the top defensive player at the I-AA level. He is the second UMass player in as many years to be considered for the award, joining former tri-captain Jeremy Cain, who was on the "watch list" last season and has spent much of 2004 on the Chicago Bears' practice squad.

A third team All-A-10 selection in 2003, James has started all 25 games he's played in since coming to Amherst, and has posted over 100 tackles in each of his first two seasons. He is currently tied with middle linebacker Serge Tikum for the team lead in tackles with 63, including 55 solo stops.

"Shannon is just a really solid football player in every aspect of his game," UMass coach Don Brown said. "He can run, he can cover, he can tackle, he can play all over the place and he has an uncanny knack for making plays.

"Being on this list is just the start of the recognition he deserves. He's just a hell of a football player."

Also on the list: Tom Alfsen, DE, Lehigh; Lee Basinger, DL, Wofford; Jordan Beck, LB, Cal Poly; Antoine Bethea, DB, Howard; Roger Cooper, LB, Montana State; Justin Durant, LB, Hampton; Liam Ezekiel, LB, Northeastern; Brady Fosmark, DL, Weber State; William Freeman, LB, Furman; Chris Goceng, DE, Cal Poly; Boomer Grigsby, LB, Illinois State; Tad Kornegay, DB, Fordham; Kevin Talley, LB, Norfolk State; Charles Thompson, LB, Western Kentucky; Gian Villante, LB, Hofstra.

— Mike Marzelli

Richmond on tap for UM in A-10 tourney

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Somehow, some way, the Massachusetts women's soccer team has snuck into today's Atlantic 10 Tournament, which begins this morning and afternoon at Rudd Field.

Actually, the Minutewomen can give a big thanks to the St. Joseph's Hawks, whose upset of the George Washington Colonials last Sunday allowed the Maroon and White to clinch the sixth and final seed for the A-10 tourney.

MATTHEW REED/COLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts women's soccer team will host the Atlantic 10 soccer tournament starting today.

More importantly, UMass was able to split this weekend's games with a very limited roster. Having scores of players gone to injuries or personal matters, including defender Amy Maffucci and freshmen Kaelyn Caldwell and Kristina Nunes, the Minutewomen only made two substitutions all weekend. Two substitutions, that is, in a league that allows for an unlimited amount of substitutions.

"They were in it for the long haul," coach Jim Rudy said. "At some point they believed me when I told them we were gonna be competitive in this league even though we were 0-5. That was the biggest challenge."

Here comes the next challenge: playing what they're dealt against the Richmond Spiders, arguably the second-best squad in the A-10 behind runaway powerhouse Dayton.

While Maffucci is still a game-time decision, Caldwell is back on the field after missing the last two weeks and Nunes has been cleared to play after suffering two concussions over a span of a week and a half. However, the importance of the vocal Maffucci in the back is undeniable.

"It takes a voice away on the field," Rudy said. "She's done a lot of incredible things for us, although I think Barrett has been doing a great job filling in. We're not really deep in the back, which presents us with other issues, like having to raid the midfield with defenders."

Freshman Tina Rodriguez may be another question, given her recent leg troubles, but if the last several weeks of play are any indicator of pain tolerance, Rodriguez should be able to hang in there through the thick of things.

"We've got [Rodriguez] back there in the

See WOMEN'S SOCCER on page 8

Atlantic 10 soccer tournament set to kick off at Rudd Field

By Dan Hillman
Collegian Correspondent

This morning at 11 a.m. at Rudd Field, the 2004 Atlantic 10 Women's Soccer Tournament kicks off. The third and sixth seeded teams, and the fourth and fifth seeded teams play each other in the first round, and then the lowest-seeded first round winner advances to the next round to play the number one seed.

This year's tournament features the heavily-favored Dayton Flyers, who are ranked No. 25 in the country and boast the nation's longest winning streak of 18 games in a row. Behind them seems to be a toss up of five very evenly matched teams, including Massachusetts.

In the 11 a.m. match up, the third-seeded Richmond Spiders will face off against No. 6 UMass. The Spiders had a stranglehold on second place for most the season, but in the last two weeks, Richmond dropped two of its final four games (Dayton on Oct. 22, Saint Joeseph's on Oct 29). These defeats lost them their first round bye, and put them up against a young UMass team today.

Richmond is one of the more balanced teams in the conference. They don't have a single player with more than three goals or eight points. They are lead by Senior Midfielder Megan Ogilvie, who is tied for the team lead in points. Ogilvie finished off the Minutewomen in their only match up this season on Oct. 8 with a game-winning header at the 8:12 mark of the second half.

A huge reason for Richmond's success this season is due to the play in goal. The team has the second lowest average of goals in the A-10, and boast eight shutouts for the season. Junior Kelly Kohler was the main goalkeeper for the Spiders this season.

As for the Minutewomen, they continue to exceed expectations this season, culminating in their surprising playoff berth. Made up predominately of underclassmen, UMass had a 5-6-0 record this season. The Minutewomen's high-powered attack is led by freshman sensation Britt Canfield, with 11 goals and her 22 points

Helping Canfield on the front line is freshman Midfielder Jenny Roehrig. Roehrig was second on the team in points with 13.

The 1 p.m. match up features fourth seed Saint Joseph's against fifth seed LaSalle. In their one meeting this season, La Salle got past SJU, 3-0 on Oct. 17. In that game the Explorers outshot the Hawks 12-9, and got three goals from three different players. La Salle's offense is led by freshman midfielder Kristen Hextall, an A-10 Player of the week who has scored seven goals. She gets help from sophomore forward Heather Barclay, who led the team in assists (7) and points (19).

Saint Joseph's offense boasts a balanced attack much like Richmond's, but the key to them is in goal. Freshman goalie Jen Kuhn started most the games in net for the Hawks, and her season has been filled with phenomenal performances and some shaky ones as well. She was in goal when the Hawks last faced the Explorers, and she's hoping to not see a repeat of her performance in that game.

The two teams who will be watching these games in anticipation are the Rams of Rhode Island and the Dayton Flyers. URI is coming into the tournament on a three-game winning streak. They're play has earned them a first round bye. URI grabbed attention this year in the A-10 because of standout play from juniors Megan and Melaine Kasparek. The twin sisters lead the team

See ATLANTIC 10 on page 8

Bluegrass great shines in legendary performance

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

FRIDAY	SATURDAY	SUNDAY
• High: 51 • Low: 39	• High: 55 • Low: 39	• High: 59 • Low: 39

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Early goal dooms Minutewomen

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 43

ALANA upset over email allegations

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

The Office of African, Latino, Asian and Native American Affairs alleged at a press conference yesterday that personal emails were exchanged between former Student Government officials and key members of the administration in efforts to dismantle the Office of ALANA Affairs.

Prior to the press conference, OAA released to the Collegian the 29 emails in question. The emails are under investigation for their authenticity and are the basis for the OAA's allegations against SGA officials and members of the administration. The emails allege that Nelson Acosta, the director of the OAA, has not followed his job description and has taken far too many sick days than his contract permits.

Acosta, after being diagnosed with cancer last January, took a leave of absence from his position to seek medical treatment; according to the emails, he then hired graduate student Gladys Franco to fulfill some of his duties.

Former SGA Speaker Patrick Higgins wrote the first series of emails to the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano and Student Legal Advisor Charles DiMare expressing concern with the status of the OAA. He mentioned that Gladys Franco was in "complete control in OAA," and that this was because Acosta directly used his sick time to appoint Franco.

In an email from Gargano to Higgins dated June 6, Gargano wrote that there ought to be a strategy in dealing with the Graduate Assistant in the Office of ALANA Affairs.

Franco and Acosta filed grievances to the University of Massachusetts late this summer, according to statements made at the press conference. Franco alleged that she was harassed and discriminated against, which resulted in the withholding of her paycheck. Acosta filed a grievance for mistreatment as well.

The emails were sent to Servicing Representative Leslie Edwards and Secretary of Grievances Jack Hirsch last Friday. The pair refused to share where the emails came from, alleging that an anonymous source sent them.

COURTESY OF UMASS.EDU

Nelson Acosta is the director of the Office of ALANA Affairs.

"We want to offer the emails to the community," Edwards said. "They are very disturbing ... why would students and administrators be involved in this kind of behavior?"

Hirsch insisted that Franco has fulfilled her job to the fullest extent and that she has a right to settle the grievance with the administration.

"She is effective in her strategy," Hirsch said. "She has engaged in struggles with the OAA and she has worked hard in preserving the ALANA Caucus seats."

Edwards said that this incident is not isolated and a serious investigation must follow. "[Gargano] is signing off on grad student contracts," she said, "this may just be the tip of the iceberg."

Hirsch remained extremely angry with Gargano, especially because of his decision to, "hand pick the committee that studies diversity on campus." He alleges that there isn't one diverse member on the committee.

"There is not one representative of the Office of ALANA Affairs," he said, "this is the dismantling of a strong OAA. If you look at other groups on campus, like the Every Women's Center, the Childcare programs and Advocacy programs, those programs are being decreased."

Hirsch also said he blamed the administration for plotting this strategy for some time and that it was trying to persuade the students that the OAA is not effective.

"This looks to me like this plan has been formulated and now it's being carried out," he said.

Acosta and Franco were present at the press conference, and remain angry with the revealing of the emails.

"I am really sad," Acosta said, "during my last five years in office

MATTHEW REED/COLLEGIAN

Gladys Franco oversaw the duties of the OAA director this summer.

I have been under attack. I have followed every University protocol to do my job – and I have."

Franco emphasized that this new revelation is one of many attacks on the OAA.

"[The administration] is strategizing now to get rid of our office and stopping my appointment to office and attacking Nelson. They are encouraging students to go along with this plan, and [the student leaders] are a product of the administration," Franco said.

Edwards said that she does not understand why top leaders of the administration were acknowledging claims from Higgins that Franco and Acosta were not doing their jobs.

"If you read the emails, you never see DiMare or Gargano saying, 'hey wait, this is inappropriate,'" Edwards said.

After repeated attempts, none of the emails' alleged authors, Gargano, DiMare, or Higgins were available for comment.

Amherst polls see high youth turnout; not so across the US

By Spencer Ziegler
Collegian Correspondent

AMHERST — Across the nation, the mainstream media reported that 18-29 year-old registered voters did not turn out to the polls in the record numbers anticipated in Tuesday's Presidential Election. However, the number of younger voters in the town of Amherst was still higher than expected.

CNN reported only 17 percent of 18 to 29-year-olds voted, which is about the same number as four years ago.

"The cult of the youth voter remains once again, the most absurd, bogus, childish, romantic and misguided joke of liberal American politics," Internet blogger Jonah Goldberg told the Times of London yesterday.

According to one pollster, had the media focused on Amherst they would not have gotten that impression at the polls in town.

Rich Yeung, a 43-year-old resident of Amherst, said he'd never seen so many young people turn out to vote.

"In past elections, I've never seen this many kids come out to vote," he said last night at the Fort River School, the voting site for precinct six in Amherst. "I'm definitely enthused to see that college kids are taking part in the elections."

University of Massachusetts students seemed to express their excitement about voting, however some expressed disappointment with the way the Bangs Community Center arranged the overall voting procedure.

"It's not as organized as I thought it would be," said Tia Hudson, 20, a psychology and accounting double major at the University of Massachusetts.

"I was aggravated because it was such a process," said Raquel Sevilla, 20, a biology major at UMass.

Many young voters in Amherst registered through the recent Help America Vote Act. These voters had to provide proof of residency if they registered after Jan. 1, 2004. Student voters were required to show proof that includes their dormitory room number, along with photo identification.

One poll worker estimated that a third of the young voters did not have all the required documents. They were allowed to vote on new, provisional ballots, which were the last ballots in the state to be counted.

"I tried to register in Amherst, but it didn't go through," said Danielle Kelleher. "It was too late

See VOTING on page 2

Jewish Community to hold teach-in

By Adrienne Bossi
Collegian Staff

There will be a daylong teach-in this Sunday about anti-Semitism sponsored by the Jewish Community of Amherst. Headlining the event will be a speech by Professor Daniel Jonah Goldhagen, an affiliate at Harvard University's Minda de Gunzburg Center for European Studies.

"There is an increase in anti-Semitism all over the world," said Yaffa Gunner an affiliate with the JCA. "We are very concerned."

Goldhagen has a doctorate in government from Harvard University and has authored a variety of books. Among those are, "Hitler's Willing Executioners: Ordinary Germans and the Holocaust," which was a finalist of the National Book Critics Circle and winner of Germany's prestigious Democracy Prize. He also wrote "Moral Reckoning: the Role of the Catholic Church in the Holocaust and its Unfulfilled Duty of Repair."

According to the JCA press release, "The teach-in will examine the various forms that anti-Semitism have taken in the past and its present incarnation, and their psychological, social, and political ramifications."

"Jews and non Jews alike are welcome to attend," said Gunner. "And join our discussions about the causes and possible solutions to this growing problem."

The event is free for students and open to the general public.

"We expect a large turnout," said Gunner. "We already have 50 people registered and two of them are coming from as far away as Brookline."

Goldhagen is scheduled to speak at 10:00 a.m. There will be a question and answer segment along with refreshments following his speech. Afterwards, participants will choose one of four workshops they wish to attend. Each workshop is expected to last two hours. There will be a general discussion amongst all participants at the conclusion of the workshops.

The workshops will cover the following subjects, anti-Semitism and Jewish identity, the roots of anti-Semitism, anti-Semitism and ways of confronting it, the psychology of the bystander and criticism of Israeli politics and anti-Semitism. The workshops are led by a collection of local religious figures, university professors and PhD candidates, along with a member of the Anti-Defamation League.

Goldhagen was unavailable for comment.

For more information, please call Eva Sartori (413) 467-3626 or Yaffa Gunner at (413)549-0447, or email ybg@comcast.net.

Arafat remains hospitalized in critical condition

By Lara Sukhtian
Associated Press

CLAMART, France (AP) — Yasser Arafat was reportedly fighting for his life Thursday at a French military hospital after losing consciousness, as anxious Palestinian officials transferred some of their 75-year-old leader's powers to Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia.

Doctors at Percy Military Training Hospital outside Paris, where Arafat was airlifted last Friday after more than two years of confinement in the West Bank, quashed a swirl of reports that he had died. But the French doctors would not say much else, and confusion ruled as Palestinians issued conflicting reports about Arafat's condition and how close to death he was.

Outside the hospital, some 50 well-wishers held a vigil late into the evening. Some held candles, others portraits of Arafat. A large Palestinian flag hung from the hospital's outer wall.

"It tears your heart up," said Mahmod Nim, a 36-year-old unemployed Palestinian. "I can't see someone taking his place."

In an emergency meeting in the West Bank town of Ramallah, the PLO executive committee empowered Qureia to deal with urgent administrative and financial matters in Arafat's absence, said committee member Qais Abdel Karim. Qureia also will meet with security chiefs in the Gaza Strip on Friday to ensure that no internal conflict erupts in the volatile area at a time of uncertainty, a Palestinian official said.

A prolonged Arafat incapacitation – or death – could have profound impact on the Middle East. There are fears of unrest among Palestinian factions, which Arafat, viewed as a national symbol by even some who opposed him, was largely able to prevent. Furthermore, chaos in the West Bank and Gaza could make any cooperation with Israel even more difficult.

On the other hand, Israel and the United States have in recent years shunned Arafat as a terrorist and an obstacle to peace, and his replacement by a new leadership could open the door to renewed peace talks. Such a scenario could affect Israel's plans to pull soldiers and settlers out of the Gaza Strip in a move not coordinated with the Palestinians.

Arafat's chief of staff, Ramzi Khoury, called an Associated Press reporter to say the Palestinian leader was alive but that his condition was grave.

"I am standing next to the president's bed, he is in grave condition," Khoury said.

In Washington, Said Hamad, deputy chief of the Palestine Liberation Office, said Arafat was in a coma. Arafat was taken to the intensive care unit after his condition worsened overnight Wednesday.

French television station I-CI quoted an anonymous French medical official as saying Arafat was in an "irreversible coma" and "intubated" – a process that usually involves threading a tube down the windpipe to the lungs. The tube is often connected to a life support machine to help the patient breathe.

However, three Palestinian officials denied Arafat was in a coma.

"He is not getting better, but not getting worse either. He is being examined. He is not in a coma," Foreign Minister Nabil Shaath said. "There is no explanation for what has happened."

A Palestinian official in Gaza who is close to Arafat's wife Suha said she told him her husband fell unconscious after receiving a strong anesthetic for a biopsy. The official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, quoted Suha Arafat as saying her husband was recovering.

Israel TV's Channel Two reported that Arafat was brain dead and remained on life support.

However, Arafat's personal physician, Dr. Ashraf Kurdi, told Dubai-based Al-Arabiya television that "Arafat has no type of brain death." He also said a brain scan showed that Arafat had not suffered a hemorrhage or stroke.

At Arafat's compound in Ramallah, where leaders of the PLO and Arafat's

See ARAFAT on page 2

Edwards diagnosed with breast cancer

By Ron Fournier
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Elizabeth Edwards, wife of former Democratic vice presidential candidate John Edwards, was diagnosed with breast cancer the day her husband and Sen. John Kerry conceded the presidential race.

Spokesman David Ginsberg said Mrs. Edwards, 55, discovered a lump in her right breast while on a campaign trip last week. Her family doctor told her Friday that it appeared to be cancerous and advised her to see a specialist when she could.

She put off the appointment until Wednesday so as not to miss campaign time.

The Edwards family went straight to Massachusetts General Hospital from Boston's Faneuil Hall after Kerry and Edwards conceded on Wednesday.

Mrs. Edwards had a needle biopsy performed at the hospital, where Dr. Barbara Smith confirmed the cancer, Ginsberg said. He said the cancer was diagnosed as invasive ductal cancer. That is the most common type of breast cancer, and can spread

See EDWARDS on page 2

COURTESY PHOTO/ JEFF KOWALSKY

Supporters still stand by Kerry

Hundreds of John Kerry supporters congregated at Fanuiel Hall in Boston on Wednesday to hear the Senator's remarks after he lost the presidential election on Tuesday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrea Merrett
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NEWS SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADMINISTRATIVE MANAGER Tiffany Sugahki
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
CAMPUS EDITOR Alyson Zilkmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Loxley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reed
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Martelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kiguino
ILLUSTRATION MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginie Frecaut
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquet
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADMINISTRATION Josh Greenberg
ACADEMIC ADVISOR Jaclynn Sorenson
ACADEMIC ADVISOR Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHIC ARTIST Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Busack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT FEATURES Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
S.J. Port
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Adrienne Bossi
COPY EDITOR
Cameron Woods
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Matthew Reed, Nick Belanger

For the record: due to an error the email address of Mr. Todd Evans was incorrect. The correct email address is wtodd@soc.umass.edu.

Yasser Arafat fighting for his life in Paris hospital

ARAFAT from page 1

Fatah movement were meeting, Shaath said top officials were in touch with the hospital in Clamart every 30 minutes.

"The Palestinian leadership is in constant meeting to follow up on the president's health," Shaath said.

Meanwhile, about 1,500 Palestinians demonstrated in the West Bank town of Qalqiliya and 500 more in the Balata refugee camp in support of Arafat.

Israeli military leaders, including Defense Minister Shaul Mofaz, met to discuss Arafat's declining health. Israeli security officials said. The military was placed on high alert, fearing riots if Arafat dies.

The Israeli military has not moved forces to anticipated problem areas, but commanders were told to be on standby. The army has a contingency plan, called "new leaf," to deal with the fallout from Arafat's death.

On Thursday, the military also discussed possible burial options for Arafat. Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon has said he would not permit Arafat to be buried in Jerusalem, which is claimed by both Israel and the Palestinians as their capital. Army chiefs said they also ruled out a burial in the Jerusalem suburb of Abu Dis in the West Bank.

First time voters encounter problems to get an absentee ballot. I was frustrated but didn't care too much because I figured Kerry would sweep Mass. regardless."

VOTING from page 1

Some student voters said they never received absentee ballots after registering at locations on the UMass campus. One person who experienced this error was Dawn-Cheri Soares, a sophomore from UMass, who said she did not get her absentee ballot despite registering through the Malcom X Center.

Students said the requirement to present identification seemed to be randomly enforced.

"No one at the polling station I was at was asked to provide identification," said Michael DiNitale, a UMass student. "It seemed like voter fraud would be very easy to commit."

Danielle Longo, Mike Parrish and Corina Benson contributed to this article.

Edwards diagnosed with breast cancer one day after election

EDWARDS from page 1

COURTESY PHOTO/CENTRAL FLORIDIANA

Elizabeth Edwards waited four days until after election day to visit doctors to seek observation for a lump in her right breast.

from the milk ducts to other parts of the breast or beyond.

More tests were being done to determine how far the cancer has advanced and how to treat it, he said.

Ginsberg said spirits are high at the Edwards household. "Everybody feels good about it, that this is beatable," he said.

Edwards, who leaves his North Carolina Senate seat in January, said in a statement, "Elizabeth is as strong a person as I've ever known. Together, our family will beat this."

The American Cancer Society estimated that nearly 216,000 American women will be diagnosed with breast cancer this year.

Treatments have been getting better. The current five-year survival rate for breast cancer is 87 percent, up from 78 percent in the mid 1980s. About 40,000 women die of breast cancer annually.

Overall, the society says about one in seven women will develop breast cancer in their lifetime.

Invasive ductal cancer accounts for 65 percent to 80 percent of all breast cancers, according to the Merck Manual of Medical Information.

Treatment usually begins with surgery, according to the National Cancer Institute. This could involve removal of the cancer itself and usually nearby lymph nodes. Lumpectomy, just removing the cancerous mass, is becoming more common, though sometimes removal of the whole breast is done.

Surgery can be followed by chemotherapy, radiation or hormone therapy.

Radiation can focus on a cancer site from a machine outside the body or use a radioactive substance placed near the cancer in "seeds" or via needle.

Chemotherapy uses drugs that can stop or slow the growth of cancer that may have spread. Hormone therapy removes or blocks hormones that can encourage growth of cancer cells.

In early stages of cancer a combination of the drug tamoxifen and hormone therapy is commonly used, the Cancer Institute reports.

The Edwardses married in 1977. They have two daughters, Cate and Emma Claire and a son, Jack. Son Wade died in a 1996 traffic accident.

Mrs. Edwards, born in Jacksonville, Fla., grew up hopscotching between the United States and Japan. She met her future husband at University of North Carolina law school.

She juggled a successful legal career and family for 19 years. Then – stunned by Wade's death – she quit work to have more children at an age when many contemporaries were easing toward grandmotherhood.

On the campaign, she dubbed herself the "anti-Barbie," a quick-witted, down-to-earth political wife who connected particularly well with mothers and fathers.

Sudan heading for warlord control in the midst of unrest

By Edith M. Lederer
Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The top U.N. envoy to Sudan warned that the vast region of Darfur could easily descend into anarchy with warlords in control unless African Union troops deploy quickly and peace negotiations speed up.

The 20-month conflict in the western region is changing in character, with the government not fully in control of its forces and a leadership crisis within the rebel movements, Jan Pronk said.

The envoy accused both sides of violating an April cease-fire agreement and seeking more territory in Darfur, which is about the size of France.

While there was slow progress on the political front in October, Pronk said, violence and insecurity increased and in recent days "the situation deteriorated and tension rose to a level unprecedented since early August."

"Fighting is breaking out in more and more places. Parties are provoking one another. Militias are ganging up. Governmental authorities are not able to exert a moderating influence, or they respond with untimely and even counterproductive measures," he said.

COURTESY ARCHIVO

Shown above is a map of Sudan, a country in civil unrest.

"If the fighting continues crops will fail. Then the whole population of Darfur will become dependent on humanitarian assistance," Pronk warned.

The United Nations has called Darfur the world's worst humanitarian crisis, saying the conflict has claimed 70,000 lives since March.

An international commission appointed by U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan began work on Oct. 25 and has three months to study human rights violations and determine whether a genocide occurred in Darfur. Sudan also faces the threat of U.N. sanctions.

TV reporter in hot water

By Elizabeth Zuckerman
Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — A federal judge Thursday threatened a TV reporter with criminal contempt for refusing to say who gave him an FBI videotape showing a city official taking a bribe.

U.S. District Judge Ernest Torres suspended a $1,000-a-day fine he had imposed when he found Jim Taricani in civil contempt in March, saying it had not achieved its goal. WJAR has paid $85,000 in fines on Taricani's behalf so far.

But the judge set a trial for Nov. 18 on criminal contempt charges that could send Taricani to prison for up to six months.

Prosecutors want to know who gave the tape to Taricani because the leak violated a court order. He broke no law by airing the tape, which shows a chief of staff for former Mayor Vincent "Buddy" Cianci Jr. taking an envelope stuffed with cash.

The judge said the leak was meant to either disrupt the corruption investigation at City Hall or deprive defendants of a fair trial by influencing prospective jurors. He asked Taricani to consider if his source deserves to be protected.

"What kind of person would sit back and keep quiet while you face ... the prospect of criminal contempt?" Torres asked.

Taricani, who had a heart transplant in 1996 and has a pacemaker, said he will talk with his lawyers and family about his options.

"I think anyone would have to think seriously about what actions they could take to stay out of prison," he said. But he said if necessary, he was prepared to accept jail time because "my source expects me to uphold my promise."

Cianci was convicted in 2002 in a scheme to take bribes for tax breaks, favors and jobs. The aide on the tape, Frank Corrente, was convicted of serving as Cianci's "bag man."

Worship at Dwight Chapel
We are an Interdenominational Evangelical Church serving the entire valley since 1886.
Sunday morning worship at 8:30 & 10:45
FREE SHUTTLE FROM UMASS (HAIGIS MALL @ 10AM)
If you are interested to know more about the church, visit us at www.DwightChapel.org
For more information call 413-256-8059
Dwight Chapel, 885 Federal Street, Belchertown, MA 01007

comedy TONIGHT!
CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413•593•5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
7PM & 10:15PM!
From "Saturday Night Live" and the movies "Anger Management", "Happy Gilmore" and "The Wedding Singer"
KEVIN NEALON
NOV. 12TH
"Jeff Greene" on HBO's "Curb Your Enthusiasm"
JEFF GARLIN
NOV. 13TH
a.k.a. "Dr. Dirty"
JOHN VALBY

ignite your appetite
India House
tuesday - Sunday
45 State Street
Northampton
586-6344

the food's the thing
!
cha cha cha
lunch + dinner
134 main st n'ton
588-7311

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at the Amherst locations only.
Original roll processing only.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2004

"Fight for your opinions, but do not believe that they contain the whole truth, or the only truth."
-Charles A. Dana

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

An unimaginable outcome

Robert Eppsteiner

On Wednesday, after my 11:15 class, while waiting for the bus, I returned a missed call I had received from my girlfriend. After I said hello, she told me the impossible, "Bush won." Silence followed. I sat dumbfounded on a crowded PVTA bus on North Pleasant Street listening to the conversations occurring around me. Had they not found out? Why was no one talking about it? After I got off the bus I walked to my house in silence. Tears did not fall down my face, but if I were a crier they would have.

I am at a loss as to how this happened. There were so many reasons why George W. Bush should have lost this election, yet he won. America, economically speaking, is worse because of Bush and his administration. As John Kerry continuously pointed out, there are fewer jobs now than when Bush took office. After Clinton about 80 percent of Americans were pleased with this nation's economy according to a study shown on CNN; now that number is down to about half. This shows that the economy must not be the most important factor to Americans when it comes to determining a president.

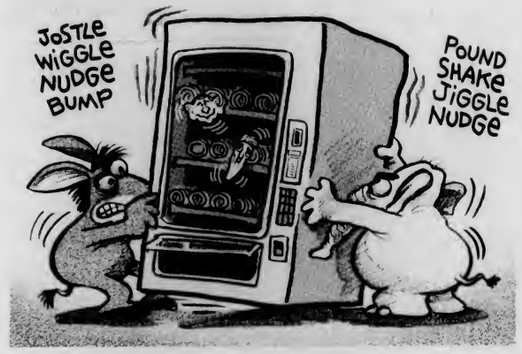
This election was different from that of 2000 seeing that now we are a nation at war.

This election was different from that of 2000 because we are now we are a nation at war. Perhaps this is the central issue, and if it is, I still cannot fathom why George W. Bush is still commander-in-chief. Bush lambasted the United Nations by choosing to deal with Iraq and Saddam Hussein his own way, and justified doing so by claiming that Hussein was stockpiling weapons of mass destruction. This was a lie, and to this day there has not been a single WMD found. Bush drew associations between Hussein and Al Qaeda in an effort to further justify his war, and again nothing substantial was found to verify Bush's claim.

What's more, when one evaluates Bush's war, paying no mind to its justifications, the picture is just as dubious. Recently, it was reported by the New York Times that a stockpile of weapons that we did find, was not secured and have since vanished, possibly into the hands of militants who will later kill more Americans. Of equal importance, they could be used to kill more Iraqi civilians.

That is not good wartime management. It can be argued that this was not necessarily the folly of the commander-in-chief, and instead that this happened due to negligence at the lower ranks. That may be true, but Bush and his military generals have demonstrated similar misjudgments, which were of course followed by more ridiculous justifications.

It is obvious that a tremendous miscalculation occurred regarding America's prediction of post-war conditions in Iraq. Many thought, as Bush professed, that Iraqis would be brimming with joy upon reception of their freedom.



This was another fantasy.

Some studies have estimated post-war Iraqi casualties to be as high as 100,000 according to the New York Times, and American casualties, though not nearly as high, have occurred frequently. This is a testament to the miscalculation of post-war Iraq.

The country is being slowly but steadily damaged by militants who are not impressed by America's attempts to bring freedom to this war torn country. What's worse is the justification Bush gave in one of the presidential debates when asked about his military's miscalculation in the handling of Iraq after the fall of Hussein's regime. Instead of acknowledging that indeed an error had taken place, Bush said that the only miscalculation was underestimating the effectiveness and expediency of the US military. In so doing, he shirked responsibility for the gross miscalculations that occurred at all levels of the armed forces.

In summation, Bush was a bad economic leader whose financial debacles are only matched by his militaristic negligence and his propensity to justify his actions by lying to the American people. What puzzles me is how a president could do all this, could make myself as well as many other Americans feel duped and treated as children, and yet still receive a collective pat on the back and a cheer from his country. If calm comes over Iraq during Bush's next term, North Korea had better look out.

Robert Eppsteiner is a UMass student.

Where have all the trees gone?

Kristina Maressa

Old growth forests are one of the world's most valuable natural resources. Worldwide, more than half of all forests have vanished and old growth forests are among the most highly threatened types. They are being destroyed at such an alarming rate that there is less than one percent of old growth left in New England.

For a forest to qualify as old growth, its trees must be at least three hundred to five hundred years old. Something must be done to protect these ancient treasures before they are gone forever.

Contrary to the opinion that these forests should be saved, many people and organizations support the logging of old growth forests. Numerous states, especially those in the Pacific Northwest, depend on the logging industry to support their local economies. It is suggested that these economies would collapse if the clear cutting of forests was banned or reduced.

Advocates for the logging industry argue that there will always be old growth and that it will never completely disappear, but if these forests continue to be logged at today's rate, they will most definitely vanish, and with them the economies that depend on them. A compromise needs to be reached that will slow down the logging of old growth to preserve it, yet still allow these economies to survive.

Ancient forests are essential to the survival of many animals. Many endangered species call the old growth forests their home; they cannot survive in any other habitat. If this indicator species is not present in the forest, then it is a signal that the forest is in danger due to logging.

Each pair of spotted owls needs three square miles to survive. Their forests are being destroyed at a rate faster than that of tropical rainforests. Just as the old growth forests are disappearing, so are our endangered species. As humans, we have a duty to respect and protect nature. There are many species that have not even been discovered yet that may be valuable for many reasons. Specifically, they may have medicinal purposes that may someday lead to a cure for diseases such as cancer or aids. These species are being destroyed at a rate that is faster than our scientists can study them.

They are being destroyed at such an alarming rate that there is less than one percent of old growth left in New England.

Old growth forests are a necessary part of the ecosystem because they prevent natural disasters such as mudslides, erosion and flooding from wreaking havoc on developed cities and towns. In 1996, Salem, Ore. was severely flooded due to the clearing of trees in Opal Creel National Forest. In September, Hurricane Frances brought torrential rains and caused extreme flooding in Haiti, primarily because the country is an alarming 98 percent deforested.

These may seem like fluke incidents, but they are hardly the result of chance. Trees are needed to stabilize the soil and keep the earth intact. When the area is cleared, it weakens its strength and when it rains, it causes erosion. When forests are destroyed, it not only harms the ecosystems and those species depending on it, it impacts our cities as well, and in order to protect these developments and their citizens, we need to first protect our forests.

Many people do not realize that it is essential to protect old growth forests. From spotted owls, to enjoying the great outdoors even to protecting our cities and towns, our survival depends on the existence of these forests. In this day in age it would be impossible to completely end all clear cutting of old growth forests, but there is hope that someday both the logging industry officials and the environmentalists and ecologists will be able to come to an agreement that will allow everyone to thrive.

Kristina Maressa is a UMass student.

Building a better UMass

Sanam Hakim

So, I wrote an article last year called "Building a better UMass." In it, I complained about the Fine Arts Center construction ... that recently stopped. I complained about the broken lights all over campus ... that are now fixed. I complained about how the paper towel holders in the bathrooms were only filled once a week: now they're filled twice. I suggested that someone should knock down that ugly useless shack on the Worcester Hill ... that is gone now. I even had a dream that they would put huge flat screen televisions in the DC's ... enough said.

I started thinking about it, and maybe I have more power as a columnist than I thought I did. Maybe someone reads my columns, acknowledges my charming wit and powerful intelligence and takes my opinion into serious consideration in the administrative decision making processes. Maybe someone up there uses my columns as a checklist of ways to improve the school and make it a better place for everyone.

So without any further adieu, here are my suggestions for this academic year, here at UMass:

We can start by fixing all the washing machines and driers in the laundry rooms, then adding dishwashers in every kitchen. I am in Orchard Hill Area Government, and our office is right next to the Field laundry room. There is this one crazy little washing machine that pounds and moans for about fifteen minutes during every washing cycle. That is unnecessary and uncalled for. Throw that thing out and put in a new one. Then move next door to the kitchen and add a dishwasher.

Part of the reason why the rooms smell so much is because people stack up old dishes for weeks, allowing peculiar molds to grow on them and fill the room with rancid scents and those annoying little flies that think it's OK to live with you. Dishwashers all over campus would not only promote a more sanitary lifestyle, but would improve the average dorm smell.

Secondly, we can put a moving escalator-strip (like the ones in airports) on each of the three steep hills going up to Orchard Hill and Central. We should probably put a tunnel-like contraption over the strips also, just in case it's snowing or raining. It is important to have this kind of transportation available to the students, especially so close to winter, because of the dangers of each of the hills.

Dishwashers all over campus would not only promote a more sanitary lifestyle, but would improve the average dorm smell.

First of all, none of these hills have been paved in a really long time. Everyone that lives in upper Central or Orchard Hill probably has at least five funny stories involving "the hill" or someone they know tripping over the cracked pavement. Although we laugh about these stories now, it's scary to think back and say, "Wow, I could have died."

Second of all, walking down these hills when they are covered with ice is extremely dangerous. The last thing you want to happen is to slip down a hill on some ice and trip over some old, cracked pavement. For these reasons, having these escalator strips is almost essential it keeps students happy, dry, and safe.

A third thing we can do on this campus is to create a rotating umbrella machine connected to all the major buildings. These umbrellas should be really big and should fit about four students under each of them, to be conducive to the large population here at UMass.

Hypothetically, here is how these machines will work: four students decide that they want to walk from the Student Union to Bartlett in the rain. Since this machine will be computer operated, the students can punch in their destination right next to designated Rotating Umbrella Machine request boxes. A programmed umbrella will slowly travel above the heads of these students until they reach Bartlett, and will then go to the next group of students. Not only would this be convenient for walkers, but it would also provide more student jobs on campus: students will be needed for traffic control for all the umbrellas and also for simple umbrella maintenance.

My final suggestion is to remove all the televisions from the DC's. Cash them in, buy a bunch of small ones and stick them on all of the PVTA busses. When people go to the DC, most likely they are with a group of friends. These televisions take away from the person-to-person interaction that usually occurs with dinner, and encourages a more zombie state of being — slowly eating your food while gazing mindlessly at the television. Having smaller televisions on the busses would be a great way to encourage more students to use the busses, thus having less people walking on the streets, helping the environment, and keeping students up to date with campus issues, which can be broadcasted on these small televisions.

In conclusion, I appreciate that the administration takes into consideration my intelligent comments and suggestions and I hope our relationship continues to grow, as we work together, hand in hand, to make this school a better place for everyone.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

STEREOTYPES UNFAIR

In the Tuesday, Nov. 2 edition of The Collegian, Stacy Kasdin wrote an editorial titled "Costumes Raise Questions," regarding the lack of regular costumes as well as the large amount of "barely-there" costumes for women. She then went on to proclaim, "I'm fairly surprised there was no sexual assault reported on campus over this weekend ... I would imagine that an intoxicated man, or group of intoxicated men, might like nothing better than to harass a girl walking across campus in a tiny little vinyl skirt."

Perhaps, Ms. Kasdin, you should next time think about what you write before you decide to send it out to thousands of readers. I don't appreciate being forced into the stereotype of what you make sound like a drunken rapist. Perhaps you should come do my laundry, or cook my dinner, because I'm sure you're as offended by that stereotype. It baffles me as to what makes you think it is acceptable to stereotype all men as drunkards who walk around harassing women for fun.

I only hope you realize the double standard you're creating. I beg you, Ms. Kasdin, please think about what you write.

Ryan White
UMass student

DEMOCRACY MATTERS

For how much emphasis Americans place on our country being the land of freedom, opportunity and democracy, do we, the American people, truly comprise a democratic nation? In a democracy, should private corporations be legally allowed to make enormous campaign contributions in return for tax breaks and policies in their favor that harm the general population?

These rhetorical questions cannot be answered without stirring up enormous controversy and debate. Regardless, countless examples occur in which politicians receive private donations for special treatment (the statistics for this years election is public information and accurately displays the degree to which big business influences political agendas). If you, like myself, are fed up with the reoccurring corruption of our political system on all levels, consider joining Democracy Matters; a non-partisan and non-profit organization it is dedicated to reforming the American campaign finance system for the benefit of every group and every citizen.

Democracy Matters is a nationally respected and recognized organization. Conceptualized by Jay Mandle, Joan Mandle and Adonal Foyle, DM is far from your ordinary politically active group.

Adonal Foyle, a professional NBA player (the reserve center for the Golden State Warriors), accepted his calling in life as a devoted activist for labor and politics. Born in Canouan, a dot on St.Vincent in the Carribean Islands, Adonal studied relentlessly and was accepted to secondary school, where he played basketball for the school team and got his first experience with the sport. Shortly thereafter, he was sponsored by the Mandles to come to America. Since then, he has become a U.S. Citizen, graduated Magna Cum Laude from Colgate University in History and is working towards his Masters.

Mr. Mandle, a professor of Economics at Colgate, is extremely supportive of Adonal's and his wife's efforts. Joan Mandle, an associate professor of Anthropology and Sociology at Colgate, recently accepted the position of Executive Director of Democracy Matters. She has devoted her life to service and activism and initiated movements that have passed publicly financed elections in Oakland and San Francisco, among numerous other public accomplishments.

If you honestly care about campaigning for clean and fair elections, starting from a local level, don't hesitate to become involved in DM, which has just organized a University of Massachusetts Amherst chapter. DM engages students to promote voting, networking and awareness in the political issues that affect our daily lives. The involved students that I have worked with and heard about have nothing but great things to say about this institute. Everyone in the organization is a valued and appreciated member and, together, we can make a difference.

Send an e-mail to umassdm@gmail.com for more information and go to the website at www.democracy-matters.org. Stand up for your future and be heard.

Andrew Sanders
UMass student

RED SOX NATION, UNITE!

After the unbelievable October run, the Boston Red Sox are parading through the Hub and touring New England. If this journey follows the Patriots regional procession of previous years, the team will simply travel to the state capitals for their deserved recognition.

Instead, I believe there is great appeal in the Red Sox visiting the states' flagship campuses to revel in the appreciation and awe of the team's most ardent fans. New England's championship football team has passed over UMass twice in three years. We should not have let it pass then, and we would be remiss to let this pass now.

I urge you all to contact the Red Sox and to welcome the team to a campus of appreciative and zealously enthusiastic fans. While I could not find email addresses or phone numbers for the Red Sox management, I did find a general email address that may receive more attention if it came from an overwhelming number of students, faculty and administration from one of New England's largest universities. Write to fanfeedback@redsox.mlb.com and fill the subject bar with "Bring the Sox to UMass Amherst." What do we have to lose?

John Hersey
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE MAKINGS OF BLUEGRASS

By Silas Lowe
Collegian Correspondent

The Acoustic Disc release of Bill Monroe and the Bluegrass Boys' "Live at Mechanics Hall" is a vital document in the search for what defines bluegrass. This recording captures Bill Monroe playing with one of his most charismatic bands, which includes the seminal banjo player Bill (Brad) Keith and guitfiddler Del McCoury.

Adamant fans of bluegrass music have a difficult time putting into words the sheer genius of Bill Monroe as a bandleader, songsmith, singer and most importantly mandolin player. Every note that he played was like tradition waging war on itself and when the dust settled there was always a new musical nation forged. This is exemplified through the version of "Rawhide" on the album. The solos weave an amazing dynamic, which shows the virtuosic nature of Monroe's music.

A testament to the grounded and experimental nature of Bill Monroe's music is the instrumental fiddle tune adapted by Bill Keith "Devil's Dream." This song is a prototypical example of Keith utilizing his signature melodic or chromatic banjo style, which helped to open the banjo up to more complex forms of music. Supported by the fiddling of Joe Stuart and the mandolin playing Mr. Monroe this number is one of the standout tracks on the CD.

'Bill Monroe and the Bluegrass Boys' 'Live at Mechanics Hall' Acoustic Disc

Varied levels in theme and musical content are important facets of bluegrass. "I Saw the Light" is a hymnal tune, which uses reduced instrumentation and increased vocals to change the feel of the show. An interesting note is that on two songs, "Love's Gonna Live Here" and "Dreaming of a Little Cabin," Bill Monroe's daughter Melissa Monroe sings lead.

There is a whole load of Monroe classics on this CD including "Uncle Pen," "Footprints in the Snow," and "Blue Moon of Kentucky." This period is not Monroe's most innovative, falling short of the 1946 Flatt and Scruggs band; however there is a vitality that shines brightly throughout each track. The vocal dynamics of two of bluegrass music's greatest singers combined with the amazing banjo work of Bill Keith make this one of the most engaging recordings I've heard in a while.

The disc comes with a 24-page booklet that includes band bios and a bunch of really cool previously unreleased photos.

Acoustic disc is the record company of mandolin player David Grisman. They have one of the most exemplary catalogues in acoustic music with artist such as Frank Wakefield, Red Allen, Sam Bush, and of course the David Grisman Quintet. If you are interested in the world of acoustic music you can't go wrong with a record from this label. Their Web site is www.dawgn net.com. Check it out. Everything they have is worth listening to.

Helpful ways to rid voters of the post-election blues

By Julie Hinds
The Detroit Free Press

The election is over and you're feeling lousy.

Their man won. Your man lost. They're in a mood to celebrate. You want to go back to bed.

What happened to those encouraging exit polls? You and the other Kerry supporters must feel like you're living the ultimate episode of "Punk'd." Or maybe it's more like "Groundhog Day," with a loop that keeps replaying the 2000 results.

But it's not your problem alone, it's America's to resolve. After months of bitter divisiveness, everyone is feeling the throbbing headache of a nasty campaign hangover.

So much anger; so many ugly accusations; so little thought given to what effect all of this will have on our future.

"I see this as very much like a dysfunctional family," says Dale Ross, a therapist in Southfield, Mich., who's been thinking a lot lately about what happens next. "It's going to take some time for people to heal these wounds and feel like we're still a family and a nation."

How can you be gracious in defeat and get over losing what's been called the most important election of our lifetime?

Maybe by following this advice from people who work to resolve conflicts, and by remembering that this is a job that's too important to ignore. We need to heal, to come together.

It's not going to be easy. But if it happens, at least it will be a win-win.

Give yourself time. Feeling as if you'll spend the next four years in a funk? Be patient. What you're going through now is similar to the mourning process, says Ross. "Just like the loss of an important friend, part of the loss here is the future you were anticipating with them." It won't be your guy delivering the State of the Union, pardoning the Thanksgiving turkey or lighting the White House Christmas tree, not to mention leading the free world. To deal with that, Ross advises doing the things you'd normally do if you were going through a rough patch: talk to compassionate friends, try to remain optimistic and distract yourself by focusing on things unrelated to politics. And keep in mind that you're not alone.

Make civility a priority. Remember how after 9/11 everyone was nicer to others? How honking in traffic declined and smiles replaced snarls? We need another large dose of kindness and consideration to heal the rifts that have formed in our communities. And we need it from both sides. "As winners, don't gloat," says Ross. "As losers, express your pain, but don't blame." West Bloomfield psychologist Barry Jay takes it a step further. He says it's our duty to revive that 9/11 feeling of togetherness and "feel like America again," not two separate camps with little in common.

Take a break from hot-tempered media. When "Daily Show" host Jon Stewart accused CNN's "Crossfire" staff of being hacks, he was on to something. TV, radio and the Web are bursting with pundits eager to inflame your loathing for the other side. Do you really want to wallow in their venom? "You can't change the media, so change the media you watch," says Matthew Felling of the Center for Media and Public Affairs. "You're not going to calm down the shriekers on cable, so give PBS a shot – nearly every study out there depicts the "News-Hour" as a thorough and balanced news program. So in the chaos of a post-election America, go where there's more light than heat."

Work; don't sulk. Just because the vote didn't go your way doesn't mean it's time to give up. If this election had any lesson to teach, it's the importance of being involved, not just in national issues but also on a local and neighborhood level. Channel the passion you felt for the 2004 race into something productive like raising money for a cause you believe in or running for office yourself. "You don't want to go from enthusiasm to apathy," says Karen Noelle Clark, a Southfield psychologist. "The issues you care about don't go away after an election is over. It's not just about winning and losing. You're in this life for the long haul."

Act like a grown-up. When the anger of the campaign boiled over, it led to some pretty juvenile behavior, like the stealing of Bush and Kerry yard signs. "A lot of that stuff is just not smart. It almost seems like something a young teenager would do," says Mike Vitale, 18, a high school senior in Troy, Mich., who helps students resolve problems through a peer mediation program.

Now it's time to put away childish grudges and keep things in perspective, says Rachel Marshall, 17, another Troy High mediator. "If someone was upset about the election, I think I'd try to console them and explore how it's not the end of the world."

Find common ground. Talking to the opposition may be the last thing you want to do. But to tackle long-term issues like health care and the war on terrorism, America must figure out how to reach a consensus, says Fred Pearson, director of the Center for Peace and Conflict Studies at Wayne State University. "We need to be able to listen to each other," says Pearson. How do you heal a polarized society, especially when politicians exploit our differences to their advantage? Pearson thinks the Web potentially could unite citizens who seek to put aside rancor and brainstorm solutions to problems.

See the big picture. Although it feels as if America has never been more divided, history begs to differ. Remember four years ago? The summer of 1968? The Civil War? America has been through worse. "It's important to remember our country has survived every time," says Jay. "It's time to turn from thoughts of losing to thoughts of celebrating that we live in a democracy." OK, so you don't want to toss any confetti just yet. But you can pause to feel good about having a Constitution that helps us cope with adversity. And about living under a system that allows us to do it all over again in four years. As Washington Post columnist David Broder writes: "Resolve not to let the defeat of your favorite candidate shatter your faith in America or turn you away from politics. There will be another day. Remember the Red Sox."

Designers give the Grand Theft Auto Series a new look

Press Start to Play
Reid Davenport

It's that time again: all of your college buddies have suddenly vanished. All you see of them are their away messages, all of them reading something about never leaving their rooms again. You walk down the hall of your dorm and you could swear that it sounds like a gunfight is going on inside your dorm. You give in to temptation and run out to make a purchase that you told yourself you couldn't make because there's way to much work to be done, but then you lock your door, start your Playstation 2, and lose yourself in the new "Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas."

It has been a few years since gamers were able to rush out to grab their own copies of "GTA Vice City" and trash up the streets set back in the 1980s. This time around, Rockstar Games has created more havoc for players to get lost in for hours. This game has all the makings to be one of the best in the "Grand Theft Auto" series.

Your character, CJ, is an ex-con from Liberty City (of GTA III notoriety) and the murder of his mother has brought him back. Along with your gang of thugs, you can tear up the streets resembling 1990's California. This time through you will have almost an entire state to cause chaos in.

CJ is able to change clothing, like you were able to do in "Vice City," but this time around, it affects your abilities. If you pick up some gang colors, your thug buddies will have more respect for you, but you shouldn't expect the ladies to come flocking. The exact opposite happens if you decide to pimp out in khakis and a sweater. You can also go get new hairstyles and such to improve your appearance.

This new style system goes along with the new element that you have skills to develop this time around. It will be up to you to train CJ in how to drive certain vehicles, use certain weapons, build up stamina, and even watch what he eats. That's right, you have him eating burgers and fries then he'll become the African American equivalent of Michael Moore, but you can always spend a few hours running around town to work off those love handles.

'Grand Theft Auto:San Andreas' Playstation 2 Publisher Rockstar Games Developer Rockstar Games Rated M for Mature

The new skills system is designed to reward players for just screwing around on the streets of San Andreas. Jumping a motorcycle over a ramp or just driving around will help you improve your skills. You can also play mini-games to increase your abilities and they will become even greater when you reach the final stage. There you will be able to interact with a city that never sleeps – most likely due to all the bright lights – if you catch the drift.

Like most "GTA" games, it has its ups and downs. There are still times you will find yourself whipping your controller down in frustration, as you will fail an almost completed mission due to your character catching a glitch with the environment. There is also the similar situation with certain missions where the police can catch you easily or sometimes it just becomes down right impossible. Of course, once you finish off the mission, all is forgotten until the problem arises again.

One less frustration is that CJ can actually swim. Unlike past games, you won't go nuts if your car happens to end up in the ocean. Thankfully Rockstar realized that yes; people can actually swim, and that not being able to do so frustrated gamers in the past two "GTA" games. The ability is good, but you will sometimes find yourself too far away to even bother with swimming back to land. If you make a jump too far out, restarting the game is easier than swimming back to shore.

This "GTA" game also comes with all-star talent for you to interact with and listen to. Charlie Murphy of Chappelle Show fame, David Cross from Mr. Show, rapper Ice-T, Chris Penn of Reservoir Dogs fame, and even Mr. Samuel L. Jackson provide voices for some of the random characters that CJ will interact with throughout the game.

The radio is just as good as it was in "Vice City" with tracks from Guns 'N Roses, Public Enemy, Rick James, Rage Against the Machine, James Brown, Cypress Hill, and even Willie Nelson.

Rockstar has definitely delivered a new and exciting addition to the "GTA" line of games. Although some of the same glitches will aggravate players as they did in the previous two games, you can't always make a game this big and this detailed without a few problems. The new ability to build up your character through mini-games, some of which involve dating the lovely young ladies of San Andreas, along with the increase in interactive ability should keep players content.

"Grand Theft Auto: San Andreas" is available now for PS2 for $49.99 and looks to be release on the X-Box some time in 2005.

Del the Funky Homosapien heads hip-hop show

By Brian Duffey
Collegian Staff

The "ESPN Video Games Cali Comm 2004 Tour," featuring Del The Funky Homosapien, went down just hours after George W. Bush made his Presidential acceptance speech. Anti-Bush sentiment was expressed by the bulk of the evening's performers. "F George Bush" was hollered by several emcees.

The show began with a performance by Cambridge rhymeserver, Virtuoso. The co-owner of Omnipotent Records set the tone for the night with a high-energy set. He performed his politically charged single, "Farenheit 911" off his new album "Word War II: Evolution of the Torturer." The album is slated for release on Nov. 9.

ESPN Video Games Cali Comm 2004 Tour' Pearl Street Northampton Nov. 3

Virtuoso will be showcasing his skills on the East Coast leg of the tour. There are a total of 40 scheduled dates for the tour with stops in 39 different cities.

Bukue One, a Bay Area skateboarder, graffiti artist, and emcee, blessed the crowd with a steady blend of hip-hop and reggae. He was joined on stage by freestyle extraordinaire, Tee Double. Double, who has opened for the Roots and Snoop Dog, is the only non-Californian on the tour. This non-drinking, non-smoking Texan describes his career development as, "A continual learning process." Tee Double said that he writes and records music daily. Some of his musical influences are Prince, Run DMC, and Miles Davis.

One and Double had the crowd going as they danced, sang, freestyled, and spit some written material. Bukue says it is essential to remain positive in the face of injustices. "I keep a positive perspective on things and resort to the most high," he stated.

Bay Area undergrounders Zion I, are comprised of producer Amp Live and emcee Zion. Solo artist, Deuce Eclipse, joined them on stage. Although they weren't the headliners, these casually dressed Californians stole the show. From start to finish they were fire. The crowd erupted as soon as they took the stage. Within minutes, Zion was drenched in sweat. They maintained a dialogue with the crowd, which enhanced their likeability.

Deuce Eclipse, son of Nicaraguan born immigrants, says he follows his heart in all that he does. Deuce went to high school with Zion where they forged a lifelong friendship. After Zion returned from college, they began collaborating. Zion credits his success to, "Being humble before the Lord." By studying hip-hop greats like Busta Rhymes and KRS ONE, Zion says he learned how to perform with emotion.

Los Angeles underground legends, Haiku D' Etat, were unable to match the energy level and lyrical precision of Zion and Deuce Eclipse. Haiku D' Etat consists of emcees Aceyalone, Mikah 9, and Abstract Rude. These marijuana connoisseurs had several females on stage towards the end of their unnecessarily long set.

Oakland underground king, Del the Funky Homosapien, appeared on stage with unopened eyes. Due to an obvious chemical hindrance, Del was disappointing. The sound was horrendous at the beginning of his set. This cousin of rapper/actor Ice Cube did improve after a bungled opening. Del finished strong with an improvised rendition of the song Clint Eastwood, off the Gorrilaz album.

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
Schedule for 11/5/04 & 11/7/04 & 11/9/04
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
• NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVERS
Movies & showtimes are subject to change
cinemark.com

Interested in a Challenging and Exciting Career that will put your Social Concerns into Action?

Consider a career in Clinical Social Work!

To find out more, attend the
Smith College School for Social Work

OPEN HOUSE

Including small group discussions with faculty and information on course work, placement, financial aid and student life.

Saturday, November 13, 2004
1:00 PM–5:30 PM
Campus Center, 2ND Floor, Smith College

For more information call 413.585.7960
sswadmis@email.smith.edu
www.smith.edu/ssw

SMITH COLLEGE
School for Social Work

Early goal spells fate

WOMEN'S SOCCER from page 8

loss for the Minutewomen is that they outplayed Richmond for much of the game. UMass held the edge in shots, 15-11.

"It's hard for the year to end that way because we dominated," Maffucci said. "We definitely were in reach of beating them."

In the other meeting between the teams earlier in the year, Richmond also prevailed by a 1-0 score but dominated most of that game.

"We played much better this time," Rudy said. "I feel like we've made up two or three years of experience in six weeks. Last time we played a decent first half, but this time we gave them two good halves. We did more than play them even. I think we outplayed them a bit."

The end of the season also marks the end of senior captain Lindsey "Stormy" Fairweather's career. Fairweather has spent two years at UMass after transferring from Boston College.

"I'm sorry to see the Stormy-era end," Rudy said. "She's a very clever, very skillful player. Technically she's probably the best player in the conference, maybe the region. I wish I had her for another year or two."

Fairweather was disappointed to have the year end, but was happy the team made it to the tournament.

"I'm really glad we made the tournament," Fairweather said. "That's what I wanted all year."

Fairweather is unsure of her future and is contemplating an attempt to continue her career in Europe.

While Fairweather may not be certain of what the future holds for her, the same cannot be said about the Minutewomen.

Both Rudy and Maffucci expressed excitement for the future.

"I can't wait for January when they come back for indoor," Rudy said. "This bodes well for the future, and I'm really excited about it."

"There's so much promise for next year," Maffucci said. "We have so much to build on. I'm really excited to come in next year and hopefully make it back to the tournament and actually do some damage."

Looking forward to next year

NEXT YEAR from page 8

of their season. Defining, because it was when the season took a complete 180-degree rotation and then some. It was when they realized that they could win games.

"I think you have to go back to [the game against] Central Connecticut," junior defender Amy Maffucci said. "From that point on, our season was completely different. We knew we could win after that game, and we fought hard for the rest of the year."

"Getting that first win down at Central Connecticut State, that was really big," Rudy said. "All of a sudden we discovered that, yeah, we can win. Maybe we're not being fooled. Maybe we are going to be pretty good."

And so went a series of ups and downs and wins and losses that brought the Minutewomen back to where the ride all started, on their home turf where yesterday came their final defining moment in this year's Atlantic 10 Tournament. In other words, yesterday marked defining moment number two.

In one sense, yesterday's battle against Richmond defined what fans should get used to seeing in the future. That is, a sense of grit and determination when the going gets tough. After giving up that fluke goal, the Minutewomen dug deep and just pressed harder, outshooting the Spiders 15-11, but ultimately, it was their inability to convert those shots that led to the defeat.

So, even though senior Lindsey "Stormy" Fairweather has strutted off the grass at Rudd Field for the last time yesterday, things look bright for the future. That's because we'll still see three more years of speed by Britt Canfield, perfect timing by Jenny Roehrig and amazing toughness from Tina Rodriguez and Kristina Nunes. Ladies and gentlemen, meet this year's freshmen seven, A.K.A. the "Kiddie Korps".

Next year, these kiddies will have grown up, and the sense of optimism is being echoed already.

"Right now, I can't wait until January when they come back and start training again," Rudy said. "A lot of things happen. The freshmen get through their yeah-yeah's and all of a sudden, they come back in January, and they know how things work, they know the terminology, they're no longer real freshmen anymore. I'm excited thinking about it. I just can't wait for it."

Neither can anybody else.

Sizing up the Atlantic 10 field hockey tournament

By Dave Quinn
Collegian Staff

For four Atlantic 10 squads, including the Massachusetts field hockey team, it all comes down to this weekend. One team will have its ticket punched for the NCAA tournament while the other three will have to wait until next year.

Winning the first seed this season was Richmond, which went a perfect 6-0 in Atlantic 10 play. The Spiders finished the season an impressive 15-2 including nine straight wins to close out the year.

Finishing in second this season were the Minutewomen with a 4-2 conference record. Massachusetts made great second half charge, winning six of its last eight including four conference wins to finish 8-12 overall.

St. Joseph's drew the third seed with a 3-3 conference record. St. Joe's clinched its position on the last game of the season by defeating Temple at home. The Hawks continued the recurring trend of finishing strong as they won four out of their last five to finish at 11-7.

Rounding out the bracket is Temple in the four-slot. Going into the last game of the season, Temple had an outside shot of finishing in second place with a win over St. Joe's and a Massachusetts loss. Instead, the Owls fell into the last qualifying slot with a win by the Minutewomen and a 3-1 loss to St. Joe's. Here is a look at the match-ups and a prediction for each game.

(1) Richmond vs. (4) Temple, 5 p.m. at Garber Field

Richmond ran away with the league this year, sweeping all of its conference games. The No. 10 Spiders rank first in goals per game (3.55) and goals allowed per game (.71). Richmond has been led by A-10 Player of the Year candidate Holly Cram, who has amassed 57 points on 25 goals and seven assists. Whitney Wells was the team's second leading scorer with 10 goals while also setting up two goals. Lauren Luft and Shannon Taylor have also played major roles this season, scoring nine goals each. If having four potent offensive weapons wasn't enough, Richmond has the league's most stifling defense. The Spiders have allowed just four goals by conference opponents, no team scoring more than one in any game.

Temple has a chance because, well, stranger things have happened. The reality of its chance of winning is slim to none, and slim just left town. In short, they're probably just coming for the bus ride and a night at the Holiday Inn. Richmond is that strong this year.

Temple doesn't really have a go-to scorer. Talia Ruth and Melissa Fritze are the leading scorers with four goals apiece. That doesn't even crack the top-10 in the A-10. Last time the two teams played, Temple mustered one shot in 70 minutes. The Spiders launched 26. It will be a long, uphill battle to say the least.

Prediction: Richmond 5-0

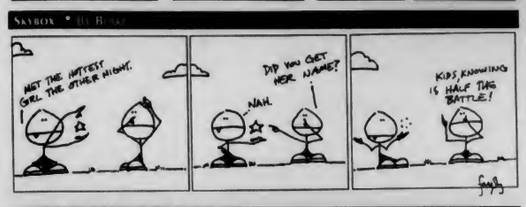
(2) Massachusetts vs. (3) St. Joseph's, 7 p.m. at Garber Field

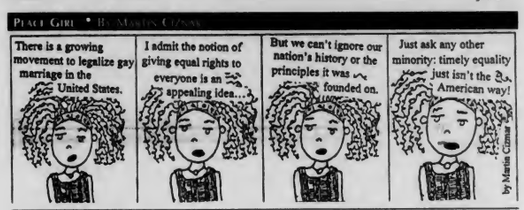
The slight edge that Massachusetts has is that they won the first contest but just barely. It took the Minutewomen two overtime periods and two sets of strokes to pull out the 2-1 victory. Massachusetts scored early in the game thanks to an Adrianne Monaco penalty stroke 30 seconds into the game. Massachusetts spent the majority of the game on defense and was able to limit St. Joe's to one goal on 29 shots due to the play of Katelyn Wolfrey and keeper Christine Tocco. UMass will keep things close thanks to Tocco who will do just about everything except dribble the length of the field and score herself. The senior saved a whopping 194 shots, putting her tops in the A-10 and in the top-five nationally. Offensively, the Minutewomen need to find a way to get the ball to, and free up, leading scorer Caitlin Beresin. Last game, the Maroon and White had trouble moving the ball up field to their lightning quick forward. When they did find her, she was often double and triple teamed.

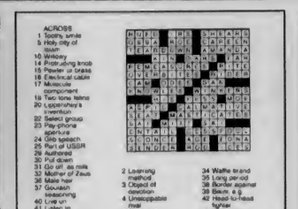
The Owls played well enough to win back on Oct. 17 when they last played the Minutewomen. They out-shot Massachusetts 29-16 and drew 18 more corners, yet somehow only managed one goal. The Hawks just couldn't capitalize, something rare for this team. St. Joe's had two scorers in the top-five of the Atlantic 10, Nicole Antonini with 15 and Lauren Luft with nine.

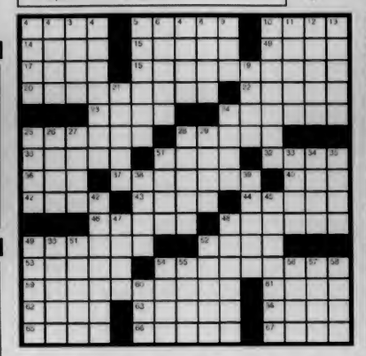
The team as a whole was second in the A-10 with 45 goals. As good as they were putting the ball in the net, they were equally as good keeping the ball out of it, allowing just 27 goals all season, good for second in the conference. Seniors Angela Hanna and Shannon Scott anchored the Hawks' defense.

Prediction: UMass 3-2 OT









H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You're not making any sense today. Stop talking.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Be prepared to have a lot of mood fluctuations. Your emotions are all over the place.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't freak out about that test. You'll do better than that person you're competing with.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Make sure to lock your door today. There are some suspicious folk lurking about.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't pop to many pills. Give your body a chance to heal itself.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Introduce yourself to that person you've been meaning to talk to for a while.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't throw away the cute, fuzzy pink slippers.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't be too hard on yourself just because you've had a tough week.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your psychic abilities are strong today. Use them to help a loved one.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't turn down that offer from your friend.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You need to get up and get some circulation moving through your body.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Try not to hit anyone with your flailing arms.

Quote of the Day

"Donkey, you HAVE the right to remain silent. What you lack, is the capacity."

-Shrek, Shrek 2

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

Apartment for Rent

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January - May, t_korol@yahoo.com

Apartment for Rent

413-687-8806 Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywinecapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Auto for Sale

1998 Jeep Cherokee Classic Auto 4x4 Excellent Cond. 5K bo 413-772-6855

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

Employment

Put up Posters
Towns and colleges. Car & References Needed. $10/Hr 10-15 hrs /wk. 6 hrs must be business hrs Excellent Attn to detail and follow up needed. Must be good w/ specific directions. postering@artspromo.org or 413-259-1227 Ext. 4

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

Employment

Substitute teachers needed. Work cooperatively as part of teaching team. High School diploma or equivalent required. Must be able to lift children up to 40 lbs. on a regular basis. Flexible able to work different shifts as needed. $7.00/hr. no benefits Send cover letter and resume to: HCAC Human Resources, 557 Easthampton Rd. Northampton, MA 01060 or to hr@hcac.org

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Cafe 60 Masonic St. Northampton

Employment

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Instruction

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

Roommate Wanted

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

Services

Transcription Services
Experienced, Fast, Reasonable rates Karen 413-834-2505

Services

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling out Immigration forms.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Travel

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club

Travel

Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endless-summertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

Travel

Spring Break 2005. Travel with STS. America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRSMG Online
1 800 426 7710

Wanted

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

End of the line for Minutewomen

Rudy is happy with solid play

By Dan Duggan
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's soccer team's season ended yesterday with a 1-0 loss to Richmond in the first round of the Atlantic-10 Tournament at Rudd Field.

Senior Whitney Sikes scored the game's lone goal on a breakaway just over four minutes into the contest. Senior Olina Vidasdottir assisted on the score.

The play started with the ball in Richmond's half of the field, but in the blink of an eye, it had crossed midfield and gotten behind the UMass defense. Before UMass could recover, Sikes was already in alone against goalie Kristin Walker.

Walker came out to challenge Sikes, but Sikes was able to poke a shot through Walker's legs and into the goal.

"It's tough because we had one breakdown all game, and they were able to capitalize on it," junior defender Amy Maffucci said. "I think our defense played really solid. We've been really solid a lot lately. It was just unlucky that they capitalized on our one breakdown."

Despite the loss, coach Jim Rudy was pleased with his team's effort.

"We gave it our all," Rudy said. "This is the hardest we've played for 90 minutes in four or five years here. It's too bad. After the game, the Richmond coach said the better team didn't win today, but that's the way our sport goes."

The Minutewomen had multiple scoring opportunities but came up empty on each attempt.

"We made some poor choices in the final third of the field," Rudy said. "We made about four or five ill-advised decisions about whether to dribble or pass. We had some really open people and we didn't hit them with the ball."

Rudy considers Richmond to be the best defensive team in the conference along with Dayton. The Spiders have allowed only 15 goals in 18 games this year.

"We played a great defensive team," Rudy said. "This was a very intense game against a quality opponent."

Richmond did an outstanding job in harnessing UMass' top scoring threat, forward Britt Canfield. The freshman sensation was named to the A-10 All-Rookie Team and was also tabbed as a second-team All-Conference selection on Wednesday.

On Thursday, it seemed that everywhere Canfield went, there were two or three Richmond defenders draped all over her. She was able to get free a few times but was never able to mount a serious scoring chance.

The most frustrating part of the

See WOMEN'S SOCCER on page 6

COURTESY KAREN WINDER

Morgan Czaja of the Minutewomen fights for the ball in a game against Boston University earlier this season. UMass was bounced from the playoffs yesterday.

Looking ahead to next season

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Yesterday officially marked the last time we will see the Massachusetts women's soccer team in action in 2004. It's time to lock up shop.

After goalie Kristin Walker let a shot slip under her body five minutes into the game, the Minutewomen hung tough with the Richmond Spiders through the remaining 85 minutes. However, they were unable to erase that 1-0 deficit and fell out of the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

But there was an unusual expression on the faces of the players and coaches. They weren't crying or throwing tantrums; nobody was pacing around, blaming certain people for certain errors; nobody bowed their heads in shame. They were – if it's possible in light of a loss – content.

"I'm very pleased," coach Jim Rudy said of his team's effort. "If you're gonna lose, lose by one goal only and lose to a really good team, and give them everything they can handle. And you know, we did."

Of course, you would be feeling pretty high about yourself if you had gone through the roller coaster ride that these girls have been through.

August was like that first very first climb to start the ride off. Going into the season, everything was high for the Minutewomen. Spirits were high, morale was high and motivation was high. All was well within the UMass camp because something about this year felt different.

But the car stopped making that clicking noise, and a monstrous drop lay ahead.

The Minutewomen started off 0-5 and lost seniors Carly Turman and Erica Wideburg to season-ending injuries, generating whispers of a repeat of 2003, a season when UMass was never able to pull together a series of wins due to an astronomically high amount of injuries.

But did they scream or panic as anyone else feeling such a rush might have? No, they hung tight and let the wind flow through their hair. They sat, if you will, patiently, knowing something had to break sooner or later.

Here comes the rebound: a 3-2 upset of Central Connecticut State on Sept. 21, and the defining moment

See NEXT YEAR on page 6

UMass is set to do battle with Warriors

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

Early in the season, the Massachusetts hockey team (4-3, 2-1 Hockey East) has a very good chance to build some in-conference momentum as it is set to face off with Merrimack (2-4, 0-2 Hockey East) in a home-and-home series beginning tonight at the Mullins Center at 7 p.m. before switching to Lawler Arena tomorrow night at the same starting time.

The success of UMass this weekend will ride solely on which team shows up to play each night because the talent level between the two schools favors the Minutemen. That was also the case, however, when UMass lost earlier in the season to lowly Connecticut 3-2 in overtime at the Mullins Center.

Massachusetts also showed up flat last Friday when it lost 6-2 down in Providence but was able to right the ship and play a great game in time to take down the Friars 2-0 on Saturday night in Amherst.

Proving that they can play with anybody, the Minutemen lost to national powerhouse Minnesota in the final seconds at the Nye Frontier Classic in Alaska a couple weeks back.

"It's just a matter of what their mindset is when they show up here," coach Don Cahoon said. "If they're ready to skate, and compete, and focused and play well, then good things usually happen. If we come here a little bit lethargic or with a lack of preparation, then obviously, we're in for a difficult night.

"I'm just hoping that we can show the bright side a little bit more frequently."

Massachusetts at least followed a normal practice schedule this week as opposed to last due to the Bill Cosby concert that forced the Minutemen to skate at Amherst College's rink in preparation for the Providence series.

UMass really needs to take advantage of Merrimack, which is consistently one of the poorer teams in the Hockey East, before the conference juggernauts such as New Hampshire, Boston College and Boston University begin showing up on the schedule.

"If we're going to be a team that does better than people expect us to do, we need to get points against these teams and some points against what think are the upper-echelon teams," Cahoon said. "If we want to make the games later in the season meaningful, we need to do well now."

Off to a surprisingly fast start for UMass have been the freshmen, highlighted by forward P.J. Fenton, who has scored four goals, good for second on the team, and notched two assists. He has a plus-four rating, which is also second-best on the team.

"[The freshmen] are making a nice contribution," Cahoon said. "They show up everyday and practice hard. They seem to be a good fit, and everybody gets along with them. I'm really happy with the freshmen, and they just have to keep their minds on what they're doing and grow as the season progresses."

Merrimack's offense has been led by several different players. Jordan Black leads the Warriors with four goals while Bryan Schmidt has three. Matt Byrnes is tops on the team with eight points, headlined by seven assists.

"They've got a balanced offensive group," Cahoon said. "They're a competitive team. They're going to beat the top-end teams in our league before the season is over, and I hope that we're one of the top-end teams. And I hope they don't beat us."

Rotating between goalies Gabe Winer and Tim Warner this season, Cahoon said that Winer, who recorded the 2-0 shutout Saturday, will be in net tonight.

UMass

Weekend Schedule

Friday, Nov. 5

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Soccer	at Rhode Island	7:00 p.m.
Men's Hockey	vs. Merrimack	7:00 p.m.
Field Hockey	vs. St. Joseph's	7:00 p.m.

Saturday, Nov. 6

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	at Northeastern	12:00 p.m.
Field Hockey	A-10 Tournament	5:00 p.m.
Men's Hockey	at Merrimack	7:00 p.m.

Sunday, Nov. 7

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Soccer	A-10 Tournament	TBA

Season comes down to the final game in Rhode Island

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's soccer team is the perfect example of how history repeats itself. Today, the Minutemen will travel to Kingston, R.I. to take on Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island in their last contest of the 2004 season. If UMass wins, it receives an automatic bid to the A-10 tournament. If it loses, its fate will lie in the hands of mathematics and games outside of its control.

Eerily similar to last season, the Minutemen are faced with a do-or-die situation against the Rams. Like last year, the Maroon and White split its final two-game weekend series last weekend with a 4-0 shellacking of St. Bonaventure, and a 4-1 wake-up-call from Duquesne, which set up the win or go home scenario at hand.

This year, however, Rhode Island has its back against the wall as well. With three spots remaining in the A-10 tournament, the Rams are situated in the sixth and final spot. A loss or a tie with the Minutemen will mathematically end their season, unlike last year where they had already clinched.

Junior captain Oral Bullen, who was a starter for the 2003 squad, remember last year's game, but isn't letting the past sway his mentality.

"This brings up some memories, but not as much because last year we had to win. This year, they have to beat us so the pressure is kind of on them," Bullen said. "We're not as panicked as last year, not really as nervous"

UMass is currently tied for fourth with George Washington in the A-10 with Rhode Island close behind. The magic number this year is six. If the Colonials and the Minutemen win their games this weekend, they will automatically make the tournament.

LaSalle (9-7-1, 5-3-0 A-10) and URI are the two teams on the bubble this weekend. The Explorers need a UMass loss and have to defeat last-place Fordham to claim the final playoff spot. If the Minutemen lose, and LaSalle loses, UMass will take the low seed.

LaSalle defeated the Minutemen 2-0 on Oct. 24, which would serve as the tiebreaker if the aforementioned scenario occurs.

The Rams have been struggling as of late and have dropped two straight conference games to Duquesne and St. Bonaventure, respectively. Over the last two games, Rhode Island has scored only a goal per contest, a significant drop from the 2.24 goals per game it has been averaging this season.

Even with the slump, Rhode Island has the third-best out-of-conference record on the season, trailing only Duquesne (12-6-0) and Dayton (10-6-1), who are No. 1 and No. 2 in the A-10, respectively.

Bullen believes that catching the Rams in a slump will be beneficial but knows how hard they will fight with their backs against the wall.

"Yeah, we definitely want to pounce on them. When a team is down, you really want to jump on them," Bullen said. "No matter what happened over the last few games, they're going to be fired up. We just need to be able to match their intensity."

Leading the way for Rhode Island has been the jaw-dropping play of Sasha Gotsmanov, who has 43 total points this year with 19 goals and five assists. His 19 goals are 10 more than Bullen's and URI's Jeffery Gonsalves, who are tied for second in the A-10.

One issue for the Minutemen might be their inexperience. For most of this season, UMass has either played or started most of its freshman class. One would expect that with such a young team, there would be a sense of nervous anticipation coming into today, but Bullen is confident that, not only are they ready, they're excited.

"I think we're all psyched up for it. The guys just can't stop talking about it," Bullen said. "I think everybody is going to be ready. The young guys haven't seen a scenario like this yet. I definitely think they'll be pumped up for the game."

Jimmy Eat World: bright 'Futures' ahead
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

TODAY: High: 46, Low: 24 | TUESDAY: High: 41, Low: 19 | WEDNESDAY: High: 42, Low: 27
DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Minutemen win Brown Bowl at Northeastern
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 44

TurkeyTrot raises money for Food Bank

By Michelle Dozois
Collegian Staff

On Saturday morning, 62 participants ran, walked or trotted in the second annual Turkey Trot at the University of Massachusetts, raising over $600 for charity.

Participants' $10 entry fees will be donated to the Food Bank of Western Massachusetts in Hatfield, which distributes food to families in the north Pioneer Valley area, said senior Alexis Davison, president of Students Helping Area Reach-Out Efforts (S.H.A.R.E.), the student group who organized the event.

"For every dollar that's raised, the food bank is able to move $9 worth of food," Davison said. "And we raised $625, so hundreds of families are going to have holiday meals."

At 9 a.m. Saturday, the trotters began to arrive at the Student Union to register, stretch, and fuel up on bagels, granola bars, orange slices, and flavored water, donated by Trader Joe's in Hadley and UMass Dining Services.

Warming up before the race, senior Katie Abbondanza said she was excited to be running in the Trot.

"I haven't been running in three years," she said. "It was part of my New Year's resolution to run a road race."

The race began at 10 a.m. at the Student Union. Arrows drawn in chalk marked the route, which circled around campus.

Most of the participants were UMass students, with a few exceptions.

Three-year-old Casey Avery finished the race just before her dad, ROTC instructor Kevin Avery, who pushed her across the finish line in a jogging stroller.

John Lohan, brother of S.H.A.R.E. publicity officer Brian Lohan, won first place overall. This was his second year coming from Boston to participate in the Trot.

Eighteen minutes after the participants took off, S.H.A.R.E. officers and volunteers focused on cleaning up the registration table and almost missed Lohan's 18:18 finish.

"Is that someone coming?" a volunteer asked. Lohan had to re-create his finish-line

CLIO REYES-GRACIA/COLLEGIAN

Dozens of runners ran theTurkey Trot last year that raised money for the local Food Bank. Participants this year raised over $600 for the Food Bank.

crossing for the S.H.A.R.E. photographer.

Abbondanza finished second in the women's category, behind Carrie Stone, a member of a women's running club at Kinetics health club in Hadley.

Some runners sprinted across the finish line, soaked in sweat, while others took a more leisurely approach.

"The money goes to the food bank whether I run or walk," said senior Mary Trautwein, one of the walkers, in response to jokes made by friends who had finished the race earlier.

"Hey, we weren't last!" added senior Jessica Bishop, who walked across the finish line with Trautwein.

Lohan and Stone received first pick at the prizes, which were $300 worth of gift certificates donated by local businesses. The rest of the prizes were raffled off among the remaining winners.

After all of the prizes were given away, Davison thanked the participants for their efforts.

"I know it was tough to get up this morning, but it's worth it," she said. "All those families who weren't going to be able to have a holiday meal will, thanks to you."

Participants agreed that they were happy to have done the event.

"This is one of the better organized races in the area," said Rich Rodgers, Director of Foundation Relations for the UMass Development Office. "It leverages a lot of money for the food bank."

"It was turkey-riffic and gobbler-tastic," senior David Pease said.

S.H.A.R.E. members organize a variety of volunteer activities throughout the year, at places such as the Northampton Nursing Home, the Western Massachusetts Hospital in Westfield, and the Forest Park Zoo in Springfield. For more information, visit http://www.people.umass.edu/share/.

'Take Back UMass' met to discuss emails

By Jeremy Dirac
Collegian Staff

Yesterday afternoon in the Malcolm X Cultural Center, the group Take Back UMass called for the resignation of Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Michael Gargano.

Today, Take Back UMass members are calling and emailing Gargano, requesting his resignation and contacting Chancellor John Lombardi, requesting that he fire Gargano. Later this week, for a dinner with members of the Dean's List, Take Back UMass members hope to elicit aid from students on the Dean's List to protest Gargano.

Take Back UMass is also planning on, "pumping out a lot of written material," according to the public relations committee chair, Barak Sered. Sered also plans on having writing workshops to get members to put postings on people's doors, write ed-ops to The Daily Collegian, and write administrators and legislators.

"[These emails] show a conspiracy between Student Legal Advisor, Charles DiMare, Michael Gargano and former SGA Speaker Patrick Higgins," said Take Back UMass member Marisha Leiblum.

According to a press release by Take Back UMass, The emails are 29 pages of alleged correspondences leaked to the Graduate Employee Organization Union (GEO) and the Service Employee International Union local (SEIU) two weeks ago "[Gargano] withheld information from ALANA (African, Latino, Asian and Native American) and basically everyone besides Speaker Higgins," Leiblum said.

The press release also said that Gargano received information from the General Council saying that the ALANA caucus was legal. "[Gargano has] given certain trust by the student government and he's violated it by refusing to relay information to the president of the SGA," Sered said.

Last semester, then SGA President Jared Nokes questioned the legality of the ALANA caucus. After that, current SGA President Eduardo Bustamante contacted DiMare in regards to ALANA's legality.

Take Back UMass members asserted that DiMare wrote to SGA officials Jared Nokes, Dan Saunders, Patrick Higgins, Sarah Boy and Aaron Saunders asking them how to avoid giving his legal opinion to Bustamante regarding the legality of the ALANA caucus.

Leiblum said that she was concerned about the wording allegedly used by Higgins in an email where he questioned Gargano about an "end plan" and said that he wanted to see a "final solution." She said that she asserted that this reveals a conspiratorial relationship between Higgins and Gargano.

According to Take Back UMass members, DiMare requested that Bustamante gather five signatures from various SGA members on June 21st in order to release any legal advice regarding the ALANA caucus.

The five signatures needed were of the of the SGA President, the SGA Speaker, the SGA Chief Justice, the SGA Attorney General and the Student Trustee, some of whom had expressed negative feelings about the ALANA caucus seats. According to Leiblum, DiMare was unable to identify the bylaw that prompted him to ask Bustamante for the five signatures.

See UMASS on page 3

'Zany Angels' perform at a benefit at Hampshire College

The pair educated the audience about the healing process of childhood sexual abuse

By Megan Daley
Collegian Staff

Amherst residents and five-college students attended a benefit performance at Hampshire College on Friday night and learned about the healing process of two victims of childhood sexual abuse.

The Zany Angels, a performance art company of two, danced, sang and performed monologues about their pasts in a play called "Shameless." Rythea Lee Kaufman and Rose Oceania, both victims of sexual abuse, gave their performance in three comedy infused parts, "When God Was Not My Father," the story of Kaufman's past, "Butterflies Make the Best Dancers," the story of Oceania's past and "Mothers, Martyrs, and Muffins: the Musical," a series of memories of family dinners performed by both Kaufman and Oceania.

"We do this to support healing and conversation and opening people's hearts to telling their own stories," Kaufman said. "I felt like I couldn't tell my story for a long time." Working with Oceania, Kaufman said, helped her to break the silence and she wants to provide the same opportunity for others.

The stories in the performance dealt with the serious issues of childhood sexual abuse and trauma, yet the performance was littered with humor. Both woman feel that it was important to incorporate humor into their performances as well because laughing helped break the pain.

Kaufman's piece told about she had always perceived her father, who used to sexually abuse her, as "God."

"God could touch me wherever and whenever he wanted. I thought that was normal for God....I loved my father, but I hated God," Kaufman said.

"Laugh or die," Oceania said. "We're all funny on the inside."

"There was a time, early on, when I was remembering and it was not funny." Kaufman admitted.

Oceania's piece began with laughter from the audience when she appeared on stage in an evening gown and boxing gloves.

"They stoned me that year," Oceania said, relating the story of how her seventh grade class had thrown rocks at her for being different. That year, which Oceania calls "the year of the moccasins," was the year that her mother was diagnosed with breast cancer and her father began to "come to my room and slide into my bed."

Oceania explained that she often dreamed in her seventh grade year of "my moccasins walking the Milky Way, to a better place."

According to Kaufman, the Zany Angels perform "autobiographical performance art" to help with their own healing. The stories also have elements of other abuse survivor stories that the women have heard. As "I feel am telling a universal story that transcends my own history," Kaufman said.

According to Kaufman, the Zany Angels like to blend because spoken word, dance and song into their performances because, "we are both obsessed with a thousand different art forms...and it is so satisfying for it to become one thing....The whole thing about being an artist is that you've just got to do it."

Kaufman and Oceania met at Earthdance, a dance for peace that takes place all over the world, about 12 years ago. "I saw (Kaufman) dance," said Oceania, "and I just wanted to work with her." They later formed Zany Angels to "bring our art together."

Kaufman is a counselor in Northampton who works specifically with survivors of sexual abuse and childhood trauma. She feels that being a part of Zany Angels really helps her counsel others since she encourages her patients to draw, dance write to express what they are feeling.

"I don't think that we can fully heal without a spiritual process of some kind," Kaufman said.

Oceania agrees that spirituality is key to healing and uses this idea to help people get more in touch with their bodies through yoga, which she teaches in Sunderland.

This event was sponsored by the Community Health Coll-aborative and Hampshire College. Proceeds for the performance went to the Every Woman Center.

STEM program continues to grow

By Mark Walker
Collegian Correspondent

The Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics (STEM) Bridge Program has recently been awarded a $500,000 grant from the National Science Foundation which will greatly help their ability to encourage undergraduates in perusing a teaching career.

The Program is aimed specifically at undergraduates who would like to become secondary school teachers in the fields of math and science. It will be rewarding successful undergraduate students with scholarships worth between $7,500 and $10,000 for either one or two years, and will altogether be awarding approximately 50 scholarships over the course of three years.

To be eligible for the scholarships, students will be required to work at a high-need school district for two years. This provides successful students with a large choice of schools to work at, as there are three categories that define a school as being high-need, and many schools in the area fall into at least one of them.

The program will be particularly targeting students from a low-income background, minority students, and those considered non-traditional, such as those catered for by the University Without Walls program.

Transfer students from Springfield, Greenfield and Holyoke community colleges will also be encouraged to apply for scholarships to help ease the financial burden of studying at a full time college.

Mort Sternheim, who retired as a professor of physics in 1997, has been fundamental in the good work STEM does as its director. The STEM Program was one of fourteen out of forty-seven to be successful in securing a grant, and he was notified of this in

See STEM on page 3

Engineers aid girl-scouts with project

By Bill Donovan
Collegian Staff

BILL DONOVAN/COLLEGIAN

Local girl scouts work together to build a Lego amusement park with the assistance of local engineers

Young, aspiring engineers from western Massachusetts congregated Sat. Nov. 6 afternoon in Marcus Hall for the annual "Girl Scout Day" to construct an amusement park out of Legos.

Female engineering students from University of Massachusetts, volunteer workers, as well as troop leaders were also present at the event assisting the youngsters with the project and also interesting them in the field of engineering.

"It's a great program to get young girls interested in sciences," commented Mariah Winkler, UMass junior electrical engineering major and student coordinator of the event.

"There's a very low population of women in engineering here on campus. We've been doing this event for 15 years."

"Girl Scout Day" was sponsored by the Lego company, which presented a $5,000 grant to the Girl Scouts of Western Mass. The UMass chapter of the Society of Women Engineers supported the event as well, sending their members to help out with the young girls, who come from Conway, Northfield, Southwick, Amherst, Turners Falls, and Northampton.

"The girls always respond by saying, 'Legos!' My brother plays with Legos!' Legos help smash the myth that science and engineering are for boys," explained Mary Cotton Richard, program and outreach director for the Girl Scouts of Western Mass.

During the day, the girl scouts developed such structures as a haunted house, fun

See SCOUTS on page 3

FEARED OR LOVED? CITY OR COUNTRY? OR CAT?

you have priorities.
let them guide you as you build your career.
define what's important to you and see what's important to others.

pwc.com/mypriorities

*connectedthinking

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2004 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (a Delaware limited liability partnership) or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. *connectedthinking is a trademark of PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP (US). We are proud to be an Affirmative Action employer.

Students call for Gargano to resign

UMASS from page 1

According to SGA member Jeff Napolitano, last week the ALANA caucus filed a Freedom of Information (FOI) request to Gargano and Terence O'Malley, a University lawyer, requesting a verification of the emails. According to Napolitano, Bustamante went to Alan Brainard, who is in charge of SGA operation accounts, requested that he have OIT verify the emails. The verification was supposed to be done on Friday, according to Napolitano.

According to Take Back UMass, Amy Glynn, associate to the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, told Brainard not to verify the emails. Napolitano said that the SGA is expected to file another FOI request today.

The group has conflicted feelings about the special Commission on Campus Diversity. The commission was set up following the revealing of controversial photos taken last March of SGA members drinking alcoholic beverages and mocking a caricature of a Ku Klux Klan Grand Wizard in the office for Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA).

"It doesn't take a commission. We should not forget that this is a way to distract people from the problems and demands of students on this campus," said GEO Organizer and Take Back UMass member Amanda Plumb.

Take Back UMass is a progressive group of students and faculty advocating student involvement at the University of Massachusetts. Formed following the throw-out of last semester's elections, it is a group that also wants changes in the student government. Gargano has not yet commented.

STEM grant allows program to expand more than ever

STEM from page 1

September. He praised Professor Alan Feldman, who was principle investigator of the grant and wrote the successful proposal.

Professor Sternheim also thanked Professors Portia Elliot and Farshid Hajir, who were his fellow co-principle investigators, for the hard work they put into getting the grant. The retired Professor believes they were successful in securing the grant due to the fact the University of Massachusetts and its fellow colleges are leading institutions for the training and development of math and science students, despite the amount of high-need schools that are in the area.

The successful team is now busy fine tuning the way the applications system for the scholarship will work, and Professor Sternheim believes that application should be available to students as early as spring semester.

Students who apply will be required, if successful, to undergo a semester of teaching related coursework, a semester of teacher training, to complete their major in math or a science, and finally to sit a general exam and one specific to their major.

This should not be a very difficult process, however it is just one to keep students focused on their ultimate aim of becoming a teacher.

The current STEM project follows on from a similar scheme run under STEMTEC, which incorporated the Five Colleges: UMass, Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, Hampshire and Smith, and the three community colleges: Springfield, Greenfield and Holyoke. The STEMTEC program is now coming to an end after eight successful years of encouraging students to pursue education in the fields of math and science. However, while the former project did not actually require students to teach as a condition of the scholarship, the new scheme under STEM will do so in order that students do not loose focus.

According to Professor Sternheim, roughly half of undergraduates who come here to study science will finish off in another major, and so this new drive to keep students focused on their math and science majors is welcome. The newer scheme will also be awarding much larger scholarships than under the previous one which should again help encourage students to stay the course.

The $500,000 grant has been an excellent development for STEM, and perhaps more importantly will prove to be of huge benefit to those successful in acquiring a scholarship, and to the high-need schools who will benefit from well qualified teachers passing on their valuable knowledge in math and science.

Engineers spend a day with scouts to build Lego projects

Students volunteer for 'Girl Scout Day'

SCOUTS from page 1

house ride, and bumper cars. Paula Brault, a volunteer for Girl Scouts of Western Mass. and UMass alumna commented on how it was fun to watch the girls work on their projects.

"The girls had a blast today. Ten of them were sitting on the floor watching the three bumper cars they made. They spread all of their legs out to make room for the cars," Brault said. "We're really happy about this program."

UMass engineering students also enjoyed aiding the girls in the development of their amusement park. Saturday afternoon. "We did the harder project, the haunted house; but it was fun," added Jenn Ramsay, electrical engineering major. "I haven't had the chance to work with kids like this in a long time. There's probably like ten women in my electrical and computer engineering class. So it's good we're getting these girls interested in this."

The scouts were divided into separate groups to construct their projects. One group made the haunted house, whereas another made bumper cars. Kits and packets were handed out to aid the kids in building each one. Also, the RCX, a high-tech Lego block, which loads programs of the buildings for the girls to look at, was provided at the event.

"My brother has Legos and I play with them too," said Kate Soper, a sixth-grader at Fort River and Girl Scout at the event. "The haunted house was hard but fun, we chose the hardest project. The computerized legos were really cool, like the RCX."

"I've been a part of the Society for a while and we do this every year," commented Elena Liza-south, a UMass senior in civil engineering. "Mariah engineered the whole event. We were working together pretty well with the kids."

"It was really fun and I might want to be an engineer," added Sydney Judge of Troop 55.

Some of the UMass engineering students did this event when they were younger and in Girl Scouts and became interested in the field. "I did this when I was a Girl Scout and in high school," added Dawn Eriksen, UMass chemical engineering sophomore. "So it was good to inspire these kids here today and pass on my knowledge on to them of engineering."

MATTHEW RHEE/COLLEGIAN

Homecoming Festivities

Students pose in front of thier project, which advocates for Bill Cosby's academic goals during homecoming week.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3690 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merriit
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugalski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
COMICS EDITOR Alyson Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lowley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reed
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marzelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappo
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kiggins
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginie Fresaut
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclyn Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Bonack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Mike Marzelli
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Megan Brinster
COPY EDITOR
Matt Elder
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha M. Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Amanda Allen and Ali Zillmann

Due to a reporting error, Friday's press conference was held by the Graduate Employee Organization and Service Employees International Union, not by the Office of ALANA Affairs.

UNIVERSITY PRODUCTIONS & CONCERTS PRESENTS:
theNEWDEAL
5TH POCKET
NEWSAY
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2004
STUDENT UNION BALLROOM, 10:00 PM
TICKETS AVAILABLE AT TIX BEGINNING 11/3
$8 UMASS STUDENTS
$12 FIVE COLLEGE STUDENTS
$16 GENERAL PUBLIC

Former Speaker of Israeli Knesset, Senior Member of Israel's Labor Party,and Geneva Accord Negotiator AVRAHAM BURG speaks on:
"Struggling Towards Peace in Times of Terror"
Tuesday, November 9, 2004, 7:30pm
Hasbrouck Rm 20, UMass/Amherst
Free and Open to the Public
Sponsored by UMass Hillel
Co-sponsored by The UMass Office of Jewish Affairs, The UMass Department of Judaic and Near Eastern Studies, and Five-College Hillel

Avraham Burg is one of the most charismatic and paradoxical members of Israel's Knesset (Parliament). Burg is an idealist and a realist. He is an Orthodox Jew in a secular party who champions the separation of church and state. His long record of political activism has led him to adopt a liberal, reconciliatory approach to the Middle Eastern conflict. In 1999 he became Speaker of the15th Knesset, the youngest Speaker in Israel's history.

Dining Services now offers more vegetarian choices at Franklin and Berkshire Dining Commons
✔ Two vegetarian, one vegan and one grain daily at lunch and dinner
✔ Tofu(organic)available daily
✔ Vegan dessert daily
✔ Soy milk and rice milk daily
✔ Separate station to serve you better
✔ Plus salad bar, stir-fry bar and vegetarian soup
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
YCMP
RESIDENTIAL

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 2004

"It is hard enough to remember my opinions, without also remembering my reasons for them." Friedrich Nietzsche

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Students reflect in the wake of the election

Chasing American morality

John Ciampa

The election is over. The votes are in. Many residents of the east and west coasts (and urbanites in between) were left stunned and dejected, shaking their heads and wondering just exactly what the rest of the nation was thinking.

Those of us searching for answers can start by taking a quick look at the exit poll results printed in last Thursday's edition of the "New York Times." That data alone is enough to subvert any preconceived notions that the Left may have had about the national electorate. Though I consider myself to be politically aware, I (along with many other Northeasterners, I suspect) was simply blindsided by the polling numbers, duped by my own secularism.

With the dust of the election settled and a sampling of our voting behaviors now sliced and diced into a smattering of various categories, we can see a clear divide in the priorities of our nation's populace and the reason behind why a majority of Americans voted the way they did.

Contrary to what we were led to believe, it was not the economy, terrorism, or Iraq – issues that dominated campaign discourse – that motivated voters the most. Nor was it the traditional bastions of domestic policy – taxes and social security. Instead it was that good old chestnut of American sensibility called "values" now prefaced with the word "moral" by the pollsters.

Moral values carried the day for President Bush. Of the 22 percent of voters who said it was the primary issue on their minds, a startling 80 percent of them voted for Bush.

According to the results published in the "Times," moral values carried the day for President Bush. Of the 22 percent of voters who said it was the primary issue on their minds, a startling 80 percent of them voted for Bush. Though Kerry was able to trump these numbers with respect to the economy (20 percent of voters listed it as their top priority, of which Kerry garnered 80 percent of their vote), a look at various other demographic figures reveal how deeply the notion of morality permeated itself into the consciousness of voters.

With respect to religious affiliation, Bush won both the Protestant and Catholic vote. Taken together, they constituted a hefty 81 percent of the electorate, of which Bush won by a joint margin of 15 percent. In breaking down the Catholic vote, Bush still eked out a 52 to 47 percent edge. Clearly, many of these voters had same-sex marriage on their minds, and perhaps unfairly equated Kerry with the workings of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, despite his opposition to that body's decision. Yet it seemed to matter little to Christian voters that both Kerry and Bush shared this opposing view (Kerry supported civil unions only), or that in fact Kerry is a practicing Catholic.

While other categorizations of voters reveal a tit for tat split between the candidates, only when the data is divided in terms of religious affiliation does one come out decisively ahead. Simply put, Bush registered a knock out Tuesday night with this segment of the population. One could speculate over the impact that gay marriage had on the election, and how referendums in eleven states mobilized socially conservative voters. Nevertheless, the Democrats have lost something essential to their future viability – namely, their former ability to connect with voters who put great stock in morality. This should send shockwaves through the Democratic Party, for its implications are enormous.

Though it is no secret that in contemporary politics the Republican Party has won over the support of the religiously conservative, what is truly damaging to the Democratic platform is their failure to co-opt the sentiment of the morally concerned. Issues concerning the alleviation of poverty, a living wage, access to health care, educational attainment, civil liberties and the well-being of the common man – all of which are inherently moral, as well as being traditional anchors for Democratic candidates – no longer resonate with the majority of voters as being reflective of their core values at least in terms of voting behavior. Something has gone awry for Democratic Party: their central messages are either being ignored, or more likely, simply misunderstood.

If anything this should be a wakeup call for Democrats. To their credit, Republicans have done a masterful job of refining their party platform into a coherent statement that resonates with value driven voters. America remains a conservative country, though not necessarily in a negatively connotative sense. Republicans understand this, and have thus dissolved the divide that arguably exists between many of their policies and the beliefs of their constituents. They have been able to preserve the positive meaning of conservatism by emphasizing its more affirming tenets (i.e. individualism, faith in self, and hard work), while diminishing its weaknesses (aiding the wealthy, for instance).

Democrats could do worse than to seek to recast liberalism in a similar fashion, framing the phrase's meaning around its own compelling affirmations. Charity, broad-mindedness, compassion, and grace all characterize the word liberal in a definitional sense – now it is up to Democrats to redefine it in a political one. They must regroup and refract their arguments through a prism of morality, otherwise the domino of red states with continue their tract through America's heartland.

John Ciampa is a Collegian staff member.

Democracy in need of change

Chris Eckel

So apparently there was some election last week. I was too busy trying to get everyone on Facebook to make me his or her friend so I could beat all my other friends. (First 5 people to sign me up after reading this get mentioned in my next column.)

Anyhow, CNN.com informs me that George W. Bush won another four years in the White House to do as he pleases, backed by the implicit approval of the American public. The general attitude on campus seems to be that this is a travesty. I won't disagree. I don't think George W. Bush is much up to the challenge of running this country.

However, I'm not entirely sure I agree with the Happy Valley's assessment that John Kerry was so great a candidate. He was hardly a man of the people; by many estimates, he would be the richest man ever to run for a national position. The flip-flopping annoyed everyone. He seemed more interested in slamming Bush than focusing on himself. I'm not crazy, and I'm hardly alone. According to a recent USA Today column, roughly 50 percent of John Kerry's supporters aren't voting for him because they think he's the greatest thing since Quizno's toasted subs, but rather, they are simply voting against President Bush.

Point taken. People don't like the job Bush is doing. However, what does it say that half the people who were voting for Kerry weren't exactly enamored with him? It tells me we have two less than stellar picks for our leader and international figurehead. How can it be that a country as great as America produces two such uninspiring options for leader? Ralph Nader is a bit out there for my taste, but he might have been on to something when he said that voters should have a better choice than choosing between "horrible" and "terrible."

The biggest problem in American politics is not simply the qualifications of the sitting presidents or of his most recent challenger. The problem is the system itself. It only allows for two people to legitimately run for President. Why is that? There are certainly more than two political viewpoints out there. Shouldn't each faction get to elect its own representative? The founding fathers would have agreed; they were very wary of tyranny of the majority.

The problem doesn't end there. There has been only one female candidate that ran for national office with a serious chance to win that I can recall. Many in this country cannot imagine a fairer system of government being practiced elsewhere.

Democracy means not just being able to vote, but being able to run and to serve. Democracy should be open to everyone, not just the rich, white or male.

Why then, is it that the Vice-President of the Republic of China (Taiwan) happens to be a woman? The United States is supposed to be a world leader, yet we are lagging sadly behind the example of many other countries such as Ireland, Latvia, and Finland, all of whom have female Chiefs of State. The race of the presidential candidates is equally troubling. There has never been a candidate identified as a racial minority that has had a legitimate chance to win election to either President or Vice-President in this country's history. There is hope that this trend will be broken in the future with such strong leaders as Hillary Rodham Clinton and Barack Obama emerging on the national scene. However, not even seeing those two in the White House solves all the problems with the current political system.

Do you know how much it costs to run for national office in this country? It costs millions of dollars, easily. It's probably closer to billions in many cases. Now I don't know about you, but I don't see myself being worth that sort of money anytime soon. Neither do 99.99999% of Americans.

And that's another problem. Since when does being rich confer on you a better ability to lead? If there's another attack of the killer tomatoes, there's no one I want beside me more than John Kerry and his wife, who seem to be pretty adept at defeating them. Otherwise, I think there are many people equally qualified to do the job, such as some of my professors, either of my parents, or Theo Epstein, who has demonstrated a solid track record of making good leadership decisions. None of these people will ever have a chance to run, because they aren't worth nearly enough.

The American political system has to change. Democracy means not just being able to vote, but being able to run and to serve. Democracy should be open to everyone, not just the rich, white or male.

When a Latino elementary school teacher from Cleveland serves as the American commander-in-chief, I will truly believe in the righteousness of American democracy. Until that day, I remain skeptical that either George W. Bush or John Kerry is the true problem with this country. The problem is that the spotlight isn't trained on millions of equally qualified candidates, all of who might do a better job.

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist.

A cause worth waiting for

Matthew Reid

Sen. John Kerry may have lost to George Bush in the presidential election, but at least the results were close. Kerry did garner 55 million votes, accounting for 48 percent of the popular vote. Even though he didn't win, Kerry made it a tight race, one that was "too close to call" by the time most Americans went to sleep on election night.

The gay and lesbian population in this country did not fair as well.

On Nov. 2, 11 states approved constitutional bans on gay marriage. The states, Arkansas, Georgia, Kentucky, Michigan, Mississippi, Mont-ana, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Ohio, Utah and Oregon, all passed measures defining marriage as being between a man and a woman.

The United States is a country that is fiercely divided. President Bush, in his acceptance speech following Sen. Kerry's concession, vowed that he would work to minimize this divide. Time will tell if the president is successful in doing this, but one thing is clear — the gap between those in favor of gay marriage and those opposed to it is not going away any time soon.

That being said, is anyone surprised that the 11 states voting on the constitutional bans all voted the way they did? When you look at similar movements throughout Am-erican history, this type of setback is common.

Woman didn't get the right to vote overnight. They got the right to vote in 1920, after hundreds of years of fighting for it. Likewise, schools across the country weren't desegregated at the flip of a switch.

The Little Rock nine entered the halls of Central High School in 1957 in a monumental step for blacks in this country, but 20 years later the city of Boston was still facing riots over black students being bused to school with whites.

It's obviously important for gay marriage proponents to be hopeful and optimistic, but it's equally important for them to be realistic and patient.

Many politicians acknowledge that the gay community may have bitten off more than they can chew, and in trying to "build Rome in a day," they actually hurt their cause.

It's obviously important for gay marriage proponents to be hopeful and optimistic, but it's equally important for them to be realistic and patient.

Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., said that the anti-gay marriage amendments gave conservative voters in swing states "a position to rally around."

Sen. Feinstein went on to say, "The whole issue [of gay marriage] has been too much, too fast, too soon. People aren't ready for it."

The majority of the county doesn't think twice about women voting or blacks going to school with whites. In order for the majority of Americans to accept gay marriage, a complete retooling of the mindset of America must take place. This is not something that can be expected to happen quickly.

All across the country, and especially in swing states such as Ohio, the number one reason voters gave for voting the way they did was "moral values." These moral values are so deeply embedded in the minds of certain Americans that expecting to change them overnight just isn't sensible, despite how bewildering it may be to some of us.

Political analyst Chuck McDonald told the Austin American-Statesmen newspaper that Democrats need to accept the fact that same-sex marriage "is a big, fat loser," and that liberals need to disassociate themselves with it if they are ever going to be successful at the polls.

First of all, not all Democrats fall into the category that McDonald is referring to (not even Sen. Kerry). But for the Democrats who are in favor of same sex marriages, completely abandoning their principles and beliefs would not be the best thing to do, even if it's what McDonald hopes would happen. Anyone who fights for something they believe in can not let a few setbacks get them down. To do so only leads to a loss of credibility and the potential to miss out on seeing your hard work ever pay off.

Proponents of same sex marriage don't even have to look beyond Massachusetts for inspiration. Red Sox fans, who suffered through 86 years of heartbreak and despair, were rewarded with an amazing and unforgettable victory in 2004. While baseball may seem meaningless and insignificant when compared to the challenges gays and lesbians are currently, it does prove one thing — if you want something bad enough, it should not only be worth fighting for, it should be worth waiting for.

Matthew Reid is a Collegian editor.

When teachers get political

Allison Edles

The chief responsibility that a professor has to his or her students is accountability. It has become evident that this aspect of the student-professor relationship has taken a back seat for many different reasons. Specifically, I am referring to the professor's responsibilities to teach the course material that the students have agreed to learn via enrollment in that particular class.

While it is often common, at times, for professors to stray away from the planned lectures, if the assigned material for that planned lecture is not covered, or takes a back seat without notifying the students, the questionability of that professor's job comes into play. A professor can have all the degrees in the world, but if they are unable to account for the information assigned on the syllabus to the students, then the professor's role as an educator must be reexamined.

Given the recent presidential election and how important it was to our country, many professors at UMass may have felt the need, and rightly so, to incorporate the election into their lesson plans. The election was an important part of American current events and it was to be expected that professors make some mention of it in their classes. However, when the election trumps the material planned for that class, material which the students are responsible for knowing, the professor's responsibility to the students becomes jeopardized.

For a student who may not share the same political views as the professor to be subjected to it unexpectedly puts a great burden on the student both intellectually and emotionally.

In classes such as a political science class or a history class, it becomes more understandable and appreciated when extensive talk about the elections was made part of the lecture. For other classes such as calculus classes working on derivatives and English classes currently discussing African American literature, discussion of the elections may not have tied together so well with the planned material and, therefore, should not consume the bulk of the lesson plan for that day.

There is an unspoken "contract" between each student and his or her professor. Before a student enrolls in a class, there are many factors that must be accounted for; classes that are required for that particular major, appealing course description, and if the syllabus is available, the type of work demanded of the student. After taking all the aforementioned into account, these are the conditions that the student has agreed upon enrollment in that class. The professor's responsibility in this "contract" is to abide by the guidelines outlined in the course description and adhere to the work assigned on the syllabus. As a result of much election discussion, that "contract" may have been broken in many classes across campus.

Once a student unexpectedly finds themselves in a situation during class where the assigned material is not being covered, the student then has a choice. The first choice is to stay and be subjected to material that they will not be responsible for and have the full time that would be devoted to the subject matter shortened. The second choice is to leave the class.

In the situation of discussing politics in a classroom, it is very difficult, especially during the time of an election, for professors to remain objective if it is not the job of that particular class' professor to remain so. Such is the case of a political science or history class.

For a student who may not share the same political views as the professor to be subjected to it unexpectedly puts a great burden on the student both intellectually and emotionally. And while it may be very tempting to just walk out of class when this is occurring, oftentimes attendance is an issue. So the choice remains to sit and be offended or to leave and have your attendance suffer.

In addition, students are paying a great deal of money to attain an education at this university. For out-of-state students who live on campus, the cost is about $24,000 a year. A portion of that money is going toward the salaries of the professors at UMass. Given that logic, one would expect that the professors would at least be accountable for the material they are teaching and not lose focus because of the election, however tempting it may have been. Also, if students are paying that much for an education and specific courses that are required for their major, the course material should rightly be the main focus of each lecture.

Many classes at this university carry an interdisciplinary annotation (I) which illustrates, to the students, that the material covered in class will be cross-sectioned and looked at through another field of study. It is in these classes that students would expect discussion of other fields. For example, if an English class carried the (I), one may expect it to extensively cover the elections. However, for those classes that are not interdisciplinary, they should stick to their particular course material and try not to let their lectures get side-tracked given current political affairs.

Allison Edles is a Collegian editor.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Jimmy Eat World: bright 'Futures' ahead

By Salima Appiah-Kubi
U-WIRE

MEDFORD, Mass. — For the masses that were bitterly disappointed by the results of the presidential election, Jimmy Eat World's newest album, "Futures," might just offer an escape. Emo is, after all, the music of heartbreak.

Although "Futures" is Jimmy Eat World's fifth album, to many fans who are unfamiliar with the band's earliest releases, it is the equivalent of a pivotal sophomore release.

Jimmy Eat World 'Futures' Priority

This is the stage in a band's development when the fate of a group is decided. You do well, you're on "Behind the Music"; if you don't, the best you can hope for is minutes on "I Love the '90s."

Complicating the story for Jimmy Eat World is the fact that the group earned its fame with the support of a fan base who knew them when they played smaller clubs, used a lot less production, and were, well, sadder.

New fans danced happily to "The Middle" and "A Praise Chorus," admiring the smart lyrics with a pop sensibility, while the band's original followers may have felt alienated by the optimistic and catchy "Bleed American" (the original title of Jimmy Eat World's 2001 album, which became self-titled after Sept. 11).

"Futures" tries to begin an era of bipartisanship between the two fan bases. The first half of the album continues down the path "Bleed American" began on. The songs are chock full of energetic guitar, layered instrumentation and building progressions.

If it weren't for the lyrical eloquence that continues to distinguish Jimmy Eat World from its contemporaries and imitators, the early tracks could be easily interspersed into a Yellowcard album. Even if the first half is reaching out to the radio fans, Jimmy Eat World keeps the pop of its previous effort but loses the sugar — don't expect any party songs from this recording.

The title track shows Jimmy Eat World as it enters the political fray. The song begins, "I, I always believed in futures/ I hope for better in November."

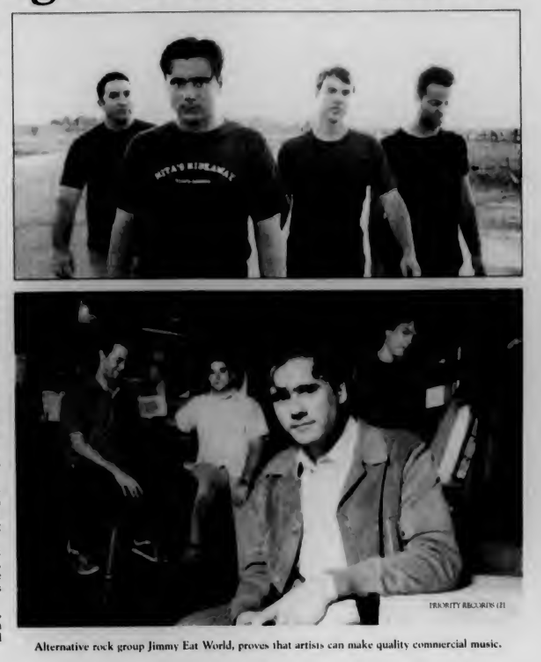
The first track is acutely representative of the album as whole; it attempts to make an intelligent statement — but not a particularly bold one. While its lyrics are honest about where the band's loyalties lie, the song chooses not to be overtly partisan. It prefers the more rock the vote message of "My darling, believe your votes can mean something."

The second half of the album is more like vintage Jimmy. Beginning after "Pain," which is this album's "Bleed American" and "Salt Sweat" rock out song, the sound becomes spare. Guitar solos are rarer, and the vocals are much rawer.

It's refreshing to hear someone sing about his heart being ripped out of his chest while he actually sounds like his heart has recently been ripped out of his chest. The singing isn't painful, though: It's emotive.

This release brings back the themes of songs gone by: Lost love resurfaces in "Just Tonight ..." and "Work," self-loathing in "Pain," and disillusionment in "Nothing Wrong."

Many people ask, usually with a hint of skepticism, "What makes a band 'emo'?" Which is a fair question, since all music is emotional — why the new genre?



Emo is a new take on the same old pain. When successful, emo music doesn't just present sad circumstances; it inhabits them. Good emo is like good theater: When done right, you feel everything with the performers. Every sighed phrase, every barely gasped outline, every note plucked out in melancholy on guitar (or, increasingly, piano) is meant to engage rather than merely entertain.

One of the best examples of how good emo can be is the highlight piece on the album, "Drugs or Me." Slight but skilled instrumentation balances against wrenching vocals, as stark lyrics create a musical portrait of longing and desperation. The singer pulls you into to his anguish, forcing you to just close your eyes and listen.

The miracle of "Futures" is that it proves that an artist can make a commercial record without sacrificing creating integrity.

While "Futures" isn't new, it is different. More importantly, it sounds like an accurate reflection of where the band is creatively.

Whatever its motivations, "Futures" is a quality album that should be welcomed by old and new fans alike.

PRIORITY RECORDS (2)

Alternative rock group Jimmy Eat World, proves that artists can make quality commercial music.

Hibernation or deprivation?

Style 101

Monique Jemmott

I'm pretty sure I'm not the only one to notice that college is not actually the real world. As a student, you can choose when you want to participate in the real world by working, paying rent, and voting. If you would like to live in the bubble of dorm life, work study (where its ok to be scheduled for 2 hours at a time) and eating in the cafeteria, you can do that too. But perhaps the best form of entrance and exit to the real world is the way we dress.

As the seasons change, so do our clothing, and essentially our style. It seems as though as the weather gets colder, our contingent of varied styles, turns into a sea of drab colored Northface Parkas and hiking boots (and more recently huge furry foot-eating monsters known as Uggs). Of course, we have the few die hards, who refuse to believe that the ending of summer means to stop wearing flip flops —but trust me if you have to put on a sweater and hat, you have to take off the open toes. But overall we find that the majority of us become style deprived during the winter months. I myself am a culprit of this syndrome. As soon as the first wisp of freezing cold air hits, I trade in all that is stylish for fleece sweats big enough for layers under, my favorite parka, and a pair of Timberlands.

Now those of us who have spent a winter in the Valley are quite aware of how brutal they can be. When its 20 degrees outside (and trust me it'll get there), its hard enough trying to convince yourself to go to class, let alone be concerned with what to wear. This makes it that much more easier to throw on anything that will keep you warm and not think twice about what it looks like— and this my friends, is a function of the surreal world known as college.

As a senior, many of my new found thoughts on the world center around what I am going to do when I have to actually live in a world without winter breaks and summer vacation to soften the blow. When most of us enter the workforce, as dress code will be in order, and dressing like your going on a ski trip will no longer cut it.We will have to look presentable regardless of the fact that there is snow up to our knees and little children and old people are dying from the weather conditions.

I've made a vow to myself that I would start now. On my honor, this winter I will try my hardest not to revert to my old ways of going into style hiberation for the winter. There are many options. With tweed back in style, and foot monsters getting one more winter run, there are options — and I plan to utilize them until the first snow day.

'Arrested Development' proves the function of disfunction

By Seth Keim
U-WIRE

MEDFORD, Mass. — When a little show on FOX called "Arrested Development" won the Emmy for best comedy this year, you might have been a little surprised — perhaps even a little confused. How did a show that was in danger of being cancelled manage to best such Emmy favorites as "Everybody Loves Raymond" and "Sex and the City?"

The second season of "Arrested Development" debuts this Sunday at 8:30 p.m. and one viewing is sure to persuade viewers that the show is one of the best and most original sitcoms on broadcast television.

The show tells the story of the Bluth family, a wealthy and dysfunctional clan headed by patriarch George Sr. (played by Dr. Phil look-alike Jeffrey Tambor). In last season's pilot episode, real estate tycoon George Sr. got busted by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) for shady business practices, aka using company funds like "a piggy bank."

George was subsequently sent to jail and the family's assets were frozen, forcing the Bluth brood to unite under the same roof (the model home of George Sr.'s latest housing development).

If you're wondering why "Arrested Development" is the funniest show on network television, look no further than the actors themselves. Considering the quality of its regulars, it is no surprise that the show also won an Emmy for Outstanding Casting in a Comedy Series.

Heading the winning comedy troop is Jason Bateman, whom we have only seen intermittently since his days as a minor heartthrob on "The Hogan Family" (1988-1991).

Bateman assumes the role of middle Bluth son Michael, who agrees to take over the business and, in effect, keep the family from falling into complete disarray. Bateman's subtle but endearing work explains why many critics have deemed him the most underrated actor on television.

While Bateman might be singled out for his performance, his costars certainly hold their own. As petulant older brother and struggling magician Gob (pronounced "Job"), Will Arnett often steals scenes from his onscreen brethren.

Tony Hale's portrayal of younger brother Buster is equally impressive. Buster is a perpetual grad student, prone to anxiety attacks and forever under the control of the overbearing Bluth mother, Lucille (Jessica Walter). Portia de Rossi (from "Ally McBeal") is the lone Bluth daughter, the self-centered Lindsay.

Perhaps the most enjoyable character, and definitely the oddest, is Lindsay's husband, the sexually ambiguous Tobias Fünke (the hilarious David Cross, formerly of HBO's "Mr. Show").

Tobias, like George, was not originally supposed to be a regular character, but since he tested so high in the pilot, cross was rightly welcomed into the ensemble. Much of the laughs result from his attempts to become an actor and his fear of getting naked, an affliction termed a "never-nude" (a disease that is "not yet recognized by the DSM IV").

Rounding out the cast are Michael Cera as George Michael Bluth, Michael's teenage son, and Alia Shawkat as Mae ("Maeby"), the adolescent offspring of Tobias and Lindsay. George Michael quickly develops a crush on Maeby, and Cera is exceptional at displaying the awkwardness of this affection.

In addition to the talents of the main actors, a steady stream of well-cast guest stars lends their talent to the show. Prominent among these are Liza Minnelli as Buster's love interest, and the Fonz himself, Henry Winkler, as George's incompetent attorney. The show also features Carl Weathers as himself, Tobias' acting coach who has a disturbing passion for stew.

Of course it is not just the superb cast that has propelled "Arrested Development" to its status as a critical darling. The show bucks most sitcom conventions, creating something unique that actually works. In contrast to most network sitcoms, "Development" eschews the laugh track, which allows for more subtle jokes.

Shot on digital video on location instead of in the traditional three-camera studio set-up, "Arrested Development" also has a kind of reality show feel. If one didn't know better, one might be led to believe the show is a reality program called "My Big Fat Dysfunctional Family."

The story telling is refreshingly unique as well, due in large part to the narration of former "Happy Days" star Ron Howard (who is also the executive producer). This frequent narration, often used for flashbacks and asides, gives the show a "Royal Tenenbaums" vibe, which is also felt in large part to the quirkiness of the characters.

Upping the surreal ante in the new season, George Sr. will go on the lam in Mexico and Buster will ship off to Iraq. While Standards and Practices might send the producers pages of notes, don't expect series creator Mitch Hurwitz to tone anything down.

You might watch "Arrested Development" and think to yourself, "Shouldn't this be on cable?" The show seems like something more likely to be found on HBO.

Fortunately for viewers, Fox has given them a second chance to see a show of this caliber on a broadcast network. Don't miss this opportunity: there might not be a third.

source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of New England

By Bradley Farberman

TuesdayNovember 9

MUSIC

"Tuesdays in Bezanson" will celebrate Charles Ives on the fiftieth anniversary of his death tonight, at 8 p.m. Eric Berlin (trumpet), Marylou Churchill (violin), William Hite (tenor), Christopher Krueger (flute), Estela Olevsky (piano), Astrid Schween (cello), Nadine Shank (piano) David Sporny (trombone), Nikki Stoia (piano) and Laura Rexroth (conductor) will perform a set of compositions by Ives including The Unanswered Question; Over the Pavements, Scherzo; From the Steeples and the Mountains; Piano Trio and more. UMass Amherst's Bezanson Recital Hall is the place to be; tickets are $3 for UMass students, $5 for other students, seniors and children and $10 for the general public.

WednesdayNovember 10

CONCERT

Canada's the New Deal brings their self-described "live progressive breakbeat house" music to UMass Amherst's student union ballroom tonight, at 10 p.m. The group will play one ninety-minute set; local acts Newsay and the 5th Pocket Open. Tickets are $8 for UMass students, $12 for 5-College students and $16 for the general public.

ThursdayNovember11

LECTURE

Amherst College's Johnson Chapel will host Jonathan Kozol tonight at 8 p.m. The activist/author of 1995's Amazing Grace: the Lives of Children and the Conscience of a Nation will speak on "The Artificial Meritocracy: The Silence of our Academic Leaders on the Savage Inequalities and Deepening Resegregation of the U.S. Public Schools." This event is free and open to the public.

CONCERT

Funky white boys Percy Hill throw it down at Northampton's Pearl Street Night Club tonight at 8:30 p.m. Formed at the University of New Hampshire in 1993, this talented quartet combines jazzy guitar licks, vintage keyboards and Stevie Wonder vocals for a soul shakedown party that's more than worthy of your sensitive ears. Tickets are $14 in advance and $17 at the door.

SaturdayNovember 13

CONFERENCE

Smith College's "Reconstructing the model minority," a conference sponsored by Asian students of Smith College, and the Korean American students of Smith College, will feature a keynote address by Nitasha Sharma who will discuss Asians and hip hop culture. The conference closes with a date 'auction' at 8pm in Graham Hall. To register the cost of the event is $15, general ($10 in advance); $10, students ($7 in advance).

weekly pinup

Saturday, stand up comic Colin Quinn comes to UMass' Fine Arts Center tonight at 10 p.m. Tickets are $5 for UMass students, $10 for 5-College students and $15 for the general public.

UMass takes thriller at NU

FOOTBALL from page 8

Tikum quietly led all defenders with 14 total tackles, including 10 solo, and recorded a sack as the Minutemen clamped down on defense to limit NU to just three second-half points.

"This has been the toughest year by far that I've been through as a person, a coach, and a professional," said Brown. "What got me through it were the players and their approach to the program. We continue to light and improve each and every week."

On the Northeastern side, It was clearly a disappointing loss for coach Rocky Hager and his players, many of whom were recruited by Brown and attached a great deal of emotional significance to the contest.

"This did hurt a little bit," senior linebacker Mike Hall said. "To have the coaches on the other side, the guys who recruited you, is tough. I'll never forget this one. This loss is a little bit more painful. But high school football is more personal, and college football is a business. It doesn't matter who the opponent is, you try and win the football game. And we didn't get that done."

"Were we pressing? I can't tell for sure," said Hager. "Both sides were very emotional. This is one of the toughest disappointments I've ever experienced, especially for our senior class. This is a rivalry game. That's what we have with UMass, and we want to win our rivalry games. We have special players, and my heart aches for them."

Trailing 22-20 after Miro Kesic connected on a 21-yard field goal with 13:23 to play, Baylark put the UMass offense on his shoulders as the Minutemen embarked on a six-play 70-yard drive. Carrying the ball on four of the six plays, Baylark ripped off 49-yards on the second play to move the ball down to the 16 yard line. Three plays later, No. 5 plunged in front a yard out to give the Minutemen a 26-22 edge. Quarterback Tim Day's subsequent two-point conversion pass fell incomplete, but UMass did not relinquish the lead.

UMass began the scoring on its opening drive, as Day led the Minutemen 69 yards in 10 plays before connecting with sophomore wide receiver Brandon London for a five-yard touchdown pass.

Northeastern answered back with a vengeance, however, as the Huskies scored on four of their first five possessions. After Kesic got them on the board with a 21-yard field goal midway through the first quarter, wide receiver Corey Parks caught a 30-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Shawn Brady and tailback Maurice Murray scored on a four-yard touchdown run to put the Huskies up 16-7, before Kesic connected from 23 yards to make the score 19-7 late in the second quarter.

UMass was able to narrow the deficit just before halftime, as senior wide receiver Jason Peebler hauled in a 23-yard touchdown pass from Tim Day with 34 seconds to play in the half to narrow the margin to 19-14.

The Minutemen then opened the scoring in the second half, as senior Rich Demers scored on a two-yard touchdown run midway through the third quarter to give the Maroon and White a 20-19 edge.

Bad loss follows solid win

HOCKEY from page 8

ning on the road," Cahoon said. "We've played too soft a game and too unthorough a game on the road for those two games."

They were also bolstered by line goaltending from junior Frank McLaughlin, who made 41 stops – including 21 in the third period – in his first collegiate start. That McLaughlin, who found out he would be Saturday's starter at 11 a.m. that day, was in net was partly due to the fact that the Minutemen harassed both Jim Healey and Casey Guenther the night before, chasing Healey after the first period and scoring five goals on Guenther.

McLaughlin hardly looked like a replacement, though, allowing just two blemishes in an otherwise pristine performance that allowed the Warriors to handle the Minutemen up and down the ice.

Junior Gabe Winer made 23 stops on 25 shots, and freshman Jamie Gilbert (Lewiston, Maine) turned aside two shots in 4:47 of work, his first appearance for the Minutemen.

Just like Friday night, the Warriors struck first when Jeff Caron's slap shot from the point found its way past Winer just two minutes and 15 seconds in. The Warriors had another golden opportunity at the 11:05 mark when Matt Johnson was given a penalty shot after being taken down en route to the net by Matt Anderson. Johnson skated in, made little movement, and fired a wrist shot toward Winer's five-hole but was stuffed.

The Minutemen fired back with 2:54 to go in the first when Mike Kustka's slapper from the point was redirected by Stephen Jacobs right in front of McLaughlin, giving Jacobs his first goal of the season and his third in a UMass uniform.

The Warriors responded just a minute and a half into the second period with Carisio's goal, and they were off to the races from there. Lalonde's goal was the last of the period, but it was hardly the last of the fireworks.

Before the teams returned to the dressing rooms, 14 penalties were called, including a five-minute endangerment major and game disqualification to Minuteman defenseman Jeff Lang, leaving UMass with five defensemen for the rest of the evening.

Warriors Bryan Schmidt and Mike Alexiou both added goals in the third period to cement the victory. UMass' Tim Vitek scored his first of the season, grabbing a loose puck out from under a scramble in front of McLaughlin with 3:58 to go, but that was the closest the Minutemen would get.

Friday night was in complete contrast, as the Minutemen outdid the Warriors across the board and ran away to an 8-2 victory.

The Warriors opened the scoring with Johnson's goal at the 14:12 mark of the first but didn't get another puck past Winer until there was 8:21 to go in the game when Mike Alexiou added their second goal.

After three years on bench, rookie shines

MATTHEW BEEM COLLEGIAN

UMass captain Stephen Werner skates up the ice during Friday night's game against Merrimack. The two teams split the weekend series.

MCLAUGHLIN from page 8

The game began similarly to Friday's game. Merrimack scored an early goal to take a 1-0 lead, and UMass tied it in the closing minutes of the first period. However, after tying it Friday, the Minutemen were able to keep the pressure on Warrior goalie Jim Healey as they added two more goals to take a 3-1 lead into intermission, and the snowball effect had started.

UMass applied the same pressure on McLaughlin, but he was able to make some key saves to keep the score tied before the Warriors ran away with the contest.

McLaughlin did play in an exhibition game earlier in the season against St. Thomas. Serino took him to Omaha for an in-season tournament a week later but didn't have the confidence to play him due to his poor play in practice.

It was his work ethic in training over the summer that really impressed Serino, though, as he stayed at Merrimack to better his game instead of heading home to Philadelphia.

"He's worked his butt off," Serino said. "He deserved the chance to play, and I make my decisions based on my goaltenders on one thing, and one thing only: who gives us the best chance to win? And you know what? Frank gave us the best chance to win."

And it was a win that the Warriors needed badly. After being embarrassed the night before, they were staring straight in the face of losing their first four Hockey East games of the season with their next three games against Boston University (twice) and New Hampshire.

"I'm very, very happy for him," Serino said. "I'm happy that we won the game, but I'm more happy for [McLaughlin] because all the work this kid has put in has paid off for him."

No postseason for Minutemen after loss

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

In a do-or-die match on Friday, the Massachusetts men's soccer team couldn't get its offense going and lost 2-0 to Rhode Island in its regular season finale at the URI Soccer Complex.

The loss dropped Massachusetts to 8-9-2 and 5-4-2 in the Atlantic 10 while Rhode Island improved to 11-7-1 and 6-4-1 in the A-10 and clinched its eighth A-10 Tournament berth in the last 10 years.

For the second consecutive year, the Rams shutout UMass in the last game of the season to prevent them from making the postseason. Last year, the Rams held the Minutemen to six shots and won 3-0 before winning three straight tournament matches to capture the conference title.

UMass' fate was sealed by a 5-0 LaSalle victory over Fordham on Friday. With the win, the Explorers clinched the eighth and final tournament spot.

The Maroon and White looked strong early, out shooting Rhode Island 8-2 and playing solid defense en route to a scoreless first half.

The Rams turned things around after the break and got the game's first score 13:07 into the second half. The goal happened when Lukasz Tumicz capitalized on a Jeffrey Gonsalves assist.

Gonsalves set up the play by sending a breakaway pass down the right side of the field where Tumicz chased it down and fired a shot from 15 yards out to the upper left corner of the net for his third goal of the season.

Freshman Danleigh Borman added an insurance goal with 31:53 remaining in the game after receiving a Sasha Gotsmanov drop-off pass. Using fancy footwork deep in the Massachusetts zone, Gotsmanov maneuvered past three UMass defenders and cut in front of the goal. He created a shooting opportunity for himself but elected to dump the ball off to Borman without looking. Borman blasted a shot past UMass goalie Colin Burns for his third score of the season.

Gotsmanov's assist was his nation-leading 46th point of the season. The senior also leads the country with an astounding 19 goals in 19 games.

The defensive-minded Minutemen surrendered Rhode Island scoring chances when they were forced to pull their midfielders and forwards up field after falling behind 1-0. The Rams took advantage of the pinching Massachusetts defense and recorded a 12-4 advantage in shots during the second half.

Burns made four saves on 14 shots in his last collegiate start. Dean Ruddy faced 12 shots and made four saves on his way to helping Rhode Island to its fourth shutout of the season.

Massachusetts played with one of the youngest teams in the nation this year, fielding a squad of 17 underclassmen and only two seniors. In a season that could have been regarded as a rebuilding year, junior captain Oral Bullen led the Maroon and White with nine goals – good for a third-place tie for most goals in the A-10.

Sophomore Robby Charest was second on the team in scoring and will return next season as well. He finished with six goals and two assists.

Fellow sophomore Richie Higa largely contributed to UMass' success at midfield, chipping in with four goals and nine points. Higa was also named the Atlantic 10 Player of the Week after scoring a combined three goals in wins over Dayton (10/15) and Xavier (10/17).

Coach Sam Koch gave most of the youngsters substantial playing time, and 14 players tallied at least one point. Against Dayton, freshman Mike Ming-ione scored a golden goal in overtime to give the Maroon and White a 4-3 victory.

Led by a defense that was suffocating at times, UMass managed to stay close in most ganies and played in a school record eight overtimes. Thanks to timely scoring in extended play, UMass posted a 5-1-2 overtime record.

Sophomore goalie Nick Billman split time between the pipes with Burns and will be looked upon to lead Massachusetts into the postseason in 2005.

A-10 championship recap from Rudd

WOMEN'S SOCCER from page 8

through the second half.

Friday's low-scoring, neck-and-neck affairs continued as the Rams and Flyers took on some tough competition in Rich-mond and St. Joe's, respectively.

Game one saw the Flyers break a school record for consecutive wins (19) on goals from Reba Sedlacek and Kozlowski. Sedlacek was first to score, a cross into the box from Sirmans that bounced into the right corner of the net halfway through the first. Koslowski extended the lead to two early in the second with a goal of her own before St. Joe's Ali Wean netted a turn-around from 15 yards out. The rally, however, wasn't enough for the Hawks.

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST

HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS

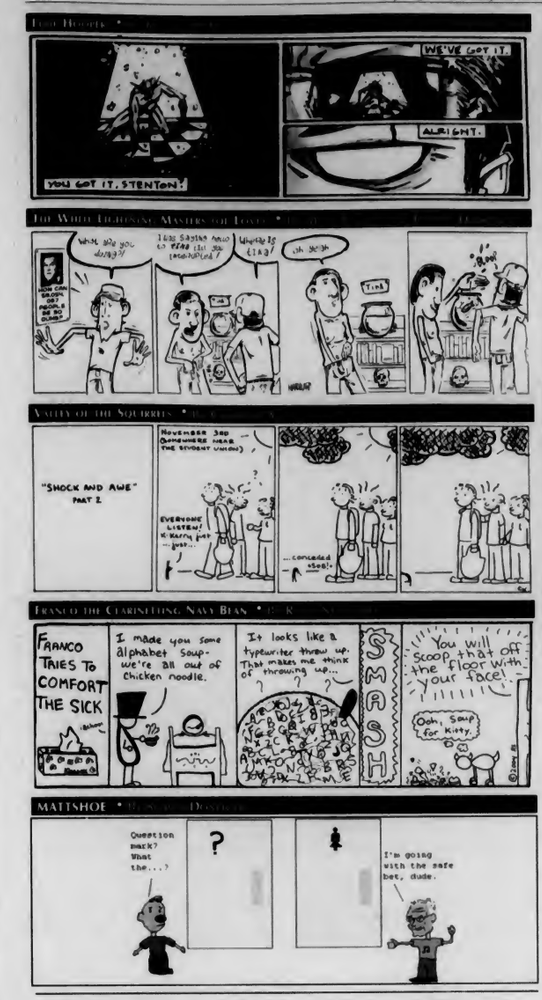
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students

Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes

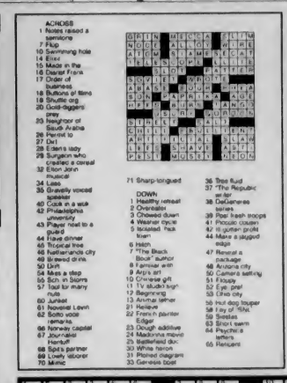
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Natural. Healthy. and Smart!
Dr. Lee Kane
Chiropractic Physician
Participating provider for student insurance, BIC, automobile insurance & most others
Amherst Family Chiropractic
Center for Natural Health
228 Triangle St Amherst
(next to Bertucci's) 549-1500

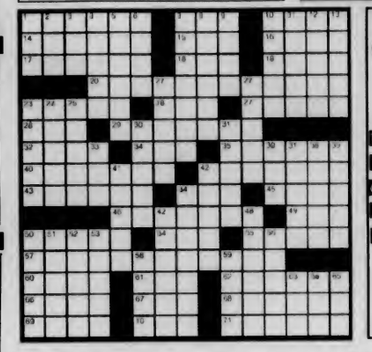
FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
- a grade dispute?
- teacher, roomate or job concerns?
- billing problems?
- harassment?
- ...or any other University related problem?



THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)

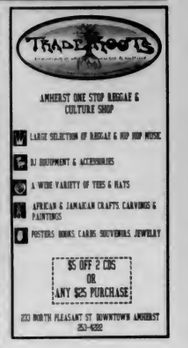


students, faculty, and staff are all welcome



523 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0847
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at the Amherst locations only.
Original roll processing only.



UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Get your Bar Code* Certification
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
November 19th-21st
The Garden Room
Lord Jeffery Inn
Boltwood Ave., Amherst
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Today you will have a brilliant revelation about a problem that's been plaguing you.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You need to spend some time with your friends. They barely saw you this weekend.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
That thing you thought you lost will show up in the oddest place.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You might have to hurt someone's feelings today. It is the right thing to do.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You and your roommate have some funny things to reminisce about after this weekend.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Spread your wings and learn how to fly. Do what it takes, till you touch the sky.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't be a closed book. A closed book never advanced society.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Do not see Alfie. It's not what you think it is.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You should start writing your paper, while you still feel the muse.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
What you are doing could either be really good or really disastrous.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You need to throw your junky computer out the window at high velocity.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Try to go the whole day without saying anything particularly raunchy.

Quote of the Day

"The answers to life's problems aren't at the bottom of a beer bottle, they're on TV."

-Homer Simpson, The Simpsons

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January – May, t_korol@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

AUTO FOR SALE

1998 Jeep Cherokee Classic Auto 4x4 Excellent Cond. 5K bo 413-772-6855

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Put up Posters Towns and colleges. Car & References Needed. $10/Hr 10-15 hrs /wk. 6 hrs must be business hrs Excellent Attn to detail and follow up needed. Must be good w/ specific directions. postering@attpromo.org or 413-259-1227 Ext. 4

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Work cooperatively as part of teaching team. High School diploma or equivalent required. Must be able to lift children up to 40 lbs. on a regular basis. Flexible able to work different shifts as needed. $7.00/hr. no benefits Send cover letter and resume to: HCAC Human Resources, 557 Easthamtpon Rd. Northampton, MA 01060 or to hr@hcac.org

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

EMPLOYMENT

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-774-8223

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Transcription Services Experienced, Fast, Reasonable rates Karen 413-834-2505

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling out Immigration forms.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0892

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endless-summertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, from $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2005. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRMNG Online cannot be combined with any other offer
1-800 426-7710

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Clean slate for Brown

UMass travels to Northeastern and escapes with a victory

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

BROOKLINE — As far as the Massachusetts football team is concerned, the book is now closed on the Don Brown fiasco.

After nine months of drama, legal action, embarrassment and general disdain for each other on all fronts, the two schools involved in the dispute over the former Northeastern turned UMass coach finally met to settle things once and for all on the one place that truly matters — the football field.

UMass	26
Northeastern	22

When it was all said and done, it was Brown who came out on top after a bitter battle between two evenly matched Atlantic 10 schools. Using the legs of Steve Baylark, the Minutemen pounded away on the Huskies in the fourth quarter and emerged with a hard-fought 26-22 victory before 4,216 at Parsons Field.

The Maroon and White (5-5 3-4 Atlantic 10) return to action following a bye week on Saturday Nov. 20, when it hosts Hofstra for Senior Day at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium. Kickoff is scheduled for noon.

After the game, Brown received a Gatorade shower before coming onto the field and spending several minutes greeting and hugging many of his former NU (3-6 2-4 A-10) players. He was then awarded the game ball in the locker room by his current UMass players and coaches, but was not overjoyed when speaking to the media following UMass' fifth victory of the season.

"It was not a great win for me. I'm just glad we won and all this is over the dam," Brown said. "It was not fun. Sometimes the players get caught in the middle. This game was not about the players. It's been a tough year. Let's just leave it at that."

In the end, however, the game was indeed about the players. Baylark, who recorded his fourth-consecutive 100-yard performance with 186 yards on 29 carries and a touchdown, was a key catalyst in helping the Minutemen establish control of the game offensively after Northeastern jumped out to an early advantage. He also delivered the big blow of the game when he rumbled 49 yards to set up the eventual game-winning score in the fourth quarter.

"Baylark continues to be a beast," Brown said. "I told him before the season I'd like to give the ball to him 40 times a game. He does what he needs to do, and it makes the quarterback's job much easier. He's special."

For Baylark, the performance helped him reach the 1,000-yard milestone for the second consecutive season.

"I couldn't do it without the guys in front of me, and without Coach giving me the ball a lot," Baylark said of the milestone. "It's kind of fun to go over 1,000 yards, but I couldn't do it without the guys."

On the defensive side of the ball, it was another one of Brown's UMass players that made a game-turning impact with his play. While Huskies first team All-American linebacker Liam Ezekiel was busy breaking the NCAA Division I-AA record for tackles in a career, UMass junior linebacker Serge

See FOOTBALL on page 6

MATTHEW REBHOLZ/COLLEGIAN

UMass wide receiver Jason Peebler and the Minutemen came out victorious at Northeastern on Saturday during coach Don Brown's return trip to Parsons Field where he coached for four years.

Tale of two performances over weekend

Solid win followed by poor showing

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER – Coach Don Cahoon and star forward Matt Anderson both made clear what the message was for the Massachusetts hockey team this weekend when they echoed each other after the Minutemen drubbed Merrimack 8-2 at the Mullins Center.

UMass	8
Merrimack	2

Cahoon and Anderson mentioned that all they had to do to be reminded of the way a home-and-home Hockey East weekend could go was to look back at the split the Minutemen earned against Providence on Oct. 29 and 30. Friday night, the Minutemen were trounced by the Friars in Providence, only to come back the next night and earn their second conference victory at home.

Merrimack	5
UMass	2

It was déjà vu with the results reversed this weekend, as the Warriors bounced back from the Minutemen's Friday night thrashing to beat the Minutemen 5-2 Saturday at the J. Thom Lawler Arena. The Minutemen fell to 5-4-0, with a 2-3-0 Hockey East record. The Warriors improved to 3-5-0 overall, with a 1-3-0 conference record, and avoid becoming the first Hockey East team against whom the Minute-men would have an all-time winning record.

Rob LaLonde's goal at the 6:50 mark of the second period ended up being the game winner Saturday night, though Hank Carisio's tally five minutes earlier looked to be the clincher for much of the game, as the Warriors managed to keep the lead and momentum firmly in their end for most of the game.

The Minutemen are winless on the road against Hockey East teams, with losses to Providence on Oct. 29 and Saturday's defeat. Their lone road win came in the consolation game of the Nye Frontier Classic against Canisius on Oct. 16, a 2-1 victory.

"The fact of the matter is we haven't won a [conference] game on the road yet, and I know my teams in recent past and other teams I've coached have prided themselves in playing well and win-

See HOCKEY on page 6

MATTHEW REBHOLZ/COLLEGIAN

Freshman defender David Leaderer waits for the puck in Friday night's game against Merrimack at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen split their weekend series.

MC goalie gets first start in three years

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

NORTH ANDOVER – After being shellacked by the Massachusetts hockey team by a score of 8-2 on Friday night, Merrimack coach Chris Serino had some serious adjustments to make for the second leg of the home-and-home series on Saturday night.

The Warriors were outplayed in every phase of the game in Amherst, and the possibility of seeing them even make a competitive effort on Saturday looked very grim.

Grasping at straws, Serino decided that his team's best shot at pulling out a win would be to start Frank McLaughlin, who wasn't even on the depth chart the night before, in net. In fact, his biggest hurdle to overcome stretched far beyond just Friday's depth chart.

McLaughlin, a junior, is in his third season with the team, and until two days ago, he hadn't even made a collegiate start. He isn't even on scholarship.

Serino offered his players a little bit of inspiration before they took the ice.

"I said to my players before the game, 'How many of you guys would still be on this team if you were here for three years and never played a game? You weren't on scholarship, and you've been practicing for three years, and you've never played a game. How many of you would still be here?

"Now, if you don't go out and play [hard] in front of this kid, then there is something wrong with you. He shouldn't win the game for us. We should win the game for him.' And I meant that, and this is the truth. I'm very, very happy for him," Serino said.

The Warriors turned the tides on UMass that night, and McLaughlin was the biggest reason why. He stopped 41 shots in his collegiate debut, and he earned a 5-2 victory in front of 1,867 people at J. Thom Lawler Arena.

Among those in attendance were his parents, who made the seven-hour drive up from Philadelphia after hearing he would start just eight hours before the puck was set to drop.

It was in Philadelphia where McLaughlin had last seen the ice in an official hockey game when he played for the Philadelphia Junior Flyers. That was three years ago; three years of butterflies and nerves that added up and hit him as soon as he hit the ice.

"It wasn't so bad until right when I got on the ice, and then I'm like, 'I think I'm going to puke,'" McLaughlin said. "After the first or second shot, I got comfortable."

Letting him get comfortable was something that UMass coach Don Cahoon did not want to let happen.

"At the beginning of the game, obviously we threw some pucks at him, and it looked like he was struggling a little bit," Cahoon said. "But as [Merrimack] played with a little more confidence, and as they started to control the play a little bit, then he played with a little more confidence. I've seen it happen a billion times."

See MCLAUGHLIN on page 6

Dayton extends winning streak to 20, takes home Atlantic 10 Championship at Rudd

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

It's no secret that the Dayton Flyers made a habit out of pummeling Atlantic 10 opponents all year long, only trailing once throughout the entire season and having won a record 20 straight games.

Richmond	1
UMass	0
St. Joseph's	1
LaSalle	0
Dayton	1
Rhode Island	0

But yesterday at Rudd Field for the A-10 Championship, it took 98 minutes for the Flyers to down the Rhode Island Rams 1-0 for their fourth title in six years, including their second straight.

And the payoff is grand. With the last-second victory the Flyers now have themselves an automatic bid in the NCAA Tournament.

"It feels awesome, man," Flyers coach Mike Tucker said. "[Something like this] always feels good. This was really earned well, they battled their rear ends off with the Rhode Island girls. We've been in at least seven or eight one-goal games. We've won every one of them, and they persevere. These girls just hattle like crazy. It feels really good to see that ball end up in the net."

In arguably one of the most exciting matchups to watch in 2004, the Flyers and Rams exchanged close shots and near misses throughout the game's entirety. Essentially, it was a game dominated by defense. Both teams, however, had plenty of opportunities to put the game away, especially the Flyers. Dayton outshot the Rams 18-5 but could not convert thanks to some superior goalkeeping by Ria Carroll.

But in the end, it was a cross through the middle that doomed the Rams. With just over one minute remaining in the first period of overtime, Jen Simonetti set up for a corner kick. After launching the hall into the air, freshman Courtney Sirmans found it at the far post and lobbed it to senior Tesia Kozlowski, who headed it past Carroll.

The celebration will be short-lived as the Flyers get set to make a run in the NCAA Tournament.

"We've got this win streak going, but one loss now and we're done," Tucker said. "These girls know how to win. We won't be afraid of anybody we play. We've got to go get it done now."

Yesterday's victory wraps up a weekend at Rudd Field that saw all of its games decided by one goal, with four of the five games being 1-0 contests. The Richmond Spiders slipped one by UMass keeper Kristin Walker in the first five minutes, and hung on through the remaining 85 minutes to clinch a 1-0 victory over the Minutewomen in game one. Game two saw another 1-0 hattle, this one with the St. Joseph's Hawks coming out on top against the LaSalle Explorers on the efforts of an unassisted 30-yard bender from Jess Daugherty midway

See WOMEN'S SOCCER on page 6

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 45

'The Incredibles' marks another success for Pixar
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY	THURSDAY
• High: 39 • Low: 19	• High: 43 • Low: 30	• High: 54 • Low: 40

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Recollections of the night from a fan
SPORTS, PAGE 8

Jewish speaker says struggle against anti-Semitism is a worldwide battle

By Adrienne Bossi
Collegian Correspondent

The Jewish Community of Amherst held a daylong teach-in Sunday discussing the changing face of anti-Semitism in today's world. "There is this one term, 'anti-Semitism,' used to describe a huge range and array of feelings," said Dr. Daniel Jonah Goldhagen of Harvard's Minda de Gunzburg Center for European studies.

Goldhagen addressed an audience of roughly 70 individuals ranging from ages 17 to 87 with his speech, "What's new about the new anti-Semitism?" Goldhagen discussed the two main problems complicating discussions about anti-Semitism, the first being a linguistic problem with the word "anti-Semitism" itself.

"A person who believes all Jews are cheap can be described as anti-Semitic. But, Hitler is also described as anti-Semitic," said Goldhagen.

The other problem Goldhagen cited is the fact that anti-Semitism is multi-faceted. "Anti-Semitism is always changing. It has changed historically many times. It changes socially and between societies. It changes over eras and generations," he said.

"It's a moving target," Goldhagen said. "It's a woolly phenomenon and amorphous in its expression."

Goldhagen described the rise in anti-Semitic feelings throughout the world and especially within the European Union. A poll conducted in the 1990s of Catholics in Italy, Austria, and Germany showed that surprising numbers of people continue to believe the Jews are guilty for the death of Christ and are cursed because of it. 33 percent of Austrian, 25 percent of German, and 45 percent of Italian Catholics shared this sentiment.

Anti-Semitic expressions are increasing worldwide. According to Goldhagen's statistics, between 33 and 45 percent of French Jews consider emigrating out of the country. "Those numbers are staggering," said Goldhagen. "One-third, to nearly one-half of French Jews say, 'there's no future for me here in France.'"

Goldhagen said the French Interior Ministry termed that as a threat to democracy. The average number of anti-Semitic incidents in France during the 1990s was 10; from 2000 to 2002, it was 120. This year, they are predicting closer to 1000, although these statistics are also usually underreported.

While many people in the United States have negative feelings towards Jews, "It is not as often expressed in polite society in this country. But that doesn't mean it doesn't exist. It's like an iceberg, where you don't see 90 percent of it," he said.

Goldhagen said it has become taboo in modern times to talk about Israel without a valid reason why. "The US is the only country in the world today outside of Israel where Jews can speak out about Israel without being deemed suspect."

There are a variety of causes for the revival of anti-Semitism, and they vary from country to country. Among these reasons are the lifting of political and social taboos on anti-Semitic expression. The lifting has unleashed simmering anti-Semitism, particularly in Germany. Goldhagen also cited the resentment toward continued discussion of the Holocaust, the availability of the Middle East conflict as a tool for anti-Semites to incite prejudice against Jews, and the permissive atmosphere in Europe.

"Political and intellectual leaders fail to speak out forcefully against anti-Semitism ... where governments conceal the magnitude and danger of anti-Semitism and fail to vigorously combat it," he said.

Goldhagen's speech was followed by a question-and-answer period when he was able to address his feelings on Mel Gibson's controversial film, "The Passion of the Christ," which explores the crucifixion of Jesus Christ.

"I believe it is impossible for anyone that knows anything about anti-Semitism, as well as the New Testament, to believe this film is anything but anti-Semitic. It is a misguided and inaccurate portrayal of the role of Jews in the crucifixion," he said.

Goldhagen said the film reduces the New Testament to solely the sufferings of Jesus.

"If you see this film, I believe it is impossible to leave without anti-Semitic feelings. It's not good for Christians either," he said.

Goldhagen went on to describe a set of guidelines, established and universally enforced by the Catholic Church, outlining how the Passion of Christ can be portrayed. They were set up to protect against breeding anti-Semitic feelings, among other things.

"Gibson violated 37 of these guidelines. And the perverse thing is that the Vatican approved it," Goldhagen said.

Although there is no solution to anti-Semitism, Goldhagen said that working to keep the problem minimally exposed in everyday life is a step in the right direction.

"I can say how terrible things are nowadays, but I can also tell you how much better things are compared to 40 years ago," he said.

ALEXANDRA ASSOUAD/COLLEGIAN

Doctor Daniel Jonah Goldhagen, left, lectures on anti-Semitism last Sunday at The Jewish Community in Amherst. Goldhagen said that anti-Semitic expressions are increasing worldwide.

University student stabbed 6 to 8 times

AMHERST — According to reports in media sources, a University of Massachusetts student was stabbed between six and eight times early Halloween morning in the Alpine Commons apartment complex.

The victim, a 19-year-old Dedham man, received the injuries in a fight. The man who stabbed the victim was wearing a "Jason"-type hockey mask, made famous by the "Friday the 13th" movies.

Police said they had identified a suspect one day after the incident. The suspect is reportedly not a UMass student. No weapon has been recovered.

A second man was involved in the fight, according to police.

This man, who has only been identified as an Arlington resident, was what police called "an involved participant." He reportedly received injuries, which were treated at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Police said the man's car had bloodstains on it and seized it for further investigation.

The victim had been listed in guarded condition as of Nov. 2, after having been transported to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield for medical treatment the night of the stabbing. However, it was unclear as of press time whether his condition had changed or if he had been released from the hospital.

-Dan O'Brien

Former Israeli parliament speaker to visit Hillel

By Matt Hoffman
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Hillel House will be hosting a lecture by the former speaker of Israel's parliament, Avraham Burg, tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Hasbrouck 20.

A senior member of Israel's Labor Party and prominent figure in Israel, Burg, will speak about "Struggling Towards Peace in Times of Terror." Burg is a religious Jew in a secular political party.

In the mid-1980s, Burg was an adviser to former Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres. In 1988, the self-described idealist was elected to the Knesset, Israel's legislative body of Israel's government. Similar to the United States, Israel's government is made up of executive, legislative, and judicial branches — each with checks and balances over the others.

Burg left the Knesset in 1995 to head the Jewish Agency for Israel. The Jewish Agency is an Israeli organization that describes itself as "the global partnership of the Jewish People with Israel." The organization focuses on assuring the future of the Jewish people with Israel at its center through the promotion of various principles. These values include immigration to Israel and emphasis on Jewish-Zionist education.

In 1989, as a member of Israel's Labor Party, then 44-year-old Burg was elected to the Knesset as the youngest speaker of the parliamentary body in Israel's history. This moment was one of great pride for Burg. Born and raised in Israel, his father is a survivor of the Nazi Holocaust.

See SPEAKER on page 2

Group Mass Mahketing raises credit awareness

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

Two groups around the University of Massachusetts campus are campaigning for students to have better credit awareness, and it all starts tonight with a performance at the Blue Wall.

"Mass Mahketing is an advertising agency that's part of an honors course in the School of Management," said Caitlin Tessier, a member of the group. They are teaming up with Mission: IMPROVable, an on-campus improv group, eight times in the next two weeks to promote knowledge on credit.

According to a press release, the name of Mass Mahketing's credit education campaign is "Spend Smaht." Tessier said that the group made a collective effort to come up with a creative name involving a stereotypical Boston accent.

"We wanted to come up with a slogan that students would find catchy and memorable," said Mike McMeekin in a press release. McMeekin is the head of Mass Mahketing research.

"Students not only speak with a Boston accent, but they take pride in it, too," he said.

During the Mission: IMPROVable skits, the group will highlight the benefits of using credit wisely, while creating a laid-back atmosphere for the audience. There will be free food and giveaways at the events.

Tessier said that the group is made up of 10 students who are working with Citibank and Edventure Partners to pass on education to students on how to spend their credit wisely.

Tessier added that Edventure Partners set up the internship for them, and that Professor Kathleen Debevec is in charge of them. Debevec is an associate professor of marketing in the Isenberg School of Management and published writer.

"We're going to promote using credit wisely," she said. "The goals are to host an event that will hold 300 attendees."

See MAHKETING on page 2

Argentinian puppeteers to perform at UMass Group strives highlight struggles of country

By Erin Lempkey
Collegian Correspondent

The Argentina Autonomista Project, a group of Argentinean grassroots organizers and puppeteers, will perform in rooms 162-175 of the Campus Center tonight at 7 p.m. as part of their nationwide tour.

They will lead a puppet performance and group discussion to share Argentina's 40-year struggle under neo-liberal trade policies, forced privatization, and corrupt political leadership. The AAP was spearheaded by an Argentinian-born artist, Graciela Monteagudo, in 2001. Though born in Argentina, she chose to study and continue her politically inspired art in Vermont at Goddard College. She became involved in Bread and Puppet, a radical puppeteer group that has performed at many anti-globalization events in the past ten years.

This mode of expression, according to their press release, showcases her own abilities while playfully and effectively spreading her story of Western intervention in Argentinean politics and economic policy. Monteagudo is driven to creatively tell of Argentina's sordid history and the Western powers that guided this history. With puppets and a carnival-like form of expression, the AAP has had much success communicating their real, shared struggle in an engaging and entertaining way.

The AAP came into existence after the Argentinean economy collapsed in 2001. After many years of United States intervention instilling a trade-friendly government out of self-interest, Argentina has achieved self-governance and autonomy from multi-national corporations and government corruption.

COURTESY OF ERIN LEMPKEY

Graciela Monteagudo, founder of the Argentina Autonomista Puppeteers displays two puppets. The group's performances illustrate the struggles of Argentina. They will perform tonight in the Campus Center.

Department of Public Safety remains firm on decision over Sizzler that caused man's death

By Theo Emery
Associated Press

BOSTON — The state Department of Public Safety on Monday stood by its findings in a fatal carnival accident after the owners of the carnival ride issued a blistering attack, questioning the qualifications of safety officials and calling their performance "dismal."

Jaro Amusements Inc. released the statement Sunday in response to the department's final report on the Sept. 19 accident at St. Mary's Parish in Shrewsbury, in which a car on the Sizzler ride broke apart in midair, killing one man and injuring two other people.

"This report is a blatant attempt by the DPS to turn the spotlight away from its own shortcomings, and admittedly dismal performance, toward the owner of the Sizzler ride, Jaro Amusements, Inc.," the statement said. "Jaro has faithfully followed its regulatory obligations with regard to the Sizzler and all of its other rides."

Katie Ford, a spokeswoman for the department, said Monday that its investigation "thoroughly and accurately assessed" the accident and attributed appropriate responsibility for the accident to the three mechanical problems with the ride.

"The Department of Public Safety takes very seriously its responsibility to the people of the commonwealth and in particular to the citizens and families who choose to ride on amusement rides," Ford said. "At the end of the day, Jaro Amusements, as the owner and operator of that ride, is responsible for conducting daily inspections to ensure that the ride is as safe as possible."

The accident threw a mentally disabled man, Andrew R. Fohlin, 38, to his death, and injured the man in the ride with him, David Mills, 48. A woman on the ground, Diane Derosier, 44, suffered minor injuries from falling debris.

The public safety report, released Oct. 29, said the

See SIZZLER on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Peter Foundas
Managing Editor Andrew Merritt
Business Manager Rich Pacheco
Production Manager Cory Rosenberg
News Supervisor Cameron Woods
Advertising Manager Tiffany Sugalski
Editorial Production Samantha Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Meghan Healy
Cities Editor Alyson Zillmann
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
Night Editor Erika Lovley
Photo Editor Matthew Reid
Sports Editor Mike Marzilli
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Josh Kiggans
Finance Manager Hitrik Shah
Advertising Guru Virginie Frecaut
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Josh Greenberg
Assistant Business Jachyun Sorenson
Assistant Finance Thomas Hecht
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Mike Bissack
Asst. Arts & Living Monique Jemmott
Assistant Editorial Yousef Munayyer
Assistant Editorial Allison Edles
Assistant News Julie O'Donnell
Assistant News Dan O'Brien
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern
Assistant Sports Jeff Howe

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently financed, operating on advertising revenue. Editorial offices are in the Campus Center. Founded in 1890, the Collegian is a member of the College Newspaper Business and Advertising Managers and the Twelve College Exchange. Published daily since 1890. The Collegian was born, raised and spoiled since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500. Subscriptions are $150 and $130 per semester.

Production Crew
On staff today
Night Editor
Cameron J. Woods / S.J. Port
Photo Technician
Tracie Gravelle
Copy Editor
Sarah Marples
Production Supervisor
Cory Rosenberg
Production Staff
Nate Freedman, Elliot Chong

Cover Northampton College
Call Erika
545-1809

Arafat's top officials rush to Paris to visit ailing leader

By Lara Sukhtian
Associated Press

CLAMART, France — Palestinian leaders rushed to Paris on Monday to check on the critically ill Yasser Arafat, but hospital officials said visiting rights were restricted — setting the stage for a dramatic showdown between the delegation and Arafat's wife.

Early Monday, Suha Arafat accused the leadership — including top lieutenants Ahmed Qureia and Mahmoud Abbas — of coming to the French capital with the sole intention of usurping her husband's role as head of the Palestinian Authority.

"I tell you they are trying to bury Abu Ammar alive," she shouted, using Arafat's nom de guerre in a furious telephone call with Al-Jazeera television from the 75-year-old Arafat's bedside in a hospital southwest of Paris.

"He is all right, and he is going home," she insisted.

Tayeb Abdel Rahim, a senior Arafat aide, called a news conference in the West Bank to dispute the claims. "What came from Mrs. Arafat doesn't represent our people," he said, accusing her of wanting "to be the lone decision maker."

And Palestinian Cabinet Minister Salah Taamri said, "We are Yasser Arafat's family. We knew Yasser Arafat even before Mrs. Suha Arafat was born. We care for Yasser Arafat and no one has the right to deny the truth from the Palestinian people."

Suha Arafat, wife of Yassir Arafat, says the Palestinian delegation is trying to "bury" her husband alive.

The Palestinian leadership abruptly called off the Paris trip, then reversed its decision. Qureia, the Palestinian prime minister, and Abbas, a former prime minister and the current Palestine Liberation Organization deputy chairman, landed in France late Monday on a private jet.

The prospect of their being barred from Arafat's hospital bedside was bound to inflame an increasingly tense power struggle.

Suha Arafat seems to have aligned herself with hard-liners who apparently seek to take over the Palestinian leadership in a post-Arafat era, though some Palestinian officials said her motives are more financial. She is widely believed to have control of vast funds collected by the PLO.

Some Palestinians have complained Suha Arafat has gained too much power, as she controls the flow of information about her husband's condition and has taken charge of access to the ailing leader. Suha Arafat, 41, lives in Paris and until his illness had not been to the West Bank or seen her husband since the latest round of Palestinian violence began in 2000.

Voters show divide in American views

By Nancy Benac
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The nation is emerging from the 2004 presidential election with two very different portraits of itself sketched by two very different halves of its population.

George Bush's voters go to church more often than John Kerry's and are more likely to oppose gay marriage and abortion. They are more likely to own guns and to feel better off financially than they did four years ago.

Sure, they are concerned about terrorism, but they are more concerned about "moral values."

Most think things are going well for the United States in Iraq and that the war has made America more secure.

They are satisfied with the Republican Bush administration; many are enthusiastic.

Voters who supported the Democratic nominee, by contrast, are more worried about the economy. They view "moral values" and terrorism as lesser concerns. They go to church, but less frequently. Few see any improvement in their financial situation over the past four years.

They gave their votes to the Massachusetts senator because they thought he represented hope for change. They are far more worried about events in Iraq and the job situation at home. Almost half are angry at the administration.

It all adds up to two different mindsets, reinforcing the idea of a schism in the political landscape.

Bush's victory left Emma Starr, a writer from New York, feeling devastated and more than a bit disconnected from the other half of America.

"We should have two distinct nations," she said after getting word of Kerry's concession as she left a Brooklyn food co-op. "Why should we be forced to live together under the rule of an evil dictator?"

For every voter like Starr, there was at least one like Clifford Barneman, a psychologist from Little Egg Harbor Township in New Jersey. He voted for Bush as a "man of his word" who had strong values.

The profiles of Bush and Kerry voters are drawn in part from Associated Press exit polls taken on Election Day. But they also take into account voters' harder-to-capture feelings about the country's direction and the men who fought so hard to lead it for the next four years.

Much has been made, for example, of the role of evangelical Christians in the election. Some 44 percent of Bush voters described themselves this way, compared with a still sizable 25 percent of Kerry's voters.

Analyst Steven Waldman, who follows religion and politics as editor in chief of the Web site www.Beliefnet.com, said the evangelicals' lopsided support for Bush is "both more vague and deeper" than shared views on specific issues such as abortion and gay marriage.

Official report states Sizzler ride never got maintenance safety bar holding the two men in place failed. That caused their weight to shift, snapping two bolts, one of which had been altered, and the other of which was too small, according to the report.

Sizzler from page 1

The Sizzler, a popular carnival ride, is being blamed in the death of a mentally retarded man in Shrewsbury this past summer.

The report also said that Iaro owner Jack Keough told investigators the car had not received required maintenance, and that Iaro could not produce maintenance records for the ride. At the time that the report was released, a Iaro spokesman denied the finding that the car had not been serviced, but otherwise declined to comment.

Group to help fight bad student credit

Marketing from page 1

"It's really important for the students to get knowledge on credit," Tessier said. She added that her biggest wake-up call was when the group learned that some potential employers can obtain your credit reports, and they can turn down an application due to poor credit.

"Every student will profit from learning about good credit," said Alicia Tibble, the class coordinator. "Mass Mahketing's goal is to have the Spend Smaht tour reach students across campus and let learning about credit do's and don'ts be a fun and beneficial experience."

Their first performance is today at noon in the Blue Wall. The next will be at noon on Nov. 15 when the groups perform again at the Blue Wall. In addition, that night there will also be another performance in the Lewis dormitory at 7 p.m. that night.

She said that even though Citibank is working side-by-side with the groups, their goal is not to get more people to join their banks and use their credit cards.

"Their goal is to create responsible borrowers," she said.

Tessier added that all groups involved know how important it is for younger people, especially undergraduate students, to gain knowledge on using credit wisely.

"Our goal is to get students to learn something," she said.

Tessier said that in the upcoming days the group is trying to concentrate on advertising for their events, with ads appearing in The Daily Collegian as well as flyers posted all around campus.

For more information on spending credit wisely, visit Citibank's Credit Education Website at www.Students.-UseCreditWisely.com.

Burg to explore struggle for peace

Speaker from page 1

On December 1, 2003, Burg's international reputation grew as he became one of representatives to sign the Geneva Peace Accord. This proposed peace treaty sorted out some of the most divisive issues in the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Burg has expanded his international reputation by writing for publications such as The Guardian and the International Herald Tribune. He has also appeared on CNN's "Crossfire" and CBS' "The Early Show."

Ha'aretz Magazine, a periodical of Israel's largest-distributed English daily newspaper, defined Burg as a man with an ability of speaking that conveys "the 'eternal Israel' while simultaneously evincing a hard-nosed, here-and-now pragmatism."

Former Prime Minister Peres holds his former aide in high esteem.

"I wish to thank [Avraham Burg] for his biting parliamentary spirit and the way he so jealously guarded the honor of the Knesset, improved its operation and elevated its status," he said.

The lecture by the former speaker of Israel's Knesset promises to be an event filled with inspiration, thought-provoking ideas, and practical realism.

This event is free and open to the public. Sponsored by UMass Hillel, this lecture is co-sponsored with the UMass Office of Jewish Affairs, the Judaic and Near Eastern Studies Department at UMass, and the Five College Hillel.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Get your Bar Code® Certification
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
November 19th-21st
The Garden Room
Lord Jeffery Inn
Boltwood Ave., Amherst
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR SPRING 2005
The Writing Program Placement Test
Will be offered on:
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9
@ 7 P.M.
IN HASA 124
This test is a pre-requisite for enrollment in Englwrit 112/113, College Writing
(This is the last scheduled test before registration)
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

Hadley Sunoco
"Specializing In All Your Automotive Needs."
457 Russell St.
Hadley MA. 01035
(413) 253-4623
HadleySunoco@yahoo.com
Front Brake Special
$69.95
-includes Brake Pads, Labor and Inspection of front rotors and calipers
Most Cars, Light Trucks & SUVS
GET A FREE TIRE ROTATION WITH ANY BRAKE JOB!!!!!
Regular Price: 84.95
Offer valid with Collegian AD only. Not to be combined with any other Brake discounts or offers
Offer Expires 12/1/04
SPECIAL
10% Student Discount On Labor With a Valid College ID
WE WILL BEAT ANY COMPETITOR'S WRITTEN ESTIMATE!!!!!
Come try us out today
FREE ESTIMATES!
Some of the many other services we specialize in are: Brakes, tires, C.V. shafts, alternators, starters, belts, tune-ups, timing belts and exhaust repair.

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
• a grade dispute?
• teacher, roomate or job concerns?
• billing problems?
• harassment?
• ...or any other University related problem?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
823 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0847
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Amherst Laser and Skin Care Center
196 North Pleasant Street, Suite 11
Amherst MA, 01002
(4413) 253-2214
www.amherstlaser.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL OPINION
Tuesday, November 9, 2004
"It is hard enough to remember my opinions, without also remembering my reasons for them." -Friedrich Nietzsche
Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Life isn't always terrible

Zack Oelschlegel

A funny thing happens when something goes right for someone. They get embarrassed, almost defensive. A person will deflect the conversation or feel extremely uncomfortable when it is assumed by another person that he, too, faces the same difficulties. In order to be socially acceptable, your life has to be going wrong in some major way. If life sucks, you've made it.

We've seen this whole charade in dealing with work. You could possess the best job in town, and you would still somehow find a way to enlighten your friends on how unbearable work is when they wallow about how bad their jobs are. Then it gets really uncomfortable when the topic turns to money. Everyone, no matter how well off financially, will agree that, "things are tough," that they are having trouble coming up with financial aid, or they're late on credit card payments. It is not socially acceptable to have parents who pay for the majority of your tuition. It is not socially acceptable to just be a cheery person. Something, and you'll dig for it, must be headed in the wrong direction.

Everyone wants to get in on the fun of how terrible life can be and how he or she is screwed in this way or that, so when something good actually happens that person shies away from telling others about it.

I think a lot of it comes with the Idea of being a victim of some kind. All of us, deep down, want to have it bad in some way or another. There's an "I'm not one of them" mentality when something is going right in your life. Everyone wants to get in on the fun of how terrible life can be and how he or she is screwed in this way or that, so when something good actually happens, that person shies away from telling others about it. People don't feel that same sense of belonging if they don't share a similar problem.

It often seems to be the difference between stating where one has been blessed and bragging about it. Our mothers always told us to care for the poor or the needy or the sick, and the underlying point was almost as if caring for these people was never letting on that you might have it better in that area of life. This is illustrated wunderfully in the short story, "Harrison Bergeron" by Kurt Vonnegut.

In the story, set in America in 2086, so-called "equality" is put to such an absurdity that if you are gifted, you are given a handicap to serve as an equalizer. Beautiful people must wear hideous masks, and smart people are given contraptions that keep them from thinking straight for more than twenty seconds. It all stems from the idea that if you are somehow blessed, be it physically, mentally or in your family background, it's not fair to anyone else and therefore not suitable for others to know about it. Even worse, it's not right to take advantage of that blessing.

It almost seems to have led to a mindset that growing up should have been tough, that moving to a new city should have been harder on you, and that somehow you should be a victim. I used to think to myself about how terrible a father I had because of some arguments we had when I was a teenager. Every wound or piece of baggage we all carry is exaggerated that much more to be part of the club.

An episode of "Scrubs" mocks this thinking with a quote from Elliot Reid, a woman from a rich background, talking about how her childhood was different. "It's just hard for me because I've always had everything. I got used to it. You guys never had to deal with that," Reid whines. The worst part is, when someone comes to you having a real problem, you almost have to figure out if they're just trying to gather some attention. The people who really do need a good friend or some good advice might not be able to get some because someone else just wants to be noticed.

Essentially, having it good these days in any capacity is not as fashionable as it used to be.

So where do we go with this? How do we make ourselves look cool and trendy and accept the fact that we may be more blessed than others? How do you admit to someone that you just do have it better than someone else in a few aspects of life? Why does it have to be one big contest to see who has it the worst?

I think from being able to enjoy myself in a lot of social situations to having parents who are still together to being a white male, it's a contest I'm clearly losing. But I'm not going to exaggerate some minor problem of mine and try to tell you that my life sucks. It's doesn't. And I'm okay with that.

Zach Oelschlegel is a Collegian columnist.

When the blind lead the blind

Yousef Munayyer

"For we walk by faith, not by sight," (2 Cor 5:7) When I came across this Biblical verse many years ago it became my favorite, and to this day that remains true. The message it sends is one of hope. In the spiritual realm there may be no truer road to follow, however in the real world, where we the divided people of the United States live, there is no greater danger than following this advice. Last week though, America proved that It did not care. America voted on fiction as opposed to fact, relied on hope instead of reason, and will surely pay the price for this naïve decision in the years to come.

We stand in the midst of another great awakening at a time when we desperately need enlightenment. A dark medieval curtain has descended on America, and half the nation is controlling the drapes, the other half, desperate for the real truth, not absolute truth, is now compelled to sit in the darkness for years to come.

Those who came out to vote for President Bush came out in unprecedented numbers. Most of these people came from areas in the United States that are hurt by the administration's fiscal policy. The nation is in a war with no end in sight, and the casualties are not slowing while the resistance to the American occupation is growing. The nation has displayed that it is more concerned with the attack of the gays than the attack on American targets around the globe. Religious movements on the basis of domestic issues have decided the most important foreign policy election of our time. When America needed to move forward to correct dangerous policies of the past four years, it took a step backwards – and not just a small step, but a giant leap to a puritan-like time causing a new schism in the American political dynamic. America is in trouble, and instead of assessing its problems and actively trying to fix them, it went back into its private quarters and prayed.

In the midst of what may be the most troubling era in global politics, the president made an untimely comment about an amendment to ban gay marriage. The country, having only heard this once, heard enough and began to split into two groups: those who saw President Bush as incapable of leading our nation at all and those who believed too strongly in him to agree with the former. Since this constituency delivered the presidency to the now elected Bush, it is clear that he owes them much over the next four years.

There is a philosophy of religion that entails that true belief is sufficient for entry to heaven. I fear that America, or at least too much of it, has applied this philosophy to its politics.

Gay marriage has polarized this nation, but it is not the only factor. With the presidency likely resulting in the power to appoint two Supreme Court justices, the Christian Right saw this as an opportunity to overturn abortion cases. The evangelical language of this president has led many to believe we are fighting a "crusade" against the evil jihadists. The simple "with us or against us," good or evil, heaven or hell dynamic has been applied foolishly to the most complex situation human beings have ever had to deal with: the post 9-11 world.

America is supposed to be leading the world and moving bravely forward. Yet if this is true, why is it that America can now be listed with nations like Saudi Arabia, where religious movements play dominant roles in politics? Europe now lies in between two fundamentalisms and may soon begin to pray so that it does not get swallowed by this age-old disease.

In what is supposed to be the land of the free, civil liberties are being attacked by a fundamentalist Attorney General. In what is supposed to be the democratic leader of the world, the public discourse has been drowned out by private belief. In what is supposed to be a nation where leaders are accountable, a dishonest president was rewarded by a constituency that believes his "absolute truth," though in reality it is absolute nonsense.

Let us assume that a constitutional amendment banning gay marriage is adopted and also that "Roe v. Wade" is overturned, what could be next? How will the Republican Party continue to convince poor whites to vote against their economic self-interest? These are but some of the questions we must ask in the years to come.

There is a philosophy of religion that entails that true belief is sufficient for entry into heaven. I fear that America, or at least too much of it, has applied this philosophy to its politics. With an unfit leader guiding them, the faithful surrender control because they know they will be delivered. They have let go of the principles of democracy and have set America adrift in belief.

The problem with blind faith is that you may run into something. Some will argue that something has already happened. Perhaps it is Iraq, perhaps it is an economic recession or perhaps it has not even happened yet. If it has not happened yet, it will. America cannot afford to lead with its eyes shut, especially in a world where our enemies pray just as hard.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian editor.

It's only the beginning

Mike Sances

In my last column, I began by deriding the scare tactics of both candidates' campaigns: Dick Cheney's ominous warnings of increased terrorism and John Kerry's last-minute accusations of secret plans for a draft. I chose to focus for the rest of the column on the latter, in part because I felt the other side's threats were so obviously baseless and thus unworthy of further examination.

It is with this attitude that I typically react to the rhetoric of the right, simply because more often than not they don't feel the need to offer evidence for their claims. It is very hard to have a civilized discussion with someone screaming at you to "move to France and join up with al-Qaeda" just because you dare to disagree.

Now that the people have spoken, however, a more nuanced reply might be in order. I must admit, I didn't much consider the views of Bush voters until the results were in: sure, four years ago half the country voted for him, but they had little idea of what was to come. This time, I was sure that the polls were all wrong, that so many of my fellow citizens wouldn't possibly let him get away with the past three and a half years, let alone actually endorse them.

If you oppose Bush, do not despair you are in good company. Remember that we are 55 million strong.

So in light of the popular atrocity that was last Tuesday's election, how will opponents of the Bush administration, now turning their eyes from Washington to Middle America, successfully address the Red voter? If it were indeed an atrocity, it would appear that we must choose between blaming the voter and blaming those that persuaded them into their vote.

Condescension would appear to be the lesser evil here. Yet, if voters truly lack any semblance of free will, why is this complaint restricted only to negative outcomes? That is, wouldn't the view that the propaganda machine truly decides the election invalidate a Kerry victory as well?

After mulling over these questions for about a week, I've concluded that they are largely irrelevant to what we do next (not to mention inflammatory). Even if the public had been voting on real issues, which were almost entirely absent during the campaign; even if this really was a "mandate" for the horrors to come; even if the margin of victory was ten or twenty or even thirty points higher; the changes we wish to see in government, and in the world at large, remain the same.

And let's not kid ourselves. A Kerry victory, while we were no doubt all dying for it, would not have guaranteed four years of global peace and prosperity. At best, the left was hedging its bets on the belief that a Democrat in the White House would be more open to progressive suggestions (where as President Bush won't even return our calls). Though it would have been somewhat easier, a good deal more encouraging, and a lot less frightening, a Kerry presidency would not have changed our individual and collective goals any more than a second term for Bush should today.

Hope, in other words, has no bearing on civic responsibility any more than the views of 51% of Americans ought to silence the other 49%. If you oppose Bush, do not despair – you are in good company. Remember that we are 55 million strong. Resist the urge to flee to Canada or the Netherlands (I've looked into it, and it's a lot harder than you'd think. Besides, would you really be willing to let them win that easily?).

Ignore all pleas for "national unity" and "coming together" – they are ploys designed to quash dissent. Keep in mind that unity and security are not always synonymous, and that with all three branches of government now under Republican control, it is the Kerry voter's duty to act as the final check on a government spiraling toward the unthinkable.

Although we lost on Tuesday, we owe it to ourselves, and to the masses of suffering people the world over who would give anything to know the democratic privileges we have, to keep fighting and to try to win every step of the way. So get active. Whatever you see as the best way to effect the changes you wish to see, do it. Write. Think. Talk to your peers. Speak up! Attend anti-war meetings and rallies. Make new friends. Reach out amongst yourselves and to the other side, too. Of crucial importance during the next four years will be solidarity among the dissenters. If you truly believe, as I do, that the worst is yet to come, then remember the words of Ben Franklin upon signing the Declaration of Independence: "We must all hang together, or assuredly we shall all hang separately."

For this is, assuredly, only the beginning.

Mike Sances is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

LOST FOR FOUR MORE

I'd like to thank Robert Epsteiner for his"An Unimagin able Outcome" article last Friday. He put into words what the whole country should have been thinking when they went to the polls on Friday. We are dealing here with a president who has flip-flopped on the war in Iraq, who has ridden on the coat tails of 9/11 and in doing do, is directly responsible for the deaths of more of our fellow country men: those brave men and women who have volunteered to stand by their leader and follow his ever-changing reasoning into Afghanistan and then Iraq, who have either lost their lives or who are now being screwed over by that same leader who thinks it would be a nice idea to put into effect a stop-loss effort that requires those soldiers to stay overseas after their time is up. And 100,000 Iraqi civilians have been killed. Screwing over the help and killing 100,000 people as retribution for the loss of only several thousand? Who are the terrorists now? Who Is the real bin Laden? George "Dubya," that's who.

And what do we do? Do we tar and feather him and drag him through the streets? Do we vote him out and declare Nov. 2 a national holiday, the day that Bush was defeated? No. Instead we, as Epsteiner says, "collectively pat him on the back" and wish him the best of luck as the leader of our great nation for the next four years. Yeah, good luck, man. I hope you don't get us all killed.

Evan Mowery
UMass student

OFFICIALS SHOULD RESIGN

The Friday Nov. 5 headline of The Collegian states "ALANA upset over email allegations." While the headline itself is not only grammatically incorrect, but also erroneous, the article does not articulate the implications of these emails. In a word, these emails reveal collusion among the SGA lawyer Chuck Dimare, Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano, and former SGA speaker Pat Higgins (Yep, that's the same Higgins who posed next to the KKK Grand Wizard in the photographs that were exposed earlier this semester) to dismantle the Office of ALANA Affairs. Further, these emails reveal that the ALANA caucus seats – which were the topic of much controversy last spring – are ENTIRELY legal. While Higgins, Dimare, and Gargano have known this since the summer, to this day they have not shared this information with Eddie Bustamante (the SGA president), the ALANA caucus, or the student body at large.

Clearly, these emails demonstrate that Dimare and Gargano betrayed the public trust by intentionally withholding information from the student body due to their own ideological bias, and their collusion with certain members of the SGA blatantly undermines SGA self-governance. This is not only an ALANA affairs issue. These emails reveal a brutal subversion of student self-governance. While Higgins (thankfully) fled our campus several weeks ago, Dimare and Gargano have lost the public's trust, and we must call for their immediate resignation. Then, we may go about rebuilding our increasingly silenced student voice.

Marsha Leiblum
UMass Student

DAILYCOLLEGIAN

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NOT YOUR AVERAGE SUPERHEROES

By Tammi Munn
Collegian Staff

Pixar, which is famous for "Toy Story," "A Bug's Life," and just recently, "Finding Nemo," has done it again with its newest flick, "The Incredibles." Pixar has created a dazzling film and has risen to a whole new level of animation accomplishment with eye-candy color and amazing texture. For example, the characters' hair is very realistic because it is shiny, varying in color, and even has those stray strands that just never seem to fall into place. The film has "Star Wars" caliber special effects, complete with [illegible] scenes, explosions and near-[illegible] experiences.

The story toys with the idea of [illegible] government controlled superheroes [illegible] ple when firefighters and police [illegible] those extreme jobs. But when people begin to sue over the injuries incurred while being saved, the government realizes that superheroes are not worth the [illegible] some-[illegible] gets [illegible] Superheroes are forced to give [illegible] because they have supposedly [illegible] of a nuisance to society than a [illegible] royed

What is a superhero to do? This is where the film truly begins to resemble the [illegible] ous qualities of the past Pixar [illegible] Incredible (voice of Craig T. Nelson), [illegible] has monstrous strength, assumes the [illegible] dane identity of Bob Parr, who works in an [illegible] Overseeds cubicle (one because he has [illegible] gained a little weight and love handles since [illegible] his young Mr. Incredible days, and two: because [illegible] there is a large, high-[illegible] voltage pillar that [illegible] very conveniently [illegible] takes up the majority of his [illegible] already [illegible] trophobic co[illegible] cle). He is the patriarch of the closet super[illegible] hero family that includes his wife Helen, a.k.a. Elastigirl (voice of Holly Hunter), and his three children: the low self-esteemed Violet (Sarah Vowell), who has force field and invisibility powers; Dash (Spencer Fox), who can run at lightning speeds; and the baby, Jack-Jack, who has no known superpowers.

There are the most hysterical lines exchanged between Helen and Bob, and they are only a small part of the overall hilarity. Their lives are typical middle-class, complete with a ranch style house and a small, ordinary car [illegible] some-[illegible] gets [illegible] ally [illegible] royed [illegible] Bob [illegible] gets his [illegible] strength, [illegible] Helen has accepted her role as purely a super mom and only employs her elasticity to quell her children's superpowered fights. Helen [illegible] to curb Bob's [illegible] main interests into those of a caring father, but Bob is overcome with longing to be Mr. Incredible. And this makes him pretty much mentally absent to everything that is going on [illegible] his family.

Graig T. Nelson plays the voice of Mr. Incredible.

'The Incredibles'
Directed by Brad Bird
Starring Craig T. Nelson Holly Hunter
Pixar
Rated PG
115 mins.
Grade B

Bob and Helen have typical matrimonial problems. Helen waits up for Bob to come home from a late night of "bowling," which is actually time that Bob spends with his friend and former superhero, Frozone (voice of Samuel L. Jackson). Bob and Frozone sit in a car and reminisce about "the good ol' days." Helen finds a piece of debris on Bob's clothes, and she knows immediately that he has been up to more than reminiscing; he has been illegally acting like a superhero.

Bob gets the chance of a lifetime, and he is able to sport his incredible suit again. All is going pretty well for the reinstated Mr. Incredible, [illegible] back to his family. Mr. Incredible's nemesis, Syndrome (voice of Jason Lee), [illegible] may not be incredible enough to finish this evildoer alone.

This isn't the run-of-the-mill animated story. It deals with real issues surrounding a husband and wife, a family with low self-esteem, and the onset of a mid-life crisis. When one acknowledges [illegible] once and tries to leave it all behind. It is about hiding your true identity and not really knowing how to cope with the fact. It seems a little heavy for the [illegible] audience, but there are scenes that deal with many different age categories that [illegible] "The Incredibles" the ultimate family movie.

Jamie Foxx replicates the image of music great Ray Charles

By Jeffrey Horowitz
Collegian Correspondent

What Jamie Ray gives us in the new film "Ray," is not so much a performance, but a reincarnation of Ray Charles. This kind of flawless portrait gives Director Taylor Hackford the ability to exercise great storytelling.

There are a great deal of tapes, pictures, and recordings of Charles for Ray to study as well as plenty of documentation on his life. In addition, Charles was alive when the film was made and acted as the main consultant to the filmmakers.

The movie could depend on the performance, but it doesn't. It is simply made that much stronger by Ray's presence. "Ray" explores the life of Charles with adoring affection for all that happened in his life.

The film opens at the beginning of his career, where we see Ray struggling for a chance to practice his talents in broken down nightclubs. He is encouraged to smoke pot before every show to relax and appear colorful. Atlantic Records liked Ray's sound and decided daringly to take a chance on a blind pianist with no background, no credentials, and not a dime to his name. They simply heard his sound, liked his style and offered him a chance.

The film looks at Ray as a character who finds ways to beat blindness, but it also shows the discrimination he faced in the beginning because of his handicap. At times we watch as his band members callously whisper to each other, "I ain't babysittin' no blind cripple." For the most part, Charles made light of his debilitation often cracking jokes at his own expense.

Though the chronology of the film is mixed up a bit it maintains a certain rhythm. The numerous flashbacks, however, are inserted very efficiently. They are used primarily as a means of foreshadowing. They also help to explain parts of his behavior and give background on some of his values and beliefs.

The early flashbacks introduce us to central figures in his childhood. His mother, Aretha (Sharon Warren) raised him with strict discipline, his brother George (Terrone Bell) was his best friend. At eight years of age when he started losing his sight, his mother demanded he not let his blindness cripple him. She began training him to sharpen his instinct. Aretha would eventually send him to a boarding school for the blind for a chance at the education she never had.

He eventually leaves home barefoot, with a sign around his neck, ragged clothes, and completely poor. He worked his way up on his own, made himself big with nothing but a shrewd business instinct and talent, that he worked like a dog to develop, and he did it all without sight or companionship.

Before he found his own sound, producers constantly complained that Charles' style was not original. The first half of his exuberant personality is formed in a recording of the song "Mess Around," where in experimentation he takes on a fast paced, deep voiced, rock and roll style reminiscent of the style that brought Charles to fame. The second half of his sound came when he combined R&B with his favorite kind of music, Gospel, and in doing so invented soul.

The movie explores how his soul music reached both black and white youths and stirred controversy from staunch conservatives.

The film glorifies Ray's brilliant business instinct as something of a gift. He made a great first impression that made it clear that he was not playing around. The film also shows, with surprising realism, how record producers operate.

He eventually cancels his deal with Atlantic Record and joins ABC, in a career move that was heartless and devoid of loyalty to the very company that made him famous. Then again, when it came to business, Charles was ruthless, in one scene he tells two record producers who have been with him from the beginning, "they offered me more, if you can't top it, there's nothing I can do."

When Charles meets Della (Kerry Washington), she's the first one to say what's on her mind, and she doesn't hold back, after one lunch date, he's madly in love with her. He loves her honesty and strength, her beauty and personality. Their marriage is inevitable.

The other woman in his life, as the film shows, was his mistress Margie (Regina King), who stole him away from yet another mistress and ends up pregnant with Charles' child.

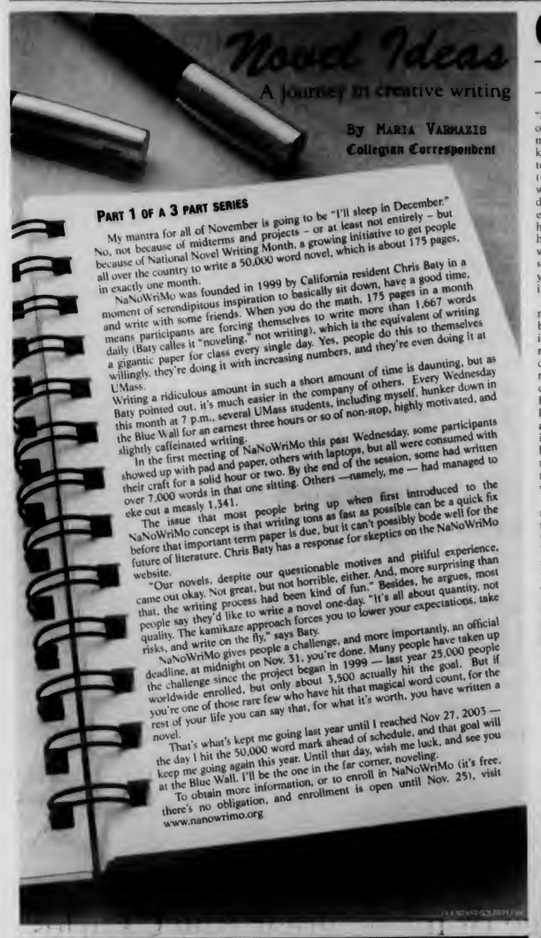
The film shows Charles as a good father, a bit negligent at times, but on the whole a good father. The scene in which Charles first holds his newborn child, and realizes the child has sight, is a moving one. The tender scenes that follow where he plays affectionately with his son are very telling of Charles as a man.

It may not be common knowledge that Charles was once a heroine addict. He tried it early on in life, mostly out of curiosity. The heroine cycle starts very steadily, at first only on occasion, and then it begins interrupting various other aspects of his life. The ties visibly begin developing from his constant increasingly frequent usage. When Ray gets to the point where heroine has engulfed his life, he is forced to choose between his family and career or the drug. He chooses against the drugs and quits using cold turkey. The scenes of Charles rehabilitation are harrowing. Hackford captures the pain with close-ups of his face and chaotically dizzying camera movements, followed by collages of hallucinations and other symptoms of withdrawal.

This is also one of the few biographical films of a musician we've ever had that gives deserved time and energy to exploring each individual musical hit as a point in the musician's career worth examining. "Ray" shows how important some of these songs were to its time period. "Unchain My Heart" is a hit that is explored in depth. The Charles classic "You Don't know me" is beautifully used, inter-cut tragically with the heroine arrests. His "Georgia" hit is given adequate recognition, as well. The smash song, "Hit the Road Jack" is used in the scene where Margie leaves him with his child, in a tone that can be seen as comedic in reference or discouraging in aggression.

The performance scenes, are the scenes where Ray really disappears into the role. Obviously Ray put to use the multitude of films of Charles performances. In one scene he is about to

See RAY on page 5



COURTESY PAUL ZALESKI

Seeing Double

Many say comedian/actor Jamie Foxx could easily be mistaken for legendary musician Ray Charles in the new film "Ray." The film is a biopic of Charles' rise from poverty to become, what many consider to be, the founder of soul music and one of his generation's most renowned songwriters.

COURTESY UNIVERSAL PICTURES

My mantra for all of November is going to be "I'll sleep in December." No, not because of midterms and projects – or at least not entirely – but because of National Novel Writing Month, a growing initiative to get people all over the country to write a 50,000 word novel, which is about 175 pages, in exactly one month.

NaNoWriMo was founded in 1999 by California resident Chris Baty in a moment of serendipitous inspiration to basically sit down, have a good time, and write with some friends. When you do the math, 175 pages in a month means participants are forcing themselves to write more than 1,667 words daily (Baty calles it "noveling," not writing), which is the equivalent of writing a gigantic paper for class every single day. Yes, people do this to themselves willingly, they're doing it with increasing numbers, and they're even doing it at UMass.

Writing a ridiculous amount in such a short amount of time is daunting, but as Baty pointed out, it's much easier in the company of others. Every Wednesday this month at 7 p.m., several UMass students, including myself, hunker down in the Blue Wall for an earnest three hours or so of non-stop, highly motivated, and slightly caffeinated writing.

In the first meeting of NaNoWriMo this past Wednesday, some participants showed up with pad and paper, others with laptops, but all were consumed with their craft for a solid hour or two. By the end of the session, some had written over 7,000 words in that one sitting. Others —namely, me — had managed to eke out a measly 1,341.

The issue that most people bring up when first introduced to the NaNoWriMo concept is that writing tons as fast as possible can be a quick fix before that important term paper is due, but it can't possibly bode well for the future of literature. Chris Baty has a response for skeptics on the NaNoWriMo website.

"Our novels, despite our questionable motives and pitiful experience, came out okay. Not great, but not horrible, either. And, more surprising than that, the writing process had been kind of fun." Besides, he argues, most people say they'd like to write a novel one-day. "It's all about quantity, not quality. The kamikaze approach forces you to lower your expectations, take risks, and write on the fly," says Baty.

NaNoWriMo gives people a challenge, and more importantly, an official deadline, at midnight on Nov. 31, you're done. Many people have taken up the challenge since the project began in 1999 — last year 25,000 people worldwide enrolled, but only about 3,500 actually hit the goal. But if you're one of those rare few who have hit that magical word count, for the rest of your life you can say that, for what it's worth, you have written a novel.

That's what's kept me going last year until I reached Nov 27, 2003 — the day I hit the 50,000 word mark ahead of schedule, and that goal will keep me going again this year. Until that day, wish me luck, and see you at the Blue Wall. I'll be the one in the far corner, noveling.

To obtain more information, or to enroll in NaNoWriMo (it's free, there's no obligation, and enrollment is open until Nov. 25), visit www.nanowrimo.org

Gory flick has little plot line

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

James Wan's icky gorefest "Saw" gives us a nifty variation on the serial killer formula: the murderer here doesn't exactly kill his victims, but devises ways to get them to kill themselves (or, at least, each other.) A woman has to fish a key out of a dead man's viscera to unlock an exploding device attached to her head; another man has to worm his way through a maze of razor wire or be buried alive. Is your skin crawling yet? "Saw" gets you to think: what would you do if your life was in jeopardy?

That's a juicy hook for a macabre Halloween horror film, but "Saw" really has no interest in it beyond a gimmick. The movie is a dank and grisly psycho-thriller in pure "Seven" mode, right down to the murderer who targets his victims because they don't appreciate life (he's the murderer as moral avenger.) "Saw" has few setpieces of knot-tightening tension, but the movie is kind of ordinary in its gruesomeness. All the movie does is get you in touch with your inner sadist.

Cary Elwes, who's gotten a rounder, puffier face since starring in "The Princess Bride" all those years ago, and Leigh Whannell, who wrote the screenplay, play a pair of men who wake-up to find themselves chained by their ankles to rusty pipes on either side of a dingy underground bathroom with a dead body in the middle of the room. Why are they there and how did they get there? Each are equipped with a hacksaw not strong enough to slice through metal, but strong enough to cut through a human limb. Elwes' Dr. Gordon is faced with the ultimatum that if he doesn't kill Whannell's Adam by six o'clock, his family will die.

"Saw" manipulates you in clever and morbid ways, but that still doesn't make it a very good movie. "Saw" has all the gore and a darkness a horror film about torture should have, but it's also silly and unfocused, with a few too many narrative plotholes that fall through the cracks. Wan decorates the film with spooky images – the killer communicates to his victims with a white-faced harlequin doll and he wears a mask that looks like a feral pig – but half the time the film makes no sense (how does Dr. Gordon know everything about the jigsaw Killer, unless, of course, he needs to provide some exposition?)

Saw
Directed by James Wan
Starring Cary Elwes Danny Glover Lions Gate
Rated R
100 mins.
Grade C

Danny Glover plays a police officer who becomes unhinged tracking the Jigsaw Killer, but it's a role that means nothing, and Elwes overacts to a dismal degree (actually, the entire cast overacts to a dismal degree.) Meanwhile, Wan speeds up the editing so that you begin to feel like one of the beleaguered victims. All the while, the movie feels like a second-rate copy of a David Fincher movie. "Saw" has its share of bloody shocks, but it just feels like death warmed over.

Shawnee Smith played victim to a serial killer in the thriller "Saw."

'Ray:' Oscar bound in 2004

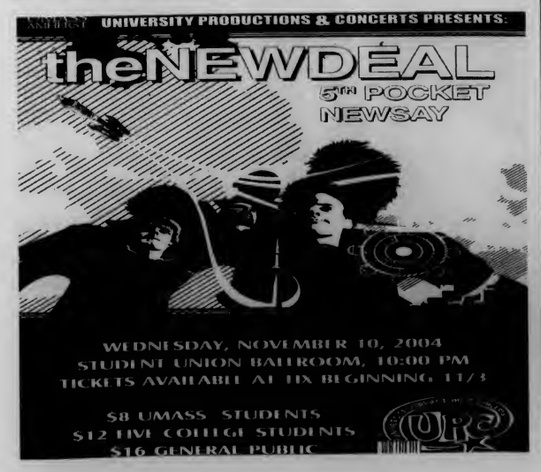
RAY from page 4

leave a concert because he has finished his last song, but a club owner tells him he has twenty minutes left and he improvises the last twenty minutes and brings the house down with "What'd I say?" which became a huge hit.

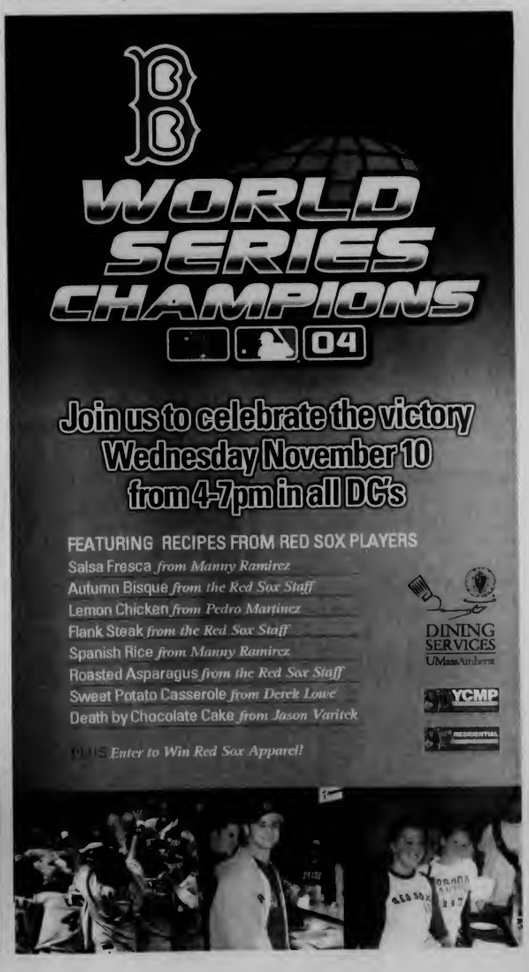
His legendary stand against the Jim Crowe laws got him banned from performing in the state of Georgia for years to come, but the film depicts it as heroic and the conclusion ends on sort of a brilliant dream sequence that suggests, Ray Charles may have been without sight, but he was never blind.

It's rare to find a film so in love with its story and its characters. The structure of this film is impeccable in personifying twenty years of a magnificent life. "Ray" is fascinating to watch, brilliant in content, has structure that demands to be respected, direction that deserves an Oscar nomination and a terrific male lead performance. When the best films of the year usually come in a Christmas flood of great films, "Ray" breaks the rules.

Earn a Certificate in Criminal Justice
apply now for the
CRIMINAL JUSTICE PROGRAM
Criminal Justice Concentration
Department of Sociology
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
www.umassulearn.net



For students who plan a career in some aspect of the criminal justice system: police officers, probation and parole officers, paralegals, public and private criminal attorneys, district attorneys, judges, etc.



Applications are now being taken for the program.

For more information, and to apply to the program, contact Sarah O'Keefe, Sociology Department, Thompson 524, 545-0475 or email cj@soc.umass.edu

To register for winter and spring courses, go to www.umassulearn.net or the Division of Continuing Education Registration Office, 358 N. Pleasant St., 545-3653

Priority will be given to registered Criminal Justice Program students.

UMass wins exhibition

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

If last weekend's exhibition against the National Women's Basketball League All-Stars is an indicator of anything, it's that this year's Minutewomen are headed in an entirely new direction.

Upwards, that is.

Granted, the NWBL won't offer the same level of competition as the Atlantic 10 will in the 2004-2005 season, but one needed to look no further than the quality of play by UMass to see the significance of the 80-32 thrashing of the All-Stars.

"I'm pleased," coach Marnie Dacko said. "I'm pleased that we're executing on offense. I thought the defense could have picked up a little, but overall I'm pleased with where we are after eighteen practices."

Redshirt-junior point guard Katie Nelson was back on the court after sitting out the last 18 months with a torn ACL, and her presence was felt everywhere on the court. She took the opening tipoff and cruised downcourt, nailing down a three-pointer and then dished out an assist, nailed another trey, layed one up and then sat down with her team comfortably ahead at 26-6.

"I definitely came out stronger than I expected," Nelson said. "I think that's one thing I need to be working on, not so much scoring points but just coming out strong and staying strong, directing the offense. Things got a little messy out there at one point, but I think that's expected."

The most surprising, perhaps, was the play of the five freshmen in the game. Pam Rosario was second in scoring behind Brooke Campbell (13 points) with 11 baskets in her debut in Maroon and White, while Alisha Tatham and Whitney McDonald made significant contributions as well.

"These girls may be freshmen as far as their class, but they're much more mature than that," Dacko said.

Something else is new this year for the Minutewomen. That is, the Maroon and White may have found a true center, something they didn't have last year. 6-foot-4 center Patrycja Gulak took care of business in the paint, grabbing 11 rebounds to go with her six points on the afternoon.

"Patrycja and Whitney are two big post players," Dacko said. "They'll anchor down our defense in the back, and give our team a great deal of confidence knowing that they're there. One is more physical than the other, but they make a nice one-two punch."

Realizing a lifelong dream

DUGGAN from page 8

That amazing comeback is now a part of a story that I never would have believed if I hadn't witnessed it.

The best part of this postseason run has been the change in the way I watched the Sox.

After they beat the Yankees and actually got the breaks that they never get, I stopped waiting for some colossal breakdown and instead expected the Sox to come through with the game on the line.

That Wednesday night was one of the most unbelievable nights of my life. I knew that the Sox were about to win the World Series and I couldn't believe it.

I got together with about 10 of my closest friends and we all jammed into my buddy's living room and hung on every pitch. The night will go down as one of the greatest of my life and it was capped off with a celebration that I've been waiting my whole life for.

We all went crazy after Foulke snared that come-backer and delicately flipped the ball over to Mientkiewicz for the final out. But once we were finished dousing each other with cheap champagne and Busch Lights, there was a surreal feeling.

Some of us wandered back to the TV and watched the trophy presentation and post-game interviews. We sat mostly in silence, except for the random "I can't believe this" or "We just won the World Series!" outbursts.

Just wanted to try and take everything in and enjoy the moment as much as possible.

Since that night, nothing has seemed real. I've taken a few tests, although I'm not sure I got one question right. But none of that really matters to me. In 20 years I doubt I'll remember what my GPA was for this semester, but I know that I'll always remember these past three weeks.

The best feeling now is that Sox fans will no longer be known as an obsessive group who follow a perpetually doomed franchise.

Some in the national media have said that deep down Sox fans didn't want the team to win it all because in some strange way we reveled in our team's failures.

Those people have no idea what they are talking about. All we've ever wanted is for the Sox to win; save that lovable loser stuff for Cubs fans.

And now that the Sox have finally won a championship, I have no idea what it will be like to follow this team. But I do know that I've waited 20 years for this, and the feeling could not be better.

Dan Duggan is a Collegian columnist.

We were named one of Fortune® magazine's "100 Best Companies To Work For."
And you can bet it wasn't because of the free coffee.

FORTUNE® 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR® 2004

Job perks are great. And at Ernst & Young we happen to think the most important ones are those that help our employees grow. That's why we've given them access to some of the best professional development programs in the country. As well as the opportunity to work on some of the most prestigious brands in the world. In turn, Fortune magazine recognized us as one of the "100 Best Companies To Work For" six years in a row. So if you're looking for a great place to work, look for us on campus. Maybe we can grab a cup of coffee. ey.com/us/careers

Audit • Tax • Transaction Advisory Services

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

Ray Bourque put in HOF

TORONTO — Ray Bourque, the finest defenseman of his generation, entered the Hockey Hall of Fame on Monday with Paul Coffey and Larry Murphy.

The three stellar defensemen combined for nine Stanley Cups and joined the hall with builder Cliff Fletcher and hockey writer Jim Kelley.

Bourque played for 22 NHL seasons and was a five-time Norris Trophy winner. He spent all of his career in Boston until he capped it by winning the Stanley Cup with Colorado in his final season in 2001.

Coffey won three Stanley Cups in Edmonton and one in Pittsburgh. His 48 goals in 1985-86 are the most by a defenseman in one season, and that year he set the record for longest consecutive-games point streak by a defenseman (28). He won the Norris Trophy three times.

Murphy earned two championship rings with Pittsburgh and two more with Detroit. The records he set in 1980-81 for rookie defensemen — most assists (60) and most points (76) — still stand.

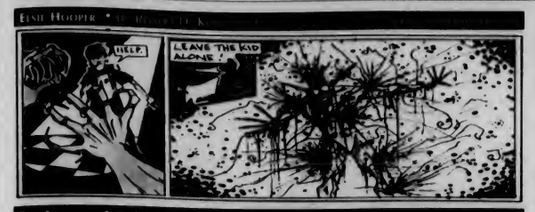
Bourque is first in career points by NHL defensemen with 1,579. He was the complete package: smooth skater, great vision, tape-to-tape passing, booming shot and physical along the boards.

"My only regret is not being able to win a Cup in Boston," said Bourque, whose Bruins lost to Edmonton in the 1988 and 1990 finals. "I lived something amazing in Colorado, the Cup victory, the parade. And during that parade I remember thinking how great it would have been to live that in Boston."

No one possessed Coffey's offensive flair from the blue line. He was the Bobby Orr of his generation, a sensational skater who captivated fans in the 1980s with end-to-end rushes.

"Coffey used to give us nightmares," said Fletcher, recalling his days as the Calgary Flames' general manager and the intense rivalry with Coffey's Oilers.

The Hall of Fame was the last thing on Coffey's mind when the Oilers selected him with the sixth overall pick in the 1980 NHL entry draft.



"I just wanted to make the team and not embarrass my friends and family," he said Monday.

A little more than 24 years later, Coffey followed former Oilers teammates Wayne Gretzky, Grant Fuhr and Jari Kurri into the hall.

Murphy never won a Norris Trophy, but quietly put up imposing numbers. His 1,615 games are second among defensemen behind Scott Stevens (1,635), while his 1,216 points are fifth among players at his position.

— Associated Press

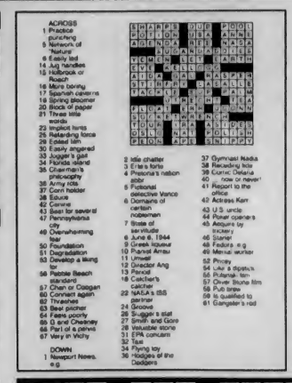
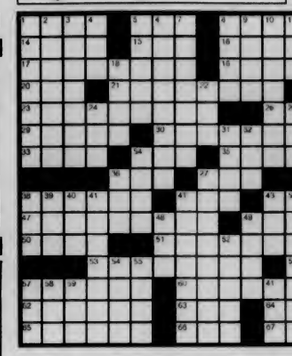
Fancy NAILS
[illegible] Mall
413-584-0710
Walk-ins Welcome
FREE French Manicure
w/ full set or fills
Holiday Special
$2 OFF
w/ full set or fill
with coupon only



Quote of the Day

"Excess of sorrow laughs.
Excess of joy weeps."



-William Blake

ACROSS
1 Practice plunking
5 Network of neurons
10 Nature
14 Easily led
15 Jug handles
16 Rollerblade or skate?
17 Bore boring
18 Spanish caterers
19 Spring precursor
20 Block of paper
21 Three little words
22 Hostel items
25 Rebuking force
29 Baked dish
30 Easily angered
33 Juggler's gait
34 Florida island
35 Chairman's philosophy
36 Army ants
37 Corn holder
38 Edwin
42 Cenote
43 Beer for several
47 Pennsylvania city
49 Overwhelming fear
50 Foundation
51 Degradation
53 Develop a liking for
56 Pebble Beach standard
57 Chan or Coogan
60 Connect again
62 Thrashes
63 Best pitcher
64 Fabric purity
65 Q and Chesney
66 Part of a pelvis
67 Very in Vichy

DOWN
1 Newport News, e.g.
2 Idle chatter
3 Ettie's forte
4 Pretoria's nation: abbr.
5 Fictional detective Vance
6 Domains of certain noblemen
7 State of servitude
8 June 6, 1944
9 Greek league
10 Pharaoh Amasu
11 Unwell
12 Director Ang
13 Pierce
18 Catcher's catcher
22 NASA's ISS partner
24 Groove
26 S-ugain s stat
27 Smith and Gore
28 Valuable stone
31 EPA concern
32 Tips
34 Flying toy
36 Hedges of the Dodgers
37 Gymnast Nadia
38 Recading rick
39 Comic Delaria
40 ___ now or never
41 Report to the office
43 Actress Kerr
44 U.S. uncle
44 Poker opener's
45 Acquire by victory
46 Starlet
48 Fedora, e.g.
49 Menial worker
52 Proxy
54 Ike s diplotics
55 Infamous tin-
57 Oliver Stone film
58 Pub brew
59 Is qualified to
61 Gangster's rod

Amherst Brewing Company
The place where there's always fun and entertainment brewing!
November 11th
Dani Linnetz
acoustic rock
November 13th
Floyd Patterson
Rythym & Blues
November 15th
Amherst Jazz Orchestra
8:30 - 11:30
NFL FOOTBALL ON A 51" WIDE SCREEN TV WITH FREE BUFFET. RAFFLE AT HALFTIME.
Live Music Every Saturday & Monday Night

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You need to learn how to be nice for more than a day.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Don't get stressed out because something is going slower than expected.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Today is not a good day to eat meat at the DC. You have been warned.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't read in your room today because there will be way too many distractions.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Try to avoid getting into pointless arguments today.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't get ahead of yourself. Your plans still might turn out to be a disaster.

leo • Jul.. 23-Aug. 22
Don't believe anything anyone says. Someone is trying to pull your leg.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You should take in a deep breath and let the oxygen flow to your fingertips.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Right now you are full of zest and positive energy. Make sure you don't overdo it.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You looks very european today. It must be that schnazzy new scarf you're wearing.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you keep thinking the same thing over and over again, you're going to go crazy.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Everything looks glum now. You just have to turn those lemons into lemonade.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus Fundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January – May, t_korol@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

AUTO FOR SALE

1998 Jeep Cherokee Classic Auto 4x4 Excellent Cond. 5K bo 413-772-6855

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING INTERNSHIPS Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

Counter Help. Part time positions available for friendly and reliable applicants. Apply in person at Woodstar Café 60 Masonic St. Northampton

EMPLOYMENT

Put up Posters Towns and colleges. Car & References Needed. $10/Hr 10-15 hrs /wk. 6 hrs must be business hrs Excellent Attn to detail and follow up needed. Must be good w/ specific directions. postering@attsptomo.org or 413-259-1227 Ext. 4

Substitute teachers needed. Work cooperatively as part of teaching team. High School diploma or equivalent required. Must be able to lift children up to 40 lbs. on a regular basis. Flexible able to work different shifts as needed. $7.00/hr. no benefits Send cover letter and resume to: HCAC Human Resources, 557 Easthampton Rd. Northampton, MA 01060 or to hr@hcac.org

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

EMPLOYMENT

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling out Immigration forms.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2005. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun,

TRAVEL

Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

1SPRING BREAK

Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endless-summertours.com

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica. From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRIME Online
Cannot be combined with any other offer (USD) of based on quad room. Only valid for trips with airfare. Expires 1/1/2005 www.[illegible].com
1 800 426 7710

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

Collegian Advertising
545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Red Sox unify fans

The Boston Red Sox are the World Series Champions.

Read that sentence again. Let it sink in.

THE BOSTON RED SOX ARE THE WORLD SERIES CHAMPIONS!

For those of you who are not die-hard Sox fans, I don't know if you will be able to relate to this column at all, but I encourage you to read it just so you can understand the depths of following this team.

Dan Duggan

I know there are many fan bases across the country that are devoted to their team, and before last week the St. Louis Cardinals fans were rumored to be one of the best in baseball. But I really don't think anything compares to being a Sox fan.

Let's just say I can't imagine that cemeteries all over Florida were filled with fans overcome with emotion after the Marlins won the World Series last year. But that's exactly what happened last week after the Sox won it all.

On Thursday afternoon, my father went to his brother's and father's gravesites and left baseballs at their graves. He said there were at least a dozen other people doing the same thing at the resting places of loved ones.

That's the thing about Boston: the Red Sox aren't a team you merely root for. They are much more than that.

New Englanders are raised to live and die with the Old Town Team. Each fall that the Sox came up short bridged a gap between generations.

It was comforting after last year's excruciating loss in the ALCS to talk to my father, because I knew he had been through similar heartbreaks while following the Sox.

But this year there was a different feeling about the Sox. They weren't afraid of the Yankees, and they seemed to be a group of guys that were having too much fun to get caught up in the pressures of an eight-decade championship drought.

And while it seemed like they were destined to come up short when they were down 3-0 in the ALCS, the true fans knew to keep the faith in this group of idiots.

See DUGGAN on page 6

Derek Lowe reacts after striking out New York's Gary Sheffield in Boston's 10-3 victory over the Yankees in game 7 of the ALCS on Oct. 20, 2004.

Roberts sparks Sox

Instead of jabbering about an ancient old curse that has been the base of hundreds and hundreds of columns and articles, I feel it is important to understand the present rather than dwell on the past.

Eric Athas

Before the Red Sox won the big one, many were adamant that fate ruled against a World Series for the Sox. Now they know that is not true, of course, but the Red Sox nation, although satisfied, still has one question that hasn't been answered: why this year? The motto that fans stuck by all these years was: "We Believe." Ironically, now that it has happened, fans find themselves saying: "I can't believe it."

The answer to why it happened this year and not the previous eighty-six years does not lie in the aces or the closers. Sure, it couldn't have been done without the offensive and defensive players, but it was the supporting cast that made the difference this year.

General Manager Theo Epstein went out and got his superstar pitcher in Curt Schilling and traded for defensive gold glover Orlando Cabrera, while still keeping most of the 2003 team intact. And then he put a supporting cast behind his starters in Pokey Reese, Doug Mientkiewicz, Gabe Kapler, and phenomenal closer Keith Foulke.

One backup player proved to be the difference maker: right fielder Dave Roberts. Don't be fooled by the title; you didn't see Roberts in the right field. Unlike the ones previously listed, Roberts was utilized on the offensive side as a pinch runner. Scooped up by the Sox at the trade deadline this year, Roberts proved to be a sensational pick-up, especially in a time of desperation.

Remember when the Sox were down 3-0 in the ALCS against the Yankees? The relief you felt when David Ortiz blasted a two-run homer in the bottom of the twelfth inning to win the game? Rewind a little bit to the ninth inning. Three outs away from total elimination, Terry Francona decided to put Roberts in as a pinch runner on first base. When Roberts gets on base, he is going to steal, because that is his job.

The Yankees, the fans, the New Yorkers, and everyone else somewhat informed on the game of baseball knew at that point that Dave Roberts was going to steal second. Taking a lead, Roberts used his blazing speed and slid into second base within hundredths of a second of being tagged out. But he made it, and at that point I believe the Red Sox won everything. Bill Mueller's single made it official as Roberts again used his speed to round third and slide to home base, tying the game and sending it into extra innings, setting up Ortiz to finish it off.

After Roberts stole that base that night, the Red Sox never looked back. In fact they only trailed once after that steal for the rest of the playoffs and won the next eight games up to the World Series championship. Roberts was the spark that the Red Sox didn't have throughout the previous eighty-six years. But in 2004, he came in off the bench and in my mind, won the World Series.

So as the shock wave continues to flow through Boston and as Red Sox faithful continue to wonder why, remember Dave Roberts and his clutch base running. And "believe" that Roberts was the spark that started the fire that we call a world championship.

Eric Athas is a Collegian columnist.

Bawden shines in finals

By Dave Quinn
Collegian Staff

It had to be a bittersweet moment for junior Jaime Bawden. She had just been named to the Atlantic 10 All Tournament Team, but the Massachusetts field hockey team had just suffered a 3-1 loss to Richmond in the conference final.

Despite that, she handled the situation as she always does: with a smile and class. Even in her shining moment, when she was receiving an award for individual performance, she waited for teammates Trish Borneo, Marije Tigchelaar, Adrianne Monaco and Christine Tocco, and they walked up arm in arm to receive their awards.

It's never been about the individual achievements with Bawden. She, like the majority of this year's squad, sees themselves as a smaller part of a greater whole. This was highlighted when, in a post-game interview, Bawden answered each question with "we" instead of "I," even when asked about individual performance. While she may defer the spotlight to her teammates, her performance this weekend was nothing short of spectacular.

In the semifinal game, Bawden scored the opening goal 14 minutes and 41 seconds into the first half. Marije Tigchelarr's shot was saved by St. Joe's goalkeeper Rebecca Cunfer, but the rebound bounced to Bawden, who slammed it home. Then, in the opening minutes of the second half, Bawden struck again. Trish Borneo and Katelyn Woolfrey set up Bawden for the backbreaking goal that put the game away as the Minutewomen won 3-0.

Bawden was the scoring force in the Richmond game, as well. With the Minutewomen down 3-0 late in the first half, the Maroon and White drew a corner and went right to their player with the hot stick. After receiving a pass from Tigchelaar, Bawden put a quick spin move on the Spider defender and shot a laser through the five-hole to bring her team within two at 3-1.

Unfortunately for Massachusetts, that would be as close as they would get.

As surprising as this may seem, the three goals she posted in the A-10 tourney were her only goals of the season. After leading the team in scoring during both her freshman and sophomore campaigns, Bawden's scoring numbers dropped significantly. This wasn't a result of a player slumping however, but a change in the dynamics of the team.

"In the beginning, we weren't getting as many corners as we did at the end of the season. If we had, she would have had more scoring opportunities. The other part of it was the role; she was in a little bit of a more defensive role this year," coach Patty Shea explained.

This role isn't anything new for Bawden as she plays left back on the Canadian Junior National Team. As one of the most versatile players on the team, Bawden can play almost any position on the field. The majority of the time the junior plays center midfield, a great position for a ball hawk like herself, who always seems to be involved with every play.

"She plays in the center of the field, and those people are usually your field generals. You want your key decision makers in the center of the field. If she's around the ball a lot, you know you're going to be okay offensively and defensively," Shea said.

While role shift might bother some players, Bawden took the change and ran with it. Her presence on the defensive end has helped speed up the development of some of the Minutewomen's younger players. With some players, it's about ego and statistics.

For Bawden, it's a matter of getting the job done and putting up numbers where they count: the win column.

"She always plays hard. There's not a single moment that she doesn't compete. It's not about showing up in the box score for her; she wants to win. She'll do anything that the team asks of her, and that makes her a true team member and competitor," Shea stated.

Junior Jaime Bawden defends an attack from the Maine Black Bears. Bawden was nominated to the all A-10 tournament team.

Silver lining in loss

Bob McGovern

Sometimes it takes a big loss to shed some light on a positive season.

Confused, don't be. After a sea-son that had all the makings of a rebuilding year for the Massa-chusetts men's soccer team, it fell just short of the Atlantic 10 post-season play for the second year in a row, beaten by the same team.

On paper, it would seem that the Minutemen fell into an expected zone of mediocrity. After a 2-0 loss to Rhode Island last Friday and a LaSalle victory over Fordham, UMass was ultimately sent packing into the off-season. One would think that with this disheartening loss, 2004 was a wasted campaign.

However, the events that led up to Friday's do-or-die game, is what makes this season not only important, but vital in understanding why the Minutemen will be a team to reckon with in seasons to come.

Most of the time, the freshman class is used sparingly in college athletics. A first year player needs some time to get the feet wet, learn the system, and ultimately earn a place on the starting roster. For UMass, there was no learning curve and much of the young blood got thrown right in the fire.

Minutemen coach Sam Koch wasn't trying to make things harder on himself, rather he got stuck in a situation that he never could have anticipated.

Going into the 2004 campaign, Koch discovered that he was going to be without the services of Chris Camerota and Jason Scudamore, two starters from the 2003 season.

Camerota was a mainstay in the backfield and was an aggressive complement to a defense that had seven shutouts last year.

Scudamore, who was injured for the entirety of this past season, was a good all-around player that was poised to be one of the main contributors this year. His five points last year were good enough to tie him for sixth on the team.

MATTHEW REDGOLEGIAN

Sophomore midfielder Tim Kitchell had a goal and an assist this year for UMass. Kitchell started 15 games for the Minutemen.

With this, people like Douglas Rappaport, Tyler Pagano, Ian O'Donnell, and Tim Kitchell, who were either bench players or in high school last year, were forced to pick up the slack left by extenuating circumstances.

This team was a group that didn't have a full identity yet. Throughout the season there were different moves and alterations made, all in hopes of trying to find the perfect fit. The team was one ever-changing entity, and by the time the final whistle blew on Friday evening, UMass had almost found what it was looking for.

The Minutemen had eight overtime games (a team record) this year, only losing one to Boston University on Sept. 28. One would think that a team as young as UMass wouldn't posses the maturity or the unity to overcome these situations, but it did using last minute heroics from the likes of Kitchell, Rob Charest, and Richard Higa, all of whom are a sophomore or younger.

There also could have been a goalie controversy. Senior captain Colin Burns and sophomore Nick Billman once again split time in net for the Minutemen. Over the course of this season, I've been looking for any animosity between the two, but there was none to be seen.

Burns, a fifth year senior, passed down his experience and maturity to Billman, who will be the headlining goalie for the Maroon and White next year. Overall, it was a competition that bred nothing but the improvement of both keepers.

Maybe this year didn't turn out as well as the Maroon and White would have wanted it. Anytime a season is abruptly cut short, it is hard to look past the here and now and focus on the old cliché of, "there's always next year."

However, taking a quick look back may shed some light on just how much potential this team has when they finally get it together.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian Editor

Eminem back by popular demand
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

WEDNESDAY • High: 42 • Low: 34
THURSDAY • High: 56 • Low: 33
FRIDAY • High: 42 • Low: 22
DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Rocket wins seventh Cy Young Award
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 46

Panel discusses presidential election aftermath and campaign finance reform

By Joseph Padell
Collegian Correspondent

A panel of activists and University of Massachusetts professors discussed the future of election funding in the United States yesterday, seeking to debunk some of the myths surrounding "clean" election legislation.

"Clean" election legislation, also known as campaign finance reform, requires a state to give money to qualifying candidates during an election. Maine and Arizona are the only states to have this legislation.

Massachusetts' voters passed campaign finance reform legislation in a referendum in 1998. The state legislature then refused to fund the legislation, prompting a Supreme Judicial Court ruling in 2002 forcing the legislature to fund or repeal the measure. The state legislature repealed the clean election laws last year.

UMass communications professor Stephen Olbrys said that campaign finance reform will continue to be defeated until its supporters change their message and understand their opponent's.

Supporters of campaign finance reform "may not pay attention to how the opposition frames clean elections," he said. "The argument [against clean elections], that it's your tax money used for clean elections, is very powerful."

Presidential candidates currently get about $70 million dollars in public funds following their nominations, according to UMass political science professor Raymond J. La Raja, and this is not enough to wage a national campaign.

"The [national] advertising budget for Viagra and Levitra is more than that in just one year," he said. Viagra and Levitra are drugs used to treat erectile dysfunction.

Meg Gage, Executive Director of the Proteus Fund, made it a point to draw a clear distinction between clean election legislation and public funding for presidential candidates. The Proteus Fund makes grants to organizations seeking social change.

"The presidential system and public financing are two completely different systems," Gage said. "Clean elections is a system where you qualify with a number of smaller contributions, usually five dollars." Presidential candidates need more money to begin a campaign.

Limitations on contributions to presidential candidates begin following their nomination at the national conventions. Prior to the Republican National Convention, President George W. Bush raised almost $259 million before becoming eligible for public financing, according to a Federal Elections Commission report. John F. Kerry raised almost

See ELECTIONS on page 2

Polish studies gets largest grant yet

By Eva Piccozzi
Collegian Correspondent

The largest monetary gift ever donated to the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, at a sum of $900,000, was granted to the Program in Slavic and East European Studies last month.

The contribution was made on behalf of the newly established Walter Raleigh Amesbury, Jr. and Cecile Dudley Amesbury Endowment for Polish Language, Literature and Culture.

Polish studies program teacher Robert Rothstein and his colleagues were honored with the gift that was given exclusively in support of research and teaching in Polish language, literature and culture.

With the recent generous endowment from Amesbury, Rothstein projects a progressive future for the small but popular program. Since 1971 Rothstein, a comparative literature professor, has been teaching Polish at the University of Massachusetts. He offers Polish-language courses over a two-year cycle, elementary this academic year and intermediate next year and an advanced course on an independent-study basis.

"This semester's enrollment in elementary Polish is the highest ever," he said.

While there have been small

See POLISH on page 2

Red Sox aftermath brings creativity and costs

Disturbances cost UMass thousands

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

The party may be winding down for Boston Red Sox fans on college campuses across New England, but for administrators and police at the University of Massachusetts, the curse of processing mounds of paperwork and judicial hearings has yet to be reversed.

Two weeks after the Red Sox won the World Series, Dean of Students JoAnn Vanin says the administration will finally finish processing the last two of 85 judicial reviews of students who were arrested in on-campus disturbances that celebrated Boson's victories in the American League Championship Series and World Series.

"We [the Deans] all put in extraordinarily long hours," said Vanin.

Vanin said yesterday that of the 83 students that had undergone interim discipline, 13 have been suspended from the campus, one has been expelled, and the others are under deferred suspension, meaning they are under supervision until a final sanction is decided after their court date. Any other breech of the Student Code of Conduct during this time will cause the suspension to be invoked. For students under regular suspension, they also report to the administration after their court date.

"It's all tied to the court cases," Vanin said.

Vanin stressed that although students placed under deferred suspension are allowed to remain on campus and attend classes, it is still a very serious punishment.

"[Students] have to be on probation, [they] have to be on good behavior, and if they violate any of the rules of the university over the next year, they will be suspended," she said.

Despite the high number of arrests, only one UMass student was expelled. "In that case, [the decision was based] on the seriousness of the student's involvement and his disciplinary history, which was extensive," said Vanin.

Although the University does not inform parents if a student is punished, Vanin said that most parents have already found out if their child was arrested. "Given that all arrests are public and due to the media, most parents already know," she said.

UMPD

UMass Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor and her officers are no longer restoring order to campus until the wee hours of the morning, but O'Connor says the station is still dealing with the aftermath of an exhausting October.

"I am relieved baseball season is over," she said. "The only work that got done around here was baseball work."

O'Connor said the department is still struggling to catch up with the mounds of paperwork that needs to be processed from the past month, backed up by the approximately 100 arrests made during the two-week string of disturbances.

The high number of arrests cost the department heavily in overtime, manpower, and supplies — O'Connor estimates the "Red Sox bill" to be between $100,000 to $110,000.

"When you process 35 arrests in one night, that's a lot of overtime," she said. "And then you have to process them the next day, and then they're in court for hours afterward.'

After an arrest is made, there are four to five papers to be filled out for each individual case, which can make a night of heavy arrests to be a long one. That's when the cost in overtime begins to mount. O'Connor said on the night of a game, she often worked from 8 p.m. to 4 a.m., went home to sleep, and was back at work by 10 a.m. until 4 p.m.

O'Connor mentioned that a virus had spread around the station due to the lack of sleep among officers, and that they were still shaking it off as of last week.

"We had close contact with a lot of people. When you work people extended hours, their immunity gets run down," she said. "That won't even show up on the Red Sox bill."

Although Massachusetts State Police helped campus police free of charge, O'Connor is not sure how the bill for aid from the Amherst Town police will be paid.

Also unavailable are the exact cost of police materials, such as pepper balls and smoke canisters, used to disperse the crowds during the disturbances, and the bottles of water needed by the police in riot gear.

"There are expenses you don't even think about," she said.

University of New Hampshire

"Who is going to pay for this?" That's the question officials at the University of New Hampshire asked its 13,000 students last spring, after two student riots in downtown Durham during the Red Sox playoffs cost the university over $100,000.

Student creates 'Riot UMass' computer game

Students flee from authorities in Southwest in the new video game "Riot UMass", created by a student after the Red Sox won the World Series.

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

In the aftermath of the Red Sox disturbances that took place on the University of Massachusetts campus last month, there have been several studies, forums and debates on the celebrations — but one student decided to recognize the Red Sox revelry on his own, by creating a video game.

Freshman Grant Cerulo created "Riot UMass", which is an online computer game that challenges rowdy students, some dressed in Boston Red Sox baseball caps to fight off riot police officers. The player must attack any and all police officers he or she comes across until the officer collapses on the ground in a pool of blood. Players can also get extra points by picking up police batons dropped by assiduous officers. All of this takes place against a backdrop of the tumultuous Southwest quad.

Why base a video game on riots? Cerulo said it generates a lot of student interest.

"It's just an amazing thing to see. Everyone gets so hyped up about it," he said. "People seem to love to get their aggression out against police brutality."

"Riot UMass" has grown with popularity in the three weeks it has been available on the World Wide Web. It has already received over 26,000 hits on Cerulo's Web site and has been featured on collegehumor.com and zoomassgear.com. Cerulo said he had no intention of generating so much interest in his game. He claims that he made the game one weekend out of boredom, when he did not have to practice with the UMass Marching Band.

"It was the weekend ... I didn't have marching band," he said. "I was sitting in my room with my roommate and I said, 'I've got the best idea ... I started working on it ... he really loved it so I made two levels."

A short time later, Cerulo tested his game on friends who lived in his dorm and received positive responses.

"Eventually, kids from my hall came in and played it," he said. "Everyone just comes in and looks at it and they're like, 'oh my God, this is the best thing in the world!'"

The game has received all positive responses, according to Cerulo. At best, it's popularity exploded almost overnight.

"I sent [the game] to a couple people online and they were like ... 'You're going to be famous for this.' Everyone I told, all my friends, they all really liked it, so eventually I put a counter on the Web site the second day it was on," Cerulo said. "All of the sudden ... we got on collegehumor.com and I got emails from Zoomassgear and all sorts of different people just telling me how much they loved it."

Cerulo said that he was "surprised" that he has not received any response from

See GAME on page 3

Ashcroft resigns post election

WASHINGTON (AP) — Attorney General John Ashcroft, a favorite of conservatives, and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, one of President Bush's closest friends, resigned Tuesday, the first members of the Cabinet to leave as Bush heads from re-election into his second term.

Both Ashcroft and Evans have served in Bush's Cabinet from the start of the administration.

Ashcroft, in a five-page, handwritten letter to Bush, said, "The objective of securing the safety of Americans from crime and terror has been achieved."

"Yet I believe that the Department of Justice would be well served by new leadership and fresh inspiration," said Ashcroft, whose health problems earlier this year resulted in removal of his gall bladder.

"I believe that my energies and talents should be directed toward other challenging horizons," he said. Ashcroft's letter was dated Nov. 2, Election Day.

Evans, a longtime friend from Texas, wrote Bush, "While the promise of your second term shines bright, I have concluded with deep regret that it is time for me to return home."

Bush issued statements of praise for both men — and for the policies they advanced.

"John Ashcroft has worked tirelessly to help make our country safer," the president said. "John has served our nation with honor, distinction, and integrity."

-Associated Press

Kerry moves on politically

WASHINGTON (AP) — No longer a presidential candidate but still a voice for the Democrats, Sen. John Kerry met with the party's congressional leadership Tuesday as he moved into the next phase of his political life.

"We need to be unified and we have a very clear agenda," Kerry said at the start of the meeting. "I'm going to be fighting for that agenda with all my energy and all the passion that I brought to the campaign."

One week after his presidential defeat, Kerry met with House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., and Senate Minority Whip Harry Reid, D-Nev., at the Capitol to discuss a range of issues from Social Security to stem-cell research. Reid is expected to succeed Sen. Tom Daschle, who lost his South Dakota seat, as the Democratic leader in the Senate.

David Wade, a spokesman for Kerry, said the four-term Massachusetts senator "believes there is a mandate for unity in the country, and that there are 54 million Americans whose voices deserve to be heard as we move forward as a party."

President Bush received 59.5 million votes to Kerry's 55.9 million in claiming a second term.

Kerry also plans to attend next week's lame-duck session, his first return to the Senate since June when he interrupted his campaign to rush back to Washington to vote on veterans' legislation.

Kerry made only a few rare trips to Capitol Hill after launching his presidential bid and pursuing the Democratic nomination in an intense and crowded primary fight.

-Associated Press

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Peter Foundas
Managing Editor Andrew Merritt
Business Manager Rich Pacheco
Production Manager Cory Rosenberg
Night Supervisor Cameron Woods
Advertising Manager Tiffany Sugubhi
Editorial Production Samantha Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Meghan Healy
Campus Editor Alyson Zillmann
Editorial Editor Paige Cram
News Editor Erika Lovley
Photo Editor Matthew Reid
Sports Editor Mike Marzelli
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Josh Jaggarin
Finance Manager Hitak Shah
Accounting Clerk Virginie Frecaut
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Assistant Advertising Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Josh Greenberg
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Finance Thomas Hecht
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Adviser Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Mike Busack
Asst. Arts & Living Monique Jemmott
Assistant Editorial Yousef Munayyer
Assistant Editorial Allison Edles
Assistant News Julie O'Donnell
Assistant News Dan O'Brien
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern
Assistant Sports Jeff Howe

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts Calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. Became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1924 and the Daily Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been printed since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

Night Editor
Erika Lovley
Photo Technician
Andrew Roberts
Copy Editor
Peter Foundas
Production Supervisor
Molly Eggleston
Production Staff
Lauren Egavian, Melody Natal

Cover the Five College area for the Collegian
Call Erika 545.1809

policelog

Washing machine vandalized in Emerson Hall
Vehicle vandalism continues in parking lots

WednesdayNovember 3

2:44 a.m. Following a traffic stop on University Drive, officers issued an unnamed subject a summons for giving a false name, failure to stop/yield, no license or registration and trespassing.

6:28 p.m. A party stated that someone entered their car and removed approximately 100 compact disks and their storage case valued at approximately $1500.

8:13 p.m. A party stated someone broke into their car parked next to the water tanks on Windmill Lane and stole their stereo valued at approximately $300.

9:20 p.m. An officer reported that two tires had been removed from a vehicle parked in front of Southwest, and that the vehicle was sitting on rocks. Police left a damage notice for the owner.

ThursdayNovember 4

11:46 a.m. A party stated that several vehicles parked in Fraternity/Sorority park had broken with windows and stereos stolen from them. Damage notices were left for all of the vehicles.

7:05 p.m. A party stated that a subject was driving erratically in the Southwest Mall. The party also stated the subject yelled at the party and threw a cigarette at their face. The party was transported to the infirmary for a cigarette burn.

11:55 p.m. A party stated that a subject was shaking and requesting help. The Amherst Fire Department transported the subject to Cooley Dickenson Hospital.

FridayNovember 5

1:02 a.m. A party stated a vehicle parked in the lot next to Alumni Stadium had its rear tire slashed. A damage notice was left for the owner.

2:31 a.m. A party stated that five people were stuck in an elevator in John Quincy Adams Hall.

3:16 p.m. A party stated that a washer had been vandalized in Emerson Hall. The party stated the sides of the washer had been kicked in and the wires had been cut.

10:18 p.m. A party in the Blue Wall Pub reported a subject was harassing the bartender and that the party has marijuana. An officer spoke with the subject, and the subject left on their own accord.

SaturdayNovember 6

2:34 a.m. A party stated that an intoxicated subject was lying on the steps of the Fine Arts Center. An officer stated that the subject was put in protective custody.

11:58 a.m. A party stated that someone had damaged their vehicle. An officer reported major damage to the fabric and the metal supports for the convertible top.

6:13 a.m. A party stated that boiling water fell on the legs of a subject. The Amherst Fire Department transported the subject to Cooley Dickenson Hospital.

10:48 p.m. A party reported that three subjects stole a golf cart from the back of the Whitmore Administration Building. The three fled on foot and officers apprehended one subject Andrew Keefe, 19, of Westwood, and arrested him for being a minor in possession of alcohol

11:18 p.m. A party reported 10 intoxicated subjects jumping in front of moving cars. A second reported the subjects were throwing bottles at the cars. An officer investigated, but found no one in the area.

-Compiled by Brendan Heck

Panel discusses campaign reform one week after election

ELECTIONS from page 1

$234 million before the Democratic National Convention, according to the same report.

Max Fraad-Wolf, a graduate student in the UMass economics department, agreed that the current levels of public funding for elections are insufficient.

He blames the current economic situation for the influence of private money on politics.

"The top 20 percent [of Americans] gets more than half [of the income in the U.S.]," he said. "If economic power is that profoundly unequal in distribution there should be no surprise elections are unequal."

Joan Mandle, Executive Director of Democracy Matters, agreed.

"It is less than one percent of the public that contribute to campaigns and they expect something back," she said. "And most of them do get something back."

Reaction to the discussion was positive, and many of the people in attendance stayed in 504 Goodell to talk about the program and eat free pizza.

"I thought it was really informative," Gabrielle Scruggs, a senior communications major, said. "It made me want to get involved."

Bernardo Urdaneta, a graduate student in research economics, said the topic was a bit more general than he expected.

"I expected it to be more focused on the presidential election," he said. Even so "I thought it was really interesting."

Democracy Matters has 80 chapters at universities across the country and focuses on campaign finance reform.

The UMass chapter of Democracy Matters organized the panel discussion.

Seeking official recognition as an RSO, Democracy Matters meets every Sunday in the Blue Wall at 6:30 p.m.

New grant helps Polish department expand its program gifts to the Polish Studies gift fund, mostly from alumni, it hasn't enabled the program to stand-alone. Initially Rothstein said, this spring he will revive Polish 250, Introduction to the Polish People, a course that hasn't been taught for several years. In the long run the program hopes to establish a first ever faculty chair and begin the process of organizing an exclusive department.

POLISH from page 1

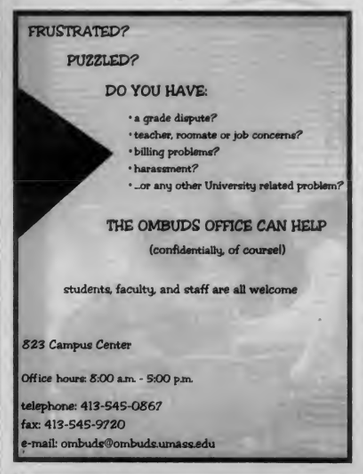
"Several years ago the State Legislature established a program that was designed to provide state funds to match private funds raised by the University and other public colleges," said Rothstein. The Commonwealth added 50 percent to the Amesbury donation, which resulted in a state match of $450,000 and an endowment totaling $1,350,000.



According to the press release, The Amesbury gift came to UMass after Walter Raleigh Amesbury Jr. set up a fund to honor his deceased wife Cecile Dudley Amesbury, a descendent of one of the oldest royal families in Krakow, Poland. After Walter died last year, Jane Trigere of South Deerfield, a longtime friend of the Amesbury's, suggested to his niece, Jane Goldberg, that UMass Amherst would be the ideal recipient of the donation.

The publicly funded state institution would benefit more than a private school from the grant. Also there is a long tradition of cultural and education ties, linking the campus and the substantial Polish community in the region.

In the past under the auspices of the Slavic Department, Polish visitors and American specialists came to UMass to talk on a variety of Polish cultural topics. Events ranged from the poetry of Czeslaw Milosz, Polish history as reflected in coins and medals, Polish-American folklore, and the history of polka.

Discussions on current Polish affairs, the Solidarity movement, the state of the Polish economy, as well as showings of Polish films and musical and theatrical programs were arranged on campus according to Rothstein. He said he hopes to continue and expand those traditions with the help of funding from the Amesbury Endowment.

Disturbances rack up big 'Red Sox bill'

RED SOX from page 1

senior assistant vice president for student affairs. "[Even] a fire call can add up ... One dumpster fire can cost $1,000."

Although the University assumed it's fair share of the costs of damages in Durham, the administration wanted students to assume responsibility. According to Lawing, the student senate recommended that students who are arrested and undergo a university hearing pay a fee of $25.

"The student senate really stepped to the plate," she said. "Once that bill is paid off, we will take the fee off."

The university also held a student summit in response to the riots, which included representatives from police forces and other universities around the country — a tactic that Lawing thinks has had a major effect on student behavior.

"We learned a lot from our student summit," she said. "They are influencing one another to go downtown [Durham], but not to influence each other in a harmful way."

Lawing said that a zero-tolerance policy at the University has also discouraged students from behaving dangerously. "It was my job to interim suspend any student who was arrested on a charge in any way," she said of the nights during the World Series games last month.

Students arrested are forced to call their parents, and are prohibited from being on campus or taking classes until a hearing by the Judicial Mediation Programs Office, comprised of trained volunteers, faculty, students, and staff that man different hearing boards.

Lawing also credited full-page ads in the student newspaper, and the efforts of the staff to speak with students about celebrating responsibly. "We talked with the students [and said] 'the choice is in your hands, it's just not worth it,'" said Lawing.

This past October, Lawing said the Red Sox's victory in the World Series resulted in a two to 4,000 person celebration, which then led to a small dumpster fire and one arrest of a non-student, an outcome Lawing is thrilled with.

"[The police] allowed the students and others to celebrate and be happy, then dispersed them," she said. "We're relived but we are very proud of our students."

Boston

According to Emerson College and Northeastern University police in Boston, the mania of celebratory students and Red Sox fans crowding the city during the games barely made a dent in department funding or campus destruction.

"We didn't even experience any minor damage," said James Ferrier, assistant director of public safety at Northeastern. "We had a few extra officers on, but we're not going to have a significant amount of police overtime."

Ferrier said on-campus problems were probably kept to a minimum because most students preferred to celebrate at Fenway Park, which is a "three minute sprint" from Northeastern. There, their behavior is under the jurisdiction of the Boston police. "Our campus is the city, all of our streets are the city streets," he said.

Only six Northeastern students were arrested for Red Sox-related behavior, according to Ferrier, four by Boston Police, two by campus police. The six, along with one student who was cited by school officials for inappropriate behavior, will be punished by the university.

"They stand a strong likelihood of at least a suspension," said Ferrier. "[But] we're happy to learn there were very small numbers [of arrests]."

Last February, a student riot on campus — including fans flipping cars and lighting fires after the New England Patriots won the Super Bowl — cost the university an amount that Ferrier wouldn't disclose, but said it was "in the five figures".

As a result, the administration cancelled a scheduled rock concert the following spring and revised the Code of Student Conduct to ensure that any riotous behavior would be grounds for expulsion.

"We wanted to make it clear this fall that no such behavior will be tolerated, even by groups [of students] watching," said Ferrier.

He said by administration encouraging students to behave appropriately and providing a large police presence after games, the campus has not had an incident since the Super Bowl riot.

"It was a very successful Red Sox season," said Ferrier.

Video game garners students' attention

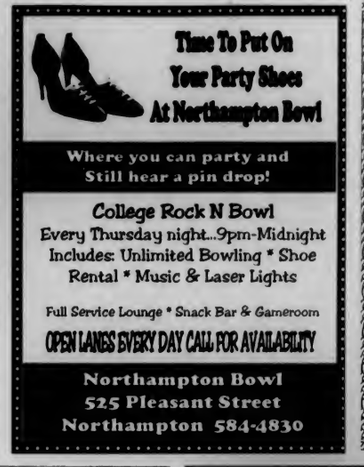
GAME from page 1

the administration about "Riot UMass", especially since the Web site is based on the UMass Internet server.

"I made jokes that I was going to get kicked out of college once they found out ... They haven't taken [the Web site] off their server, so they [probably] don't know about it, which would be surprising," he said.

Meanwhile, curious fingers have continued to click on to Cerulo's Web site, but that does not mean students agree on whether the game is good for the University.

"Simulation of reality is not something I really like doing, but riots ... As long as you're not depicting any particular community, I don't care," said a graduate nursing student who identified herself as Ilgyasa.



"I think it's pretty normal stuff and most people who are adults and intelligent should be able to handle it," said John Jackson, a member of the Outdoor Club.

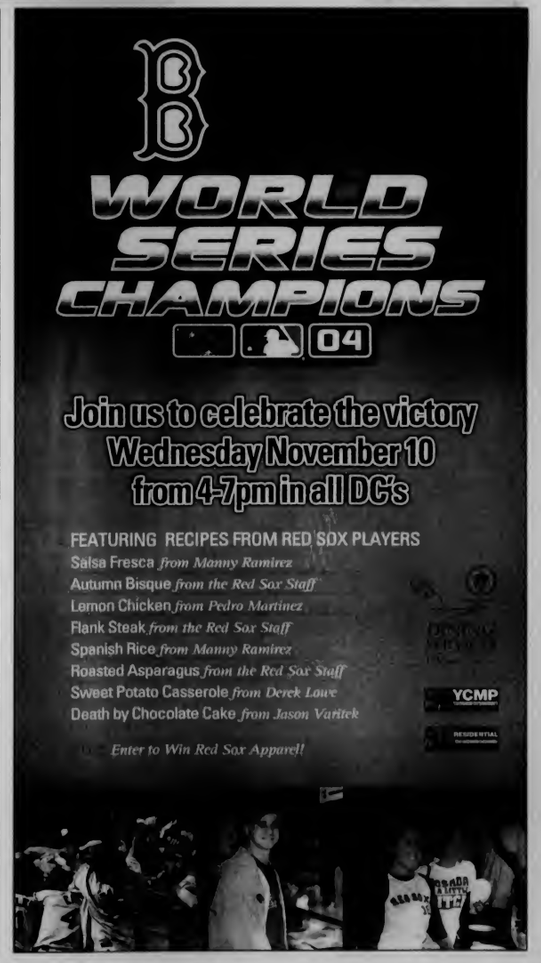
"I don't think it's a good cause for the students, it's not going to show any good morale," said Michael Parrish, a junior Journalism major. "I definitely think it looks bad for the University and I don't see how that's going to reflect in any good in any way towards how the students feel about the school."

Cerulo said he does not have any definite plans to make another UMass-based video game in the future, but said if he gets a good idea, then he would consider the option.

Riot UMass is still available on Cerulo's Web site: http://www.people.umass.edu/gcerulo/riotumass.html

Student Activities Center
UMassAmherst
UP TO THE MINUTE

Wednesday, November 10th
Music Injection Wednesdays:
Bring your lunch and receive a healthy dose of live music!
Cape Cod Lounge, 11 a.m.-1 p.m. FREE



Wednesday, November 10th
International Movie Series:
Autumn Spring
A Czech film directed by Vladimir Machlek. Co-sponsored by the International Programs Office.
SOM, Room 108, 8 p.m.
FREE Admission

Friday, November 12th
Open Mic Night:
Literary, Musical, and Performance Art. Created and presented by UMass Amherst students. All are welcome!
Student Union Craft Center, 7 p.m.-11 p.m. FREE

Saturday, November 13th
The Comedic Stylings of COLIN QUINN
Meet the comic scene's tough guy, currently starring in Comedy Central's "Tough Crowd with Colin Quinn."
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall, 10 p.m.
$5 UMass Students * $10 Five College Students * $15 eneral Public

Sunday, November 14th
Contradance:
Have the best fun you ever had! Dance to the live music. No experience necessary, no partners needed.
Student Union Ballroom, 7:30 p.m. FREE

COMING November 18-21
Reel OUT: LBGT Film Festival
Sponsored by the Stonewall Center. FREE
11/18: Brother to Brother, SOM 113,7 PM
11/19: Tying the Knot, Bartlett 65, 7pm
11/20: Four movies starting at 11:30 am in SOM 137
11/21: Five movies from noon-9 pm in SOM 137

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2004

"It is hard enough to remember my opinions, without also remembering my reasons for them."
-Friedrich Nietzsche

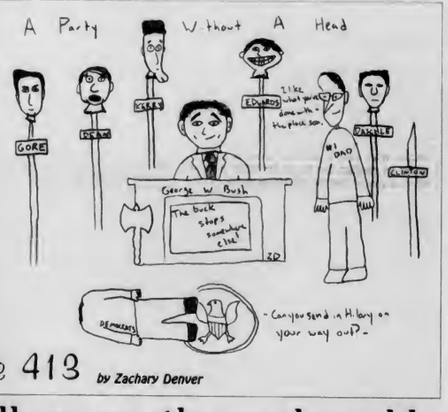
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Vice chancellor's silence is dangerous

Given the recent disputes over the emails exchanged between former Student Government Association (SGA) Speaker Patrick Higgins and Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano, many sentiments throughout the campus have been surfacing. The campus responses to the emails alleging that the director of the Office of African, Latino, Asian and Native American (ALANA) Affairs, Nelson Acosta, has not accurately followed his job description and the overall questioning of Graduate Assistant Gladys Franco's role succeeding him have been reminiscent of recent student uprisings among the SGA and ALANA.

However, in the midst of everything, Gargano has yet to comment to the public on the situation, particularly when he has come under direct fire from many students. While his motives for staying silent are understandable, it is not appropriate for the Vice Chancellor to continue remaining so days after repeated accusations were made and being addressed by campus organizations.

A campus group, Take Back UMass, met recently to call for Gargano's resignation. Following the ongoing tensions between the SGA and ALANA, it is no surprise that this organization has been making these proclamations. However, for Gargano not to respond to the attacks made on his very job, demonstrate the obvious trepidation that he has in dealing with the current unrest and addressing the student body.



Throughout the rest of the year, Gargano has been very vocal in expressing his views of previous situations. During the "KKK-Nine" scandal, Gargano made himself readily available to the press and students during a very difficult time for the university as a whole. He addressed questions and spoke to the press frequently.

While the Red Sox were playing in the ALCS and the World Series, Gargano went on record commenting on the riotous situations in the Southwest residential area almost immediately after they occurred. He has always been present and willing to speak to the press and the student body whenever issues of student affairs have taken the spotlight.

Currently, the ALANA Caucus is filing a Freedom of Information request to verify the legitimacy of the emails. Until the result is announced, this would be a most opportune time for Gargano to come out from being idle and comment on the situation at hand. Gargano holds the office of Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life. The present debacle obviously affects student affairs and campus life and, therefore, warrants direct comments from administrative officials such as he, especially when members of the student body are requesting that actions be taken.

For Gargano to continue to sit silent after repeated attempts for contact have been made and keep the student body on hold, he is sending a direct message to the University about his intentions regarding the students' desires.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The 413 by Zachary Denver

College vs. the real world

Can you believe that I've been at UMass Amherst for nearly four years and I still don't know what I want to do with my life? Here I am on the verge of graduating and I don't have any career plans. How pathetic! It seems like everybody and their mother knows what beeline direction their lives are going to take except for me. Am I the only one who's experiencing this?

Lisa McLaughlin

I came to UMass undeclared. I took introductory classes in theater, English and psychology, thinking that would help me to decide. Afterwards, I still had no idea what I liked best, and couldn't waste much more time dwelling in indecision. So I tried to do all three — a double major in theater and English with a minor in psychology. The ridiculous amount of gen-eds added to required classes would compress my time leaving it impossible to pursue this in less than five years. I eventually dropped the theater major to become the cliché, clove-smoking, black coffee-drinking English major loitering outside of Bartlett. I fit in; I found my niche, but what now?

Many people believe that there isn't that much to do career-wise with an English degree. Whenever I tell outsiders that I'm an English major, they all ask me the same question, phrased in these exact words: "Oh, so you're going to be an English teacher?" No, as a matter of fact, I'm not. Their faces look confused. The next question is inevitably: "So ... what are you going to do?" What else is there to do with an English degree? I've considered this; I could become a writer or an editor for a magazine, work for a publishing company, become a starving artist and write creatively or walk the streets begging for spare change while quoting Shakespeare (one could probably get more change by doing that).

To be honest with you, I have become discouraged with the promises of my post-secondary education. Several of my friends who have graduated are either unemployed or hold jobs that have nothing to do with their degrees. While they hold out for "real jobs" they're stuck working at places like Toys R' Us, Barnes and Noble, Target and Walgreens. Many have advised me, "Don't graduate! Stay in school as long as you can! The real world is not all it's cracked up to be!" And they're right.

Many have advised me, "Don't graduate! Stay in school as long as you can! The real world is not all it's cracked up to be!" And they're right.

The job market is terrible. The booming office parks of the Clinton-era are now half-empty with "For Lease" signs draped over the side. I see people getting laid off left and right because companies have to cut back due to budget cuts.

Out of my family of five, only one person has a full-time job currently. It is a similar situation with many of my friends and their families. Some of them live in the constant fear of not having any health insurance. Were someone in their family to be diagnosed with a fatal disease, they would either have to suffer and die without professional healthcare or be burdened with an insurmountable debt hanging over their heads.

My good friend who graduated from UMass last year with a double degree in French and English and a specialization in Professional Writing now works as a tax claims representative. After going from interview to interview and picking up temporary odd jobs in professional writing, she finally threw in the towel and decided that she preferred financial security and health insurance over making use of her specialized skills. I don't blame her; I would have done the same thing.

I constantly ask myself these questions: Where's the need for a poor liberal arts junkie like me? How far will my literary analysis skills get me outside of UMass Amherst? What purpose is there in comparing and contrasting the poetry of Ezra Pound verses Walt Whitman? What exactly am I accomplishing here? Perhaps only one thing: becoming increasingly disillusioned with my education and how it won't contribute to solving the problems of the real world.

Lisa McLaughlin is a Collegian columnist.

A college that isn't fun

Do you like Guns 'N Roses? They've always been one of my favorite bands. The only way I can describe many of their songs is taking all of the elements of hard rock in their purest, natural form and then distilling them five times. It's so pure and intense it's ridiculous. Take the song "Civil War" for example. It starts with a famous quote from the film "Cool Hand Luke" (great movie, Paul Newman is the man) and then segways neatly into the intro of the song itself, complete with Axl's trademark whistle. But the best thing about the song is the lyrics. To a certain degree, they seem almost prophetic. In particular one line seems especially relevant given the state of affairs today: "You can't trust freedom when it's not in your hands, when everybody's fighting for the promised land."

Colin Jones

Freedom is not in our hands and the truth is that it never has been. Anyone who went to high school history class knows that the founding fathers set up the Electoral College as a protective mechanism. It was instituted to keep us (the voters) from having too much direct control.

These great men knew the unfortunate truth that people are easily swayed, and many people who would be voting would be ignorant, uninformed or both. In accordance with this, they set up a system in which the general public is capable of exerting an amount of control by casting their votes, but they also implemented a means of keeping that control in check.

This type of political structure, called a representative democracy, has positive and negative components like everything else. Ultimately, it was intended to allow for a balance that is much needed. Ideally, voters would express their views politically by casting their vote, but those votes go through a screening process roughly analogous to having a well-intentioned friend or professor proofread your mid-term paper. You get to say what you want, but if you're out of line or your support for your ideas is rambling and flimsy, they can make sure you get the best grade possible. The Electoral College is supposed to stop the voting public from being its own worst enemy.

Interestingly enough however, the clearest criticism of the system's organization is that it leads to a kind of defeatism predicated on the idea that in spite of our great technological advancements in terms of communication, the average voter can't be trusted to make an informed decision. Case in point: hundreds of millions of dollars were spent by both Kerry and Bush on their campaigns for this past election. But they were highly judicious where they spent it. Specifically, most of the money is spent in the swing states like Florida and Ohio.

The Electoral College was instituted to prevent uninformed voters from having too much control, and now it works to prevent voters from becoming informed.

Logically, the purpose of any campaign is to inform the public of a candidate's political sentiments and their views on issues that are considered important. What ends up happening is that in swing states, voters who are receptive to political matters get to be very informed on how each candidate posits their respective platforms. And what about states that are considered "safe Republican" or "safe Democrat"? They get left out of the loop to a certain degree.

Although there will certainly be a few political ads on television and radio for both candidates, they won't be at all informative. There is no need for them to be. The Electoral College was instituted to prevent uninformed voters from having too much control, and now it works to prevent voters from becoming informed.

Everyone in Massachusetts knows that this state will go Democrat. Indeed, many people use this as a justification for not voting. They feel that the decision has already been made for them, and in a certain sense, it has. After all, what's the point of taking time out of your busy day to go through the hassle of casting your vote knowing that unless you live in a "swing state", for all practical intents and purposes, it is meaningless?

The fact of the matter is the decision has been made for this past election, and while I think the word "mandate" is a little strong, we now have another four years with a president that I don't hate as a man but can't respect as a politician. Life will go on, for better or worse. Unfortunately, for many Iraqis and American soldiers alike, it will be worse.

As a nation, we will continue to funnel tax dollars into an effort that most of us never wanted and those among us who did want it thought it was for something it never was. The sad fact is that in that particular area of the world, killing and death are part of everyday life.

The stories we hear of violence and bloodshed are shocking news to us, but nothing new to them. Instead of forcing them to accept the American way of life and institute a democracy, maybe we should become more appreciative of the opportunities we have and the way we get to live. Personally, on all matters military, I agree with Axl: "My hands are tied; the billions shift from side to side and the wars go on with brainwashed pride, for the love of God and human rights."

Colin Jones is a Collegian columnist.

Striving to keep hope alive

How many times in life has someone said to you, "Don't get your hopes up?" Variations are plenty and everyone has been told at some point in time to not get their hopes up, to settle down, to just enjoy what you have or to continue in your current path, unresolved. Whether it's been a parent, a teacher, a friend, or maybe that voice inside you, someone somewhere undoubtedly has told you, "Don't get your hopes up." Well, I'm going to tell you to keep your hopes up.

Micheal Anmuth

I'm going to tell you to keep reaching. I'm going to say to you that despite the fact that I'm not an eternal optimist does not mean that you shouldn't keep working towards what you want to get accomplished, what you want to see finished, what you want to achieve at the end of each day. You will face adversity; you will find roadblocks and challenges and you will not win all of the time. Just because you won't win does not mean that you shouldn't try. You should not give up that easily on things, especially things that are within your reach, or even slightly out of your reach.

I say to you that not every decision is mission critical, and not every situation is a revolution waiting to happen. I propose a different level of thinking, that one can apply keeping hope alive to every day life.

I'm not trying to disrupt the status quo, or to tell you that everything is able to be completed perfectly. I'm not trying to go against years of people telling you to not get your hopes up, or argue that they may have been correct in some situations. What I am trying to disrupt is the notion that once something happens, you have to remove all hope from the scene. Some of the most revolutionary people in history, such as Gandhi and Martin Luther King did not lose faith in the fact that they could change situations through peaceful means; they did not give up hope and they accomplished great things which affected many people, even to this day.

I say to you that not every decision is mission critical, and not every situation is a revolution waiting to happen. I propose a different level of thinking, that one can apply keeping hope alive in every day life. I don't plan on being the next Che Guevara and being a revolutionary, I just want to be able to keep my fingers crossed that my next car repair won't cost more than the car itself, or that my lackluster studying techniques keep my GPA afloat until next term. The hope I internalize for every situation is the selfsame hope that I'm telling you to apply to your life, the same hope that people have told you not to keep up.

One of the more popular phrases that is often written in high school year books from parents to their soon-to-be college student children is, "Aim high for the moon and even if you miss, you'll end up among the stars." While it may be cliché, the phrase is highly applicable to what I'm telling you. Keep hope alive, keep reaching, keep sauntering towards your goals, and even if you don't achieve them, you are better off for working towards them than just accepting the fact that you did not get there.

If you're riled up to accomplish a goal then I've done my job, if you're still wondering how I can wax on about hope for so long, then you should meet hope's best friend, dreams. Often as we lose hope for things, we lose dreams along the way. How many people can raise their hands and say that they have had a dream but no longer pursue it? I know I certainly can, and while my dreams may have been a tad far-fetched, like the one where I dress in a chicken suit and wander the streets of Boston promoting — you guessed it — a chicken restaurant, we often have dreams that we never live out because we lose sight of them and we lose hope that they may be achieved.

You're right; I am promoting thinking bigger than someone normally would. If your dream involves a clean world, start at a grassroots environmental level and keep the hope alive. If your dream involves meeting 8 million new people, get out there and start shaking hands. I will not tell you that everything is achievable, or that everything is worth hope at the same level or even that everything should be achieved. What I am telling you is that you should keep hope alive, for your dreams, for others' dreams and for the greater good of the world.

Michael Anmuth is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

A feminist outlook reexamnined

It's a summer afternoon in 1994. I'm in my kitchen with my friends Michael and Jillian. I just got out of the army. Michael just got out of the closet and Jillian just got a new job as a stripper on Washington St.

Amelia Sabadini

"We're definitely stripping, it's not like dancing, or it is, but it's still too different to have the same name," she tells us. Jill and I have decades of dance lessons between us. "It's not like anything else I've ever done. It's incredible I can't even begin to tell you." She's bouncing on the balls of her feet, surging with exuberance, when suddenly she stops, draws her shoulders in and starts biting her lip. "Be honest with me OK?" she implores as she looks at us and we nod. "Do you think what I'm doing is wrong?" Cautiously I ask, "Do you feel like something's wrong?"

I already know where she's going. Jill and I have always considered ourselves to be feminists, and yet the only branch of feminism we've actually been exposed to asserts that things like stripping propagate sexism. "I wanna do this but part of me feels like I'm betraying women somehow." Jill says. "Why?" Michael asks her. She answers quietly, "Because it's kinda like I'm selling myself."

Michael drops his comb, stations his hands defensively on his hips and snaps "Jill who owns you?" Jill sounds perplexed when she answers "I do. Why?" "Who owns your body?" "Me. What's this got to do with it Michael?" "You own your body so you have the right to do what you want with it Jill. You're not selling look time at any woman's body but your own. You're not betraying anyone or selling what's not yours. Your body is your possession, your resource and when you make money with it you're exercising your rights over it. How does that go against feminism?"

Jill and I were in shock. The logic of everything he'd said was clear as a bell and it had been ringing all along, but we hadn't heard it. How could we have though? It's not like many people actually listen to this logic, if anything most people, whether they mean to or not, seem to be involved in drowning it out.

Consider that we live in a culture where everything about a woman's appearance is so often subject to everyone's opinion and approval. Yes, people do discuss how men look too, but the crucial difference is that if a man doesn't look right (however that standard may be defined) it's not usually seen as an indication of any deeper character flaws. If a woman doesn't look right, in particular if she looks "slutty," then she is frequently regarded with contempt. "She has no self respect", "She makes us all look bad," "She doesn't even appreciate the equality she has."

These are some of the things that certain types of feminists will say. The provocatively dressed woman is spoken of as though she has mismanaged a public building or a piece of communal property and should consequently loose her stewardship of it. Yet that property is unquestionably hers, it is her body. The suggestion that she should lose charge of it manifests in the "asking for it" mentality and can be heard in comments like, "She's gonna get grabbed dressed like that", or, "That kind of behavior and those kinds of clothes encourage sexual assault."

What's considered comfortable attire varies from person to person. It is a matter of personal freedom. It is subjective and ever changing and as such should have no bearing on what's considered appropriate treatment of another human being.

By way of comparison, when was the last time anyone said that a bakery was asking to get robbed because there were a bunch of cookies sitting in the front display window? If this hypothetical bakery was robbed, could you ever imagine the defense claiming that their client should be acquitted on the grounds that he was motivated by a biological imperative to smash the window and take the cookies? No way, not unless the defendant was, in fact, the cookie monster, right?

This would be absurd. So isn't it absurd too that there are people pushing the notion that any woman who displays her proverbial cookies is inviting and/or deserving of an assault?

Words like "ho" and "slut" are weapons of character assassination. These words mark women as targets for denigration and abuse. These words can be applied to any woman on the mere grounds of suspicion. Who said the witch hunts were over? What should it matter if a woman is wearing a mini-skirt, or out of her burqua, or walking around in her underwear? What's considered comfortable attire varies from person to person. It is a matter of personal freedom. It is subjective and ever changing and as such should have no bearing on what's considered appropriate treatment of another human being. The concept of humane treatment for all people (regardless of how they appear) should be as steadfast as the very ground beneath our feet. If not then our civilization's foundation is capricious, hollow and certain to collapse into a morass of barbarity.

So long as the good girl/bad girl dichotomy exists then the personal safety and freedoms of all women are in constant peril. When you point your finger at a woman and call her a "ho" you're complying with the idea that no woman has legitimate dominion over her own body.

You're feeding the beast of misogynistic oppression, making it stronger and merely forestalling the day when it will come for you. So please, I implore you, let it starve. Let women dress and conduct themselves as they wish. Let each person be the sovereign of their own God-given body. And don't knock strippers, Jill and I are as close as you can get.

Amelia Sabadini is a Collegian columnist.

Playing the blaming game of gay marriage during elections

Here is a simple truth: John Kerry was not meant to be President. Although I supported him last Tuesday, that piece of truth was the thought running through my head as I watched the Midwest turn red on the television news graphics.

Thomas Naughton

Sadly, we live in a nation wherein we must choose between two men whom no one particularly likes to be our president. Here's another bit of truth: There was no decisive vote for lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgendered people to cast. Whom should we have voted for, George W. Bush who hates gays or John Kerry who hates gays? Or should we have just thrown away our vote on Ralph Nader, the anti-Semite? No, the obvious choice was Sen-ator Kerry, who clearly hates gays less than the president.

Some may argue, "John Kerry doesn't hate gays, he's for civil unions!" Oh, I am so impressed by that, you have no idea. I can sleep knowing that Senator Kerry thinks I am human enough to be "civilly united" to someone. John Kerry being "for civil unions" is indicative of the Democratic Party's feelings toward and dealing with gays; they pet us on the head, hold some civil rights in front of our face so we'll do the right tricks (like vote for them), and then throw us back into the pen when they are finished so we don't give them fleas, ticks or lice.

I'm sure that some people voted for Bush because they hate gays, but to suggest that the idea of gays being married crippled John Kerry's candidacy is reckless and such a disheartening betrayal.

Civil unions are homophobic and so is any politician who supports such an idea. If we are going to have two types of lawful unities, then we may as well start installing "Queers Only" bathrooms and water fountains; just paint them pink so we know which is which. Supporting civil unions is supporting second-class citizenship and I would have way more respect for conservatives and democrats alike if they would just come out and say it.

Shame on Barney Frank, a gay democrat, for suggesting that "gay marriage lost the election for John Kerry." John Kerry lost the race for John Kerry. I didn't want to vote for him. Trust me, if there was a bowel movement running under the democratic ticket with a good platform and significant backing I would have happily voted for it instead of Kerry.

Especially since the bowel movement would probably not have a crazy wife and would have had the ability to make a simple decision in lieu of talking about "global tests" or "lock-boxes" or whatever new jargon the democrats have invented. The democrats have been gutless wonders since the crumbling of the World Trade Center towers and that's one of many reasons why Senator Kerry lost the election.

Are gays and lesbians to feel apologetic to the democrats because we were granted our human rights in Massachusetts? Should the married gays and lesbians of Massachusetts annul their marriages because their nuptials angered Maude and Cletus? That is a disgusting idea and its homosexuals and politicians like Barney Frank who disgust me. Frank portrays himself as the champion of "getting the gay vote out", yet he shows himself to be a true self-hating homosexual who's insipid remarks have done horrible damage to the gay rights movement. He and Condoleeza Rice should just move in together and compound their efforts as living oxymorons. He can tag along with Condi and Ann Coulter when they go to the mall and give them fashion advice — the clear and singular function of a gay man.

There is no way that gay marriage was the singular sticking point for the Maudes and Cletuses of Middle America. Both candidates had the same leanings on gay marriage; they both favored creating an institution outside of traditional marriage for gays because they are not as human as heterosexuals. Obviously the War On The Nation That Didn't Fly Planes Into Our Buildings (or War On "Terror"— you say tomato, etc.) had something to do with it.

Let us also consider that some of the 10 states that passed the proposition to define marriage as a union between a man and a woman, also put forth many first time openly gay leaders, including Supreme Court justices. I'm sure that some people voted for Bush because they hate gays, but to suggest that the idea of gays being married crippled John Kerry's candidacy is reckless and such a disheartening betrayal.

As long as we're blaming people, I would like to blame the Democratic National Committee for Bush's victory. They nominated a bland candidate who needed to read the newspaper from the preceding day to remember what platform he was running on. I also wouldn't mind blaming Dan Rather who helped to rush people believing the liberal media-myth to the polls after he reported false information on Bush. Finally, I guess the person I should be blaming is John Kerry because after all, it was up to him and now we are headed for even more dangerous territory with George W. Bush as our leader.

Information from msn.com, The Sunday Republican, and The Advocate was used for the writing of this column.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'COMMISSION ON DIVERSITY' FLAWED

On Oct. 15, the university administration announced the formation of a "Commission on Diversity and Social Justice." This commission is meant to tackle issues relating to diversity and to make a set of policy recommendations to better serve underrepresented students on campus. While at face value the formation of the commission may seem like a much-needed acknowledgement that racial tensions permeate our University, the design, mandate and constituency of this commission speak to other objectives.

Through hard work, and often in an extremely hostile environment, over the last 30 years, student activists on this campus have created institutions to advocate for and support underrepresented students at UMass (some examples are the Office of Alana Affairs, The Everywoman's Center, UALRC, BCP). When fully funded and supported by the administration, these programs and services have been shown to greatly improve the experience of their target students.

Unfortunately, the current university administration has limited much of the institutional support for these programs. In some cases, the University has reduced funding, while in other cases (particularly with regard to the Office of Alana Affairs) the administration has interfered with the program's ability to use the resources that it already has. It is in this context that the Commission on Diversity was established.

This commission is meant to restructure the support network that many students at UMass have come to rely on. The commission was established without the knowledge or consent of individuals (students, faculty and administrators) who have been steeped in issues of diversity on campus for many years.

It has already become apparent that the administration plans on using the commission as an excuse for inaction. When asked to authorize the search committee for an assistant director for the Office of Alana Affairs (a position paid for with money that originates from the Student Government Association), the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs said that he wanted to wait for the commission's recommendations. However, a report from this commission is not expected any time soon.

This commission has one goal only, and that is to disempower students from taking control of their university. By composing the commission of "savvy outside experts" the administration has cut off the last vestige of student power: the ability to petition the administration.

The administration claims that it will approach any recommendations made by the commission with an "open mind," and that it will adopt them as policy. Even though students had no voice in choosing the members of the commission, they have requested that students do the same. In this context, how can the administration expect us to automatically accept what they say?

Yes, we have problems at UMass, but the way to go about solving them is not by disenfranchising those for whom the university exists in the first place — the students.

Barak Sered
Take Back UMass
Public Relations Committee Chair

COMPROMISE NEEDED WITH CULTURAL CENTER

For the past month or so — I cannot be the judge for Columbus Day weekend due to my absence — I have had at least one long night every weekend. This, however, is not by choice. The reason for my late nights has been the events at the Malcolm X Cultural Center. Living in Cance, specifically on the side directly facing the Cultural Center, I am subject to the excessive noise levels of the music being played and the noisy people who are attending the events there.

I understand that there is a need for diversity on campus, and that having dance parties or whatever they may be called is a good way to provide a fun, safe environment for students to socialize and enjoy themselves on the weekend. This, however, should not overshadow the fact that it is disruptive to the students who reside in the surrounding residence halls. I know for a fact that I am not alone in being displeased with the activity schedule for the Malcolm X Center, as I have talked with friends and others who live nearby who have come to the same conclusions that I have.

My roommate went so far as to call campus police looking for some kind of peace, but was told that there was nothing that they could do. He also spoke with Vice Chancellor Gargano on the matter, who showed an interest in the matter, but nothing has yet been done. The disruption of the peace of other students who reside in this area of Southwest should be taken into account.

This is not to say that there should not be such events held. A compromise, however, should most definitely be reached that will appease both the residents surrounding the Center and the people who sponsor, run and attend the events. I wholeheartedly encourage events on campus that bring people together to enjoy themselves. I also encourage a good night's sleep and one's sleeping patterns to be determined personally, not by a DJ. It is ridiculous to think that I can't relax after a long week of classes, studying and writing papers and settle down before 4 a.m. When there are two nights in a row of these events, it is quite taxing when there are things I need to accomplish during the day besides napping, and I'm sure this goes for many other people facing the same issue.

In short, there must be some sort of compromise. Students need somewhere to enjoy themselves and have a good time, but they need rest as well. There is no reason to be keeping surrounding residents up all hours of the night with loud music once or twice a weekend. There is also no reason to stop these events completely. Is a compromise so outrageous? For the sake sleep, sanity, and that of other residents, I hope not.

Jason Connolly
UMass Student

PROPOSAL TO DISBAND SGA AND ALANA

It seems like every time I open up the Collegian, I am bombarded with endless amounts of stories regarding the office of African Latino Asian Native American affairs and the Student Government Association. From what I gather, ALANA hates the SGA and the administration. The SGA may or may not hate ALANA. Meanwhile, students know little to nothing about both groups. Most people I know are annoyed that the SGA spends so much time arguing with itself that it could win an award for "least efficient organization in the history of the world".

Also, they don't seem to know who the members of the SGA are that supposedly represent them. Concurrently, they feel that ALANA is an organization that labels one a racist simply for disagreeing with some of their policies. Furthermore, they don't seem to understand why there is constantly so much turmoil regarding both groups.

Most students can't identify the functions of either of these organizations. This is in part due to the fact that it seems like all both bodies do, is harass one another. The only thing I can think of that the SGA does is dole out money to RSOs. I assume ALANA's purpose is to represent minorities and fight for equality and diversity on campus, but creating what some have dubbed a brand of "UMass racism" where the majority (Non-ALANA students) feel it can not dissent to the minority (ALANA) without fear of being labeled racist, prejudiced or discriminatory is neither helping their cause nor the campus.

Therefore, I think I have arrived at a solution that will please everybody: Get rid of the SGA and the Office of ALANA Affairs. If most students don't know what either organization does, few students would miss them. If the SGA exists to dole out money to the RSOs, why not delegate that task to an administrative body that deals with the entire UMass budget? I know that I don't feel represented by people who argue over the legitimacy of elections, seats and voting. I also don't feel represented by individuals who get drunk in an office set up to educate and advocate for students. I would imagine many other members of the student body would agree with me. As far as ALANA is concerned, if the SGA was disbanded, they would no longer have someone to constantly fight with. Therefore they may as well dissolve (think of no longer needing NATO once the Soviet Union collapsed in 1989).

In all seriousness though, it appears as though it would be more effective if both organizations were completely obliterated and then reconstructed from scratch. Each organization could have new institutions, by-laws, mission statements, leaders and most importantly, a clean slate with the UMass community and each other.

Marisa Kanof
UMass student

Write for EdOp.

[illegible]@[illegible]

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

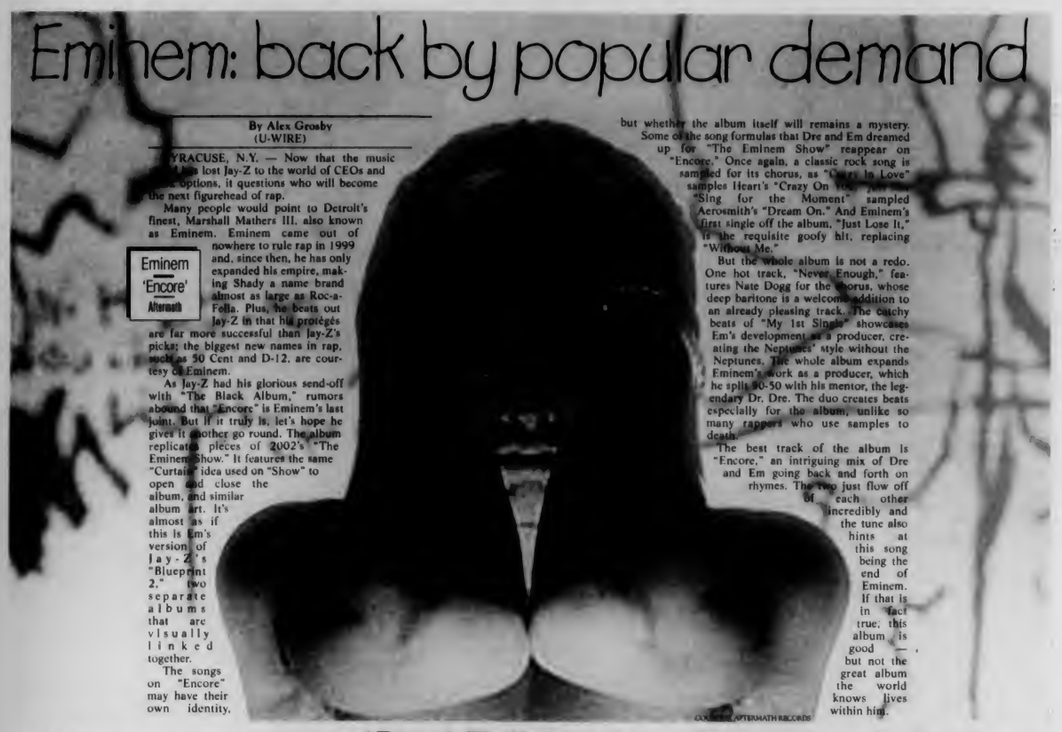
ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Eminem: back by popular demand

By Alex Grosby
(U-WIRE)

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — Now that the music world has lost Jay-Z to the world of CEOs and retirement options, it questions who will become the next figurehead of rap.



Many people would point to Detroit's finest, Marshall Mathers III, also known as Eminem. Eminem came out of nowhere to rule rap in 1999 and, since then, he has only expanded his empire, making Shady a name brand almost as large as Roc-a-Fella. Plus, he beats out Jay-Z in that his protégés are far more successful than Jay-Z's picks; the biggest new names in rap, such as 50 Cent and D-12, are courtesy of Eminem.

As Jay-Z had his glorious send-off with "The Black Album," rumors abound that "Encore" is Eminem's last joint. But if it truly is, let's hope he gives it another go round. The album replicates pieces of 2002's "The Eminem Show." It features the same "Curtain" idea used on "Show" to open and close the album, and similar album art. It's almost as if this is Em's version of Jay-Z's "Blueprint 2," two separate albums that are visually linked together.

The songs on "Encore" may have their own identity, but whether the album itself will remains a mystery. Some of the song formulas that Dre and Em dreamed up for "The Eminem Show" reappear on "Encore." Once again, a classic rock song is sampled for its chorus, as "Crazy In Love" samples Heart's "Crazy On You," and "Sing for the Moment" sampled Aerosmith's "Dream On." And Eminem's first single off the album, "Just Lose It," is the requisite goofy hit, replacing "Without Me."

But the whole album is not a redo. One hot track, "Never Enough," features Nate Dogg for the chorus, whose deep baritone is a welcome addition to an already pleasing track. The catchy beats of "My 1st Single" showcases Em's development as a producer, creating the Neptunes' style without the Neptunes. The whole album expands Eminem's work as a producer, which he splits 50-50 with his mentor, the legendary Dr. Dre. The duo creates beats especially for the album, unlike so many rappers who use samples to death.

The best track of the album is "Encore," an intriguing mix of Dre and Em going back and forth on rhymes. The two just flow off of each other incredibly and the tune also hints at this song being the end of Eminem. If that is in fact true, this album is good — but not the great album the world knows lives within him.

COURTESY AFTERMATH RECORDS

BMI honors Twain

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Shania Twain's "Forever and For Always" won country song of the year honors Monday from the music-licensing agency BMI.

The song, co-written by Twain and her husband, Robert John "Mutt" Lange, was the most performed country song of the year, based on U.S. broadcasts.

It was Twain's fourth BMI song of the year win. "Forever and For Always" was also named song of the year at the 2004 BMI London awards, and her hit "You're Still the One" received the honor at both the 1999 BMI pop and country awards.

Twain, 39, also was named BMI songwriter of the year at both the 1999 and 2000 pop and country awards and now has 28 BMI awards.

In other awards, Toby Keith collected country songwriter/artist of the year honors for his hits "American Soldier," "Beer for My Horses" and "I Love This Bar."

Keith, who now has 15 BMI awards, also was named songwriter/artist of the year in 2001.

Casey Beathard earned country songwriter of the year. Five of his songs were on the most performed list: "Drinkin' Bone" (recorded by Tracy Byrd), "Hot Mamma" (Trace Adkins), "The Love Song" (Jeff Bates), "No Shoes, No Shirt, No Problems" (Kenny Chesney) and "Walk a Little Straighter" (Billy Currington).

Loretta Lynn was named BMI Icon for "her enduring influence on generations of music makers."

BMI, which represents more than 300,000 songwriters, composers and music publishers, each year recognizes country music songwriters and publishers of the year.

-Associated Press

'Real Talk':not so Fabolous follow-up

By ALEX GROSBY
U-WIRE

SYRACUSE, N.Y. — A logical contradiction is a sure sign of invalidity. A set of statements wherein one can easily derive a contradiction is such that those statements are wholly inconsistent, and devoid of cohesiveness with one another, these statements can never combine to form something greater.

COURTESY DESERT STORM

Rapper Fabolous fails to deliver on "Real Talk"

This problem is entirely pervasive in modern rap music, as rap stars desperately attempt to convey disparate facades ranging from a tough, street-raised alpha male to sensitive, introspective ladies' man. Unfortunately, the reality is that the differing idiosyncrasies of these discrepant personas are often quite unable to be reconciled. The listener, left with a conflicting portrait of the performer, is often left no recourse but to doubt the artist's sincerity.

Case in point: Fabolous' latest offering, "Real Talk." The fundamental irony inherent to titling the album as such is that Fabolous straddles such a diverse array of archetypal rap personalities, the possibility of "Real Talk's" actual realness is almost entirely nonexistent.

The first four tracks depict Fabolous as a gun toting, machismo, uber-gangster. The following tracks are Fabolous' attempt to charm his way into the pants of his female listeners. Immediately after, listeners are introduced to Fabolous as a sensitive, world-weary thug, followed by the artist endlessly espousing materialist rhetoric, focusing on the size of his bank account and untouchable MC abilities.

If you grew bored simply reading my recount of the album, imagine listening to it in its entire staggering 74-minute runtime. Thus is the other problem with "Real Talk": the album drags on for well over an hour without saying much of anything.

While there is certainly nothing wrong with an artist taking on a foreign perspective for a song, the level of inconsistency on "Real Talk" is simply astounding. The album's title track contains Fabolous' dismissal of so-called "studio gangstas;" however, the following track is titled "Gangsta" without even the slightest hint of irony.

Also, Fabolous' obligatory love song attempts poetic sincerity, but contains the line "this is how I'm gonna do you, mama." This unfortunately misogynistic lyric completely topples any notion of Fabolous' attempted sensitivity, and brings further into doubt any notion of Fabolous' artistic sincerity and integrity. "Baby" simply comes off as a vulgar aping of Common's sublime love song "The Light." Additionally, the ending of "Baby" is overextended to the point of agony, a fault that extends itself to the album as a whole. Given its exacerbating length and tired lyrical content, "Real Talk" is more viable as a coaster than an album..

The Tropicana: historic Cuban nightclub still attracts tourists

By Vanessa Arrington
Associated Press

HAVANA — Oozing sex appeal, Cuban women picked for their beauty and stature slink across the stage in elaborate headdresses and little else.

Singers, acrobats and dancers perform, too, but the showgirls are the main attraction of the revue that has lured hundreds of tourists nightly to the storied Tropicana nightclub for nearly a decade — indeed, flesh has been the biggest draw throughout the outdoor cabaret's history.

"People associate the Tropicana with showgirls," says the nightclub's spokesman, Juan Carlos Aguilar.

COURTESY CNN.COM

"The Tropicana" has been a tourist attraction for decades.

Yet the Tropicana is closing the racy show that has entertained foreigners since the communist government began courting tourists in the 1990s.

It will be replaced with "Tambores en Concierto" — "Drums in Concert" — a spectacle that, while retaining the spirit of Cuban sensuality, will drop some of the more blatant skin baring.

"It's time to make some changes," says Tomas Morales, a dancer, choreographer and director who created the show that takes the stage in April.

His show will keep a live ensemble of Cuban musicians on one part of the multitiered stage, along with acrobats and some showgirls. And the royal palm, bamboo and fruit trees that canopy the stage still will provide "a breath of exoticism," says Aguilar, the club spokesman.

But the similarities end there. The new show will be more theatrical, with increased emphasis on stage sets and technology, Morales says. The story revolves around a male dancer who emerges from a drum to become "the drum's ghost," and then guides the audience through different music and dance acts, "taking you to the roots of Cuba," he says.

Reinvention is not new to the Tropicana.

In the 1940s and '50s, American tourists frequented the club, which was known for its casinos, all-night partying and visiting international stars like Liberace, Nat King Cole and Carmen Miranda. The Tropicana chartered planes, with dancers and musicians aboard, to fly in tourists from Miami.

Chevrolets were raffled off on stage. Spectacular revues changed every two months and included circus acts, voodoo-inspired shows, even live cockfights.

But Fidel Castro's 1959 revolution squelched the revelry. The casinos disappeared, as did the American mobsters who had a stake in them. A drop in the money coming in meant less extravagant shows and fewer performers from abroad.

Then in 1968, the government shut the Tropicana and all other Cuban cabarets.

"It wasn't clear whether (the cabaret) should continue as a product within the life we were leading after the revolution, or if it was an element too tied to the decadence of a class that no longer dominated the country. Eventually the idea that it was a cultural product won out," Aguilar says.

Late-night performances lasted until dawn.

"We Cubans like to party all night," says Fernando Valdes, who joined the dance company in 1974 and now directs the Tropicana's school for cabaret performers.

By the 1980s, tourists began trickling back to Cuba and, after the Berlin Wall fell in 1989, the government embraced tourism as a way to bring in revenue lost when aid from the Soviet bloc dried up.

The Tropicana also went on the road, traveling in 1988 to perform on New York's Broadway and at the United Nations headquarters on its first trip to the United States since the revolution. It has also played in Monaco, London and Toronto.

Every night, 300 to 600 guests — mostly foreigners — fill the Tropicana, where waiters in black tie serve food and drinks under the stars.

"You can tell there are Cubans because they're the ones who get up and dance after the show's over," he adds.

Many visitors believe a Cuba trip isn't complete without experiencing the Tropicana.

"It would be like going to Paris and not going to the Moulin Rouge," says Juan Antonio Merino Ayllon, a 53-year-old businessman from Malaga, Spain. "You've just got to do it."

COURTESY CUBANSOUL.COM

A performer at the famous Havana nightclub "The Tropicana" poses in her costume.

'After the Sunset' lowlight of director Brett Ratner's career

By David Germain
Associated Press

With his post-James Bond track record, maybe Pierce Brosnan should not be so quick to say goodbye to the super spy.

Brosnan, who has said he will not return for a fifth Bond flick, has delivered back-to-back duds this year with the romantic comedy "Laws of Attraction" and now the heist caper "After the Sunset."

Like "Laws of Attraction," "After the Sunset" is not exactly a bad movie, just dull and droopy; its nebulous title appropriate for a movie that never quite defines itself as larcenous lark or shady thriller.

The wolf-and-sheepdog camaraderie between crook (Brosnan) and cop (Woody Harrelson) certainly is different, though not very believable or entertaining, especially given Harrelson's over-the-top performance.

Brosnan, meanwhile, seems a bit bored by the whole thing. That's fine early on, considering his character is a retired diamond thief who misses the action. Yet he remains wearily aloof even after he's back on the job for one more score.

Director Brett Ratner had great commercial success with the mismatched-buddy comedy "Rush Hour" and its sequel, but he falls short with a less manic, more grown-up approach to the genre here. One of the movie's main assets — and it's a decent one — is its lingering shots of co-star Salma Hayek's amazing curves and cleavage.

Brosnan and Hayek are Max and Lola, a thieving couple living the good life on a tropical island seven years after their farewell score, a priceless diamond literally lifted out of the hands of FBI agent Stan Lloyd (Harrelson).

Disgraced and obsessed, Stan turns up at Max's place convinced his nemesis is plotting to steal a companion diamond that just happens to be making a port call at the island during a cruise-ship tour.

Max insists to both Lola — who wants her man to stay retired — and Stan that he has no interest in swiping the jewel, though he clearly has the itch.

What follows is not so much a cat-and-mouse game as a strange-bedfellows farce, with Max and Stan fishing together, drinking together, slathering each other with sunblock — all the usual kinship rituals between good guy and bad guy.

'After the sunset'
Directed by Brett Ratner
Starring Pierce Brosnan Salma Hayek
New Line cinema
Rated PG-13
97 mins.
Grade C+

The screenplay by Paul Zbyszewski and Craig Rosenberg tosses in some mild twists and turns, nothing that an experienced movie buff won't see coming.

The writers aim for "Get Shorty" like banter, but what passes for clever idiosyncrasy is Max barking, "State your business" when he answers the phone or Stan dividing people into idlers who like to watch sunsets and doers who don't have time.

"After the Sunset" thoroughly squanders Don Cheadle's talent in a small role as a menacing gangster horning in on the action while babbling about free-love philosophy in the music of the Mamas and the Papas.

Also wasted is Naomie Harris, who was riveting in the zombie tale "28 Days Later," here playing an Island cop implausibly, drawn in as Stan's professional and romantic partner.

The filmmakers make reference to one of Hollywood's bonniest jewel-heist adventures, Alfred Hitchcock's "To Catch a Thief," perhaps hoping the mere mention will rub off some of that film's luster.

It only serves to remind viewers how dusky and dreary "After the Sunset" is by comparison.

COURTESY NEW LINE CINEMA

"After the Sunset" has not compared to Ratner's previous block busters such as "Rush Hour"

COURTESY NEW LINE CINEMA

Academy award nominee Don Cheadle co-starts in "After the Sunset", from New Line Cinema.

COURTESY NEW LINE CINEMA

Pierce Brosnan plays a thief in the thriller directed by Brett Ratner. The film comes out this friday.

'Strangers in Paradise' aids in evolution of graphic novel

By Bernie Nguyen
U-WIRE

ANN ARBOR, Mich. — Over the last few years, the once strictly cult following of the graphic novel has blossomed into a more mainstream popularity. Enter Terry Moore's "Strangers in Paradise," a graphic novel series centered around the lives and loves of two women, Katchoo and Francine, and the difficult struggles they go through as they try to find themselves in a dangerous world.

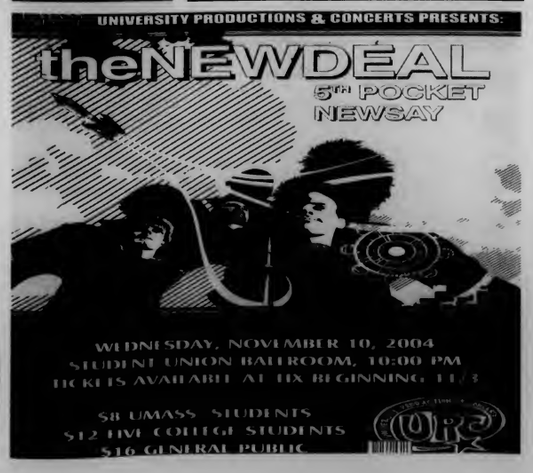
The "Treasury Edition" of "SiP" — as it is affectionately known — is a collection of Moore's series up to the present day. It includes scenes from the first 60 issues in chronological order and a never-published first edition. Moore also ties everything together with running commentary, including his ideas and aspirations for the series. The "Treasury Edition" shows readers the very beginning of "SiP," from Moore's original ideas and how Francine and Katchoo got their start.

"SiP" is beautifully drawn, with a compelling storyline and characters that feel so real that emotions virtually leap off the page. The "Treasury Edition" is both a good place to begin for those unfamiliar with "SiP" and a resource for fans to enrich their knowledge of the series.

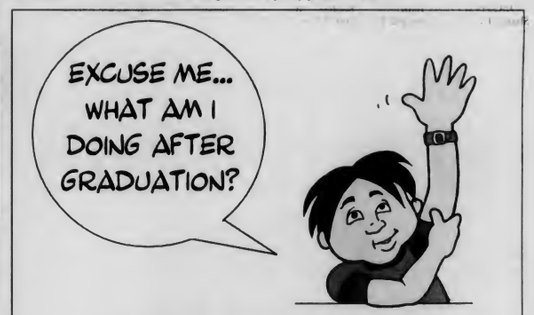
"SiP" is not an average romantic comedy. Its main characters, Katchoo and Francine, are as different as night and day, but are very close. Katchoo makes no secret that she has feelings for Francine, a lovable neurotic who struggles with her weight and dreams of the perfect man.

Francine loves Katchoo despite the volatility and rebelliousness of her nature, though she is uncomfortable with the fact that Katchoo is romantically interested in her. The third character in this mess is David, a young man uncomfortably in love with Katchoo. This triangle is complicated even further when it is revealed that Katchoo has a dark past, one that has followed her and endangers both her life and Francine's.

The "Treasury Edition" does an excellent job of teasing the slight nuances of the comic and turning them into strong ideas.



The history behind "SiP" and the perspective of the author make the "Treasury Edition" something that most fans will greatly enjoy, especially since it discusses and explains the origins of the series and addresses its possible future.



Moore's created "SiP" after bad experiences developing comic strips. His title was adapted from the Tony Bennett song "Stranger in Paradise." Moore writes of the title, "It's not your typical comic book title, but it fit the theme of my story: people stumbling through relationships like awkward guests in a pretty place."

His commentary throughout the "Treasury Edition" is intimate and comfortable, allowing the reader to see both into his mind and into his series. This book is a strong addition to his already popular series — a glimpse into the creative psyche of Moore as not only an artist and a writer, but as a person.

www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

If you're on the hunt for a job,
it's easy to upload your resume and search job postings!

To get a Career Services account just call 545-2224
(or email ccnhelp@acad.umass.edu) with your full name, SPIRE #, major and graduation year.

We'll give you a username and password and instructions on how to use our system.

Once you have your log-on information, go to www.umass.edu/careers

CareerServices
511 Goodell Building
phone: 413-545-2224

Freshmen shining early on

ROOKIES from page 10

utes, but in that span, garnered three rebounds and two assists. Although she was two-for-nine from the floor, her good hands are making her a great backup at shooting guard.

Could the Ontario native be just as good as her older sister and live up to the preseason hype? If Saturday was supposed to be any kind of exam, she's passed the test.

So has Whitney McDonald, who has the privilege of playing understudy to center Patrycja Gulak, and the things she has learned from her so far have reflected inside the paint where their stat lines are almost identical. Both her and Gulak tallied six points and two assists, but it was Gulak who out-rebounded McDonald 11-7.

"She's showing me how to be tougher inside," McDonald said of playing alongside the 6-foot-4 Poland native. "She's definitely someone I love going up against. She has more maturity than me. She's an amazing player. I learn a lot from her."

Throw in the contributions from Kate Mills (five points, five rebounds and two assists) and the presence of Kaylie Sciavetta (no action Saturday), and you have yourself a pretty solid lineup. But these aren't even the starters.

Rather, it is more of a reflection that this team never had last season. At every position, the Minutewomen have at least one player with enough skill to compete for a starting position, making everybody work harder.

And everybody is all smiles when it comes to talking about depth.

"[Depth] is very important, you know," Nelson said. "I think if a team relies on one or two people to do a lot of things — scoring, rebounding and so on — that down the line with the season winding down, people start to get tired. I definitely don't have to do half the things which is great."

"Things are coming together really well for us, and I think we're going to have a really good year," Rosanio said.

Playing alongside Nelson has proven to be a plus for the girls as well. Having sat out the last 18 months due to a knee injury, everyone agrees it's great to have her back calling the shots, bringing the ball up court and dishing the ball off. Best of all, she'll be around until 2006, which is a lot of time to learn from someone who knows a whole lot about the game.

"She's a great leader on the floor," Rosanio said. "She can dish it off as well as she can shoot it. It's good to have her leading us, sometimes we're not sure where to go on the court so it's good to have her."

As far as the chance of other freshmen joining Rosanio in the starting five, it's all theirs for the taking.

Wannstedt resigns

DOLPHINS from page 10

Sam Madison spoke about Wannstedt, their voices broke, and general manager Rick Spielman fought back tears.

Defensive end Jason Taylor reacted sharply to a question about Wannstedt quitting.

"Let's get this straight: Dave didn't quit," Taylor said. "Ricky Williams quit. Dave stepped aside. There's a big difference. Anybody who watched Dave on Sunday saw how much it hurt him. That's not a man who quit. That's a beaten man, a man who has been through a lot the last two or three years."

Wannstedt had been on the hot seat for some time, despite a 43-33 record in 4 1/2 seasons with Miami. His lone playoff victory came four years ago, and he barely avoided being fired after the Dolphins went 10-6 but failed to make the playoffs in 2003.

JOE RIMKUS JR./MIAMI HERALD

Dave Wannstedt's reign in Miami ended yesterday when he resigned as coach of the Dolphins.

Huizenga, who missed the news conference because he was out of town, has been through three coaches since becoming the Dolphins' sole owner in 1994. Now they're one defeat from their first losing season since 1988 and the butt of jokes, with one wag renaming the team's home Semi-Pro Player Stadium. Wannstedt didn't mention Williams by name but said there were a lot of reasons for the Dolphins' decline.

"Many of those things I had no control over," he said. "But those things are not important today. Nobody wants to hear about excuses. Someone has to accept the ultimate responsibility. I'm the head coach," and that falls on me."

While he's under contract through 2006 — and will be paid in full, Jones said — speculation regarding the next coach began weeks ago.

"We're not happy with where we are," Jones said. "But I can tell you this: We're going to fix it. Mr. H. has always given us the ultimate resources. Money has never been an issue with anything we do."

Mentioned as possible coaching candidates have been former Florida Gators coach Steve Spurrier, LSU's Nick Saban, Philadelphia Eagles offensive coordinator Brad Childress and New England Patriots offensive coordinator Charlie Weis.

Spurrier would be a popular choice with fans in South Florida.

"Obviously he's a good coach," Jones said. "But I can tell you we've had no conversations with coach Spurrier...."

"At this point we have no intention to talk to coach Spurrier. Will that change? I'm not sure. But at this point we don't have any intention of doing so."

Saban issued a statement Tuesday saying he was not interested in leaving the Tigers.

The Dolphins also must hire a new president because Jones plans to retire in March. Spielman, widely criticized for his personnel decisions, will lead the coaching search and return next season "unless something happens that I don't foresee," Jones said.

Bates, whose last head-coaching job was 19 years ago in the USFL, has been with the Dolphins since Wannstedt hired him as defensive coordinator in 2000. His first game as interim coach will be Nov. 21 at Seattle.

"I hate it personally ... the way it has happened," Bates said. "But I'm going to jump all over the opportunity. I will coach with a great deal of passion, and when we come out of the chute, we're going to play."

Excuses lay to rest

HALL from page 10

heard they have really good baseball out there, just not on the professional level.

My two closest friends back home are contemplating moving to Hawaii to become carpenters, now that they've dropped out of community college. Perhaps I should join them, where we could get box scores by radio and lay in the sun all day long, relaxing while time flies by slowly.

Maybe I'll come through with that promise to myself to get hitched under the Green Monster. But first, I have to find myself that special someone.

Whatever may jump out in front of me in the path of life doesn't faze me the least bit, for I've no longer a desirable worry in the universe.

I may never find my true self in the aftermath of this miraculous victory, and I hope I don't. Because when Foulke tossed that round piece of cowhide to Mientkiewicz, my life changed forever.

I don't know where I'll be 25 years from now. But one thing is for sure — now that the dream has been reached, there is nothing left to dream about. Now that the impossible has been made possible, total peace has been reached, and thus the ideal state of mind.

Sounds crazy, no? After all, it is just baseball. But when something you've been waiting your whole life for finally comes around, you don't want to think about anything else. You want to sit down and cherish this moment forever.

For me, this is it. This is one high I will never come down from. Now, and for all eternity.

Rest in peace, shattered faith.

Time's running out to WIN $20,000 Tuition enter online today!

Dude, if you didn't try Santa Fe Chili Co. Salsa or haven't entered to win our contest... you better hurry!
www.santafechilicompany.com

MANUFACTURER'S COUPON Expires 12/31/04

TO OUR CUSTOMER: Coupon good only on indicated products. LIMIT ONE COUPON PER CUSTOMER; COUPON NOT TRANSFERABLE. Any other use constitutes fraud. Customer pays sale tax.

TO THE DEALER: LiDestri Foods,Inc.will redeem this coupon for $0.75 (seventy-five cents) off any 2 jar purchase of up to 16oz. of Santa Fe Chili Co. Salsa, plus 8¢ handling, provided the coupon has been turned over to you by your customer at the time of purchase of 2 jars of Santa Fe Chili Co. Salsa, according to your agreement and provided the store redeeming the coupon has purchased stock equal to or in excess of coupons redeemed. To obtain payment, send to SANTA FE SALSA, P.O. BOX 1040-29, MILBURN, NJ 07041. LiDestri Foods, Inc. reserves the right to withhold payment on, and declare void, coupons received mass cut or in mint condition. Cash value 1/20th of one cent. Reproductions or facsimiles of this coupon are not accepted.

Copyright 2004 LiDestri Foods, Inc., Fairport, NY 14450

Buy two jars of any flavor Santa Fe Salsa and take 75¢ off the regular purchase price

75¢ On 2

06020

5 77644 40032 4 (8100) 0 06020

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at the Amherst locations only.
Original roll processing only.

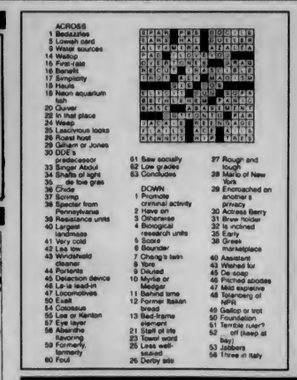
GREAT Reasons to use UHS Eye Care Services
1 Savings on eyeglasses from the on-site Optical Services at UHS
2 A great place to get contact lenses
3 Convenient hours and location
4 FREE eyeglass adjustments and one year warranty on frames
5 Savings on routine eye exams for students at UMass

"I invite you to use the Eye Care Services"

SPECIAL OFFER: 10 PERCENT STUDENT DISCOUNT ON ALL FRAMES AND EYEGLASS LENSES!*

* Cannot be combined with other insurance discounts.

For appointments or questions, call 577-5383

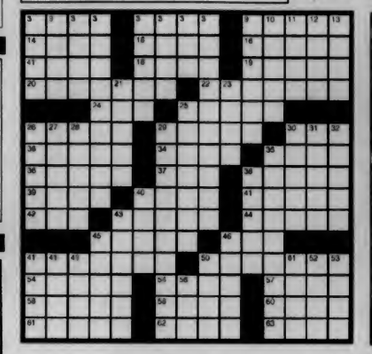


Frederick H. Bloom, O.D. Director, UHS Eye Care Services

UHS EYE CARE SERVICES

Sports @ DailyCollegian.com
Sports @ DailyCollegian.com
Sports @ DailyCollegian.com
Sports @ DailyCollegian.com
Sports @ DailyCollegian.com

fancy NAILS
Walk-ins Welcome
FREE
Holiday Special
$2 OFF
w/ full set or fill
with coupon only



ACROSS
1 Backsides
5 Lowish card
9 Water sources
14 Wishful
16 First-rate
17 Benefit
17 Simplicity
18 Haunts
19 Neon aquarium fish
20 Quiver
22 In that place
24 Weep
25 Lascivious looks
26 Roast host
29 Gilliam or Jones
30 DDE's predecessor
33 Singer Abdul
34 Shafts of light
35 ___ de foie gras
36 Chide
37 Scoring
39 Speaker from Pennsylvania
39 Resistance units
40 Largest landmass
41 Very cold
42 Less low
43 Windshield cleaner
44 Portents
45 Detection device
48 La la lead-in 47 Locomotives
50 Exalt
54 Colossus
55 Lee or Kenton
57 Eye layer
58 Absinthe flavoring
59 Formerly, formerly
60 Foul
61 Saw socially
62 Low grades
63 Concludes

DOWN
1 Promote criminal activity
2 Have on
3 Bitterness
4 Biological research units
5 Score
6 Bounder
7 Chang's twin
8 York
9 Diluted
10 Myrtle or Medgar
11 Behind time
12 Former Italian bread
13 Bed-frame element
21 Start of life
23 Towel word
25 Less well-soaked
26 Derby site
27 Rough and tough
28 Marks of New York
29 Encroached on another's privacy
30 Actress Berry
31 Brew holder
32 Is inclined
35 Early
38 Green marketplace
40 Assistant
43 Planned for 45 De-soap
46 Pitched abodes
47 Mild expletive
48 Tabernacy of NPR
49 Gallop or trot
50 Foundation
51 Terrible roar?
52 ___ off (keep at bay)
53 Jabbers
56 Three in Italy

The Moan and Dove
Specials all week: two pints for the price of two pints
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Don't change your mind so often. You're starting to seem fickle.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You are starting to come down with something. Keep your germs away from others.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Now that you have finished that big project, you can finally relax a little.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Did you forget to feed your fish? He's looking kind of unhappy.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
You need to buy a birthday card for someone. Get to it.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Salsa is not just for chips. Time to get your groove on.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You need to think up a really good excuse for why you weren't in class, slacker.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Just when you're about to give up, something happens to give you a ray of hope.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You're going to find out something very personal about one of your friends.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
A bite of chocolate will perk you up in five seconds.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You haven't seen the Wizard of Oz in a while. Follow the yellow brick road.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Today is a very exciting day. Don't let anything bring you down.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"It is our responsibilities, not ourselves, that we should take seriously."

-Peter Ustinov

Mass Marketing presents: $PEND $MART TOUR 2004
www.Students.UseCreditWisely.com
Performance Dates:
Nov15@7pm Lewis
Nov16@7pm Patterson
Nov17@7pm Gorman
Nov17@8:30pm Cashin
Nov18@7pm Kennedy
Nov19@6pm SOM 137
Featuring: MISSION: improvable
Brought to you by Mass Marketing and Citi Credit-ED™ citi

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January – May, t_kotol@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99. Pentium III Desktop $99. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Need 2-4 people to rake leaves. Near campus. $10/hour. 549-5854.

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day. No experience required. PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

EMPLOYMENT

Substitute teachers needed. Work cooperatively as part of teaching team. High School diploma or equivalent required. Must be able to lift children up to 40 lbs. on a regular basis. Flexible able to work different shifts as needed. $7.00/hr. no benefits Send cover letter and resume to: HCAC Human Resources, 557 Easthamtpon Rd. Northampton, MA 01060 or to hr@hcac.org

SPRING INTERNSHIPS Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 x162

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

SERVICES

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling out Immigration forms.

Do you know your rights as a student, tenant, worker, and consumer? The Student Legal Services can help with your questions. Come to 922 Campus Center or Call 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica. From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
City & Send or Use Code: PRWING Online
1-800 426 7710

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

Egg Donors Needed. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Ages 21-32. Non-smokers only. For more information please visit our website at www.robertnicholsesq.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Seventh Cy for Rocket

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Roger Clemens easily won his record seventh Cy Young Award after putting off retirement and being about as dominant as ever — even at age 42.

The Rocket received 23 of 32 first-place votes and 140 points in balloting released Tuesday by the Baseball Writers' Association of America to win the NL Cy Young for the first time after capturing six Cy Youngs in the American League.

He's the oldest Cy Young winner. Gaylord Perry was 40 when he won the NL honor in 1978.

Clemens retired after pitching for the New York Yankees in the 2003 World Series, then changed his mind and signed with his hometown Houston Astros and went 18-4 with a 2.98 ERA and 218 strikeouts. Currently in Japan with a touring major league all-star team, he said last week he hasn't decided whether he will pitch in 2005.

Arizona's 41-year-old Randy Johnson, second to Clemens with five Cy Youngs, finished second in the voting with eight first-place votes and 97 points. The Big Unit went 16-14 with a 2.60 ERA and a major league-leading 290 strikeouts — Arizona scored two runs or fewer in 17 of his 35 starts.

Houston's Roy Oswalt, who went 20-10 to lead the NL in wins, was third with 19 points, followed by San Francisco's Jason Schmidt with 13.

Clemens won three Cy Youngs with Boston, two with Toronto, and one with the New York Yankees.

CHRIS GRIST/LOUIS POST-DISPATCH

Roger Clemens won his seventh Cy Young Award yesterday. He has now won the award with four different teams. He has been honored four times since leaving the Red Sox, where his career temporarily stalled before he bolted for Toronto.

Sox ace done with surgery

BOSTON — Red Sox pitcher Curt Schilling had surgery Tuesday to repair his injured right ankle.

"The three-hour procedure proceeded as planned, with no complications," team doctor Bill Morgan, who performed the surgery at Caritas St. Elizabeth's Medical Center, said in a statement.

Schilling pitched Game 6 of the American League Championship Series and Game 2 of the World Series last month with the torn sheath of his ankle tendon sutured into place so it wouldn't flop over the bone when he pitched.

The Red Sox won both games, setting the stage for Boston's first World Series championship in 86 years.

Doctors said the pitcher was resting comfortably after the procedure. His ankle and foot will have to be immobilized for about a month, the hospital's statement said. He will also need six weeks of rehabilitation, so any delays could cause him to miss the start of spring training.

Schilling, acquired in a trade with the Arizona Diamondbacks, earned a permanent position in Red Sox folklore by pitching on the injured ankle during the playoffs.

He hurt it near the end of the regular season and tried to pitch Game 1 of the ALCS against the New York Yankees. Unable to push off the mound, he allowed six runs in three innings — his worst postseason performance since 1993. The Yankees went on to take a 3-0 series lead and Schilling's season appeared over.

But the unprecedented suturing procedure enabled him to pitch in Game 6, and with blood seeping through his sock, Schilling beat the Yankees in Game 6, catapulting the Red Sox to an improbable comeback.

He repeated the feat in Game 2 of the Series against the St. Louis Cardinals. Afterward, he acknowledged that he could not have made his scheduled start in Game 6 of the Series, had it gone that far. But it became moot when the Red Sox swept the Cardinals in four games.

The soft tissue that sheaths the ankle tendon had been ruptured, causing the tendon to dislocate. On Tuesday, doctors pushed the tendon back into place and reconstructed the sheath.

Despite being hampered by his ankle, Schilling traveled with President Bush before last week's election, campaigning on crutches in the battleground states of Ohio and Pennsylvania.

- Associated Press

Excuses lay to rest

Brendan Hall

I remember the moments in the wake of Foulke's underhand toss to Mientkiewicz for the final out as clear as day now, and probably still will when I'm 75.

I remember acting as if I had been shot, bloodcurdling screams of "Oh my God! Oh my God!" cutting through the hallways at 250,000 decibels, startling worried neighbors and making me grow hoarse within seconds. I tackled whatever goofy kid was roaming around, all to the tune of "Hey Papi" by Jay-Z.

"I" became "we" as a mob of sloppily dressed undergrads, decked out in ridiculous Red Sox attire, roared through the hall, lounge, stairs and elevator. And if flipping furniture and pounding on Yankees' fans doors weren't enough, the sea of red, blue and gray below us tempted even the tamest of Sox fans to unleash the William Wallace within.

None of it mattered to me at that moment in time, because the dream had become a reality. The Sox, by golly, had won it all. Those rude, crude dudes from Yawkey Way — those unruly savages who eat nails for breakfast and bullets for dessert — had finally emerged the victor in their epic war with a ghost with the surname George Herman.

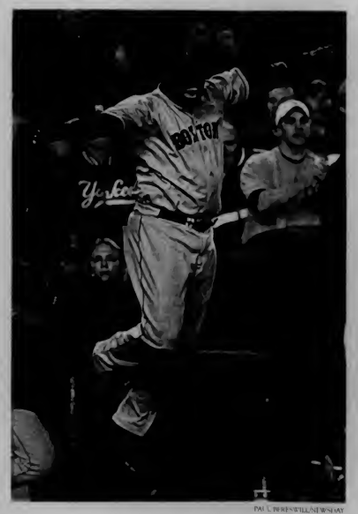
There were no words to describe why my hands shook so violently for no reason at all, or why I was getting the chills up and down my spine repeatedly, or why my legs felt like rubber and my head felt like I'd just ran through a brick wall, only screams, ecstatic, deafening screams.

Two weeks later, I sit here in front of my television, peering over at Sportscenter while caught up in a novel. I sit here calmly — almost too calmly — as a tune by Pink Floyd hums on my stereo softly, like there isn't a care in the world. The whole time there's just one Great Gatsby-inspired thought running through my mind: now that the dream has been achieved, the dream is essentially over. Back to reality — back to normality.

Growing up as a kid in the country bumpkin breeding ground that is north central Massachusetts, I thrived on New England sports. The Larry Birds, Drew Bledsoes and Mo Vaughns of the world were what made me so eager to sprint home from school so I could get my homework done as quick as possible in time for the games on TV. Give me a team from any major sport, and I could probably give you the starting lineup, easily. It annoyed my teachers so much they sometimes had to kick me out of class.

Somewhere down the road, as my writing skills began to blossom faster than bamboo grass, it hit me: I would be a killer sportswriter. Like every other aspiring sportswriter around these parts, covering the Boston Red Sox on a daily basis would be the equivalent of dipping your toes in the sand at a place they call paradise.

It's every writer's dream to be out there doing what the professionals in our business do. But the Sox have won — nothing can top that. Maybe the second coming of Christ, but everything else may as well take a back seat.



Now that we have reached Zion — now that we have reached that state of baseball nirvana, where everything is perfectly balanced — what is there left to do?

I mean, as God as my witness, the Sox did it. After 86 cold, long years of frustration and snowballed angst, it has been achieved. We've officially seen everything there is to see in this realm.

There's only one life to live; maybe I should see the world.

Perhaps I'll move to the west coast, take up surfing and coo the beautiful California girls with my UMass smarts (they actually respect us in some parts of the country). I

See HALL on page 8

PAUL J. PERESWILL/NEWSDAY

David Ortiz celebrates at Yankee Stadium during the Red Sox historical playoff run to their first World Series championship since 1918.

Freshmen shining early on

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Typically in collegiate sports, freshmen tend to make rookie mistakes as they develop their game.

But these five freshmen, who women's basketball head coach Marnie Dacko has to deal with, are anything but typical. That is because the results they are producing have been far from the norm.

"I'm so pleased with this class," Dacko said. "They work hard, they've got great attitude, they're great people and they have a tremendous work ethic. You know, they may be freshmen as far as their class, but they're much more mature than that, and I can't be more happier with them."

The happiness starts at Pam Rosanio. The 5-foot-10 guard/forward out of Southampton, PA, was the only frosh to start in last Saturday's exhibition, and she proved her worth on the floor. She was the only rookie to score in double digits (11) and only second in scoring behind Brooke Campbell, while dishing out one assist from the two-spot.

"Pam's started out really well; she's been good in practice," red-shirt-junior point guard Katie Nelson said. "She did a great job in the game."

Then there is, of course, that other Tatham. Alisha Tatham, the sister of sophomore Tamara Tatham has been turning heads as well, having been named to the Atlantic 10 Conference's preseason All-Rookie Team. On Saturday, she only saw 13 min-

See ROOKIES on page 8

Quitting continues

By Steven Wine
Associated Press

DAVIE, Fla. — Dave Wannstedt resigned Tuesday as coach of the Miami Dolphins, forced from the job by lousy luck, relentless speculation about his future and eight losses in nine games.

Defensive coordinator Jim Bates was promoted to interim coach, and management immediately began a search for a coach in 2005.

A wave of injuries and the retirement of running back Ricky Williams contributed to this year's transformation of the long-proud franchise into a laughingstock, with the NFL's worst record. Wannstedt accepted the blame and said he resigned because his job status had become a distraction.

"I have too much respect for the players and owner of this organization to allow myself to be the focal point for the remainder of the season," he said at a news conference. "I told the players today the team must come first. This is what's best for our team."

The coaching change came during the Dolphins' bye week, and two days after perhaps their most wrenching defeat yet. They twice blew a lead against the Arizona Cardinals, who scored in the final seconds Sunday to win 24-23 and break a 17-game road-losing streak.

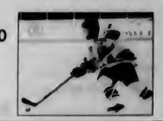
On Monday, Wannstedt requested a meeting with owner Wayne Huizenga and said he had decided to step down. Huizenga wanted Wannstedt to coach the rest of the season but reluctantly accepted the resignation, team president Eddie Jones said.

Attendance has been in steep decline, but while Wannstedt's departure gave fans cause for celebration, the mood was gloomy at the team complex. As linebacker Zach Thomas and cornerback

See DOLPHINS on page 8

JOE RIMKUS JR./MIAMI HERALD

After suffering eight losses in nine games during a very difficult season, Dolphins coach Dave Wannstedt quit. Defensive coordinator Jim Bates will take over for him until the end of the year.



Fox begins a new series in the long line of 'Obnoxious' shows
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Minutemen travel to B.C. to take on the Eagles
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 47

Professors from various universities speak on racial equality in sports

By Megan Evans
Collegian Correspondent

Professors from the University of Minnesota, Temple, and the University of Pennsylvania discussed integration and racial justice, specifically in sports, at the Isenberg School of Management on Tuesday night.

The discussion was part of a series of events commemorating the landmark Brown v. Board of Education Supreme Court decision of 1954. The panelists were Professor Douglass Hartman of the University of Minnesota, Professor Tina Sloan-Green of Temple University and Professor Kenneth L. Shropshire of University of Pennsylvania. This discussion was one of many in the semester-long, campus-wide series marking the 50th anniversary of Brown v. Board of Education, sponsored by the Feinberg Family Distinguished Lectureship and the University's History department.

Professor Hartman, who teaches sociology, began the discussion with a focus on the problems, paradoxes and challenges that have accompanied the integration of sports.

He brought up the topic of his recently published book titled "Race, Culture and the Revolt of the Black Athlete: The 1968 Olympic Protests and Their Aftermath." He said that athletes Tommie Smith and John Carlos, who were photographed on the medal stand holding their gloved fists in the air in tribute to the Black Power movement, started what was to become the first and only athletic movement about race, during a time when they had accomplished more than most had dreamed of.

"The one key point that I want to emphasize here is that integration and accomplishment in sports didn't change things nearly so much as the athletes expected and, in some ways, things seemed to get even worse," Hartman said.

Hartman also said that the achievements of African-American athletes are misused in order to justify the existing racial problems by making it seem like all blacks are successful. He stated the reality of the situation is that blacks are still struggling with integration and equal rights.

COURTESY SOCIOLOGY.UMN.EDU

Professor Douglas Hartmann from the University of Minnesota.

COURTESY TEMPLE.EDU

Professor Tina Sloan-Green from Temple University.

"We have these ideas like integration, diversity, multiculturalism; those are great words that roll easily off our lips," he said. "But they're not things that come easily. And if we forget about that, that's when things start to fall apart."

Professor Sloan-Green spoke second. Sloan-Green, the founder of the Black Woman's Sports Foundation, played on the U.S. National field hockey and lacrosse teams. Sloan-Green went on to become the first African American head coach in the history of women's intercollegiate lacrosse.

Sloan-Green's speech focused on the issues that she had to overcome in her life to reach her achievements. She encouraged the audience to believe in their dreams, saying they were the future of our society. In regards to Brown v. Board of Education, she said that integration still had a long way to go and that public schools were full of inequality.

The final panelist was David W. Hauck Professor at the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania. He also serves as the Chairman of the Legal Studies department. He stated that the level of racism becomes more obvious as one moves up the ranks and the level of discrimination and selection is much more apparent.

Shropshire made the point that in order to achieve change and social equality, a common issue needs to unite people. He posed the question: "What can we all rally behind?"

Hartman reiterated Shropshire's sentiment by questioning what people were really fighting for.

"Integration is just a label," he said. "We can't get caught up with the word. We've got to make new labels, categories and ideals that we struggle for."

"It takes courage to cross the color lines," Sloan-Green said. "Does our society really value diversity? [If] everyone on college campuses looks alike, what does that tell us?"

COURTESY SCHARTON.UPENN.EDU

Professor Kenneth L. Shropshire from the University of Pennsylvania.

President Bustamante will no longer work with Vice Chancellor

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association President Eduardo Bustamante declared in last night's weekly SGA meeting that he will not work with the Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, Michael Gargano any longer on issues involving the Senate.

"I will not work with Vice Chancellor Gargano from here on out," Bustamante said, as a result of more information being released regarding the recent controversy.

Bustamante's declaration comes one week after two-dozen e-mails were leaked to members of the SGA that showed several conversations between Gargano and former SGA Speaker Patrick Higgins. The e-mails discuss the legality of appointing graduate student Gladys Franco to fill in for Nelson Acosta, the Director of the Office of ALANA (African Latino Asian and Native American) Affairs. Acosta was using sick time to take a leave of absence due to an illness.

Members of the SGA's ALANA Caucus allege the e-mails were "improper and possibly illegal." They are particularly upset that the e-mails left SGA President Eduardo Bustamante out of the discussions, saying in a statement, "in almost all these e-mails, the President was left out of 'the loop.'"

All of the e-mails were composed between May 28 and Sept. 16. Many of the e-mails were sent from Higgins to Gargano, asking him when he would stop funding Franco's position.

One e-mail dated July 26, 2004 from Higgins to Gargano asked a similar question: "This summer you announced to me that it was your intention to remove funding to the graduate Assistant you pay for in OAA. I am curious when you are going to pull the trigger on this move?"

"[The e-mails] are especially troubling for me," said Bustamante as he addressed the Senate body. "I saw a lot of dishonesty exposed."

The SGA has acknowledged that the University has not authenticated any of the e-mails. However, members of the Senate still felt the need to take an official stance on relations between themselves and the administration as a result of the e-mail messages.

A list of resolutions on the e-mail issue, comprised by Sen. Erin Lemkey, was tabled by the Senate until next week. After the meeting the resolutions will come to the attention of the Public Policy and Relations Committee, who will review the measure. It will then be re-presented to the SGA in a future meeting.

The list noted several facts about the incidents and made further resolutions, which concluded that the SGA would forward all recommendations to the Office of the Chancellor, not the Vice Chancellor. It also resolved that the SGA has "no confidence in Vice Chancellor Michael Gargano." Lemkey said she would like the University to acknowledge whether or not the e-mails are authentic.

"A lot of people don't ... have complete confidence in the authenticity of the e-mails because the University hasn't acknowledged them," Lemkey said.

Another motion the SGA voted on in the meeting was one to appoint sophomore political science major Jennifer Jean-Baptiste to the Senate's judiciary committee. Her appointment was met with debate, which was sparked by Sen. Mark Morrisson.

Morrison said appointing her would be "extremely wrong" because she had not completely read the Senate's bylaws and had no prior SGA experience.

When Jean-Baptiste was asked in the meeting, prior to debate whether she had read the bylaws, she responded, "I have not read all of them."

However, after debate began, she was asked a second time if she could explain if she had read the bylaws completely.

"I have read the entire book several times, but I have not memorized all the bylaws by heart," she responded.

Several members questioned whether or not all the Coordinating Council members were present when Jean-Baptiste's motion for appointment was approved. President Bustamante explained that due to changes, the number needed for quorum was seven, but nine were in attendance. Therefore, there was a sufficient amount of members to vote on the appointment issue. In the end, her motion to appoint was approved in the Senate.

HUD awards $400,000 three-year grant

By Sara Monacelli
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts, in collaboration with other area colleges and community groups, will be tackling a plethora of urban problems in the city of Holyoke through a $400,000 grant awarded to the city by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

"Hopefully [the grant] produces a greater understanding of how communities work, what communities are responsible for, and teaches people not to concentrate on changing a community, but empowering it to change itself," said Michael J. Sullivan, mayor of Holyoke.

The key component that outlines the project will be to link the community's effort and input, with university outreach and research in efforts to re-build low-income neighborhoods in Holyoke. The ultimate plan of the program includes assisting residents in four main areas: education, cultural resources, home ownership and revival of downtown Holyoke without complete restoration.

The grant will be facilitated through the project's Community Outreach Partnership Center (COPC) Program, which is organized by Karen Barshefsky of UMass Extensions Communities, in alliance with the Families and Youth Program and the Holyoke Planners Network. The program represents a partnership between academic and community groups, whose goal is to encourage their community in efforts to continue a strong, steady development.

Barshefsky said her experience in the community could be helpful for the project.

"I've worked in Holyoke for about nine years, and was seen as a person who could strengthen this partnership along with the Holyoke Planners Network," Barshefsky said.

There are many departments inside the University that will extract students in efforts to assist Holyoke. Some of these departments include the Sociology Department, Architecture and Design, School of Education, Anthropology, Communication Department, and the Department of Plant, Soil and Insect Sciences in cooperation with other groups on campus.

"Right now there are no specific UMass students involved — it's mostly faculty who will then involve students once we get underway," said Barshefsky.

According to University officials, the UMass Amherst/Holyoke Planners Network Community Outreach Partnership Center will target Holyoke's growing low-income populations with a variety of research and outreach activities. These activities will be mainly geared toward education, economic development and community planning, capacity building, and fair housing and lending.

Mayor Sullivan is eager to begin the project, especially with UMass as one of the major contributors.

"The close proximity to UMass coupled with the workable size and the amazing ... urbanism, from a laboratory like Holyoke," Sullivan said, was one of the main reasons as to why he and his community chose to work with the University. Sullivan will also have some involvement in the project himself.

See GRANT on page 2

Palestinian leader dead; Yasser Arafat: 1929-2004

By Ravi Nessman
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank (AP) — Yasser Arafat, the guerrilla leader turned Nobel Peace Prize winner who forced his people's plight into the world spotlight, died Thursday at age 75.

Arafat died at 3:30 a.m. in a French military hospital. His last days were as murky and dramatic as his life. Arafat was flown to France on Oct. 29 after nearly three years of being penned in his West Bank headquarters by Israeli tanks.

He initially improved but then sharply deteriorated as rumors swirled about his illness. Neither doctors nor Palestinian leaders would say what killed Arafat.

Tens of thousands of Palestinians poured into the streets of the Gaza Strip in a spontaneous show of grief. Dozens of gunmen fired into the air, and marchers waved Palestinian flags.

Mosques blared Quranic verses and children burned tires on the main streets, covering the skies in black smoke. People pasted posters of Arafat on building walls.

COURTESY CNN.COM

Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat died in a French millitary hospital Thursday.

See ARAFAT on page 2

Archbishop offers more time for closings

By Jay Lindsay
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Archbishop Sean O'Malley met Thursday with priests of 18 churches scheduled to close and offered each of them more time to prepare parishioners for the pending shutdowns.

The archdiocese doesn't plan to reverse any of the closings, and none of the priests immediately took up O'Malley's offer of a reprieve. The priests are expected to consult with parishioners to see if more time is needed, according to a statement by the archdiocese.

In the statement, the archdiocese said extra time could be used for more preparation for the closings and "to provide additional assistance to the parishioners who are finding this process particularly difficult."

Peter Borre, a leader of the Council of Parishes, a lay group of churches united to fight the church closings, said O'Malley's offer was insufficient.

"It's not a matter of providing more time for these parishioners to walk to the gallows," he said. "What is called for at this point is an absolute halt of the reconfiguration machinery."

O'Malley offer, forwarded at a two-hour morning meeting at the chancery, was suggested by an advisory panel of community leaders O'Malley formed last month to improve the ongoing, and occasionally rocky, consolidation process.

The archdiocese plans to close 83 churches because of financial pressure and declining attendance. Forty-seven have been shut down to date, but parishioners in eight have refused to leave the buildings.

They've complained the process was not transparent and strong churches are being forced to shut down for no good reason. Last week, a 69-year-old man was arrested after refusing to leave a closing parish in Winchester.

In an acknowledgment of the pain parish closings had caused, O'Malley has offered temporary reprieves to other churches, including St. Bernard in Newton, which decided to begin a 24-hour vigil anyway.

MATT REDA/COLLEGIAN

ROTC pays tribute

Members of the UMass ROTC pay tribute at a vigil, held to remember fallen soldiers. The event was held in front of Memorial Hall on Thursday afternoon.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NEWS SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugalski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nisbett
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
CAMPUS EDITOR Alyson Zilmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marzelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kiggans
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginie Frecaut
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ACCOUNTING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASSOCIATE ARTS & LIVING Mike Busack
ASSOCIATE ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATED AND ADVERTISING SALES MANAGED BY STAFF. THE PAPER BEGAN AS THE INDEPENDENT IN 1890 AND THE COLLEGIAN IN 1891. IT WAS PUBLISHED AS THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN WAS NAMED WINNER SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADDITIONAL DATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500. DISTRIBUTION IS 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron J. Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Curtis Killian
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Nicholas Belanger, Matthew Reid

Campus Perspectives

What is you opinion on the 'Riot UMass' computer game?

By Curtis Killian

Senior
Journalism & Psychology

"I saw the link on Daily Jolt, and clicked on it out of disgust and morbid curiosity. In light of what happened in Boston, I just don't think it's funny."

Michelle Dozois

Freshman
Pre-Veterinarian

"I heard it's really funny!"

Sonia Adach

Freshman
Chemical Engineering

"I Played it. It was fun. Thats the point of games."

Jonathan Young

Freshman
Electrical Engineering

"I have not played it."

Tom Holley

Freshman
Chemical Engineering

"I haven't played it, but it sounds like fun."

Zach Linder

Senior
African-American Studies

"I haven't played it. I saw the article. I think it was kind of funny, an interesting response to what was going on."

Liz Caradonna

Palestinians mourn death of Arafat

ARAFAT from page 1

Within hours of Arafat's death, Israel sealed the West Bank and Gaza Strip and increased security at Jewish settlements, fearing widespread Palestinian riots in the coming days.

"The Israeli Defense Forces are deploying to allow a dignified funeral ceremony for chairman Arafat," an army statement said.

The military said it would restrict access to the funeral and burial, set for Friday in the West Bank city of Ramallah, and only allow Palestinians with permits to attend. The military will allow processions in towns and refugee camps, officials said.

A military funeral was scheduled earlier Friday in Cairo, a location that allows Arab leaders to avoid travel to the West Bank, where Israel controls access.

Palestinian Parliament Speaker Rauhi Fattouh was to be sworn in as Palestinian Authority president until elections are held in 60 days, according to Palestinian law. The Parliament was meeting in emergency session at 11 a.m.

Officials said they wanted to ensure a smooth transition, despite concern both at home and abroad that a behind-the-scenes power struggle to assume the Arafat mantle could result in chaos and violence.

Prime Minister Ahmed Qureia was expected remain in charge of day-to-day governing, while Mahmoud Abbas, the former prime minister, would take over running the Palestine Liberation Organization, which also represents Palestinians abroad.

Holyoke receives grant

GRANT from page 1

"On a personal level, I hope I am allowed to give my input as to how the COPC Grant will be a catalyst for positive change in the City of Holyoke," he said.

The project, being just as much a community effort as it is a university research and outreach project, will be heavily based on neighborhood involvement. The strong sense of concern is very evident.

"The activities [and] needs addressed in the proposal came from the community itself," said Barshefsky. Some of the participating organizations in COPC are Nueva Esperenza, Nuestra Raices, Holyoke Public Schools, Holyoke Community College, along with others. The basic idea is to get people from all different backgrounds involved. All five colleges in the area will also be working with the community.

All personnel involved will work together to improve the current conditioning in the areas of education and economic development. On the education side, a series of workshops through Families and Parents will be created to help educate community members.

American forces launch offensive against Iraqi militants

By Edward Harris
Associated Press

FALLUJAH, Iraq (AP) — Insurgents tried to break through the U.S. cordon surrounding Fallujah on Thursday as American forces launched an offensive against concentrations of militants in the south of the city. Some 600 insurgents, 18 U.S. troops and five Iraqi soldiers have been killed in the four-day assault, the U.S. military said.

In an apparent bid to relieve pressure on their trapped allies, insurgents mounted major attacks in Mosul, Iraq's third-largest city 220 miles to the north. Guerrillas assaulted nine police stations, overwhelming several, and battled U.S. and Iraqi troops around bridges across the Tigris River in the city, where a curfew was imposed a day earlier.

And in Baghdad, a car bomb exploded Thursday moments after a U.S. patrol passed on Saadoun Street, killing 17 bystanders and wounding 30. There were no U.S. casualties.

The four-day Fallujah offensive has wounded an additional 178 Americans along with 34 Iraqi soldiers, the military said.

As night fell, U.S. Army soldiers and Marines attacked south of the main east-west highway that bisects Fallujah, a Sunni Muslim insurgent stronghold 40 miles west of Baghdad.

An Iraqi journalist in the city reported seeing burned U.S. vehicles and bodies in the street, with more buried under the wreckage. He said two men trying to move a corpse were shot down by a sniper.

Two of the three small clinics in the city have been bombed, and in one case, medical staff and patients were killed, he said. A U.S. tank was positioned beside the third clinic, and residents were afraid to go there, he said.

"People are afraid of even looking out the window because of snipers," he said, asking that he not be named for his own safety. "The Americans are shooting anything that moves."

COURTESY CNN.COM

An Iraqi civilian carries a wounded child after a U.S. attack on the heavily populated city of Fallujah.

New WORLD Theater

LA CASA DE RIGOBERTA MIRA AL SUR
by El Grupo de Teatro Justo Rufino Garay
A poetic tapestry of Nicaraguan history, war and family memories. Presented in Spanish with English subtitles
Fri. and Sat. November 19 & 20, 2004
8 pm, Kirby Theater, Amherst College
TICKETS ARE: $ 15-general public, $ 8-seniors/low income patrons, $5-students. Call the FAC Box Office 545-2511. For info about the shows, call NWT at 413.545.1972
www.newworldtheater.org

Romney upset over Big Dig tunnel leaks

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Mitt Romney renewed his attack on the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority on Thursday, saying revelations about leaks in the Big Dig's main tunnel show the need for big changes at the agency.

Romney has long sought to bring the independent authority under the control of the state transportation department, saying the move would bring make the Turnpike Authority, which oversees the $14.6 billion highway project, more accountable to voters.

"Put this independent authority back into government, let it report to the executive branch, make sure there is a party accountable and the citizens can remove them from office if they're not doing their job," he said. "Right now we've got a Turnpike Authority that's a rogue agency."

Turnpike officials defended the authority's handling of an eight-inch breach in a wall of the northbound section of the new Interstate 93 tunnel in September that sent water rushing into the tunnel, shutting down lanes and creating a 10-mile backup.

Turnpike board member Jordan Levy said the agency hired an internationally-respected tunnel expert to find out what happened and will vigorously pursue any contractor responsible for shoddy work.

Levy said Romney was using the leaks to grandstand and score political points. He said the project is staying on budget despite the troubles.

"For him to oversimplify this problem and say that if it was under the watchful eye of MassHighway that nothing like this would have happened is sheer poppycock and he knows it," Levy said. "If there is an argument to made for the consolidation of the Turnpike and MassHighway, make it on the merits and not using red herrings."

The tunnel expert hired by the Turnpike also found hundreds of smaller leaks in the tunnel. Turnpike officials said some smaller leaks are expected in a project as large at the Big Dig and funding for teams assigned to plug the holes were included in the project's budget.

But they called the larger hole that opened up in September "unacceptable." They said that hole was caused by foreign material that got mixed in as the concrete was being poured. That foreign material washed away over time causing the larger leak.

A permanent patch will cost about $250,000, according to Turnpike Chairman Matthew Amorello. The agency wants to look at up to a dozen other concrete panels to make sure no other larger breaches are waiting to happen.

This is the "HOT" Yoga
BIKRAM YOGA Amherst
www.bikramyoga.com
665-yoga
The room is heated to open you...
The series is powerful to challenge you...
The yoga is BIKRAM to change you ..
Designed for all levels, BIKRAM yoga will challenge you physically, focus you mentally, and allow you to relax on a very deep level.
TRY IT FOR 10 CONSECUTIVE DAYS FOR ONLY $20!!!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 2004

"It is hard enough to remember my opinions, without also remembering my reasons for them."
-Friedrich Nietzsche

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A more responsible America

Erin McNamee

I'm not a psychology major and I've only taken one psychology course in my entire life, so my knowledge of the field is sparse and rusty at best. But in my unprofessional opinion, I honestly believe that after John Kerry conceded the presidency to George W. Bush, I went through psychiatrist Elisabeth Kubler-Ross's famous Five Stages of Grief: Denial, Anger, Bargaining, Depression and Acceptance. However, I skipped the Bargaining stage entirely; after all, according to the delusional beliefs of over half the country, God is on President Bush's side so the chances that He would listen to the pleadings of a newly-minted Democrat like me are slim to nil.

But let's not get into the whole "values" vote issue. Everyone this side of sane and rational has heard the collective victory cry of the Bible thumpers, and frankly I'm willing to let them thump to their hearts' content so long as the rest of us devise a way to ship them off to a deserted island sometime in the near future. Perhaps the television show "Lost" is looking for new castaways?

Anyway, we were talking about my embittered three-day emotional journey that began when I refreshed my homepage, CNN.com, at approximately 11 a.m. on Nov. 3. There at the top of the screen, blood-red letters shouted something along the lines of, "Kerry to concede at 1 p.m. Developing story." The denial began to set in.

After staring in stunned silence at the computer screen until my eyes crossed, I let out an angry yelp that I hope echoed all the way to the Bible belt. My co-workers began yelling out similar cries of dismay and unprintable expletives. We were sure that it was just a sick joke: Ohio would turn blue, Kerry would win and all of it would have been a bad dream.

Well it was a bad dream all right, but not the kind we woke up from. Ohio remained too close to call and Kerry officially conceded at 2 p.m., much to the dismay of the free world.

It was Andrew Card, the White House Chief of Staff, who turned my denial into anger with his premature and arrogant statement, "President Bush decided to give Sen. Kerry the respect of more time to reflect on the results of this election." To which I thought, "no wonder people think President Bush is an instrument of God — he can see the future!" But alas, even my sarcastic inner monologue failed to comfort me.

My anger quickly dissipated into depression, however, and I plodded through the rest of Wednesday and Thursday with that pesky proverbial black rain cloud hanging over my head. Everything looked bleak and the only light at the end of the tunnel suspiciously resembled an atomic mushroom cloud.

That night, I habitually tuned into "The Daily Show" prepared to resist laughter at all costs. But when those genius writers skewered John Kerry's concession speech so that it sounded like he was offering George W. Bush $648 for the presidency, I actually managed a laugh. My quest for acceptance had begun.

The first thing I forced myself to accept was that George W. Bush had decisively won the presidency. While the honesty and validity of Republican re-election tactics can certainly be contested (Black voter disenfranchisement, anyone? Fear-mongering? Purple Heart Band-Aids? Absurd pre-approved commercials featuring menacing wolves running in slow motion?), President Bush did win the popular vote even if it was by a mere three percent. Therefore, our country's leader was not decided once again by his friends in high places, but rather by the "American people," whom President Bush claims have "spoken." I don't know about the rest of you, but I didn't hear them.

I discovered that the key to accepting something emotionally difficult is optimism. I am optimistic that our country can be redeemed, even if we have to wait four more years.

I also had to accept that despite their shady dealings, those Republicans sure are smart. At least Karl Rove is, anyway. Therefore, every ounce of bitterness I possess can be match-ed with a certain degree of admiration for the way Republicans appeal to those elusive swing states.

The Democrats should take a cue from the Republicans and smarten up too, just not in that upper-crust-white-elitist-Ivy-League way that so alienates the farmers and Bible-toters. It's time for the Democrats to take responsibility for this loss (it can't be blamed on voter fraud this time) and for securing a safe, healthy and prosperous future for all Americans.

Because of this election, I discovered that the key to accepting something emotionally difficult is optimism. I am optimistic that our country can be redeemed, even if we have to wait four more years. I am optimistic that President Bush can find the strength to take a good, hard look at his first four years in office and not only take responsibility for his mistakes, but learn from them in order to never repeat them.

It's time for all Americans to take responsibility for each other, for the lives of our troops and for the lives of innocent Iraqi civilians. We must live in a constant state of acceptance and optimism in order for America to begin the healing process that will allow us to move toward a better and undivided future. I am optimistic that we can reach that point, hopefully sooner rather than later.

Erin McNamee is a Collegian columnist.

Slavery is freedom

Stephen Post

If you want to kill an idea, call it a conspiracy theory. This is exactly what is happening to perfectly legitimate concerns about the 2004 Presidential election. If you suggest, based on any number of facts, that Bush (gasp!) stole the election (again), you are a conspiracy theorist of the worst sort; you are one of those people; you are a quack.

But what if the quacks are right to question the results?

Ohio, whose 20 electoral votes put Bush over the 270 mark, gave its electronic voting machine contract to Diebold Election Systems, whose President, Walden O'Dell, told Republicans in the summer of 2003 that he was "committed to helping Ohio deliver its electoral votes to the president next year." According to "The Cleveland Plain Dealer," Diebold, which is based in Ohio, provided computer voting machines for 16 counties with somewhere around 800,000 voters.

A grand total of three companies manufacture "black box" computer voting machines. All three, it turns out, were committed to re-electing Bush.

Black box voting machines leave no paper trail. And no paper trail means, no recounts. What the computer says goes, even if it has no basis in reality. So when vote totals seem unbelievable, perhaps they shouldn't be believed. If exit polls show Kerry leading Bush and the black box tells the opposite story, we have every right to wonder what in tarnation is going on.

Is it so incredible to think that Bush, who "won" Florida's 27 electoral votes in 2000 because large numbers of ballots were thrown away, and who was installed in the White House by a 5-4 Supreme Court decision, would win by nefarious means?

If we didn't have a fair election then, why would we be so naive as to think this one would be any better? What was good for Republicans in 2000 still works for them in 2004, except now they had the added benefit of the magical black box voting machine, able to "disappear" votes and add others, all on the QT.

Nothing will ever change until people in this country wake up and realize their country has been taken away from them.

When leaders in western-backed dictatorships want to hold power while keeping at least a patina of democracy, they hold elections. They don't fear defeat because they control the outcome. Nothing here is any different. Bush and his henchmen have hijacked American policy to serve their own ends. In its first four years the administration did nothing if not obfuscate, manipulate, lie, cheat and steal. It ignored law; It ignored morality, and it certainly ignored democracy.

This ain't no democracy. In any other country on Earth this would be called a dictatorship.

But why are people so reluctant to admit the obvious? Perhaps it's easier to persist in our delusions; it's just more comfortable that way. But nothing will ever change until people in this country wake up and realize their country has been taken away from them. With one hand patting us all on the head, the Bush Administration was rubbing us with the other.

Nothing is sacred; everything is for sale, even our votes. Unless they can be manipulated to serve the Bush-Cheney-Rumsfeld agenda, our opinions do not matter. Bush himself put it best, commenting on the massive worldwide anti-war protests of February 15, 2003: "Democracy is a beautiful thing. People are allowed to express their opinion, and I welcome people's right to say what they believe."

What a guy!

Democracy is nothing more than an artifact. It's quaint, really, how people express their opinions and expect to be listened to — poor fools.

Enough is enough. It's time to stop comforting ourselves with the motions of citizenship and to start assessing the situation we're in. We have lost control of our country, and we can no longer afford to sit by and watch as America is flown into the heart of disaster.

Now is the time to ask questions. Now is the time to resist.

Stephen Post is a Collegian columnist.

A fear of mortality

Paige Cram

With every week of the semester that passes, I get one step closer to leaving life as I know it behind. No, I'm not graduating, but I am taking the semester off to study abroad. While the rest of you are registering for classes for next semester, I'm left with plenty of time to contemplate exactly what it is I'll be leaving: friends, family and the environment here at UMass that I've learned to call home.

While I am excited, I'm confronted with that strange mixture of bittersweet feelings that we all experience when facing a new beginning: part excitement, part anxiety and part fear. The reason for this mixture is the whole idea that in order to move on to a new chapter in our lives, we must inevitably bring one to a close.

So what is it that makes us so afraid to leave things behind?

In Greek mythology, the characters are always in search of one thing: immortality. If they couldn't physically become a God, they needed to find some way in which they could live forever. They wanted some story of a fantastic quest to live on after them so that future generations know their name.

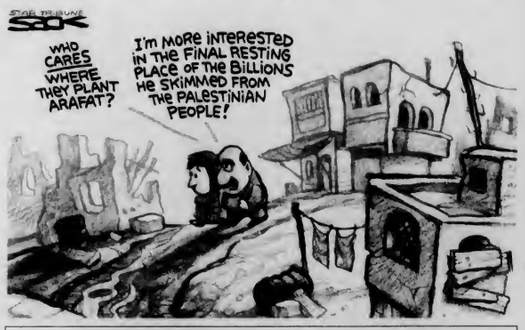
And why was immortality so important? It certainly wasn't death itself that these warriors feared. No, to them a figurative death was worse than losing their lives; the worse thing they could imagine was being forgotten.

Whether we acknowledge it or not, I think we have this same fear today. We know that even when we leave our world as we know it, it will go on existing without us, and frankly, we'd rather imagine that everything would fall apart in our absence. Everyone wants to believe that they have some effect on the people and places they love, and to imagine that life as usual will continue even without us seems to negate that.

Our fear, then, of starting over is not a fear of letting go, but a fear that we will be let go of. We're afraid that if we were ever to return, things simply wouldn't be the same. People will have moved on; places will have changed, and there will no longer be a place for us in that world of which we used to be such a big part.

When I return, some of the people I have grown to love, trust and depend on the most will be gone from this school entirely.

We are no different than the mythological Greeks; every ridiculous attempt we make to burn ourselves into others' memories is no different than when those warriors would rush into the arms of death in the hopes that they could live forever by going out in a blaze of glory. And while I hate to admit it, I've found myself doing that very same thing in the past few weeks.



I have never adjusted well to change, and I have never been one to transition well. Even in my third year here, it still takes a few days for me to make the switch comfortably from home to school, and school to home. Now I'm leaving the country, and when I return, some the people I have grown to love, trust and depend on the most will be gone from this school entirely.

Maybe this would be easier if our society didn't try to describe life with that cliché about one chapter ending in order for another one to begin? Sure, books may work that way, but is life really that one-dimensional?

At my eighth grade graduation, I gave a speech using a quote from the Semisonic song "Closing Time." (Yes, I knew it was about a bar, but trust me it worked in context of the speech.) The last line was "every new beginning comes from some other beginning's end." It seemed appropriate at the time because, well, who isn't anxious to bring an end to middle school? But now I find that idea completely contradictory to what I'd like to believe.

I'd like to believe that we carry with us the people and places we love no matter where we go, no matter what "chapter" we're in. I'd like to believe that the people to whom we really meant something don't forget us just because we're not physically there to remind them. And while, realistically, I know this has been the case in past experiences, it sure would be nice to find that blaze of glory before I go, just to make sure.

Paige Cram is a Collegian editor.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

STUDENTS RESPOND TO SGA/ALANA

STOP FIGHTING AND START HELPING

I have a favor to ask of the SGA and ALANA: stop hurting UMass. Every other day the newspaper features an article about the great conspiracy to dismantle ALANA and squash the voice of the minority on campus. I find these allegations to be both ridiculous and hurtful to the campus at large.

The SGA is an organization that has the potential to do some real good on and off campus; instead they waste time and money arguing over questions that have no immediate answers.

It seems that many people in the senate are using their elected position not to help UMass, but rather to bolster their own resume and go on some delusional power trip. What's funny is that by running these mudslinging campaigns against each other, the senators of the student government have done nothing but diminish their own power and make the average student suffer.

A speech followed by a march from the Student Union to Whitmore seems to be a weekly occurrence that supposedly helps people's voices be heard. Well, hear me now.

I've attended this University for three years and watched tuition rise while programs are cut. I've seen the price of books skyrocket and the faculty cut in half. I've seen students get chastised by other students for expressing their own views, just because they differ from the mainstream liberal view of this campus. I have not seen the SGA do much of anything about any of these problems.

When I think of the direction of this campus, the future involves a student body that is distracted from the issues that immediately affect every student and employee at this university, I see a place where any student who offers an opinion differing from that of ALANA's will be called a racist. I see a college that the average person will not have the money to attend.

I simply ask that ALANA and the SGA stop trying to save the world and start trying to save UMass. Please stop backstabbing each other and start working together to build a university that everyone can enjoy and afford.

Greg Nickerson
UMass student

A CALL TO DISBAND UNPRODUCTIVE CAMPUS GROUPS

In the Nov. 10 edition of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, a student wrote a letter proposing to disband the Student Government Association and the Office of African Latino Asian Native American Affairs, and reconstruct them "from scratch." Marisa Kanof noted the fact that most students do not know who represents them in the SGA. Personally, I do not care to know who supposedly represents me. Kanof also points out that ALANA is quick to label someone a racist as soon as they disagree with some of their policies.

The only function either one of these groups seem to serve is providing plenty of material for the Collegian to write about. I am fed up with hearing about the bickering between both groups.

I agree with Kanof in saying these groups should be disbanded. However, I do not think they should be reconstructed. If funding at UMass is such an issue (and it is), why not save the university's time and money by just getting rid of both organizations. As Kanof puts it "If most students don't know what either organization does, few students would miss them."

Disbanding the SGA and ALANA will not solve the funding issues at UMass, but it would help more than keeping the groups in tact. While we shuffle money around, why don't we sell the big screen TVs and buy somebody some books!

Jessica Rider
UMass student

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Would you want this to be your boss?

COURTESY MONOCHROM.COM

Another show in the 'Obnoxious' series

By Lindsey Ferris
Collegian Correspondent

It was worth the 45-minute delay caused by NFL football, to see the series premiere of the new reality show "My Big Fat Obnoxious Boss."

The reality show was created by the same producers of the hit show "My big fat obnoxious Fiancé."It a hoax that revolves around deceiving 12 professionals into thinking they are meeting a millionaire, N. Paul Todd, who will be giving them a professional opportunity of a lifetime. Each of these contestants is the top in their field, which includes such professions as, owner of a marketing firm, entrepreneur, and a car salesman. However, this billionaire is played by William August, an actor. August claims to be head of a company called "Iocor", which in Latin means, to joke. Throughout the series the millionaire boss will be harassing the contestants and acting in an irrational manner.

While participating in the show, contestants stay in a luxurious penthouse in Chicago and partake in absurd competitions each week. At the end of each show one person is eliminated for ridiculous reasons given by the boss.

In the premiere show the contestants were put into two groups, one consisting of the women, and the other of the men. Their first task was to name the other team in an attempt to "sabotage" them. The men were named "Conead" and the women, "Femron."

Their second mission: get as much money as they could by pan handling. They were given a limited amount of supplies such as cardboard, plastic cups, and torn tee-shirts. The women barely beat the men by receiving more money. The women were "rewarded" by an uncomfortable nights sleep on money filled mattresses. The men's team had to spend the night in tents in a dangerous alley. The losing team had to meet with the boss the next day to find out who would be eliminated. It came down to two men, Dan and Bob and in the end Dan was eliminated for wearing an expensive suit, according to the irrational boss.

Each week whoever survives elimination becomes the team leader and will not be eliminated the following week.

Each week viewers should tune in to see who gets eliminated and what the obnoxious boss will do next. This creative reality show is hysterical and extremely amusing to watch. The reasons to watch do not end there however; there is a twist! The prize money is real and there is an actual prominent boss making the decision of who to eliminate. The boss's lie will be revealed at the end.

"My Big Fat Obnoxious Boss" is on Sunday nights at 9 p.m. on Fox.

Arcade Fire makes noise in the industry

By Matt O'Rourke
Collegian Staff

The Arcade Fire's debut album, titled "Funeral," is anything but a sad affair; rather, the music is a pure celebration of life. Hailing from Montreal, this indie-rock sextet's compositions are exploding with energy similar to the Talking Heads, Flaming Lips, and Broken Social Scene. The Arcade Fire will breathe life into those who are waiting for the next big thing to arrive, because in terms of indie-rock, they may certainly be it.

Over the past year, members of the Arcade Fire lost many of their loved ones. Lead singer Win Butler lost his grandmother in March, and instrumentalist Richard Parry lost his aunt. Reeling from their losses, the band collaborated to give birth to their debut "Funeral." But they have overcome their personal tragedies in true fashion, and in the process, earned praise from "Pitchfork Media" and "College Music Journal" as one of the best bands this year. The Arcade Fire earned top honors at this year's CMJ Music Marathon in New York City.

The Arcade Fire break their tracks into different "Neighborhoods," each with its own distinct sound. The stage is set in "Neighborhood #1 (Tunnels)" with a climbing piano melody, driving disco/dance-hall drum rhythms, and an echoing guitar. As the track progresses, the speed quickens, and it is finally concluded with an eerie, yet charming, vocal chorale.

Arcade Fire
'Funeral'
Merge

The sextet combines a variety of sounds for "Neighborhood #2 (Laika)." A tribal drumming rhythm soon transforms into a French-sounding accordion, and they are finally bound together by an oriental string backup. It's something that simply must be heard to be understood fully.

"Neighborhood #3 (Power Out)" charges forward with a constant pulse felt in the drum kit and underlying support found in the orchestral sound provided by strings and xylophone.

"Neighborhood #4 (Kettles)" carries a folk music quality surrounded by a dark tone from the orchestra. Acoustic guitar accompanies the simple ballad sung by Butler; "they say a watched pot won't ever boil/well I closed my eyes, and nothin' changed/ Just some water getting hotter in the flames."

The Arcade Fire masterfully craft each song, with nearly all of the tracks building into something incredible and finales that will keep you replaying the song over and over again. "Une Annee Sans Lumiere" is one of the most amazing songs on the album. The French mixed with English lyrics are laid back as Butler sings a duet with his wife and co-songwriter, Régine Chassagne, and the finale explodes with guitar-driven energy.

"Crown of Love" is a dark ballad about love, held firmly together by a power-driven string section. Butler constructs a complex piece here, again with well-written lyrics. The surprise ending here is a techno-driven accompaniment to the string section that is sure to get your foot tapping.

"Haiti" and "In the Backseat" change the vocal lead from Butler to Chassagne,' which proves to be interesting. "Haiti" was written about Chassagne's parents' past as they fled from a dictatorship in the 1960s to New York. It serves the purpose of a near memoir on the album, reflecting on the terrible past while looking for hope in the future. "In the Backseat" features a childlike innocence, as Chassagne ponders the outside world from the backseat of a car. The instrumentation becomes heavier as the song progresses, relying on heavy drums and powerful guitar chords.

Overall, the Arcade Fire manage to collect a life's worth of images and emotions and fit them into a ten-track album. From bitterness and hope to love and solitude, this dark-toned album is uplifting as it progresses through its countless stages. This indie-rock epic that the Arcade Fire has constructed is only a sign of what good is to come.

Info for this article was taken from www.thearcadefire.com.

With their debut release "Funeral," the band Arcaded Fire has managed to release a freshman album that contains a great deal of heavy matter. Arcade Fire is a montreal based band, deals with themes of life, love, loss and regret on the first release.

Eve questions her fears of love, commitment and intimacy

Original Sin
Eve

I have been questioning my decisions a lot lately, and I will be the first to say that I have a problem with intimacy. I noticed a trend in how I deal with my relationships and I am saddened by this undeniable reality. I fear unnecessary pain caused by another, so I run away the minute casual fun turns into an emotional drama, and I refused to acknowledge this disability until I received very accurate feedback from my last article.

I read his depiction of my character and cried. I cried because it pinpointed my deepest flaw, and forced me to question the inevitable. His message reads as follows.

"I would say that in the past few years I've learned another two-part way to classify people. There are those who embrace the half of the human experience that means finding commitment, and accepting the pain that inevitably comes with that, and that there are those who prefer to live without allowing space for the possibility of love. For whatever reason, there are people like you, Eve, who have developed an ability to ignore an enormous part of the world. I know that you're jaded by all you've been through, and maybe it works out just fine for you to run around town, looking down your nose, like the world should just be the buffet of boy toys the way you want it, but some of us like to entertain the idea that the pain of love is evidence of its true value."

He is absolutely right. Why have I let one bad past experience inhibit the possibilities of finding love? How much longer can I continue to push eligible guys away? But I can't help but question another possibility: maybe I don't want to settle for anything less than what I want. Maybe I remain single because not one guy I have met is worth the emotional investment. It is common to see couples with wandering eyes and thoughts that there might be better, and I believe there always is. So why settle for anything less?

I have also learned another two-part way to classify people, and I apologize if it seems offensive. There are those who are simpler in their needs, and there are those who are too complex in their demands. The simpler people, I have found, are those that settle with what they have. They meet their partner and remain loyal to the commitment for as long as it lasts. These people are very fortunate in my view, only because life seems so much easier for them, but they never seem to question the possibility of better opportunities, new experiences, or learning how to make it as an independent. They will always be content. Some of my friends fall into this category, and I cannot help but admire their choices. However, when I ask them why they chose to settle, their answers infuriate me. They do not want to be alone.

Why do people fear loneliness? I would prefer to be lonely before I would settle for a comfortable companion any day. So I guess I assume the role of the more demanding stereotype. And I am comfortable with that. I may never find this person, but at least I will be happy in staying true to my demands. And in reply to such a perfectly articulate depiction of my character, I chose to live unattached until I chose not to. I know love, I also know pain, but I really know when someone is worth settling for.

A second look at 'Casablanca'

Revisiting the Classics

Jeffrey Horowitz

Characters have never been so universally easy to identify with as in the film "Casablanca." The structure of a screenplay has never been this flawless. The dialogue in the film literally seems to flow in the way they recite it.

With characters this commonly appealing, the fact that the story is so skillfully written, is some kind of phenomenon of winning coincidence. The main relationship, which is so heartbreakingly set against the backdrop of World War II, with the fate of the world up for grabs, it is emotionally grabbing. The way everything builds to an ending that works on all the right notes, the way the decisions that the characters make, the things we learn about them, the life altering events that occur in the meantime, are all intermixed. Everything ties together in a plot that is just masterful.

Who else could play these roles? Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman, of course. Without Bogart and Bergman, the movie wouldn't have been remembered and revered as it is today. Here is one of the best actors in the history of movies, and one of the best actresses in the history of movies, sharing the screen as a couple that are hopelessly and madly in love with each other. What man wouldn't have fallen head over heels in love with Bergman? Would any woman have been able to resist the cool, strikingly good looking, bad boy image that Bogart inhabits? To have these two actors fall in love was just perfect. Combine characters this appealing, dialogue this real and passionate, and a plot that is so flawless and you get what many people consider the greatest of all movies. Well it makes the # 5 spot on my list. The first two I have already reviewed for this column.

It opens amidst a World War II setting where we are informed, people are escaping from Europe, and especially an occupied France, to flee to "Casablanca." "Casablanca" is the most important of places. It is the stepping stone to Portugal, which would guarantee you a one way ticket to America. In America, people were free from the Nazi threat.

Casablanca though, was a neutral ground, with Americans, French and German citizens intermixed into one confused territory. Nazis marched looking for traitors, American Revolutionaries scurried the lands under the tunnels and bridges and in the shadows. They walked unnoticed and ready to fight and rebel at any moment against the Nazi regime. Most importantly present is their leader, Victor Laszlo (Paul Henreid), who will lead the fight to stop the Nazis and save the world. The Nazis have been chasing him for years.

When the film opens, we are told he has come to Casablanca. The key point here, is that with both sides warring on a neutral ground where citizens are given one last chance to either escaped from Nazi rule for good, or risk being arrested and sent to a doomed Europe, "Casablanca" is the African city that is acting as a kind of Purgatory. You're not caught by Nazis, you're not free in America, you're in the world's waiting room waiting for the chance to escape to freedom.

During the day "Casablanca" is shown as a town made up of stands where con men constantly try to sell citizens useless goods and restaurants where the food looks repulsive. In Casablanca the only useful accessory is alcohol and cigarettes. All people seem to do is drink and smoke. That is in the day. At night, all of Casablanca gathers in one club which is the towns night spot. The shops are emptied, the beds are absent of bodies, because they are all inhabiting one club that celebrates the lives of these selfish sinners with gambling, booze and illegal activity (most commonly the sale of stolen passes to leave "Casablanca" and finally pass through to Portugal).

The name of the club is "Rick's American Cafe" and Rick (Humphrey Bogart) is the owner that allows all to celebrate under in his place while he broods in lonely misery behind the scenes.

"He never drinks with anyone," the manager tells us early on. Casablanca focuses on his character throughout and Rick is a man so cold, sarcastic, selfish, cool, and indifferent that we fall in love with him. Guys want to be him, girls want to be with him, never has a bad boy character been this cool. The way he smokes his cigarette, drinks his gin, condescends onto all other characters, and talks in witty and composed dialogue that tells all who come near him "Go to Hell." He wins our affection as the smoothest and coolest antihero we've ever seen.

We can't help but wonder what made him so cold and bitter in the first place and with the arrival of Victor Laszlo we learn in a heartbreaking sequence what made him such a mean spirited cynic. A long time ago he fell in love for the first time in his life, with a strange beauty that he spent a mere two weeks with in Paris. The stranger, Ilsa (Ingrid Bergman) and the warm and affectionate Rick, were instantly in love and the feeling never left him. They planned to flee to America and get married and on the last day when they were supposed to leave Paris on a train to "Casablanca", she sent their friend Sam in her place, with a note dumping Rick for unspecified reasons. His heart is broken, he never recovers. Instead of dashing to America where he could be free, he stays in the middle ground of "Casablanca"; brooding in misery while others celebrate at his own expense.

Then Victor Laszlo comes walking into his club one night with Ilsa by his side and we learn that they are married. All the pain comes flooding back to Rick. She forces Sam to play their song, "As Time Goes by" on the piano. Rick charges out ready to curse Sam for playing the song. Then he sees Ilsa.

The plot involves some stolen papers that a rebel gave to Rick to hide in Sam's piano. The papers contain two passes out of "Casablanca" to Portugal. If Laszlo can get hold of them he will flee to America and form a movement to defeat the Nazis. If he doesn't the Nazis will inevitably find a way to catch him and throw him in a concentration camp. The only one with the access to the papers is Rick, who won't give them up for anyone. His soul has been wounded by Ilsa and if he sees fit the whole world will pay for it.

In one heart wrenching scene, he sits alone, drinking shot after shot of his strongest liquor, bangs his fist on the table with crying eyes, and complains with agony, "Of all the gin joints, in all the towns, in all the world, she had to walk into mine."

What "Casablanca" touches on most memorably is the greatest and most powerful of all themes: Love. It captures the pain, sorrow, and glory that love puts us through in every relationship. It embodies the possibility that maybe there is one person out there that can capture our hearts with an unrivaled passion. It so clearly explores the pain of losing a love that is greater then any you've ever had. Bogart has scenes that force him to show us a man with a broken heart and we can see the pain and sadness in his face and in his eyes. With love nothing in the world seems more important then getting and keeping the person you love; but in "Casablanca" the world is precisely what's at stake.

Jeffrey Horowitz is a Collegian Columnist.

COURTEST CASABLANCA

For years since its 1942 release, "Casablanca" has been hailed by critics and viewers alike as one of the greatest films of all time.

Worship at Dwight Chapel

WE ARE AN INTERDENOMINATIONAL EVANGELICAL CHURCH SERVING THE ENTIRE VALLEY SINCE 1886.

SUNDAY MORNING WORSHIP AT 8:30 & 10:45

FREE SHUTTLE FROM UMASS (HAIGIS MALL @ 10AM)

IF YOU ARE INTERESTED TO KNOW MORE ABOUT THE CHURCH, VISIT US AT

WWW.DWIGHTCHAPEL.ORG

For more information call 413-256-8059
Dwight Chapel, 885 Federal Street, Belchertown, MA 01007

A 'Segway' to the future of transportation

By Jessica Guynn
Contra Costa Times

A symphonic hum emanates from a Sunnyvale, Calif., neighborhood as helmet-clad players cruise eight inches above the grass on Segway superscooters, swinging their mallets at a small spongy soccer ball in an 8-mile-an-hour polo match.

Standing on his Segway platform like a modern-day gladiator is Steve Wozniak, gracefully leaning forward and backwards on the two-wheeler to propel himself across the field, popping the occasional wheelie.

From the pavement to the playground, the 53-year-old Silicon Valley icon and Apple Computer founder known as "Woz" has become Segway's top unofficial salesman in Silicon Valley. Wozniak gets such a charge out of the battery-powered Segway that he collects them like some would model airplanes and takes them wherever he goes.

He crams them six at a time into his Hummer, four into his Toyota Prius, then cruises the rolling hills of his Los Gatos, Calif., neighborhood and San Francisco's famously steep sidewalks (where Segways are officially banned out of concern that they endanger pedestrians, a contention that Segway and its customers vigorously dispute). He stops to chat up gawkers, sometimes letting them hitch a glide. After evening concerts at the Shoreline Amphitheater in Mountain View, he takes friends on moonlit trails where skunks scamper alongside the whirring scooters. He even hopes that his biographer will dedicate an entire chapter to Segways.

"It's just a lot of fun," Wozniak said. "You get addicted to it."

On this Sunday morning, however, he temporarily loses his customary equilibrium. Smacking the soccer ball, he wobbles then falls on his rear end. For a moment he smarts that the self-balancing contraption that he describes as an extension of his central nervous system has let him down. Then he climbs back aboard and floats away. "We will have to have an MIT award," hoots one of the players, all Silicon Valley techies and venture capitalists, "for Most Impressive Tumble."

The Segway Human Transporter clearly has a faithful following here in this digital incubator powered by microchips and misfits who know a thing or two about reinventing the wheel. Whether it will become fad or flop depends on Segway's ability to get traction outside of this silicon subculture filled with upwardly mobile technogeeks.

So far the superscooter's nearly two-year test drive with the general public hasn't exactly been smooth. This so-called "evolution in personal mobility" has begun with a whimper instead of the big bang everyone was expecting.

The megahyped 2001 launch was fueled by a leaked book proposal that built wild anticipation for the top-secret product known only by its code name. When he finally unveiled "Ginger" on national television, inventor and chief spinmeister Dean Kamen claimed the Segway would revolutionize transportation the same way the automobile did a century ago. It hasn't even come close.

Kamen predicted that the Segway LLC would sell 50,000 to 100,000 in the first year. But the company that refuses to release sales or production numbers was forced to reveal in September 2003 after a voluntary recall that it had sold just 6,000 scooters in six months. Sluggish sales won't help Segway fulfill Silicon Valley venture capitalist John Doerr's pre-release boast that the company would hit $1 billion in sales faster than any other start-up. The Wall Street Journal reported in February that Segway's 2003 revenue was $25 million.

Will Segway go anywhere? A lot is riding on that Darwinian question: the superscooter's future and the $130 million-plus that investors like Doerr have sunk into the company.

Part of the quandary is that even Segway's most evangelistic customers have a hard time articulating the mystique. "It's something you get once you actually experience it for yourself," said Alex Ko, a 33-year-old mechanical engineer and founder of the year-old San Francisco Bay Area Segway Enthusiasts Group, which sponsors polo matches and glides around the Bay Area, even a riding tour of the penguins and tigers at the San Francisco Zoo in August. "Explaining it in words is so difficult because it is so different than anything out there. People have kind of said, 'You think about what you want to do and it does it.'"

But until recently in most areas of the country, you couldn't even take the Segway for a spin before buying one. The only way to hook up with a Segway was through the company, specialty retailer Brookstone or on Amazon.com. Some used Segways also are up for sale on eBay.

Segway also faces the challenge of proving that it is more than just an expensive toy. In post-bubble America, there are just far fewer idle rich willing to shell out a small fortune ($2,995.95 for the smaller p series to $4,495.00 for the larger i series) for an alternative mode of transportation with limited use. Another possible hitch: The Segway faces opposition from some citizen groups.

To keep its business afloat and get sales moving, Segway LLC has ramped up its strategy of hawking the superscooters through authorized dealerships across the country to target commuters, corporations, retailers and warehouses and government agencies.

"The independent dealer network allows for a place where customers come, see, experience, try, buy and get service for their machines by passionate, experienced professionals in their home towns," CEO Ron Bills, who was brought in to jump-start sales, told Segway Chat, the online bulletin board for Segway riders, in June.

Kregg Williams, who owns California Speed-Sports, which now sells Segways alongside exotic European motorcycles and Italian scooters, says the strategy is working. Williams has found happy homes for 18 Segways in the past 2 | months, three alone to Wozniak, who piled them all into his Prius. Williams is banking $180,000 that even the busted Bay Area still houses plenty of disposable income and a pioneering spirit.

Most Segway fans welcome the strategy of building a national network of dealerships that sport the Segway name.

COURTESY SEGWAY.COM

The new mode of transportation. Makers of the Segway say that their product is the way of the future. Unfortunately, many people disagree claiming that the Segway is far to expensive for the average person.

Sunraise PRINTING & T SHIRTS across the street from Walmart

$6 EACH

CUSTOM Shirts
• FREE MINIMAL ARTWORK
• 24 MINIMUM
• SCREEN(S) EXTRA

586-7133

Panda East 熊猫

FINE CHINESE & JAPANESE CUISINE
591 North Pleasant St. Amherst, MA

Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!

OPEN HOURS:
Mon - Thur: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Fri & Sat: 11:30am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12pm-10pm
Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924

We accept OCMP and all major credit cards.

We serve Chinese and Japanese food and also feature a sushi bar.

On Campus Ring Sale

Promotional Pricing!
Gold Rings Starting at only $349

Date: Mon & Tues, Nov 15th & 16th
Time: 10 AM to 4 PM
Place: University Store, Campus Center

jostens™
www.jostens.com • 1-800-854-7464

Instant replay getting talk at MLB meetings

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP) – In the craziest play of October, Alex Rodriguez was called out for interference. New York Yankees general manager Brian Cashman agreed the umpires were correct to overturn their original ruling.

"They got it completely right, 100 percent," Cashman said this week.

"But you would hate to have a game, or a series or even a season come down to a play where they miss it and instant replay could have helped. So as far as instant replay, I'm in favor of it."

Now, after a pennant race and postseason dotted with reversed rulings, baseball will get another chance to see who else wants to give replay a look.

The topic is on the agenda for Thursday at the GM meetings. And there seems to be growing support among teams to join the NFL, NBA and NHL in using instant replay on calls such as fair or foul and homer or not, but definitely not balls and strikes.

"I think its time has come," Milwaukee assistant Gord Ash said. "The technology has improved and is there. I think there's a place for it."

Even if replay comes up for a formal vote – it did not go very far last year when GMs debated it – there's no assurance it would show up during games anytime soon.

"I don't see it," Bob Watson, vice president of on-field operations, said Wednesday. "And I don't think the commissioner is in favor of it, either."

Earlier in the day, GMs were briefed on plans to play a spring training game next March in Athens – Baltimore probably would be involved – and efforts to hold a World Cup-style tournament in early 2006.

They also talked about letting teams trade first-round draft choices and were told to be vigilant in verifying the ages of players signed in the Dominican Republic and Venezuela.

And GMs continued to talk about trades. Newly hired Omar Minaya of the New York Mets appeared the most itchy to make a deal, with speculation that he was looking at the likes of Sammy Sosa and Alfonso Soriano, along with exploring a Mike Piazza-for-Shawn Green swap.

But with so many procedural issues to sift through this week, the prospect of adding instant replay is intriguing.

The Cincinnati Reds asked that replay be included on the agenda. Their executives have talked about it internally for a couple of years, and they've heard from other clubs lately.

"I think there seems to be some level of understanding that getting the play right is what underscores this thought process," Reds GM Dan O'Brien said. "I don't think any of us have any idea of a timetable."

Said Brad Kullman, the Reds' director of major league operations: "It doesn't make sense that you might have a million fans out there watching on TV and knowing what happened while the umpires huddle without that benefit."

That said, there's no guarantee that umpires would want it.

"My sense is no," said former ump Richie Garcia, now an umpire supervisor. "I think we'd be fooling around with something that would take away from the game.

"Baseball is very traditional, but I'm not going to rule it out," he said.

Garcia worried that not every ballpark would be equipped with equal cameras to show replays from all angles. He also said he thought the concept of umpires huddling on close calls helped "take away the idea of instant replay."

Garcia was involved in one of the most disputed calls in October memory. He was working the right-field line in the 1996 ALCS when young fan Jeffrey Maier reached over the wall and grabbed the ball before Baltimore's Tony Tarasco could make a play, and it wound up as a home run for Derek Jeter.

This year, the umps eventually did make the right calls in key spots at the end of the year.

In mid-September, Manny Ramirez circled the bases after his drive to left field at Yankee Stadium was ruled fair. Moments later, the umpires correctly said the Boston star's shot hooked foul.

In Game 1 of the opening round between New York and Minnesota, the Yankees' Ruben Sierra hit a drive past the left-field foul pole that was called a home run. After the umps got together, they rightly changed it to a foul ball.

Then in Game 6 of the ALCS, Mark Bellhorn's shot to left field was originally ruled in play, thought it hit a fan in the front row at Yankee Stadium. After the umpires got together, it was properly called a home run.

Later in that game, Rodriguez wound up on second base after he swatted at Boston pitcher Bronson Arroyo's arm and knocked the ball loose. After all six umpires huddled, plate umpire Joe West said he had a better view than first-base ump Randy Marsh and called Rodriguez out.

New Seattle manager Mike Hargrove thinks replay on such plays might help.

"They got it right with A-Rod, but it could be a benefit," he said. "I mean, I don't want to see us spend 15 minutes waiting on whether a ball is fair or foul. And not on balls and strikes. But I could see it happening on selected plays."

Minutemen and Eagles square off at The Heights tonight look at The paper saying, 'Hey, Patrick Eaves this and Ryan Shannon this,' and get all wowed by that," Cahoon said.

HOCKEY from page 8

The Minutemen will certainly have their hands full just working out the kinks from last weekend, when they trounced the Merrimack Warriors 8-2 at the Mullins Center Friday night but were summarily dismissed with a 5-2 loss in North Andover Saturday. Cahoon doesn't want to dwell on the past, however.

"Last weekend is over. This is a 132-day season, and we're playing. And once you deal with making corrections; you correct the emotions that were there or weren't there, at some point you've got to park that stuff and move forward," Cahoon said. "Part of growing a team is getting it through those cycles of inconsistency, or some things you really can't put your finger on exactly, but you just keep moving forward."

Sunday, the Minutemen return home to face Mercyhurst. The Lakers are 3-5-0 overall, with a perfect 2-0 record in Atlantic Hockey contests, and make their first-ever appearance against the Minutemen when they visit the Mullins Center at 3 p.m. Mercyhurst is led by juniors Dave Borrelli and Conrad Martin, as well as senior David Wrigley, who all have seven points this season. Borrelli has six goals and an assist to top the Lakers' scoring chart despite missing two of their eight games.

Santana adds to his Venezualan legacy

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) – As joyous fans celebrated by honking car horns in Caracas, Johan Santana sounded overwhelmed. He became the first Venezuelan to win a Cy Young Award, and not only that, he was a unanimous choice.

"This is like a dream come true," he said after earning the American League honor Thursday. "I'm a little surprised that I ended up the season where I ended up the season."

The Minnesota Twins' left-hander received all 28 first-place votes in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America. Santana, who went 20-6 and led the AL with a 2.61 ERA and 265 strikeouts, became the first unanimous Cy Young winner since Arizona's Randy Johnson two years ago and the first in the AL since Boston's Pedro Martinez in 2000. He is the 18th unanimous winner overall, and the seventh in the AL.

Curt Schilling, 21-6 with a 3.26 ERA in his first season with the Red Sox, received 27 second-place votes and one third for 82 points. Mariano Rivera of the New York Yankees, who led the major leagues with a career-high 53 saves, received the other second-place vote and 24 thirds for 27 points.

"I'm surprised this has been a unanimous decision," Santana said. "I thought this was going to be a real tough race."

Santana traveled Thursday morning from his hometown of Tovar Merida to Caracas. President Hugo Chavez planned to congratulate him Friday.

"It's on national TV," Santana said. "Hopefully, in a couple of hours I'll be addressing the country and letting them know how I feel."

Santana was 13-0 with a 1.21 ERA in 15 starts after the All-Star break, mastering his changeup.

"I expected it. With the numbers he had, he couldn't fail," said Luis Aparicio, a Venezuelan voted to the Hall of Fame in 1984. "He's going to continue winning."

Voting was conducted before the start of the postseason when Schilling beat the Yankees in Game 6 of the AL championship series and St. Louis in Game 2 of the World Series despite pitching with a dislocated ankle tendon held together by sutures. Boston went on to sweep St. Louis to win the World Series for the first time since 1918.

"It was amazing," Santana said. "To me, he was just a hero. He did great things for Boston and for baseball. That's a role model for a young baseball player to follow."

Schilling, who led the major leagues in wins, has never won a Cy Young Award. He was runner-up for the third time, tying Johnson, a five-time winner, and 1957 winner Warren Spahn for the most second-place finishes.

Santana had a breakout season after going 12-3 for the Twins in 2003. Coming off surgery to remove bone chips from his elbow, he was 2-4 in 12 starts before beating the New York Mets on June 9.

After helping lead Minnesota to his third straight AL Central title, he beat the Yankees in the opener of their first-round playoff series and, pitching on three days' rest, left Game 4 with a 5-1 lead before New York rallied against the Twins' bullpen.

Santana, eligible for free agency after the 2006 season, lost in salary arbitration last February and earned a $1.6 million salary with no bonuses. Schilling, who had a $12 million salary, earned a $400,000 bonus for finishing second.

Houston's Roger Clemens won the NL honor Tuesday, his record seventh Cy Young Award.

SHERRI LARSON/ST. PAUL PIONEER PRESS

Minnesota Twins pitcher Johan Santana won his first Cy Young Award yesterday by a unanimous decision. He went 20-6 with a 2.61 ERA and struck out 265 batters. Curt Schilling came in second place.

Milloy returning to Foxboro

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) – Buffalo Bills safety Law-yer Milloy did a good job all week of laying low and avoiding questions about what it's like to be facing his former team, the New England Pat-riots, on Sunday.

Milloy's play, on the other hand, has spoken volumes. His presence has bolstered the Bills defense since he returned after missing the first five games with a broken right forearm.

"He's definitely made a big impact," cornerback Nate Clements said. "Just his presence alone back there, it's definitely helped."

In three games, Milloy has been credited with 34 tackles, the most by any Bills player over that stretch. And he recorded a key interception, his first since 2001, in helping seal Buffalo's 22-17 victory against the New York Jets last weekend.

The Bills (3-5) have won two of three with Milloy back.

During that time, the defense has limited opponents to an average 218 yards of total offense, as compared to 298 yards in the first five games. The defense also recorded eight of its 19 sacks this season and held opponents to converting just 10-of-29 third-down opportunities.

"He's a difference maker," coach Mike Mularkey said. "Your disguises are a little better. His experience is a big plus. Even in practices, you can tell there's a difference."

Milloy is a nine-year veteran and four-time Pro Bowl selection who is in his second year with Buffalo.

-Associated Press

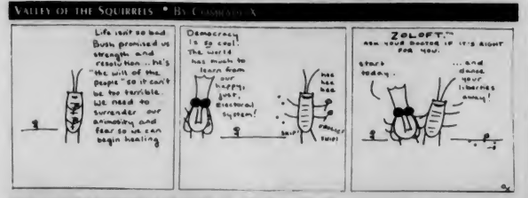
ALL ABOARD!

Grab your ticket and board this Magical Holiday Trip.

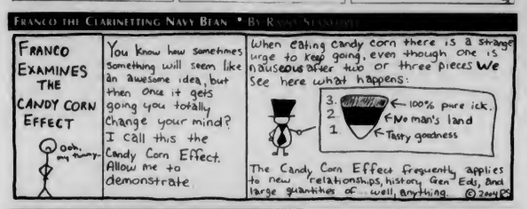
30% OFF select Polar Express titles, just in time for the Movie opening.

UMASS AMHERST
University Store and Textbook Annex
Phone: (413)545-2619
Fax: (413)545-4396
efollett.com ONLINE ON CAMPUS

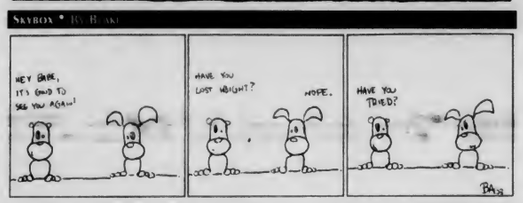
$1000 Zanna Shopping Spree!



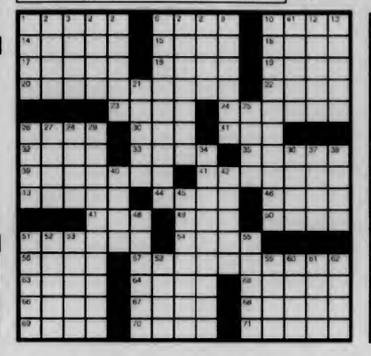
For 4 days only! Wednesday, November 10 through Saturday, November 13 we're celebrating our 33rd year of being Zanna. Come to our Anniversary Sale. Enter for a chance to win a $1000 Zanna Shopping Spree! All week we're having Big Sales. Join the fun. Shop the Bargains.



ONLY 2 DAYS LEFT!



CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
367 Russell St 413-587-4233
Schedule for 11/12/04 - 11/18/04
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
After The Sunset PG13 11:50 2:20 4:50 7:20 9:45*
Seed Of Chucky R 11:10 1:55 4:25 7:40 10:00*
The Polar Express G 11:20 11:45 1:55 2:25 4:40 5:05 7:05 7:35 9:35 10:00*
The Incredibles PG 11:00 11:30 1:45 2:15 4:30 5:00 7:15 7:45 10:10*
Alfie R 1125 200 445 735 1015
Since Save Nov 11 $1SAM
The Grudge PG13 1105 145 435 715 1025
Saw R 1155 255 500 730 955
Shall We Dance? PG13 1:50 7:25
Team America: World Police R 1:15 4:30 10:25
Ray PG13 11:35 4:00 8:00
Napoleon Dynamite PG 10:30
Ladder 49 PG13 7:50 10:35
SharkTale PG 11:40 2:10 4:20
Finest Hours Revived Dec 3
National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation-- Midnight
Tickets on sale now
*No Passes Accepted
Join & Unsubscribe at cinemark.com



Quote of the Day

"To err is human, but to really foul things up requires a computer."

-Farmer's Almanac

The Moan and Dove
The Moan and Dove
Fat and Ugly until you start drinkin
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

Thadhoots
AMHERST ONE STOP REGGAE & CULTURE SHOP
LARGE SELECTION OF REGGAE & HIP HOP MUSIC
DJ EQUIPMENT & ACCESSORIES
A WIDE VARIETY OF TEES & HATS
AFRICAN & JAMAICAN CRAFTS CARVINGS & PAINTINGS
POSTERS BOOKS CARDS SOUVENIRS JEWELRY
$5 OFF 2 CDS OR ANY $25 PURCHASE
253 NORTH PLEASANT ST DOWNTOWN AMHERST 253-4488

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Next time when a friend shows up in need, be kind.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your hair looked nice this morning, but now you have the worst case of hat-head ever.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Someone is going to look at you in a way that makes your heart palpitate.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Keep your options open. You never know what will happen.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You have every right to be pumped over what happened yesterday.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Today you're going to be entranced by the most gorgeous blue eyes.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Right now everything in your life is just be-a-utiful.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Expect a little case of déjà vu.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stop popping those pill like they're candy.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If you don't read the directions, you're going to goof everything up.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If only Peter Gabriel was singing "In Your Eyes" right now. That would be magic.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Today you'll see someone random on TV.

Want to get noticed?!
Place an ad in the Collegian
Call 5-3500.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.nc 1-781-979-9001

Mass Mahketing and Citibank present the Spend Smaht Tour 2004 featuring Mission: IMPROVable. Join us for a fun-filled evening of laughs, free food and most importantly, credit education. Blue Wall Nov 15 @ noon, Southwest Patterson Dorm Nov 16 @ 7pm, Central Gorman Dorm Nov 17 @ 7pm, Sylvan Cashin Dorm Nov 17 @ 8:30pm, Southwest Kennedy Dorm Nov 18 @ 7pm, SOM Atrium Nov 19 @ 6pm www.Students.UseCreditWisely for credit tips. Brought to you by Mass Mahketing and Citi Credit-Ed[sm].

Announcements

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech expetiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/ participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact Kawahara@linguist.umass.edu. Singapore English speakers contact mswlf@linguist.umass.edu

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser, (888) 923-3238, or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully appliances kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765, December / January - May, r_koro@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

Employment

SPRING INTERNSHIPS Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

Employment

Make money raking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential, No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Instruction

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CANMIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

Roommate Wanted

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Services

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling our Immigration forms.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Travel

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Travel

1SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4 FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endless-summertours.com

Spring Break 2005 Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888

Travel

SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM!
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRISM1, Online
1 800 426 7710

Wanted

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

Egg Donors Needed. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Ages 21-32. Non-smokers only. For more information please visit our website at www.robertmichoices.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hockey at The Heights

Minutemen travel to BC for early Hockey East test

BY ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There are two games on the slate this weekend for the Massachusetts hockey team, but to buy in briefly to a mantra that just about any coach will repeat, tonight is the one that matters most. However, that goes beyond any "one day at a time" concept that the Minutemen (5-4-0, 3-2-0 Hockey East) might have because tonight they'll face off against the Boston College Eagles at Conte Forum.

The Eagles (4-1-0, 2-0-0 HEA) were anointed the No. 1 team in Division 1 by both the U.S. College Hockey Online and the American Hockey Association/USA Today polls, earning near-unanimous decisions in both. BC was at the top of the polls last week as well and became the first team to hold onto the spot this season after beating Maine 3-1 at Alfond Arena.

Led by junior Patrick Eaves (three goals, eight assists) and senior Ryan Shannon (2 g, 5 a), as well as a cast of characters that once again represents the cream of the Hockey East crop, including freshman goaltender Cory Schneider, a Marblehead native who was selected in the first round (26th overall) by the Vancouver Canucks in the 2004 NHL Entry Draft.

Freshman Dan Bertram has enjoyed every minute of his first year spent on a line with Eaves and Shannon. With his linemates providing the feeds, Bertram has scored five goals this season, including the game winner against Denver, one of two goals he had against the Pioneers on Oct. 15. As a result, Bertram has been named Hockey East's Superskills Rookie of the Week twice in 2004. Also rising fast is Schneider, who has split time with senior Matti Kaltiainen in the Eagle net and earned two wins in as many games.

The Eagles are also coached by a newly minted legend, Jerry York, who is in his 11th season at Boston College, won his 700th career game against national powerhouse North Dakota, a 3-3 decision at Conte Forum on Oct. 29.

If that weren't enough, the Eagles have plenty of history on their side, with a 29-5-1 record all-time against the Minutemen, which includes a regular season series sweep in 2003-04. The last time UMass beat the Eagles was on Jan. 3, 2003 at The Heights.

Of course, you don't have to tell the Minutemen or coach Don Cahoon about the weighty advantage that the Eagles have heading into tonight's clash. "Whenever you play a team like BC, they were the No. 1 team in our league last year, and you go in there not thinking about anything except playing well ourselves, and you want to neutralize them but you can't

See HOCKEY on page 6

KAREN WINGERD/COLLEGIAN

UMass defenseman Marvin Degon works the puck against Merrimack at the Mullins Center last Friday. The Minutemen take on Boston College in Chestnut Hill tonight and Mercyhurst at home on Sunday.

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Hoop time

Anthony Anderson and the Minutemen will take on Concordia in their first exhibition game of the season tonight. The game will take place at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center. UMass finished a disappointing 10-19 last year but is considered to be one of the top A-10 teams this season.

R.I. celebrates Sox

BY ELIZABETH ZUCKERMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) – Donning newly purchased Red Sox championship gear and waving signs that read "Thank You" and "The Curse is Broken," hundreds of Rhode Island baseball fans gathered at the Statehouse Thursday to honor their heroes and snap photographs with the team's World Series trophy yesterday.

Boston Red Sox pitcher Bronson Arroyo and team president Larry Lucchino headed a delegation of team representatives to the Ocean State, the first stop on a New England tour to show off the trophy and share the historic win with fans across Red Sox Nation.

The Red Sox swept the St. Louis Cardinals last month to win the team's first title since 1918. After the win, Lucchino said he wanted to take the trophy to all six New England states, where residents have been long supporters of the Boston club.

The fabled curse on the Red Sox dates to the sale of Sox player Babe Ruth to the New York Yankees in 1920. The Red Sox won their sixth World Series title in 1918 before selling Ruth. After the sale, New York captured 26 championships before Boston won again.

"I've been waiting a lot of years for this," said 69-year-old Walter Briggs of Providence. He took in the scene from his wheelchair, a blanket bearing the Red Sox emblem across his lap.

Lucchino told fans the team is grateful for their loyal support.

"Nowhere in the baseball world is there anything like the passion and support that the Red Sox enjoy, and we're here to say thank you, thank you, thank you," Lucchino said.

Arroyo, who lived in Providence while playing for the Red Sox's Triple-A affiliate in Pawtucket, recalled a time when he sat on the Statehouse steps with his wife. Standing on those same steps at Thursday's celebration, Arroyo said, "I never thought I'd be standing up here talking to all you people about a world championship."

Susie Mershon of Cranston admits she'd had trouble believing the Sox would bring home the trophy this year after decades of trying.

But her husband, Rusty, had not given up, and their friends and neighbors were also waiting expectantly. When the win finally came, their doorbell rang and the celebration began.

"Our entire neighborhood was up drinking champagne until 1:30 in the morning," Rusty Mershon said.

The couple attended Thursday's event wearing matching championship sweatshirts and hats. Their dog, a Maltese named Shayna, wore a tiny Pedro Martinez jersey.

Gov. Don Carcieri outfitted himself in a puffy Red Sox jacket and a AAA cap. The governor said the Sox world championship combined with the Pawtucket Red Sox's hosting of the International League All-Star game last summer had made for an incredible year for baseball in Rhode Island.

UMass cross-country teams heading to NCAA Regionals

BY MARTHA POWERS AND ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's and women's cross-country teams will compete in the NCAA Regional Championship tomorrow, which could be the two teams' last races of the season.

Last year, the Minutemen placed 22 out of 33 teams. This year, coach Ken O'Brien is looking for his team to finish higher and to have his best race of the season.

"It is a lofty goal, but finishing in the top 15 would be a fitting conclusion to our season. It wouldn't require a superhuman performance, but it would be require an above-average race for our top seven runners," O'Brien said.

"The team has been working on their focus and concentration in order for them to make this necessary step. A lack of confidence is still a stumbling block for us, as we have not gained it as easily as our physical training," O'Brien said.

"Usually, the team is split; 30 percent who had a good race, 30 percent who had a bad race and 30 percent who were in the middle," O'Brien said. "Our goal is for everyone to run well on Saturday."

The race of about 250 runners will take place at Van Cortland Park in New York City. The course covers a distance of 6.2 miles, a little longer than the five-mile races that the Minutemen are used to.

Massachusetts is competing in one of eight regional races that will take place on Saturday. Included in the Minutemen's race are all of the New England states in addition to New York. The Regional races determine who will continue to compete in the final NCAA Champion ship race in Indiana next weekend.

Earlier this week, senior captains Matt Clark and Andy McCarron were announced as members of the Atlantic 10 Men's Cross Country Academic All-Conference Team.

"This is not surprising at all. Matt and Andy are two outstanding students and very hard workers," O'Brien said. "It is richly deserved."

In mid-October, it was the best teams from New England, two weeks ago it was the best from the Atlantic 10 Conference, and this weekend, the Massachusetts women's cross-country team faces the best teams from all of New England and New York at the NCAA Regionals. There have been plenty of challenges this season, but as usual, UMass has found nothing short of success, despite the tough contests and busy schedule. Without a meet last week, the team has had extra time to practice and equally important, time to rest.

"The best thing about this past week was the girls could rest up a little bit," coach Julie Lafreniere said. "People are recovering and getting their health back."

With a mix of both veterans and newcomers, the team is led by two-time Rookie of the Week recipient Christina Derosa and captain Alexis Anzelone. Derosa has placed first among UMass runners in every meet this year, and Anzelone has been exemplary, most notably throughout the second half of the season.

Cuisle Kierens and captain Amanda Dahlberg round out the top-four runners. Captain Tricia Silva, Kara Gillette and Ashley Davidson have been consistent all year long, staying relatively close to the front-runners.

While there is more running than a typical course, it makes for a decent spectator route because it loops around and finishes at the starting line. Hundreds of runners will be packed together in the first narrow "bridal" path for the first three quarter miles of the course, but it opens up after the tight start.

While morale is high for the Minutewomen, coming away victorious tomorrow will be very difficult.

Only the top two teams move on to national competition, and it is very complicated and tricky for individuals to advance.

UMASS

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday, Nov. 12

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Basketball	vs. Concordia	7:00 p.m.
Men's Hockey	at Boston College	7:00 p.m.

Saturday, Nov. 13

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Cross Country	NCAA Regional	11:00 a.m.
Women's Cross Country	NCAA Regional	12:00 p.m.

Sunday, Nov. 14

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Men's Hockey	vs. Mercyhurst	3 p.m.

'Pain of War' comes to Amherst College

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

MONDAY: • High: 53 • Low: 32
TUESDAY: • High: 50 • Low: 27
WEDNESDAY: • High: 49 • Low: 35

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Vitek leads Minutemen to successful weekend

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 48

Kozol talks on public education

BY MIKE TRAVIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students and faculty packed Amherst College's Johnson Chapel Thursday night to hear award-winning author and education activist Jonathan Kozol discuss the decay of public education, illiteracy and social injustice in America during a 90-minute lecture.

Kozol began his speech "The Artificial Meritocracy: The Silence of Our Academic Leaders on the Savage Inequalities and Deepening Resegregation of the U.S. Public Schools" by acknowledging teachers for the enormous impact they have on children's lives.

"I have a special fondness for teachers, especially for elementary school teachers," Kozol said. "Tough minded politicians should teach a class for one day."

Kozol said he had never intended to become a teacher. He said he became involved in politically charged issues like segregation in public education once he began his teaching career.

He talked about his education background as well. He attended Harvard University in the 1950s where he majored in English Literature, and later attended Oxford.

"I didn't really like Oxford, and at Harvard everyone pretended to be British," he said to an amused audience.

Kozol said he probably would have become an English Literature professor, but In 1964 he became greatly affected by the news that thousands of young people from the northern United States began traveling to Mississippi to break the back of segregation in the south by setting up "Freedom Schools." Word traveled of three young civil rights workers who were murdered by the Ku Klux Klan in Mississippi around that same time.

"Black folks had been lynched in the South for years," said Kozol. "This time it was a mixed group and the nation paid attention. That event changed my life forever."

Kozol, who has taught Black and Latino children all over the United States, first became a teacher at a public school in Boston's Roxbury section. He was later fired for "curriculum deviation" because he read a poem by Langston Hughes that was not on the approved curriculum list.

He documented his first year teaching experiences in his book, "Death at an Early Age: The Destruction of the Hearts and Minds of Negro Children in the Boston Public Schools" and received the National Book Award in 1968.

Kozol then spent most of his teaching career in the South Bronx of New York City known as Mott Haven. According to Kozol, the neighborhood is the poorest district in the nation.

He said that about one quarter of the children in Mott Haven suffer from chronic asthma. The neighborhood also has a high unemployment rate, large father incarceration rate and high rates of homelessness and HIV.

Some have criticized Kozol for speaking about social issues using his first-hand experiences, with relatively little statistics.

"This is modernized, millennial apartheid," Kozol said. "We celebrate Brown but it's been ripped apart over the years ... We've gone back to Plessey."

It costs only $8,000 a year to educate child in South Bronx, he said and $18,000 in a wealthy white suburb in Long Island.

"Our children come into their classrooms with a price tag on their foreheads depending on the accident of birth," he said. "Warm and personal attention by a teacher is one of the things that money buys."

Kozol said the most memorable experience he had with bringing a celebrity to meet disenfranchised children in the South Bronx, was when he brought Fred Rogers, more commonly known as "Mr. Rogers," to a classroom in New York City. They went by train to a church in the Bronx.

COURTESY ASSOCIATED

Award winning author Jonathan Kozol

Kozol's comment that he "was excited to take the trolley with Mr. Rogers" produced a roar of laughter from the crowd.

When Rogers and Kozol arrived at the classroom and a child spotted Mr. Rogers, a little boy wrapped his arms around him, kissed him on the forehead, and said, "welcome to my neighborhood, Mr. Rogers."

Kozol also spoke about high stakes testing at young that determine promotion or acceptance into gifted or talented programs.

"It's hypocritical holding seven or eight-year-olds accountable for these exams in a society that doesn't hold our highest officials accountable," he said.

Kozol ended his speech with words that gave him a standing ovation, "Life goes so fast. The old trees and the foolishness of children will outlive us all. God Bless, and use it well."

Kozol's leeture was sponsored by the Office of the President at Amherst College and the Victor S. Johnson Lecture Fund.

Former Israeli official speaks of acheiving peace in Middle East

BY MATT HOFFMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Tuesday night, 250 people came to Hasbrouck Hall to hear Avraham Burg, the former speaker of the Israeli parliament, give his views during a lecture, "Struggling Towards Peace in Times of Terror."

Burg touched upon the current events in Israel today. He divulged what he believes are the "deeper dynamics" leading to the current situation in the Middle East.

"Israelis were surprised and shocked at the Intifada," he said, referring to the uprising of Palestinian Arabs against Israel in the late 1980's.

He mentioned that Israel built infrastructure and created a social security system for Arabs living in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"But we, of all people, should understand the national aspirations of a people," he said.

Burg refers to the story in the Bible, in which the Israelites are slaves in Egypt, and are freed with the help of their prophet Moses. This story has been the basis for many stories of national freedom around the world, including African-Americans who compared their struggle against slavery to that of the Jews.

"Eighty percent of both peoples wanted to compromise and reach a solution," Burg explained of the 1990's. "We went from despair to total optimism."

In 1993, the Oslo peace process was underway, which included Arab recognition of Israel and the creation of the Palestinian Authority out of the former terrorist institution, the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Burg said he believes two things went wrong with the Oslo peace process. First of all, during this time, the presence of Jewish communities in the West Bank and Gaza Strip doubled. This action led Palestinian Arabs to lose trust in Israel. He explained what he believes to be the other side of the story as well.

"When Israelis listened to the hatred coming out of the mosques and schools, we stopped believing that Palestinians sincerely wanted a peaceful solution," he said.

Technological expansion, such as CNN, and the Israeli-developed Internet instant messaging system allowed the world to exist without borders. Once the beginning of the 21st century came around, violence and terrorism appeared in this world on a large-scale, entering into the psyche of people everywhere.

"We are now familiar with Falluja and 9/11," he said.

"We are living in a world with no borders... there are civilizations clashing within themselves and amongst themselves," he said.

"The clash between civilizations is much more complicated than simply Islam versus Christianity," he said. Rather, "the conflict is democracy versus theocracy."

The former politician stated emphatically, "Ladies and Gentlemen, God is back," referring to the title of his recently published book.

"We believe that we are the sole authority controlling us...but there are some who say – and this is where theocracies begin – 'only to a degree do we control ourselves,'" he said.

"When you define this clash the way I do, you realize it is not 'us versus

See BURG on page 3

Three arrested for slaying

GREENFIELD (AP) — A 19-year-old man was stabbed to death during the weekend, and three Northampton men were arrested Sunday and being held on murder charges, prosecutors said.

Police responding to a 911 call found Anthony Alves of Colrain lying on a street in Greenfield at 2 a.m. Saturday with several stab wounds. He was taken to Franklin County Medical Center, where he was pronounced dead. The medical examiner determined Alves died of blood loss due to multiple stab wounds.

Carlos Madera, 19, Ioell Madera, 18, and Santos Diaz, 22, all of Northampton, were arrested Sunday, the Northwestern District Attorney's office said.

All three men were being held without bail and were scheduled to be arraigned Monday in Greenfield District Court, each on one murder charge, the district attorney's office and police said.

Tony Alves, the victim's father, told the Boston Sunday Globe that police said his son was walking with a friend when he was attacked by a group of youths. He said he was told the youths used steel pipes and a machete to kill his son.

—Associated Press

Bus accident causes ten teens to be hospitalized

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (AP)— A tour bus carrying students from a Boston-area private boys school to George Washington's Mount Vernon home on Sunday had a large portion of its roof sheared off when it failed to clear an arched bridge.

Ten of the 29 students on board suffered minor injuries, U.S. Park Police Sgt. Scott Fear said. None of the injuries were considered life threatening, he said.

The bus was carrying students and a chaperone from the St. Sebastian's School in Needham, Mass. It was traveling with another bus on the George Washington Parkway, a scenic four-lane road which runs alongside the Potomac River in northern Virginia.

According to police, the bus was in the right lane and crashed into the arched bridge in Alexandria. Signs posted along the parkway warn buses to move into the left lane ahead of the bridge because of height restrictions, Fear said.

The injured were taken to three Washington-area hospitals. The rest of the group boarded other buses.

Federal inspectors are expected to look at the bridge and the bus on Monday.

—Associated Press

Iran suspends uranium research

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Iran notified the U.N. nuclear watchdog in writing Sunday that it would suspend uranium enrichment and related activities to dispel suspicions that it was trying to build nuclear arms.

With its move, Iran appeared to have dropped demands to modify a tentative deal worked out on Nov. 7 with European negotiators, agreeing instead to continue freezing enrichment – the process to make either nuclear fuel or the core for nuclear weapons – and also to suspend related activities, diplomats told The Associated Press.

"Basically it's a full suspension," said one of the diplomats, speaking on condition of anonymity. "It's what the Europeans were looking for."

Shortly after diplomats revealed the Iranian move, Tehran's top nuclear negotiator, Hossein Mousavian, confirmed that his country was giving its "basic agreement" to a temporary suspension.

"We accept suspension as a voluntary measure on the basis of agreement with the European Union," Mousavian said on Iranian state television, emphasizing that his country viewed the move as a concession for "confidence building" and not a "legal obligation."

As part of the agreement, "Europe will support Iran's joining the international group of states possessing the ability to manufacture nuclear fuel" once the suspension ends, Mousavian said, signaling yet again that Iran viewed the freeze as temporary.

—Associated Press

Boston Police identify officer who shot Emerson student in Red Sox riots

BY THEO EMERY
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOSTON — Police publicly identified for the first time on Friday the officer who fired a pepper-spray pellet into a crowd of celebrating Boston Red Sox fans, fatally injuring an Emerson College student.

Officer Rochefort Milien fired his pepper-spray pellet gun at a fan during the Oct. 21 disturbance, but missed and instead hit Victoria Snelgrove, 21, police said in an update of the investigation into her death. The shot hit Snelgrove in the eye, fatally injuring her.

Snelgrove, a journalism major from East Bridgewater, was among thousands of college-aged fans who flocked to Kenmore Square and Fenway Park when the Red Sox beat the New York Yankees for the American League pennant.

Messages left for police union officials were not immediately returned Friday night.

The investigation indicates that at least four people were hit by the projectiles, including Snelgrove. Officer Milien, a grenadier assigned to the police Special Operations unit, is certified to train officers on the use of the weapon.

Police spokesman David Estrada said there would be no further police comment beyond the statement.

The police statement, which Estrada described as an update of the police investigation into the death, described chaos around Fenway and Kenmore Square as the crowd turned from celebratory to violent, attacking cars, throwing debris at police, and lighting fires as the night wore on.

The statement described how fans attacked a car trying to turn down Landsdowne Street from Brookline Avenue. The crowd surrounded another vehicle as it left a commercial garage, trying to flip the vehicle with the occupants still inside, crushing in the roof and smashing the windshield.

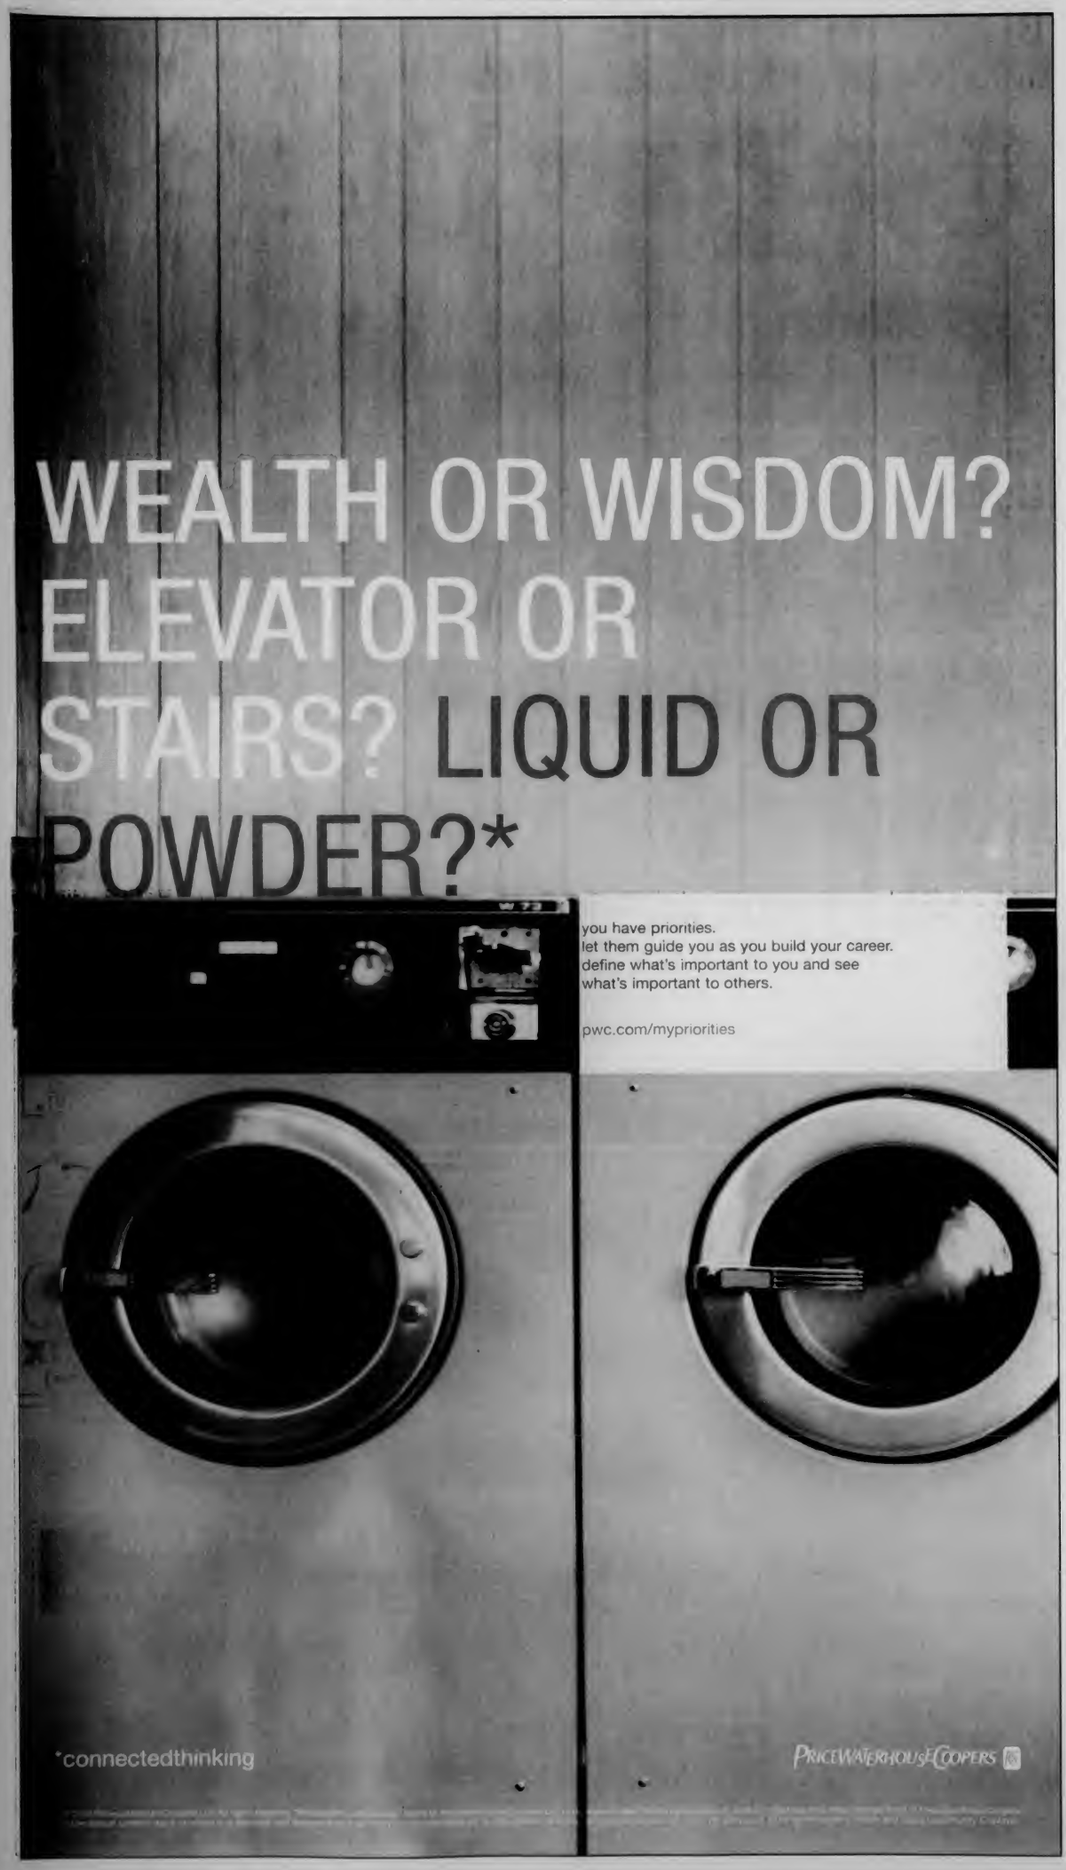
When a unit on horseback came to the occupants' rescue, allowing them to get to safety, the crowd then turned its attention to the mounted police, throwing coins, burning paper, bottles and other debris at the police and the horses. One horse's tail was burned when it was struck by flaming debris.

Deputy Superintendent Robert E. O'Toole Jr. authorized the use of the pellet guns known as the FN303, which is made by FN Herstal. He fired the weapons at specific individuals, as did Officers Sumil Silta and Milien. Milien's weapon hit Snelgrove, who was about 25 to 30 feet away.

"Victoria Snelgrove was not targeted; she was struck when the projectile missed its intended target," the statement said.

On Friday, The Boston Globe reported that O'Toole was not certified to use the FN303, contradicting statements from O'Toole's lawyer that he was certified and "eminently qualified" to use the weapon.

The BPD purchased the FN303 guns to assist with controlling protests during the Democratic National Convention last summer, but had not used them in crowd-control situations outside training before the Fenway Park shootings.



Civil rights advocates angry over Snelgrove's death are circulating petitions seeking a temporary ban on the department's use of the so-called less-lethal weapons. Police officials since have suspended their use pending the outcome of the investigation.

MATTHEW REDINGER/COLLEGIAN

Casino Night!

Resident Assistant Joshua Parker deals cards in a game of Black Jack at Casino Night in McNamara Hall on Wednesday. The night was sponsored by the McNamara House Council for gambling awareness and fun.

Burg shares his views on acheiving peace in Israel them.' This clash goes further – it is within societies (including Judaism, Christ-ianity, and Islam) and between these societies and religions."

BURG from page 1

"Israel is like Microsoft." He explained, "What you see is not always what you get. Today's conflict is not a Biblical, tribal conflict."

Burg, a religious Jew, explained that every time there is a suicide bombing, Israelis view the atrocity as the Holocaust all over again.

"As if the trauma never ended; every killing reminds us of all the millions who perished under Nazi control."

In 1948, the Israelis sacrificed 1 percent of their population who died in defense of the State of Israel to secure a future for the Jewish people.

"This equals a loss of 2.5 million Americans in less than a year. That is a huge blow."

Later, Israel gave the entire Sinai Peninsula, which is three times the size of Israel, to Egypt so as to secure a peace treaty with that Arab nation.

Burg told the audience that the current situation is extremely difficult because the Jews have rights to the West Bank – the cradle of Jewish civilization.

"King David was born in Bethlehem. He became king in Hebron. Even in Jericho, we had some Biblical prostitution experiences," he said.

All of the cities mentioned are currently under Palestinian Authority control.

Burg underscored the importance of the land of Israel to the Jewish people.

"Israel is a unique national among the family of nations. Christians and Muslims have many nations in which they can express their faith. We can exercise our Jewish faith in one place only. Every Israeli understands this."

However, Burg divulged ominous statistics, which predicted that in ten years, Jews would be a minority in the land that Israel currently controls. Israel must either give up some land, or lose status as a democracy.

This event was sponsored by UMass Hillel, and co-sponsored with the UMass Office of Jewish Affairs, the Judaic and Near Eastern Studies Deparment at UMass, and the Five College Hillel.

Radio station owner admits to stealing millions from clients

By Mark Jewell
Associated Press

BOSTON — The owner of a Boston business news radio station sent a tape to federal securities regulators in which he admitted buying the station with millions of dollars he stole from client deposits with his investment management business, the Securities and Exchange Commission alleges.

After sending the tape by delivery service, Bradford C. Bleidt attempted suicide late Wednesday or early Thursday, a spokesman for station WBIX-AM told The Associated Press. Bleidt, 50, remained in critical condition Sunday at a Boston hospital, WBIX spokesman George Regan said.

The suicide attempt came after Bleidt had attended a Wednesday evening party at a downtown hotel to celebration of the station's new 24-hour format and new ownership that is buying WBIX in a deal expected to close this month.

A SEC civil complaint filed in U.S. District Court on Friday says a tape delivered earlier that day contained a confession from Bleidt, who also runs a Boston-based financial planning firm called Allocation Plus Asset Management Co. Inc.

On the tape, Bleidt said he agreed to buy WBIX in 2002 with money diverted from client business accounts, and had stolen money for years before purchasing the station.

"He's admitting to having stolen tens of millions of dollars over 20 years," Silvestre Fontes, senior counsel for the SEC's Boston office, told the AP on Sunday.

Earlier this month, a client, identified by SEC officials as a Greek Orthodox church, asked for the return of $1.5 million it had invested through the investment business, Bleidt said on the tape.

"There is a client that needs a million and half dollars wired into their account that's supposed to be there this morning, and obviously, it's not going to be there this morning because the money's gone. I stole it. I used it to buy a radio station, believe it or not," Bleidt said on the tape, portions of which are quoted in the complaint.

WBIX spokesman Regan did not offer details on the suicide attempt. He also declined to comment on the SEC complaint, first reported Sunday in the Boston Sunday Globe and Boston Sunday Herald.

"Brad is a very good person," Regan said. "It's just been a horrific nightmare for the family. No one knows exactly what happened."

A phone message left at the Bleidt home in Manchester-by-the-Sea was not immediately returned Sunday. Police in the community north of Boston also did not return a message.

Bleidt's wife, Bonnie, is the on-air host of a show on WBIX and is the station president.

Bleidt agreed to buy the station in November 2002 and planned to sell it this year to Christopher Egan, son of EMC Corp. chairman and founder Richard Egan.

On the tape, Bleidt apologized for stealing from clients.

"I'm deeply sorry, and I don't expect to ever be forgiven for this," he said, according to the SEC complaint. "I'm going to hell, and I've been in hell for years, just with the terror knowing what I've done and the guilt of who I'm doing it to."

On the tape, Bleidt said for years he had taken money from new clients' investment accounts and deposited them into a personal account at Sovereign Bank. He said he was cautious until recently to ensure he had enough cash on hand if a client decided to withdraw investment money.

Bleidt said none of his co-workers were aware of his theft.

Insurgents storm Iraqi police stations

By Tini Tran
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Insurgents stormed two police stations Sunday in the strife-ridden city of Mosul, killing at least six Iraqi troops as attacks spread throughout Sunni Muslim areas following the U.S.-led assault on Fallujah.

Marines found the mutilated body of a Western woman as they searched for militants still holding out in Fallujah, the former Sunni insurgent stronghold.

The woman could not be immediately identified, but a British aide worker and a Pole are the only Western women known to have been taken hostage.

At least 38 American troops and six Iraqi soldiers have been killed in the fighting in Fallujah. The number of U.S. troops wounded is now 275, though more than 60 have returned to duty. U.S. officials estimated more than 1,200 insurgents were killed in the weeklong fighting.

"The perception of Fallujah being a safe haven for terrorists, that perception and the reality of it will be completely wiped off before the conclusion of this operation," said Lt. Gen. John Sattler, commander of the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force.

U.S. forces have spread throughout the city although it could take several more days of fighting before the city is secured, American officials said. U.S. forces on Sunday attacked a bunker complex in southern Fallujah where they discovered a network of steel-reinforced tunnels filled with weapons, an anti-aircraft artillery gun, bunk beds, a truck and a suspected weapons cache, according to a statement from the U.S. military.

U.S. aircraft attacked insurgents hiding "in numerous buildings throughout the city," the statement added.

Fighting in Fallujah was ebbing, but insurgent attacks appeared to escalate elsewhere in Sunni Muslim areas of central and northern Iraq.

Saboteurs set fire Sunday to four oil wells in Iraq's northern fields, setting off successive explosions in Khabbaza, 12 miles northwest of Kirkuk, oil officials said.

Heavy explosions rattled central Baghdad near the Palestine and Sheraton hotels after nightfall Sunday, followed by bursts of sporadic gunfire. The U.S. military said initial reports indicated rockets or mortars had struck the area, killing two Iraqis and wounding another.

About an hour later, about four more large explosions rocked the Green Zone, headquarters of the U.S. and Iraqi leadership. At least one private security guard was killed. Clashes were also reported on Haifa Street, a center of insurgent support in the heart of the capital.

More than a dozen insurgents attacked the Polish Embassy in Baghdad with automatic weapons Sunday, and embassy guards returned fire in an exchange that lasted for a half hour, a Polish Foreign Ministry spokesman said in Warsaw. No one was reported killed or wounded.

In Mosul, where an uprising broke out last week in support of the Fallujah defenders, militants raided two police stations, killing at least six Iraqi National Guards and wounding three others. One insurgent was killed and three others were wounded before Iraqi security forces regained control of both stations, witnesses said.

Insurgents also set fire to the governor's house, destroying it and damaging his car in northern Mosul. Governor Duraid Kashmoula also said the curfew will continue to be imposed on the city from 4:00 p.m. to 6:00 a.m.

A gunbattle erupted Sunday between militants and U.S. troops in the main market in the northern town of Beiji, killing at least six people and wounding 20 others, according to witnesses.

The clash followed an attack in Beiji against American soldiers, who responded with tank rounds and Hellfire missiles, the U.S. military said.

A dozen explosions rocked an American base in the western part of Ramadi, about 30 miles west of Fallujah, after insurgents fired missiles. Witnesses reported seeing flames and smoke billowing from the base.

One U.S. soldier was injured when a suicide bomber blew up his car near a U.S. convoy traveling between Balad and Tikrit, the military said. A Bradley fighting vehicle was damaged by a roadside bomb in Baghdad, injuring one soldier, the military said.

One Marine and an Iraqi soldier were hurt when five mortar shells struck a checkpoint outside Fallujah.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3500 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Peter Foundas
Managing Editor Andrew Merritt
Business Manager Rich Pacheco
Production Manager Cory Rosenberg
Night Supervisor Cameron Woods
Advertising Manager Tiffany Sugalski
Editorial Production Samantha Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Meghan Healy
Comics Editor Alyson Zillmann
Editorial Editor Paige Crum
News Editor Erika Lovley
Photo Editor Matthew Reid
Sports Editor Mike Marzelli
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Josh Kiggans
Finance Manager Hirak Shah
Accounting Clerk Virginie Frecaut
Human Resource Sandra Marquez
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Josh Greenberg
Assistant Business Jachon Sorenson
Assistant Finance Thomas Hecht
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Advisor Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Mike Busach
Asst. Arts & Living Monique Jemmott
Assistant Editorial Yousef Munayyer
Assistant Editorial Allison Edles
Assistant News Julie O'Donnell
Assistant News Dan O'Brien
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern
Assistant Sports Jeff Howe

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aught Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Mike Marzelli
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Adrienne Bossi
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha M. Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Amanda Allen, Aly Zillmann

VISIT US ON THE WEB @
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Scott Peterson found guilty of murder

Crowd rejoices outside courthouse upon hearing verdict

By Brian Skoloff
Associated Press

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. — The jury that convicted Scott Peterson saw a man with two faces: in public, a loving father-to-be with a steady job and stable home, and in private a cheating husband who yearned for bachelorhood and was willing to kill for it.

Convicted Friday of murdering his pregnant wife and her fetus, Peterson must now present a unified image on two fronts- he must convince jurors that his life is worth sparing while arguing to the courts that he was wrongly convicted.

Some experts said he might have a chance to win an appeal, given the dismissal of two jurors during deliberations. After his sentencing, defense investigators are likely to interview panelists, looking for any signs of misconduct.

"These jurors are about to go under the microscope," said Loyola Law School professor Laurie Levenson.

Peterson faces life in prison or the death penalty for the first-degree murder of his wife, Laci, and second-degree murder of the fetus.

While the first part of the trial focused on evidence, the penalty phase, beginning Nov. 22, will be laced with raw emotion as rules of evidence that prohibit inflaming jurors are cast aside.

Blockbuster testimony is expected from Laci Peterson's mother, Sharon Rocha, who will testify about losing a 27-year-old daughter and the grandson she was waiting for.

"She's going to get up there and she's going to break down. Her voice is going to crack," said Daniel Horowitz, a criminal defense attorney and regular trial observer.

Peterson is unlikely to take the stand and beg for mercy- doing that would require him to admit to the murders, and throw away any chance of arguing his innocence. Instead, testimony will likely include pleas from his parents to spare his life.

COURTESY COURTTV.COM

A crowd rejoices upon hearing guilty verdict.

University salaries rising with student tuition

By Justin Pope
Associated Press

Tuition is rising sharply and many schools are still fighting through budget cuts. But the salaries of the highest-paid college presidents are also increasing, according to a survey out Monday.

The number of university presidents earning more than half a million dollars jumped again this year – though overall they remain a small minority.

Seventeen presidents of public universities and systems will earn more than $500,000 this year, up from 12 last year and six the year before, according to The Chronicle of Higher Education's compensation survey. Tuition at four-year public colleges rose 10.5 percent this year.

At private colleges and universities, the number of presidents earning more than $500,000 rose from 27 to 42 in fiscal 2003, the last year for which data are available for the private institutions.

Johns Hopkins University President William Brody's total compensation of $897,786 topped all college presidents.

The University of Washington's Mark Emmert is the top earner among public presidents, with a package that will total $762,000 in pay and benefits.

Several education experts said the figures aren't necessarily a sign of excess, given the competition for strong leaders, who are at least as valuable in tough times as in flush ones.

Many of the top earners preside over complex institutions and manage thousands of employees. At schools like Johns Hopkins, they also oversee teaching hospitals.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Get your Bar Code® Certification
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
November 19th-21st
The Garden Room
Lord Jeffery Inn
Boltwood Ave., Amherst
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Bring a completed puzzle to any Spend Smaht Tour 2004 performance and receive your Spend Smaht goodie bag
FREE PIZZA AND DRINKS!
(While supplies last)
Answers to the crossword can be found at:
www.Students.UseCreditWisely.com
Across
1. Late or missed payments, exceeding the credit line on cards, defaulting on loans or declaring bankruptcy can lead to?
2. If no outstanding balance on your credit card, the time you have to pay new balances before interest charges apply is?
3. The number of days between your last statement date and your current statement date is your?
4. The amounts of money that you have borrowed and not paid back
5. Information such as missed or late payments will be on this for up to 7 years
Down
1. When you open a credit card account, you agree to pay a percentage of the outstanding balance each month as a Finance Charge
2. The information on your can either qualify or disqualify you from obtaining credit cards, mortgages, loans, car or apartment leases and possibly employment
Spend Smaht Tour 2004
Nov15@12pm Bluewall
Nov15@7pm Lewis
Nov 16@ 7pm Patterson
Nov17@7pm Gorman
Nov17@ 8:30pm Cashin
Nov18@7pm Kennedy
Nov 19@ 6 pm SOM 137
Brought to you by Mass Marketing and Citi Credit-ED℠
citi

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 2004

"What we have to do is to be forever curiously testing new opinions and courting new impressions." -Walter Pater

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Brokaw stepping down a smart move

With the recent presidential election having drawn to a close, NBCs Tom Brokaw is also drawing his career to a close, vacating his anchor chair on Dec. 1, after 22 years of working for NBC. The long-time news anchor can be seen as paving the way for many of today's older, more experienced anchors in departing from the business. In addition to Tom Brokaw, Peter Jennings and Dan Rather are among the other two staple news anchors that are seen to be nearing the finish line of their journalistic careers. While it is understandable why people such as Rather and Jennings would not want to leave their current positions broadcasting the nightly news, following Brokaw's example would allow them to end their careers gracefully with the same amount of respect.

Dan Rather in particular, should especially consider following in the footsteps of Brokaw given his recent scandal involving relying on false documents to attempt to discredit President Bush. While it is assumed, and expected, for one such as Rather to be very protective of his status at CBS, given his recent poor performance in the field of journalism, he should also step down. Rather, who is 73, has been a permanent fixture on the nightly news for many years and has been accepted by the American public as a trustworthy source for the news. After his scandalous episode, that reputation has been indisputably tarnished and he deserves to step down from the throne of CBS as gracefully as he now can.

Looking towards the future of broadcast media, there are many young, aspiring hopefuls out there looking to take over the coveted positions such as those currently held by Rather and Jennings. Those positions, although not likely going to applicants fresh out of college, will still have to be awarded to people that are going to have less experience than their predecessors. The American public, who has been viewing some of these broadcasters for so long, may be reluctant to open their living rooms to a new nightly news anchor. However, integrity and appeal come with experience and we must all remember that Tom Brokaw was once a fledgling journalist getting his foot in the door as well.

The anchor that is set to take Brokaw's place, according to The New York Times, is 45 year-old Brian Williams, who is going to have to live up to the extremely high expectations of the American public that Brokaw as set for him. With a new, younger anchor, the network seems to be trying to appeal to a new demographic. Such is the case whenever the country seems to be visibly swaying in its tendencies. The new anchor is paving the way for a new stream of people to come in, not to solely replace the former broadcasting greats, but attempting to pick up where they left off. It is for this reason that Tom Brokaw's departure from NBC is a wise move and should serve as an example to other prominent newscasters who have dominated the nightly news scene for many decades.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Palestinians' time for change

Ramzi Kanazi

Yasser Arafat died at 3:30am on Thursday, Nov. 11 of unknown causes in a Paris hospital. He was buried in the West Bank town of Ramallah after an official state ceremony in Cairo, Egypt.

After his death, MSNBC repeatedly noted, "Israel has agreed to let Arafat be buried in Ramaliah." Other news programs reasserted this caption. Few statements, however, mentioned that he wished to be buried in the al-Aqsa Mosque compound located in East Jerusalem, which is currently occupied by Israel.

Opinions of Arafat range considerably. He has been described as a freedom fighter and a master terrorist, a guerilla leader and a Nobel laureate. Many Palestinians regard him as the "father of Palestine" while others feel that he sold them out. Israelis have seen him as both a partner for peace and an intransigent.

Some Palestinians would still refer to Arafat by his nom de guerre, Abu Ammar, a name that was more commonly used in his earlier years. Many recognized him as a symbol of their struggle, and they relied on him in the hopes of recovering their losses. Conversely, some understood him as a corrupt leader who would flip-flop like John Kerry for popularity and power while embezzling money from the people of Palestine. They were disturbed by his authoritarian nature and his refusal to relinquish more of his power to others who could effectively communicate with Israel. Still, most Palestinians could equate his struggle with that of their nation.

Many Israelis saw him differently. A number of right-wing groups and Zionist fundamentalists celebrated Arafat's death. An article on Haaretz.com, an online Israeli news service entitled, "Right-wing groups welcome Arafat's death," describes the hatred espoused in these people over a man whom they felt was the cause of much of their suffering. "The Pikuach Nefesh organization, an association of rabbis who oppose territorial concessions, said that 'the day of Arafat's death should be a day of rejoicing,' as Arafat was 'the Amalek and the Hitler of our generation'." These rabbis were so disgusted that they would go as far as exploiting the Holocaust to make their point.

Now that the man whom they considered an obstacle to peace has passed, it is incumbent upon these two leaders to facilitate that peace.

Two important opinions of the Palestinian leader, Bush's and Sharon's, laid much of the blame of the current conflict on him. They felt that he was not an adequate partner for peace and chose to stop negotiations with him. Bush supported Sharon's unilateral actions of building the apartheid wall/anti-terror fence (whatever you call it) that encroached up to several kilometers within the occupied territories. Bush's unwavering support for Sharon indicated that, to our president, neither the Palestinians nor their leader was significant. Sharon's actions clearly illustrated this same point.

Now that the man whom they considered an obstacle to peace has passed, it is incumbent upon these two leaders to facilitate that peace. Promises made in the past will resurface, and they must address them. Sharon can no longer blame Arafat for his own misdeeds, and Bush cannot blindly follow the lead of the Israeli Prime Minister.

They have the opportunity to show that they are committed to working with the Palestinian people. They can express concern for the indigenous population through such extraordinary measures as letting them live on their own land, unoccupied or allowing them to freely travel to visit their friends and relatives in neighboring towns without intimidation.

The Palestinians themselves should also think about refraining from violent acts in these times. Suicide bombings will not serve their purpose vis-à-vis an obstinate Likud party. They have to come together to elect a leader who will competently work with Israel to achieve peace and allow for a more prosperous future. Finding such a leader may be difficult, but unlike Arafat, a new one will likely be more fungible. Indeed, the new officials should be treated less symbolically and evaluated for their function and effectiveness.

Arafat was a great leader with striking charisma, but he failed to achieve his main goal of seeing a Palestinian state. It is now time for the Palestinians to collectively accomplish what one man could not. May the soul of a leader who brought the struggle of his people to the fore rest, and may his people take action and complete the mission he set forth.

Ramzi Kanazi is a Collegian columnist.

Life's plan works in the end

Becky Martins

Life may be far from predictable, but it is necessary we at least give it a chance.

From the time I was in the fourth grade, my parents forced me to get straight A's. My punishment for a B+ or lower was always the threat of grounding, but what proved to be worse was witnessing my father's disappointment. Though I had two sisters, my parents would constantly tell me I could be the one family member to 'make it'. If I did not work hard from the start, I would get nowhere in life. Soon, I began to believe I would let down everyone, including myself, if I did not do well.

By high school, my strong work ethic seemed to have paid off. I graduated third in my class with a 4.2 GPA and good SAT scores. I was captain both my junior and senior years in field hockey, editor-in-chief of my high school newspaper, as well as a participant in a variety of other sports and clubs. I also found the time to take honors and AP classes, work a part-time job, and have a very active social life. When it came time to apply for college, I felt very confident in what I had to offer.

Initially, the University of Massachusetts Amherst was my safety school. I only applied because my mother made me. I never had real intentions of attending the university. Instead, my applications were sent out the fall of senior year to such schools as Harvard, Boston College and my top choice: College of the Holy Cross. At this time, I was a pre-med major looking for a name that would eventually get me into medical school. Never did it cross my mind that almost a decade's worth of hard work would land me in a state university.

Our lives may not go as planned, but this does not mean we will be miserable. Sometimes, though the courses we take may be different than expected, life still turns out okay. We just have to be willing to give it a chance.

The college application process is not a hard concept to grasp. We find schools that fit our interests, apply to them in hopes of acceptance and we wait anxiously for months, waiting to hear back. After we see enough response letters come in, however, it becomes clear that the size of their envelopes give away the news inside. Thus, by mid-Spring, just sifting through my mail would bring tears to my eyes, as I would come across not large, portfolio sized envelopes, but instead, small, thin ones. They may as well have had 'Rejection' stamped all over, because it was all too obvious what the response was inside.

In all, out of the seven schools I applied to, I was rejected by two, accepted by two, and waitlisted by the rest. Out of the couple I was accepted to, UMass Amherst was the only one willing to give me sufficient financial aid. Thus, college proved to not be a choice, but rather a single option I could act on if I wished to attend school in the fall. Essentially, I was crushed.

When I think back to my scholastic life prior to UMass, I cannot help but feel bitter. I was not the type of student who straightened up in high school and managed to pull a few good semesters. Instead, since elementary school, I worked tremendously hard to ensure my future would be full of opportunities. Unfortunately though, every rejection letter, waitlist acceptance and lack of sufficient financial aid notification proved to be a personal blow.

On the contrary, since coming to college, I have learned a lot about life. I know nothing ever goes as it should. I have also come to realize life will always be full of disappointment. I also now know there are things called happy accidents. Our lives may not go as planned, but this does not mean we will be miserable. Sometimes, though the course we take may be different than expected, life still turns out okay. We just have to be willing to give it a chance.

Coming to UMass Amherst has proved to be one of the best decisions I ever made. I love the university's size, diversity and the strength of its academic programs, such as the journalism major that I have now been enrolled. What I appreciate most, though, is the person it has made of me.

This past weekend, a few friends and I spontaneously traveled to Worcester, MA to visit some people who attended the College of the Holy Cross. Upon arriving on campus, I instantly felt de ja vu. It was odd to be walking around the dorms again, as I had once done during summer tours and open houses. I stared at the students, wondering how different we were. I tried to picture myself as a member of the University: an image I had dreamt of only a year and a half ago.

But my reaction surprised me. Though I had always hoped to attend Holy Cross, I no longer had the interest to. I did not like the lack of diversity I saw on campus. The people I met seemed hard to relate to: our lifestyles, in general, were too different from each others to ever have much in common. Essentially though, I found myself missing the comforts of my own school.

In the car ride back to UMass, I found myself becoming increasingly at ease as I neared the familiar Amherst campus. I realized I was an intelligent person going to a good school, though I do not have to pay over $30,000 a year for an education. My safety school has become a place where I feel most at home. Somewhere that I thought would never suit me truly fit me perfectly in the end. It may have taken awhile to realize, but my life had turned out the way I had intended it to.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

An Olympic disappointment

Matt Brochu

Another Olympic hero bites the dust. First it was Tonya Harding and the crowbar. Then it was Tonya Harding and the really unflattering sex tape. And now this. In case you haven't been paying attention, 19-year-old Michael Phelps, winner of six Olympic golds this summer, was arrested last week and charged with drunken driving. Say goodbye to the lucrative Speedo endorsements. Habla adios to the historic Wheaties Box cover. But this disappointment is just a late addition to my list of problems regarding this summer's Olympic games. Here they are in no particular order:

1) As Seinfeld's George Costanza would say, "I like to go in fresh, baby!" What's the point of watching a sporting event if you already know the result? Trying to watch the Olympics this year was like attempting to see 14 new movies in 14 consecutive nights, except for the fact that 1.2 billion people were dying to tell me how each one ended. Seriously, every time I clicked on Internet Explorer to log onto Spire it was like some jackass standing up during the previews before "The Sixth Sense" and yelling, "Bruce Willis is dead! He's dead the whole time!"

2) China rigged the Olympics. I watched the games pretty religiously and I didn't see them win one damn medal. Not one. Yet when it was all over, the official medal count claimed that China won 32 golds and ranked third in medals overall.

3) South Korea needs to calm down. Listen up, South Korea. Two years ago, one of your short track speed skaters was disqualified and you guys reacted like Apollo Ohno had just assassinated your president – anti-American statements all over the friggin' place, even rumors of a potential trade embargo on the US. Oh no, you mean you're not going to ship Hampton Beach those cheap-ass picture frames made of popsicle sticks to sell at their white trash souvenir shops anymore? How're we going to fill up those quarter machines full of stickers and bouncy balls outside supermarkets and bowling alleys? It's times like these that I wish there was a small island nation named "Taiwan" that we could count on to sell us flimsy crap instead.

This summer, the Paul Hamm gymnastics controversy got you guys all riled up again. Well consider this our gift to you, South Korea. You can take the gold medals in gymnastics and short track speed skating for all we care. Hell, you can even take the athletes too. Paul Hamm is a virgin troll. We'll stick to the sports we're good at, thank you very much, like basketball and baseball.

Much like the Parthenon, the Olympics are in shambles, and there's only one possible solution that would restore the wonder and mystique that once surrounded these much-celebrated games. Add the oldest sport in the world, a sport that's been overlooked by the International Olympic Committee (IOC) for far too many years: Sexual Intercourse. The Greeks participated in the original Olympic games completely naked, so it's only natural that we should embrace tradition. But was Eazy E correct when he said that sex is a sport? Well that's for you to decide.

The following is how Merriam Webster defines the word "sport"- an activity engaged in for pleasure (although evolutionarily functional, sex is usually engaged in for kicks) involving physical exertion (which is why most guys sweat during it) and skill (the clitoris is like a damn rubix cube), usually involving balls (no need for clarification here), that is governed by a set of rules or customs (which explains why I always feel obligated to cuddle afterwards). So, if you don't count the next-day-awkwardness, those pesky discharges, or the possibility of illegitimate children, then the definitions of sex and sport are pretty much one and the same.

Scoring wouldn't be a problem, because if you think about it, sex isn't all that different from gymnastics. Some positions are a lot harder than others and would be assigned proper degrees of difficulty, and instead of having to stick the landing at the end, the end would just be kind of sticky. In addition to the physically demanding compulsory skills, teams could also be judged on artistry, and in some cases, distance. And it wouldn't hurt to get the breaststroke involved in some way, either.

But the real beauty behind Olympic Banging would be the simplicity of its screening. Athletes would undoubtedly refrain from using supplements, due to the tendency of some steroids to shrink certain body parts necessary for rhythmic slapping noises. This, however, would require several new additions to the Banned Substances List, namely Viagra, Cialis.

These are trying times my friends, not only for the Olympics, but also for our country as a whole. So support Uncle Sam by writing a letter to the IOC explaining how you would like nothing better than to see a United States Intercourse team proudly marched into that Beijing Stadium by captains Ron Jeremy and Jenna Jameson in the 2008 Summer Ol-pimp-ics. Although, from the rumors I've heard about Asian porn on the Internet, I may have just handed the Chinese another gold medal. At least I'll be watching this time.

Matt Brochu is a UMass student.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Setting the tone with dress codes

Style 101

Monique Jemmott

This past weekend, I attended the Haitian and Dominican cultural night, also known as Hasacasa. Hasacasa is one of the most anticipated events on campus among ALANA students for many reasons. Not only is it a wonderful display of two cultures coming together, as they celebrate their heritage and accomplishments, but it is also an opportunity for all of its attendees to get together in semi formal dress, and party to Caribbean vibes, which conveniently happened to be the theme of this years program.

For weeks my friends and members of both the Haitian American Student Associations (HASA), and Casa Dominicana, have been doing everything short of harassing their friends about coming to the event, although this act was one in futility since everyone attends Hasacasa anyway. I am of neither of Haitian nor Dominican descent, and I have attended the event for the past 3 years that I have been here. But still, they pressed on, making sure that everyone was coming to the event—in their Sundays best.

"I swear if anyone comes in jeans I will kill them," declared Stacy, one of my good friends, a member of the Haitian American Student Association. "I've been hearing girls saying their going to wear cute jeans and a shirt, they better not! All the girls better come in beautiful dresses, and the guys better wear a shirt and tie at the very least." Stacy was adamant about her position, and while I understood where she was coming from, it wasn't until the night of Hasacasa that I realized how much a dress code could set the mood for an event.

Finally it was time for Hasacasa. As my friends and I approached the doorway of the student union ballroom, I became a little excited. Dressed in our beautiful party dresses (of which I heard Stacey's voice influencing me with every dress I tried on as I shopped), freshly styled hairdos, makeup, and perfume, you would have though we were going to a grand ball, and not a college party, in the plainest possible terms. As we entered the doorway, the scene took on a life all its own. The atmosphere felt way less identifiable as a college party, and more of a black tie event, as I watched my peers, all dressed amazingly in cocktail dresses, and three piece suits. I scanned the room as everyone sat at their tables talking and laughing to the backdrop of dinner music, in both French Creole, and Spanish. It was refreshing to see people that I see almost everyday on campus in jeans and sneakers, look tasteful, and respectful in their semi-formal attire. This entire scene gave the evening the edge that it needed to truly carry on the night.

As the evening went on, I found the change of scenery to be refreshing, and this may be the reason in which so many people enjoy the event. Aside from the cultural dinner and performances, getting dressed up and interacting with your peers is so rare on a college campus, that we look forward to it that much more than other events on campus.

People even reacted in a different way, the way we danced and behaved for the entire night was a reflection of the mood that was set by the events atmosphere. Men asked women if they wanted to dance, instead of just grinding up behind them like at a regular party, and for once, we were spared the disgusting display of vulgar dancing on the floor, and I cant help to think that maybe this was a result of people feeling that if they are dressed a certain way, they should act a certain way. Maybe this is why clubs require dress codes—if you dress the part you will act the part, and Saturday Hasacasa-goers acted the part of the grown and sexy crowd, rather than the hot and horny college crowd often seen at campus events.

Monique Jemmott is Collegian Editor

The 'Pain of War' comes to Amherst College in a controversial art exhibit

Katelyn Harding
Collegian Correspondent

"In 1863, referring to a series of photographs showing the aftermath of the Battle of Antietam, Oliver Wendell Holmes exhorted 'Let [one] who wishes to know what war is look at this series of illustrations.' So it is with The Pain of War. Addressing the theme of suffering associated with war, this exhibition documents the Thirty Years War, the Napoleonic Wars, the Crimean War, the First and Second World Wars, the Holocaust, the Vietnam War, and more recent conflicts such as September 11, 2001 and the war in Iraq" – introduction for The Pain of War art exhibit at Amherst College.

There is a dusty path with green grass flowing on either side. Remnants of a barbed-wire fence are on the ground. In the middle of the photograph, lying along this dirt path, are numerous cadavers, including small children and babies. At the top of the photograph written in bold red letters are the words "Q: And Babies?" and underneath this horrific representation is the answer, also written in bold red letters, "A. And Babies." This photograph, taken by Ronald Haeberle and Peter Brandt depicts the massacre that took place in the South Vietnamese village of My Lai on March 16, 1968. This is just one of many disconcerting images that the Mead Art Museum includes in its exhibit The Pain of War. This exhibit shows just that. How personal and horrific war really is, no sugar coating, no false information, just the gritty truth of war.

One of the first pictures that caught my attention was a picture taken from the front page of the New York Times on April 1, 2004. The quote underneath the picture reads as follows: "Iraqis chanted anti-American slogans in Falluja yesterday as burned bodies of Americans were suspended on a bridge over the Euphrates River." Re-read that sentence. After I read that sentence, I read it over and over again, because of the sheer monstrosity of it. The image with the burned bodies of Americans were so badly mangled and charred that you could not distinguish which end was the head. At the bottom of the picture you can see the looks of joy and happiness on the faces of the Iraqis, because of these fallen Americans.

The next piece of artwork that caught my eye was titled "Verwundeter (Herbst 1916, Bapaume)" which translates to "Wounded Soldier (Autumn 1916, Bapaume)." This etching created by Otto Dix still haunts my memory. The background of the picture is etched in the same shade of gray as the soldiers uniform, creating a unified flowing color throughout the picture. The stark contrast of these muted tones are the whites of the soldier's eyes. Dix has successfully captured the feeling of horror by the piercing eyes he has drawn. The soldier's mouth is gaping open with helplessness seeming to spill out of his it. His helmet is askew with one of his arms twisted skyward in an awkward position, and it is hard to decipher where his legs are, or if he even has any left. The hand that is not distorted is clutching his heart, and his face eerily resembles that of a skeleton with bulging eyeballs. This image implanted itself in my mind for the simple, yet obvious depiction it gives of war. The soldier appears to be alone, the background is too blurred to distinguish anyone around him, but the concept remains unambiguous. This soldier has most like-

See WAR on page 6

Amherst College's "The pain of War" exhibit displays war through photographs, and paintings depicting prisoners, and civilians in war.

New Deal rock UMass along with 5th Pocket, and Newsay Wednesday night

COURTESY NEWDEAL.COM

Rockers "The New Deal" performed Wednesday night in the student union ballroom at UMass.

By Brian Duffey
Collegian Correspondent

Hundreds danced on Wednesday night inside the Student Union Ballroom to the eclectic sounds of Newsay, The 5th Pocket, and The New Deal.

Newsay members, Jon Shina and Adam Folta, refer to their music as "light-hearted drum and bass." Shina and Folta, who have been collaborating for about a year on this project began the concert with a half hour performance. On stage, the duo produced diversified sound through the manipulation of electronic equipment, without the use of turntables. Folta, who is a senior Architecture major at UMASS, said he is influenced by hip-hop, metal, as well as drum and bass. These influences were interwoven throughout their artistic display. Ann Lochhead was pleased with what she heard and complimented, "They had solid beats." the crowd was still filtering in as Newsay played. Those who were in attendance appreciated the twosome's originality. Their new album, Fanfare in a Major Chord, is available at Newbury Comics and at Newsay.net. Shina and Folta will be playing shows in the area at venues such as the Flywheel in Easthampton.

The 5th Pocket entered the stage after Newsay and in the words of UMASS super-senior Tony Bedell, "rocked" the Ballroom. The crowd was fully engaged as Hugh Currier, Cory O'Brien, Hodges, and Troy Lorusso played what they call "amhient, afro-breakbeat." Regardless of how one categorizes their musical stylings, this foursome has the talent to get people moving, with upbeat, spacey grooves. The 5th Pocket said that they frequently improvise while on stage, varying from a pre-written piece. After this improvisation, they ultimately return to the original material. The group's writing process is done in much of the same fashion, through improvisation and experimentation.

"I thought it sounded excellent," said percussionist and recent UMass graduate Lorusso. He said that the he and his band mates were able to feed off the crowd's energy.

The band was all smiles in the 'Green Room' after their performance. The 5th Pocket is currently unwilling to disclose the secret behind the group's name. The band intends on spending the next few months writing and recording new music. They hope to tour in the spring.

Canadian natives Jamie Shields, Dan Kurtz, and Darren Shearer put on a memorable performance inside the confines of the Student Union. The Toronto based trio which specializes in, 'live progressive breakbeat house,' had people up and dancing for the duration of their performance. The group combined a mixture of upbeat live drum and bass with some spacey climactic jams to galvanize the crowd. Despite an impeccable cohesiveness on stage, the group describes their formation as a "beautiful accident."

Josh Philie, who traveled from Connecticut to see the New Deal was unfamiliar with the group and commented, "this is a lot better than I expected."

Joe, who also made the trip from Connecticut, said that he's seen the band over ten times. He ranked Wednesday's performance as one of the most "serious" that he's seen. Joe did add that the New Deal is always "ridiculous" and that they never disappoint.

Senior psychology and education double major, Victoria Bruno, has seen the New Deal all over the East Coast. Victoria explained that going to a New Deal show is, "a release of all your anxiety, it's therapeutic."

Marykate Smith, a sophomore at Hampshire College was delighted by the entire event. "I think the whole thing is beautiful," Smith said.

AMA nominees: Usher and Kanye

By Alex Veiga
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — R&B sensation Usher and innovative rap newcomer Kanye West had the leading nominations going into Sunday's 32nd annual American Music Awards.

Usher was up for four honors, including favorite male artist in both the pop/rock and soul/R&B divisions of the awards show, to be broadcast live on ABC. He faces the likes of Josh Groban, Lenny Kravitz, Michael McDonald, Prince, R. Kelly and "American Idol" winner Ruben Studdard.

Usher's steamy album "Confessions," which sold more than 1 million copies in its debut week, was nominated for top album honors in both the pop/rock and soul/R&B divisions.

In the hip-hop/rap class, performer-producer West received nods in three categories: favorite male artist, favorite album for his debut album "The College Dropout," and best new artist. Joining West in the newcomer category were Maroon 5 and Gretchen Wilson, who also was nominated for the top female artist in the country music division, along with Martina McBride and Reba McEntire.

Rap group OutKast, the big winner at February's Grammy's, was a contender for best group in both the pop/rock and rap/hip-hop divisions.

Veteran rockers Bon Jovi were chosen to receive a special merit award, and also were to perform during the show, along with Jessica Simpson, Toby Keith, Maroon 5, Kravitz, Groban, Rod Stewart and Snoop Dogg. Ringo Starr was to introduce a rarely broadcast performance clip of The Beatles.

The same male artists nominated last year in the country music category vied for awards again: Keith, Kenny Chesney, Alan Jackson and Tim McGraw, who won last year.

Beyonce, Janet Jackson and Alicia Keys were all up for favorite female performer in the soul/R&B class, and Lavigne, Sheryl Crow and Simpson topped the list of favorite female artist in the pop/rock division.

The ceremony came as the rap world mourned the sudden death of O.D.B., the founding member of the Wu-Tang Clan, who collapsed and died at a New York recording studio on Saturday, two days before his 36th birthday.

Nominees were chosen on the basis of record sales, with winners selected by a survey of about 20,000 listeners.

COURTESY UMASS

MondayNovember 15

LECTURE

Amherst College's Alumni House will host associate professor of English Judith Frank tonight at 8 p.m. The author is slated to read from her book, Crybaby Butch. "Fearless and unflinching," says Claire Messud. "Judy Frank's debut novel is searing and memorable." This event is put on by the Amherst College Creative Writing Center; it is free and open to the public.

TuesdayNovember 16

POETRY

Poet/activist Demetria Martinez will read at Smith College's Stoddard Hall Auditorium tonight at 7:30 p.m. The Princeton University graduate published her first novel, the Western States Book Award-winning "Mother Tongue," in 1994; the book detailed portions of the Sanctuary Movement and her role in it. "The Devil's Workshop" her most recent collection of poetry is, in the words of Chicano poet Jimmy Santiago, "a tough and solitary celebration of the song [by] ... a solid and unflinchng voice in Latina poetry." This event is free, open to the public, and wheelchair accessible.

TuesdayNovember 16

CONCERT

You can catch the Avanti Wind Quintet tonight, at Bezanson Recital Hall at 8 p.m. Pieces by Darius Milhaud, Maurice Ravel and Gideon Klein will be fleshed out by Christopher Krueger (flute), Fredric Cohen (oboe), Michael Sussman (clarinet), Laura Klock (horn) and Stephen Walt (bassoon). Advanced students Kari Soper (flute), Lauren Kapalka (oboe), John Ferraro (clarinet), Gregory Genatossio (bass clarinet), Kelli Kirkman (horn) and Deniz Ersoy (bassoon) will join in, too. Tickets are $5 for students and $10 for the general public.

WednesdayNovember 17

CONCERT

Genre-defying guitarist Bill Frisell will bring his trio to Northampton's cozy Iron Horse Music hall tonight at 7 p.m. Backed up by Viktor Krauss (bass) and Sex Mob's Kenny Wollesen (drums), the matchless six-stringer will toss out tunes that aren't jazz, country, blues or rock ... his compositions are uniquely Bill Frisell. Tickets are $20 in advance, and $23 at the door. Don't miss it.

FridayNovember 19

FILM

Come experience the use of Nicaraguan history as both a backdrop and a foundation, for this multi-faceted piece that incorporates poetry, dialogue, and monologue in order to mediate between a dead national past and the uncertain crises of the present, as the New World Theatre presents "La Casa de Rigoberta Mira Al Su," at the Kirby theater at Amherst College. This event is performed entirely in Spanish with English translations. Tickets are $15; $8 seniors; $5 students. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center box office at Umass. For more information call 545-2511.

SatrudayNovember 20

PERFORMANCE

Saturday at the top of the Campus Center at Umass, The UMass Pride Alliance will be hosting its annual fall drag ball complete with amateur drag show/contest. Prizes will be given away to the best performers! Performers should contact the Pride Alliance's social chair to sign up. Fee: $3 UMass students; $4 5-college students; $5 general admission; a dollar off if you come in drag. For more information call 545-4824.

weeklypinup

BOB DYLAN LIVE

Saturday Bob Dylan brings his extensive catalogue of timeless songs to the Mullins Center tonight at 8 p.m. For a mere $35 or $45; come see the most influential singer/songwriter of all time.

Controversial exhibit boldly illustrates the tragedy of war

WAR from page 5

ly been fatally wounded, and is scared and alone. It is interesting that this would pick such a morbid way to depict war, but he got his point across, and the message is received —war is not something that glorifies you, it is scary, dangerous and lethal.

The art exhibit even has some material from the present war, the War on Terror in Iraq. The most repeated image was that of the Iraqi prisoner, forced to stand on a box wearing a cloak and a hood, with wires attached to both hands. This prisoner was told that if he fell off, he would be electrocuted.

out of all of these images that were replicated in artists' unique ways, there was one in particular that caught my eye. It was from the magazine Art Forum, created by Richard Serra. The picture depicted a drawing of the hooded Iraqi prisoner as a black silhouette against a gray painted background, with big black capital letters on either side of his head containing the two words "STOP BUSH." Those two words made me freeze immediately. The words could have easily have said simple "STOP THE WAR" but it was directed towards Bush, and only Bush. It was interesting that Serra took this point of view. Serra gets his point across with few words or pictures. The images he uses are big and bold and cannot be mistaken for another meaning. Although at times the printed word can be misconstrued, I am certain that everyone can understand Serra's point of view with his drawing. It was a powerful piece that hopefully will make other people sit down and think about the war that is going on.

One of the last pieces of this exhibit deals directly with the September 11th tragedy in New York. It is a photograph, taken by Richard Drew bearing the title "A Person Falls Headfirst from the North Tower of the New York World Trade Center, September 11, 2004." Although the title of it is self explanatory, you do not get the entire message until you actually see the photograph. The way the picture is taken you cannot see the edges of the World Trade Center. All you can see is one single man, upside down, committing suicide because he believes that this would be better than falling with the tower.

Out of all the elements that this art exhibit has on display, this to me was the most influential. This man was so distressed and scared, that he thought it better to jump to his death, rather than await a future that was uncertain. Words cannot describe the feeling of looking at his photo. One cannot fathom the situation in which that man, and all of the people who suffered from 9/11 must have felt. September 11th was an eye opener for the United States, and it was a day that will forever remain in our history as a day that forced America to come together and be the United States that we are.

I would strongly recommend to anyone of suitable age take the half hour out of his or her day and visit this exhibit. You may find subjects and pieces of artwork there that intrigue you in a way you did not think possible. Hopefully it will expand your knowledge, and build upon what you already know.

The images are graphic, the Art Museum realizes this and makes no excuses for it, but it is the only way to depict how war really is. As citizens of the great United States of America, we have the right to obtain all the information we can about virtually any subject we want. If we are at war, I believe that the American public should know exactly what is going on overseas, and the extent to which it is happening. The Pain of War is a real depiction of war— The guts, the glory, and the truth.

BOB DYLAN AND HIS BAND
In Show — and — CONCERT!
SATURDAY NOVEMBER 20
ON SALE NOW
DON'T YOU DARE MISS IT!
MULLINS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
Tickets on sale at the Mullins Center Box Office, online at ticketmaster.com, by phone at (413) 733-2500 or at all TicketMaster outlets. For additional information call the Mullins Center at (413) 545-0505. Presented by MassConcerts.

Wu-Tang member ODB dies

By Nekesa Mumbi Moody
Associated Press

NEW YORK(AP) — The rap artist O.D.B., whose utterly unique rhymes, wild lifestyle and incessant legal troubles made him one of the most vivid characters in hip-hop, collapsed and died inside a recording studio Saturday. He was 35.

O.D.B. had complained of chest pains before collapsing at the Manhattan studio, and was dead by the time paramedics arrived, said Gabe Tesoriero, a spokesman for O.D.B.'s record label, Roc-a-Fella.

The cause of death was not immediately clear, but O.D.B. had recently finished a prison sentence for drug possession and escaping a rehab clinic. He would have turned 36 on Monday.

O.D.B. — also known as Ol' Dirty Bastard, Dirt McGirt, Big Baby Jesus or his legal name of Russell Jones — was a founding member of the seminal rap group the Wu-Tang Clan in the early 1990s. With his unorthodox delivery — alternately slurred, hyper and nonsensical — O.D.B. stood out even in the nine-man Clan, which featured such future stars as Method Man, RZA and Ghostface Killah.

The Wu-Tang blueprint was for each member to pursue solo projects, and O.D.B.'s were among the best. He released hit singles such as "Shimmy Shimmy Ya" and "Got Your Money," and appeared on remixes with artists like Mariah Carey.

"There's nobody like him in the game," RZA told The Associated Press in an April interview, when asked if O.D.B. could resume his career after prison. "He's got a lot of problems he's got to iron out, of course, but as far as a one-of-a-kind person, a one-of-a-kind artist, he's one of a generation, one of a lifetime. He's a very rare commodity."

But as his fame increased, so did his erratic behavior, and fans came to expect the unexpected from O.D.B.

When MTV News followed him around at the height of his popularity, he took the camera crew and several of his kids (he was said to have more than a dozen, by numerous mothers) to the welfare office — in a limousine — to get an allotment of food stamps. And he received them.

In February 1998, he crashed the stage at the Grammy Awards and hijacked a microphone from singer Shawn Colvin as she accepted an award, apparently upset over losing the best rap album Grammy to P. Diddy (then known as Puff Daddy). He complained that he spent a lot of money for new clothes because he thought he was going to win. The rapper later apologized.

Over the years, he was wounded in shootings and arrested on a veritable laundry list of charges, including menacing security officers, illegally possessing body armor, driving with a suspended license, shoplifting and threatening a former girlfriend.

In 2000, after escaping a court-ordered stint in a California rehabilitation center, authorities searched for him for a month. He was finally arrested in Philadelphia — three days after performing in a New York City concert with his Wu-Tang clique.

He was sentenced in 2001 to two to four years in prison for drug possession, plus two concurrent years for escaping from the clinic. He was released in 2003 and immediately signed with Roc-a-Fella.

He heralded his return with a news conference alongside singer Carey — pop fans may know him best for his memorable cameo on her hit "Fantasy," featuring rhymes like "me and Mariah, go back like babies with pacifiers."

Tesoriero said O.D.B. had been working on his comeback album for more than a year and was almost finished.

COURTESY PRIORITY RECORDS

Old Dirty Bastard (aka Russell Jones) died Saturday night of unknown causes at a recording studio. He was 35 years old.

Amherst Computerworks, Inc.
PC & Laptop Sales/Service/Repair — 5-College Certified Vendor
Laptop & LCD Projector Rentals
Repairing Macs and all brands of PC's
Selling new Custom desktop & laptop PC's
9 East Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
Phone: (413) 548-8900
Fax: (413) 548-8030
ari@acipc.com
Est. 1999

Minutemen cap off great weekend

HOCKEY from page 10

Werner took it all alone to the goal. He lost possession of the puck in front of the net but was able to regain control in time to put a great move on goalie Cory Schneider and give UMass the two-goal lead on the team's second short-handed goal of the season.

BC fought back and scored three unanswered power play goals in front of its home crowd of 6,968 people. The first two goals were tallied by Ned Havern and Joe Rooney, and the two teams went into the second intermission deadlocked at two.

Just 4:09 into the third frame, the Eagles' John Adams sent a shot into a crowd of players, and it hit Minuteman defender Peter Trovato's stick about 15 feet in front of the net. The puck deflected off the stick perfectly and flew past goalie Gabe Winer's right shoulder as he was shading towards his left side, where the attack was generating.

UMass stayed resilient, though, and was able to put enough pressure on Schneider to allow Vitek to pick up his second goal of the night right in front of the net.

The Minutemen earned the tie despite giving up three power play goals and being out-shot by the Eagles an astounding 54-17.

"They were going to outshoot us tonight," Cahoon admitted. "They're an offensive juggernaut. We knew what we had to do. We had to counter and get some chances, shift a few goals and deny them their second chances around the cage."

It was the spectacular play of Winer that allowed them to stay in the game against the high-powered Eagle offense. He made 51 saves while Schneider only made 14. Winer actually made more saves in the second (17) and third (21) periods than his opponent made throughout the course of the game.

"Gabe is a quality goaltender," Cahoon said. "I think a lot of people in this league have known that for awhile now, and tonight was an example of how he can read plays and make saves. It's very reassuring to have that type of goaltender between the pipes."

Not to be lost in the shuffle was the play of Obi Aduba, who filled in on defense for Jeff Lange, who faced a mandatory one-game suspension stemming from a game disqualification Nov. 6 against Merrimack.

"We were just hoping that Obi would give us a great effort and he certainly did that," Cahoon said. "Our expectation was for him to give up a little bit of help and buy some time for us. He didn't have to do anything special. He handles the puck real well, and he was a big help to us and that gives us some insurance in terms of that position."

Against Mercyhurst, the Minutemen scored three goals in a seven-minute span in the first period to put the Lakers away early.

UMass goalie Tim Warner got the start yesterday and made 23 saves to earn his second victory of the season. He admitted that the team was nervous because they didn't want to face another letdown against its second Atlantic Hockey Association opponent this season. The Minutemen lost to Connecticut 3-2 in overtime on Oct. 24.

"We didn't want to lose to another team like that," Warner said. "Mercyhurst is actually a really a good team, but they had a late game last night, and they were tired."

Warner went on to give his defense the credit for the victory.

"This is the best game I've seen this team play in four years, not just this year," the senior goaltender said. "Credit our defense for neutralizing them. From the drop of the puck tonight, they couldn't do anything. Their only real chances were on the power play. They couldn't do anything five-on-five."

KARIN WINDORA COLLEGIAN

UMass freshman forward P.J. Fenton has been off to a hot start this season, and he scored a goal against Mercyhurst yesterday during UMass' 6-1 victory at the Mullins Center.

UM rocking and rolling

MERRITT from page 10

Could it be that the other team, the one that never pulled away from Connecticut, that put just 20 shots on David Cacciola while the Providence Friars tried to make Tim Warner look like Swiss cheese, has shuffled out of town?

"It's day to day, I don't know if it's totally fixed, but today was definitely a good outing for us," Cahoon said, "and the objective here is to have more good outings than bad outings, so I'll take the good outing and we'll see if we can put a few more together. You can only do this one at a time. It's reasonable to say there's a Jekyll and Hyde version of this team, but it's too early to label us."

For five weeks, the Minutemen were Eddie Vedder; a different show every night. That works in rock and roll, but in Hockey East, it's a one-way road to a very quiet March. This weekend, they were Wayne Newton — the same team, the same game, both nights — and the result was a well-earned tie and a convincing win as well as second place in the conference.

Andrew Merritt is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ASMerritt@dailycollegian.com.

College football is staring straight at another BCS mess

By Ralph D. Russo
Associated Press

AUBURN, Ala.(AP) – Auburn made its case on the field – and off – and enough voters were swayed.

The Tigers moved up to No. 2 in The Associated Press Top 25 on Sunday, but they're not alone. Auburn and Oklahoma now share the spot behind No. 1 Southern California in the media poll.

And they're only separated in the coaches' poll by two points, with the Sooners holding the slim advantage.

The next thing to change will be the Bowl Championship Series standings, which come out Monday.

The annual debate about the BCS is about to reach a fever pitch. With three weekends of football left before the postseason matchups are determined, the chances of three major conference teams finishing unbeaten is a distinct possibility.

USC will play in the Orange Bowl for the BCS title on Jan. 4 with little protest if it wins its remaining two games.

As for the Tigers and Sooners, with two wins each, one will be on the way to Miami while the other is left to wonder why a 12-0 record and a major conference championship wasn't good enough.

This much is clear: If USC, Oklahoma and Auburn all run the table, a team deserving a shot at the national championship isn't going to get it. Nice job, BCS.

Auburn and Oklahoma each received 1,536 points in the latest AP poll. The Tigers got six first-place votes and the Sooners received eight. Last week, Oklahoma led Auburn by 43 and had 10 first-place votes to the Tigers' three.

Auburn made a convincing case Saturday against Georgia, beating the Bulldogs 24-6. It was Auburn's ninth victory of the season by at least two touchdowns.

"I haven't talked much about the BCS until this point," Auburn coach Tommy Tuberville said Saturday. "We had to get over this hump because of how good (Georgia) is."

Now, Tuberville is ready to talk about the BCS.

He made those comments not at the postgame news conference, but during an impromptu post-postgame news conference in the pressbox at Jordan-Hare Stadium. Tuberville admittedly dropped by to do a little lobbying.

Who knows whether it helped? It's doubtful that he could have said anything that was more persuasive than his team's stellar performance.

The Sooners beat Nebraska 30-3 on Saturday night, but it was their close calls the previous two weeks against Oklahoma State and Texas A&M that left the voters questioning Oklahoma's credentials.

The Sooners beat the Cowboys by three and the Aggies by seven, playing poor defense in each game.

Despite the struggles, Oklahoma's resume stacks up well with Auburn's.

Both are 10-0 with three victories against ranked opponents.

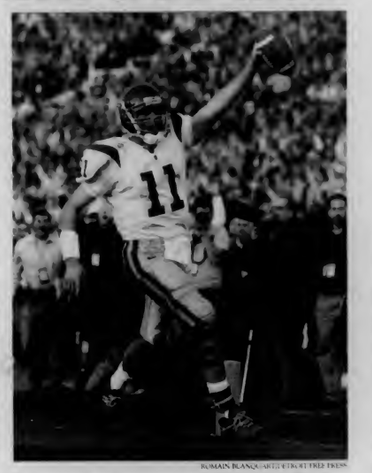
The Tigers have been winning more decisively, by an average of 25 points. The Sooners average margin is 16.8, but so far they've played a tougher schedule.

The Tigers' non-conference slate served up three cupcakes Louisiana-Monroe, The Citadel and Louisiana Tech.

Oklahoma's non-conference schedule at least offered a couple of solid teams in Bowling Green and Oregon to go along with pushover Houston.

"Strength of schedule is important, but it's also how you are playing," Tuberville said. "It's not like we've been winning by two or three points. We've been pretty much naming our score."

Since beating LSU 10-9 in September, Auburn has been running roughshod through the Southeastern Conference, including a 34-10 win at Tennessee.



Knowing style points count, Tuberville left his top defenders in the whole way against Georgia, hoping to blank the Bulldogs.

Oklahoma did the same against Nebraska, but lost the shutout on a field goal on the final play of the game.

"It is funny how we find ourselves in these circumstances at the end of games," Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops said. "It really puts you in an odd position. I don't like being in that position. Unfortunately, the way things are these days, that's the way it is."

To Oklahoma's credit, those recent tight games came on the road against ranked Big 12 teams. And the Sooners' 12-0 win over Texas came on a neutral field.

Auburn goes on the road Saturday to face Alabama before a likely rematch with Tennessee in the SEC title game in Atlanta on Dec. 4.

ROMAIN BLANQUART/AP PHOTO FOR FREE PRESS

USC quarterback Matt Leinert and the rest of the Trojans appear to be on their way to a National Championship birth this year.

DO YOU HAVE A Favorite Academic Advisor? nominate them for the Outstanding Academic Advisor Award

The Nominating Committee for the 2004-2005 Outstanding Academic Advisor Award invites all students, faculty and staff to nominate undergraduate academic advisors whose practices distinguish them from otheen advisors. The characteristics of an outstanding advisor include but are not limited to:

•Building strong relationships with students
•Monitoring students' progress toward academic and career goals
•Making appropriate referrals
•Knowing and understanding institutional regulations, policies and procedures

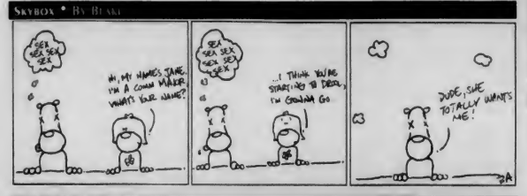
Nominations of faculty and staff who advise undergraduate students should be submitter to:

Outstanding Academic Advisor Award Committee
Office of the Provost
362 Whitmore Building

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at the Amherst locations only.
Original roll processing only.

LOOKING FOR 5-COLLEGE STUDENTS TO WRITE FOR ARTS.
Call 545-1809 or speak to Meghan, Mike, or Monique.

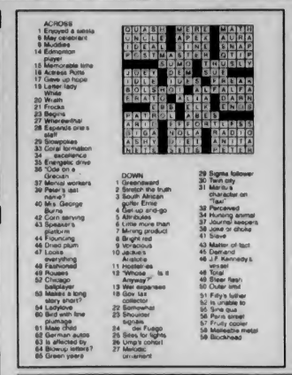
Leah Hooper • By Rebecca L. Kelley



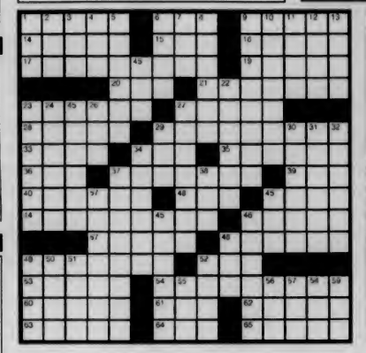
The Torquin • By Kris Frederick

Valley of the Squirrels • By Cassandra X

Skybox • By Blake



The Zoo • By Gabe Street



Quote of the Day

"He who wonders discovers that this in itself is wonder."

-M. C. Escher

JUNGLE RED
Full Service Hair Salon
SPA MANICURES
BRAZILIAN WAXING
UP-DOS
COLORING
FREE SPRING BREAK GETAWAY
ALL INCLUSIVE VACATION TO ACAPULCO!
STOP BY SALON TO REGISTER

THAD ROOTS
AMHERST ONE STOP REGGAE & CULTURE SHOP
LARGE SELECTION OF REGGAE & HIP HOP MUSIC
DJ EQUIPMENT & ACCESSORIES
A WIDE VARIETY OF TEES & HATS
AFRICAN & JAMAICAN CRAFTS, CARVINGS & PAINTINGS
POSTERS, BOOKS, CARDS, SOUVENIRS, JEWELRY
$5 OFF 2 CDS OR ANY $25 PURCHASE
233 NORTH PLEASANT ST. DOWNTOWN AMHERST 253-4282

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
It won't mean a thing unless you sing. So sing baby, sing.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
One of your pockets has a hole in it. That's why everything keeps disappearing.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are still overanalyzing what happened this weekend.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
It's nice getting a lot of attention, but beware of leading too many people on.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Carry around a box of tissues with you. You're going to need it.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
What were you doing this weekend? You crazy, crazy person.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You have to read a million pages before tomorrow. Get started.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
What could be better than singing and playing guitar?

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You should try to do less doodling and more concentrating.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Sometimes you just have to accept that that's just the way it is.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your addiction to the facebook is getting in the way of your work.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If you're feeling confused, you should consider banging your head with a ball.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Mass Mahketing and Citibank present the Spend Smahr Tour 2004 featuring Mission: IMPROVable. Join us for a fun-filled evening of laughs, free food and most importantly, credit education. Blue Wall Nov 15 @ noon, Southwest Patterson Dorm Nov 16 @ 7pm, Central German Dorm Nov 17 @ 7pm, Sylvan Cashin Dorm Nov 17 @ 8:30pm, Southwest Kennedy Dorm Nov 18 @ 7pm, SOM Atrium Nov 19 @ 6pm. www.Students.UseCredit Wisely for credit tips. Brought to you by Mass Mahketing and Citi Credit-Ed℠.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule you non-sales fundraise with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus-Fundraiser 888-923-3238 or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Amanda Kichak GIS Geographic Information Systems Day 2004. Wednesday 11/17 GIS and mapping applications for academic and career success. Campus Center Concourse 10am-2pm. Open GIS lab 11-3 Morrill 27I. Open digital mapping lab 11-12:30 Morrill 245.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in

APARTMENT FOR RENT

now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 Honda Civic Ex 2-door coupe, 104k miles, 5-speed, very good condition, 16" Velox RX-BR rims, power. Contact 508-934-9324.

COMPUTERS FOR SALE

Pentium Laptop $99.

COMPUTERS FOR SALE

Pentium III Desktop $99. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING INTERNSHIPS Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906 •

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS?

SERVICES

Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling out Immigration forms.

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica. From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159!

TRAVEL

www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today. Spring Break 2005-

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRMSG Online
1-800-426-7710

Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club

TRAVEL

Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

Egg Donors Needed. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Ages 21-32. Non-smokers only. For more information please visit our website at www.robertnicholsen.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900.

Ever wanted to be a zombie? Well now you can! Feature-length student film looking for large amounts of zombie actors. Email Easyfacey@hotmail.com for more details.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 15, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Making a statement

Vitek scores four goals in two games

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

For the first time in this young season, the Massachusetts hockey team (6-4-1, 3-2-1 Hockey East) came out of a two-game weekend with two positive results.

Friday night, the Minutemen headed east to Chestnut Hill to take on the No. 1 Boston College Eagles (4-1-1, 2-0-1 Hockey East) at Conte Forum and battled them to a hard fought 3-3 tie.

UMass	6
Mercyhurst	1

Yesterday, UMass played host to the Mercyhurst Lakers (4-6-0, 3-0-0 Atlantic Hockey) at the Mullins Center but sent them packing back to New York as 6-1 losers.

The Minutemen earned three tough points before they take off on a tough four-game road trip that will begin Friday night in Orono, Maine against the Black Bears.

UMass	3
Boston College	3

UMass senior forward Tim Vitek played the role of unsung hero this weekend as he notched a pair of goals in each contest, including the goal that tied the game at three with just under 10 minutes to play in regulation against Boston College.

"Yeah, anything to help out the team and to have success here," Vitek said on Friday night. "We needed this. This is definitely a boost to our team. We can compete with any team in the league, if not in the country."

Vitek, who only had one goal this season heading into the weekend and 15 in his previous three seasons for the Minutemen, was just happy to contribute statistically.

"It was a) pretty lucky weekend, I'd say," Vitek acknowledged. "I just tried to have an extra bounce in my step this week in practice, and it paid off. To get three points this weekend, that was huge for us."

Vitek opened the scoring against the Eagles with a wrister in front of the net, and Stephen Werner added the second goal of the night to give the Minutemen an impressive 2-0 advantage in the second period against the nation's top team.

Kevin Jarman, who had a career high three assists Friday night, sent the puck up to center ice where

See HOCKEY on page 8

MATTHEW REDMAN/COLLEGIAN

UMass goalie Tim Warner made 23 saves and earned his second win of the season against Mercyhurst yesterday at the Mullins Center. The Minutemen had their first successful weekend of the season as they tied Boston College in Chestnut Hill and defeated Mercyhurst.

KAREN WINGERD/COLLEGIAN

UMass senior forward Tim Vitek led the Minutemen with four goals in two games this weekend. He scored two against Boston College Friday night including the game-tying goal with under 10 minutes left in the game.

Minutemen rock and roll through weekend

Andrew Merritt

For the first five weeks of the 2004-05 season, the Massachusetts hockey team was reminiscent of Pearl Jam — no matter how many times you saw them, the Minutemen gave you a different show.

There was the team that traveled to Alaska and hung with national finalist Minnesota for 59 minutes and 29 seconds before succumbing to an 11th-hour goal from Ryan Potulny. It was the same team that shut out Providence 2-0 at home on Oct. 30, and blew out Merrimack 8-2 six days later.

Then, there was the team that slogged through unexpected defeats to Connecticut and Merrimack, and was run out of Schneider Arena by Providence the night before they blanked the Friars. That team struggled to keep opponents away from its net and turned scoring into an abstract art, sometimes showing moments of extreme accuracy and sometimes appearing to fire at will in hopes of hitting something, but never doing either consistently.

That team was no fun. What's worse, it was losing important — and winnable — games. The only thing that was consistent about that team was that it always seemed to show up exactly once a weekend. Whether it was digging the hole Friday night, or souring the potential of a sweep on Saturday or Sunday, it was always around to mess up the Minutemen's chance of making serious headway in these peculiarly crucial early weeks of the season.

While the non-conference games being played in October and November — against teams as good as Clarkson and as uninspiring as Connecticut — don't make any mark on league standings, the Minutemen found out the hard way last year that you can make it to the conference final, but if you don't have a solid out-of-conference record, you've got to take the league title to get to the NCAA Tournament.

This weekend's pair of games was looking eerily similar to the Oct. 22-24 weekend, when the Minutemen won an exciting, frantic, and high-quality overtime decision against UMass-Lowell on Friday, only to come out flat and stay that way through a 3-2 loss to UConn on Sunday, effectively establishing the low-water mark for this season. The script this weekend could have been very much the same: come out strong in an important game against a conference foe, and then trip over yourself against an Atlantic Hockey Association team that everyone expects to be overmatched.

It wouldn't have been outrageous for a spectator to walk into the Mullins Center yesterday afternoon full of fright that — cue dramatic music — "that other team" might be coming to play, but it was clearly not in the building. This weekend, the first team — the fun one — showed up both Friday night in Chestnut Hill against the goliath of Hockey East, and against the relatively lesser Mercyhurst Lakers yesterday, making two appearances in one weekend for the first time all season.

See MERRITT on page 8

Freeman leads UMass in exhibition game

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

On Friday night, the Massachusetts men's basketball team claimed a hard-fought 73-64 victory over visiting Concordia in its one and only exhibition game of the 2004-2005 season.

Concordia was undersized and overmatched by the Minutemen, yet kept up to speed with a team that is fighting off some rust from the offseason.

The Maroon and White put together a sloppy second half that saw Concordia jump out to as far as a five-point lead. The Minutemen responded in the final minutes of the half when Maurice Maxwell was intentionally fouled on a fast break with 4:55 left in the game.

UMass	73
Concordia	64

Maxwell hit the free throw, and on the ensuing inbounds play, hit a three that was followed by threes from Artie Bowers and Anthony Anderson. The barrage of late outside shooting put Concordia behind 63-56, a deficit they would never overcome.

UMass started off slow, allowing Concordia to jump out to an early 10-6 lead in the first five minutes. Preseason first team all A-10 sophomore Rashaun Freeman took the offensive weight on his shoulders for the Minutemen, scoring their first six points. Freeman would finish the game with 21 points and nine rebounds.

Freeman was content that UMass came away with the win but recognizes that the Minutemen have a ways to go before the regular season gets underway on Nov. 23, at home against Alabama-Birmingham.

"I'm glad that we finished with a win, but I'm not satisfied with the win because we could have played a lot better," Freeman said. "We came into today and thought we could blow them out, and we came and didn't play to how we wanted to play."

Part of the problem for UMass was its ineptitude from behind the arc in the first half. The Minutemen missed their first seven three-pointers, with Bowers breaking the streak midway through the first half. Bowers' shot was honed for Friday as he scored all his 13 points from three-point land, going five-for-eight on the evening.

Senior captain Anderson, who missed most of preseason with a bad back, had a slow start and was shut out in the first half. UMass coach Steve Lappas was concerned with his team's play but is confident it will improve as Anderson gets into the swing of things.

"Anthony showed a little bit of rust in the first half. He only really practiced yesterday for the first time so he made a couple of mistakes," Lappas said.

In the waning minutes of the first half, the Minutemen went on a brief scoring barrage led by the keen shooting of Bowers. With UMass leading 17-16, Bowers nailed a three, which was followed up by unanswered buckets from Freeman and Maxwell, leaving the score at 22-16.

The Maroon and White would keep the game near a 10-point differential until the final seconds of the half. Concordia's Ben Sormonte hit point guard Chris Blackwood, who nailed a three as time expired, leaving the score at 31-24 going into the half.

The second half was extremely sloppy for the Minutemen, who committed 14 of their 18 turnovers during the period. Defensive-minded center Stephane Lasme found himself in foul trouble, and Lappas was forced to make an array of substitutions, causing several awkward lineups.

With this, Lappas introduced UMass fans to three new faces in Jeff "Big Dell" Sulovski, Lawrence Carrier and Oliver Lamoureux.

Freeman was pleased with how the freshmen played but knows that there is a big difference between an exhibition game and the regular season.

"They've got to feel out what it's like to play in a real game, but this wasn't a real game per se so they got a little taste," Freeman said. "When it comes to next week, I think they'll get a real taste to how a real college game is played."

MATTHEW REDMAN/COLLEGIAN

Rashaun Freeman scored 21 points and grabbed nine rebounds in UMass' exhibition victory over Concordia at the Mullins Center on Friday night.

'Weekend Update': Quinn visits Umass

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

TUESDAY • High: 52 • Low: 40
WEDNESDAY • High: 51 • Low: 37
THURSDAY • High: 53 • Low: 35

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Patriots poised to begin second streak

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 49

Student group UMassbannerdrop banner examines political party election results

By Cameron Methner
Collegian Correspondent

A group of University of Massachusetts students say they hung a banner from the top level of the Campus Center Garage in hopes to create a dialogue on campus on "the two-party system that increasingly seems not to represent the range of views in this country."

UMassbannerdrop, an anonymous student group, says it hung the banner on Nov. 3 that read "Same Fucking Difference" and pictured an elephant and donkey, representing the two major political parties of the United States, having sexual intercourse. It was removed several hours later by an unknown source.

The banner was smaller than a bed sheet, but it presented what UMassbannerdrop members hoped would be a large message by drawing attention to the differences and similarities between the Democratic and Republican Parties.

"It is out of outrage at this system and the pretense of difference that the democrats and republicans insist on in this election and every day that we take this action," said the UMassbannerdrop group in a press release. "The banner was hung only here at UMass, and the banner drop group believes it was taken down that same day due to its explicit message."

The group members said in an email that they hung the banner hoping to spark some form of dialogue on campus between the students, no matter what their political party affiliation may be, but mainly due to UMass' majority of democrats on campus. "This dialogue is particularly important to UMass where the majority of the population supports the Democratic Party and does not question why that party has become so conservative or work to promote candidates who reflect their actual political views, being content to vote for the 'anything but' candidate," wrote a group representative, who wished to remain anonymous.

MATTHEW REDMAN/COLLEGIAN

A banner depicting a the Democratic donkey and Republican elephant engaging in sexual intercourse was hung from the Campus Center Garage the day after the presidential elections by the group UMassbannerdrop.

The group's dropping of the banner referred to the two presidential candidates of this year's election and their similar stances on prominent issues. "We hung the banner as a way to draw out dialogue regarding the similar policies – particularly on education, the war on Iraq, neo-liberalism and civil liberties – of John Kerry and George W. Bush," said the representative. The issues that showed great similarities were prominent issues on each candidate's platform and affected how many voters finally decided on Nov. 2.

The group said that their main goal with the banner was to create some form of reaction. "We are frustrated by the apathy that allows this situation to continue, and we hope that our banner will encourage discourse among those who see it in person and those who hear about it."

Jennifer McNaught, a junior, said she saw the banner being taken down from the parking garage. "There are a lot of differences between the candidates. Everyone should be more informed of those differences."

Sharon Kanolik, a junior foreign exchange student from the United Kingdom, said, "I disagree with what the banner is saying. As a foreign exchange student here, I feel like I do not know enough about this country's politics ... [and] the differences between Bush and Kerry. I feel the main difference is that religion plays a massive role in Bush's campaign."

The UMassbannerdrop group is not only concerned with the similarities between the two parties, but also with other issues in politics. We are also concerned with the corporate influence on electoral politics and with the fact that one must be a millionaire to run for national office."

This year's election was said to have been costly for both delegates, and it has set a new level of campaign spending. Both parties spending a great deal of money with advertising and fundraising is pivotal in any campaign for public office.

As of print time UMassbannerdrop has not said anything about their next form of action.

Commission for Diversity holds inaugural meeting

By Dan Terk
Collegian Staff

The newly formed University of Massachusetts Commission for Campus Diversity held its inaugural meeting Saturday. During the private meeting, the 23-member committee heard preliminary reports and reviewed its charge.

According to UMass officials, the commission has also scheduled four additional meetings that will be private working sessions, as well as a public forum on Thursday, Dec. 9, at which groups and individuals will be invited to make presentations. There will also be a public session held in mid-February, when the commission will present its final report on its findings of campus diversity.

The chairman of the committee, Orlando L. Taylor, vice provost for research and graduate school dean at Howard University in Washington D.C., said, "The university community is to be congratulated for having selected such a distinguished group to address the mission at hand."

The commission's charge is to present a specific set of recommendations, campus guidelines and organizational structures to help bring about a more diversified campus.

Chancellor John V. Lombardi, who announced the creation of the Commission on Campus Diversity on Oct. 15, said that even with the long tradition of working on issues of diversity at UMass, he is still "seriously concerned about the effectiveness" of the current efforts. He also noted, "We need some expert guidance ... We must draw upon the best experiences of our colleagues around the country who face similar challenges."

Taylor seemed optimistic about the efforts of the commission and its members. "I am impressed with [the members'] knowledge, experience and commitment ... We are proceeding in a focused, results-oriented fashion."

The committee consists of a diverse group of professionals ranging from state representatives to Mass Port authority officials, professional educators and students. Just over half of the members are from UMass, including two students.

The steps taken by the administration are not entirely in response to the recent racially driven actions, but also to the series of similar events that have occurred since Lombardi took his position.

The fact that recruitment and retention of minority students has been lacking in recent years played a role in the commission's conception as well. Currently only 17 percent of the 18,000 undergraduates are minorities.

According to a letter posted on the commission's Web site, Michael Gargano, vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, said, "Knowing that the entire University benefits from a racially and ethnically diverse campus ... we charge the commission with reviewing and assessing those aspects of campus life related to diversity and the quality of experience for our students."

The aforementioned public forum to be held on Dec. 9 will be from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m., and a location will be announced shortly. It will be open to any and all individuals who wish to attend and have

See DIVERSITY on page 2

Job prospects looking much brighter for college graduates

By Justin Pope
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The recovering economy and looming retirement of the baby boomers are making this a very good year to be a college senior looking for a job after graduation. Recruiters, career counselors and students say the fall recruiting season has been the most active since the dot.com boom.

Accountants are again finding increased demand for their services — thanks to the wave of post-Enron regulations — but theirs is just one of several hot fields. Technology companies, investment banks and consulting firms appear to be picking up the pace, as do some defense contractors and even smaller businesses that haven't traditionally recruited on campus.

"I haven't been to school in the last three weeks because of my interview schedule," said Eric Golden, a senior at Bentley College, a business-oriented school in the Boston suburb of Waltham. He feels lucky to be graduating this year.

Friends with similar credentials who graduated earlier often ended up taking positions that weren't their top choices — "just to have a job," Golden said. He's been juggling about a dozen interviews with companies including money managers, investment banks and General Electric.

College hiring is expected to increase 13 percent from last year, according to a new survey from the National Association of Colleges and Employers. The survey also indicates that 7 out of 10 employers said they expected to increase salary offers to new college graduates, the average increase being 3.7 percent.

Four out of five employers called the job market for new graduates good, very good or excellent; last year fewer than two out of five did.

Michigan State's College Employment Research Institute will release a report Thursday that director Phil Gardner said will show overall campus hiring is up as much as 20 percent this year, depending on the region.

Experts say hiring still isn't approaching the intensity of the late 1990s. A population boom among college students has tightened competition, and employers remain gun-shy about big bonuses.

Some engineers are still having a tough time, in part because so much manufacturing has moved off shore. And many businesses, notably financial services, have learned to get by with leaner staffs during the downturn.

But there is clear momentum. At California State University, Fullerton, the number of companies at a fall career fair was up about 40 percent from last year; at the University of Florida, the number of recruiting companies is up as much as 15 percent.

At the University of Notre Dame in South Bend, Ind., interviews are up roughly 30 percent. Also, the school had to step in, requiring recruiters to allow students to mull job offers until at least Nov. 24. For the first time since the dot.com boom, competition was fierce enough that companies were pushing students for immediate decisions on their offers.

Amherst Police Department gets grant for 'Click it or ticket'

By Dan O'Brien
Collegian Staff

Amherst Police Chief Charles L. Scherpa announced last week that his department has received a $12,000 grant from the Governor's Highway Safety Bureau to support its involvement in the 2004-2005 "Click It or Ticket" and "You Drink and Drive. You Lose" campaigns.

The funds have also been approved for the first statewide "Road Respect" campaign, which targets aggressive drivers and speeding. The grant will include an additional $5,000 for the purchase of equipment and educational materials.

The first "Click it or Ticket" mobilization will be conducted from Nov. 15 through Nov. 28. Massachusetts State Police claimed the campaign has helped increase safety belt usage statewide from 51 percent in 2002 to 63 percent in 2004. State Police also expect the campaign to reduce fatalities and injuries from motor vehicle accidents. More than 400 fatalities and 91,000 injuries occur in motor vehicle accidents in Massachusetts each year.

The campaigns have become popular throughout the state with several television and radio advertisements featuring Massachusetts State Police troopers informing drivers to buckle up. The popular slogan on the commercials says, "Click It or Ticket. Massachusetts is serious about saving lives." The first year of the campaign was based on a successful national model involving four "mobilizations" that combined high-visibility traffic enforcement, paid and earned media, and community education between Nov. 2002 and Sept. 2003. The first phase of the campaign raised safety belt use 11 percent to a historical high of 62 percent, according to the Massachusetts State Police Web site.

Massachusetts law requires all drivers and passengers to be properly restrained in a safety belt, booster seat, or child safety seat. A driver may be stopped by police solely for having a child under 12 years old improperly restrained. This offense carries a $25 fine per unbuckled occupant. The law also states that children under 5 years old and weighing fewer than 41 pounds must be properly secured in a child safety seat.

The Governor's Highway Safety Board, a program of the Massachusetts Executive Office of Public Safety, is providing $3.7 million in grant funding to 265 local police departments and to the State Police.

The Amherst Police Department also announced it will be conducting a Child Passenger Safety Checkpoint for Amherst residents on the third Friday of each month by appointment only.

Amherst residents should e-mail the Amherst Police at police@amherstma.gov or call the Amherst Police Department Community Services Bureau at 413-256-4012 to schedule an appointment to have their child safety seats inspected and properly installed.

Colin Powell resigns from position as secretary of state

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) – Secretary of State Colin Powell, the retired four-star general who often clashed with more hawkish members of the administration on Iraq and other foreign policy issues, resigned in a Cabinet exodus that promises a starkly different look to President Bush's second-term team.

National security adviser Condoleezza Rice was most likely to succeed Powell, senior administration officials said Monday.

Known for his moderate views and unblemished reputation, it was Powell who went before the United Nations in Feb. 2003 to sell Bush's argument for invading Iraq to skeptics „broad and at home. But Powell's case was built on faulty intelligence that Saddam Hussein possessed weapons of mass destruction.

Still, the former Joint Chiefs of Staff chairman remained the most popular member of the administration, more so than even Bush.

The White House on Monday announced Powell's plan to depart along with the resignations of Education Secretary Rod Paige, Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman and Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham.

Combined with the resignations earlier this month of Commerce Secretary Don Evans and Attorney General John Ashcroft, six of Bush's 15 Cabinet members will not be part of the president's second term, which begins with his inauguration Jan. 20. An administration that experienced few changes over the last four years suddenly hit a high-water mark for overhaul.

In a resignation letter dated Nov. 12, Powell told Bush that, with the election over, it was time to "step down ... and return to private life." The Army man for 35 years said he would stay on "for a number of weeks, or a month or two" until his replacement was confirmed by the Senate.

Asked what he plans to do next, the 67-year-old Powell said, "I don't know." In a statement, Bush called Powell "one of the great public servants of our time."

Most of the speculation on a successor to Powell has centered on Rice, who is generally seen as more hawkish and is one of Bush's closest advisers. She is widely considered the president's first choice for the top diplomat job despite reports that she intends to return to California — she was provost at Stanford University — or was hoping to replace Donald Rumsfeld as defense secretary.

Aides to Rice declined to comment. In Ecuador for a meeting of defense ministers, Rumsfeld gave no indication that he is on the verge of stepping down. "I have not discussed that with the president," he said when asked if he planned to resign.

Also mentioned as a possible Powell replacement was U.N. Ambassador John Danforth, the former Republican senator from Missouri.

KNIGHT RIDDER

Colin Powell resigned yesterday as secretary of state.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF Peter Fleischer
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NEWS SUPERVISOR Catherine Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Trapinski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LEISURE EDITOR Meghan Healy
COPY EDITOR Arwen Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lowles
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marzelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Riggins
FINANCE MANAGER Herab Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginia Proctor
MAIN FRONTIER Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT COPY EDITOR Linda Wallach
ASSISTANT ARTS EDITOR Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT NEWS EDITOR Jachon Sorensen
ASSISTANT PHOTO EDITOR Thomas Hecht
ACADEMIC PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Huggins
ASST. ARTS & LEISURE Mike Bostock
ASST. ARTS & LEISURE Monique Jeremiah
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edes
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED DAILY IN THE INTEREST OF THE STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST. THE COLLEGIAN IS FUNDED IN PART BY THE STUDENT ACTIVITY TRUST FUND. THE COLLEGIAN IS PRINTED AT THE PRINTING HOUSE IN HOLYOKE, MA. THE COLLEGIAN IS A MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS. ALL RIGHTS TO ARTICLES AND PHOTOGRAPHS PUBLISHED IN THE COLLEGIAN ARE RESERVED BY THE COLLEGIAN AND MAY NOT BE REPRODUCED WITHOUT PERMISSION. ONE COPY IS AVAILABLE FREE OF CHARGE TO EACH READER. ADDITIONAL COPIES ARE AVAILABLE FOR $1 EACH.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today
NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron J. Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Matthew Reid
COPY EDITOR
Sarah Marples
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Nate Freedman, Elliot Cheng

News is looking for writers and photographers from Hampshire, Amherst, Smith, and Holyoke Colleges.
Call Erika 545-1809

Romney targets Turnpike chair for Big Dig funding disaster

By Steve LeBlanc
Associated Press

Amorello is defending himself against Romney's charges of poor project management for the Big Dig.

BOSTON (AP) — In his newly declared quest to oust Massachusetts Turnpike Chairman Matthew Amorello, Gov. Mitt Romney isn't likely to get much help from the independent agency's board of directors.

A majority of the board — Jordan Levy, John Moscardelli and Amorello himself — are publicly backing the chairman against Romney's charges that he has managed the $14.6 billion project poorly.

Romney issued the call for Amorello's resignation on Friday after an investigation revealed that there are hundreds of leaks in the new I-93 tunnel under downtown Boston.

That criticism is unfair according to Moscardelli, who was appointed to the board in 2002 by Romney's predecessor and fellow Republican Jane Swift. Moscardelli said Romney's demand that Amorello step down was politically motivated. He said Amorello isn't to blame for an eight-inch breach in one of the tunnel's walls in September that sent water pouring into the tunnel, creating a massive traffic jam.

"It's unfortunate that this whole situation has been used for some political expediency," Moscardelli said.

The cause of the leak dates back to 1999 when the cement was poured for that section of the tunnel, well before Amorello became head of the agency in 2002, Moscardelli said.

Romney said on Friday that the project needs someone with more technical expertise in massive construction projects than Amorello, a former state senator.

"I lost confidence in the Turnpike Authority's ability to manage the project some time ago," Romney said. "The public has also lost confidence in the management of the Big Dig."

As governor, Romney is barred from firing members of an independent authority like the Turnpike without just cause. A spokeswoman for Romney on Monday declined to say how the governor hopes to remove Amorello.

State Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas, appointed to the Turnpike Board by Romney, declined to comment. A fifth board member, Richard Anderson, did not return a phone call Monday.

Other voices on Beacon Hill say the focus on Amorello could divert attention away from the project's contractors, which the state has blamed for faulty work and overcharges. The Turnpike Authority is seeking to recoup millions of dollars from Big Dig contractors, including Bechtel/Parsons Brinckerhoff, the firm overseeing the most expensive highway project in U.S. history.

"The only people who are pleased to have a political sideshow is Bechtel/Parsons Brinckerhoff because it takes attention away from them and their failure to provide adequate oversight, adequate quality control and underscores their lack of a meaningful cost recovery program," said Jack McCarthy, a spokesman for state Inspector General Gregory Sullivan.

Bechtel has defended its work, saying some "seepage" is inevitable in a project of the size and scope of the Big Dig, and that efforts are underway to help seal those leaks.

High honors, smooth harmony

Members of the Vocal Suspects singing group perform at the Dean's List reception last Weds., Nov.10 in the Campus Center auditorium.

Commission to hold public forum

DIVERSITY from page 1

their concerns heard by the commission.

Signing up in advance will be required of students to allow for an orderly and productive meeting, and more details can be found at the Commission of Campus Diversity Web site: www.umass.edu/campusdiversity.

The full member list, biographies, official documents, and press releases can also be found on this site. In addition to the Web site, an e-mail address has been established so that the campus community has a way of communicating with the commission: CampusDiversity@u-mass.edu.

Even with the daunting task in front of them, the commission is "eager to get to work on this most important topic," said Taylor. "With recommendations in hand by mid-February, the University can hopefully initiate some immediate reforms in the spring semester."

New research finds low-carb diets not as effective as low-fat

By Marilynn Marchione
Associated Press

CLICK TO SEE ATKINS STAR

Atkins' diet organization spokeswoman Colette Heimowitz

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Regardless of how they shed pounds in the first place, big losers stayed that way by limiting fat rather than carbohydrates, according to new research that could add fuel to the backlash against low-carb diets.

Dieters already have been turning away from Atkins-style plans as a long-term weight-control strategy, and the new study gives them more reason. Low-fat plans seem to work better at keeping weight off.

"People who started eating more fat ... regained the most weight over time," said Suzanne Phelan, a Brown Medical School psychologist who presented results of the study Monday at a meeting of the North American Association for the Study of Obesity.

The study used the National Weight Control Registry, a decade-old effort to learn the secrets of success from people who had lost at least 30 pounds and kept them off for at least a year. The registry run by doctors from the University of Colorado in Denver, the University of Pittsburgh and Brown University in Providence, R.I.

They studied 2,700 people who entered the registry from 1995 through 2003. Their average age was 47, most were women, and they had lost an average of 72 pounds initially. Doctors compared their diets to see whether one type or another made a difference in how much weight they had lost and how much they had regained a year later.

All reported eating only about 1,400 calories a day, but the portion that came from fat rose — from 24 percent in 1995 to more than 29 percent in 2003 — while the part from carbohydrates fell, from 56 percent to 49 percent.

The number who were on low-carb diets (less than 90 grams a day) rose from 6 percent to 17 percent during the same period.

The type of diet — low-fat, low-carb or in between — made no difference in how people lost weight initially.

But those who increased their fat intake over a year regained the most weight. That meant they ate less carbohydrates, because the amount of protein in their diets stayed the same, Phelan said.

"Only a minority of successful weight losers consume low-carbohydrate diets," she and the other researchers concluded.

Colette Heimowitz, a nutrition expert and spokeswoman for the Atkins diet organization, noted that the study considered 90 grams to be low-carb, while Atkins recommends 60 grams for weight loss and 60 to 120 for weight maintenance.

She said that for many of the dieters studied, "the carbs aren't low enough for them to be successful." They also should have replaced carbs with more protein rather than fat, she said.

Dr. Thomas Waddell, a University of Pennsylvania weight loss expert who had no role in the study, said it is too soon to say which approach is better. Several longer-term studies of low-carb and low-fat dieters are in the works, he said.

But he said: "I do think that people who are keeping the weight off are eating a low-fat, high-carb diet."

The dietary establishment has long been skeptical of the long-term safety and effectiveness of low-carb diets, and consumers increasingly are losing their enthusiasm for the glut of low-carb products that overloaded grocery store shelves as the diet became a fad in the past few years.

More than half of Americans who have tried a low-carb diet have given up, according to a recent survey by the market research firm InsightExpress. Other published survey information suggests that the number of Americans following such a diet peaked at nine percent last February and fell to six percent by June.

The American Institute for Cancer Research used those trends to issue a statement in September urging dieters to "come back to common sense."

"Eat a balanced diet weighted toward vegetables and fruits, reduce portion sizes and increase physical activity," the institute said.

Dr. William Dietz, director of chronic-disease prevention at the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, said it is difficult to tell whether these low-carb diets really work because people find it hard to stick to a strict regimen for long periods. "My anecdotal experience is that people go on and off these diets," he said. "When their weight goes up, they go back on the diet to lose weight."

Other research at the conference underscored the many health and personal problems obese people face.

Regency Hair Stylists
~ Hair Cuts ~
Regular $20
Special $15
*Call for an appointment with Marna or Megan
Mention this ad
253-9526
Marna
Megan

UMASS
Ski 'N' Board Club
The 37th Annual Ski Sale
November 18 - 20th
Thursday 11:00 - 8:00
Friday 11:00 - 8:00
Saturday 11:00 - 6:00
Student Union Ballroom
UMASS Amherst
434 Student Union | 545 - 3437 | skiclub@stuaf.umass.edu
http://www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub

New WORLD Theater
LA CASA DE RIGOBERTA
MIRA AL SUR
by El Grupo de Teatro Justo Rufino Garay
A poetic tapestry of Nicaraguan history, war and family memories. Presented in Spanish with English subtitles
Fri. and Sat. November 19 & 20, 2004
8 pm, Kirby Theater, Amherst College
TICKETS ARE: $ 15-general public, $ 8-seniors/low income patrons, $5-students. Call the FAC Box Office 545-2511. For info about the shows, call NWT at 413.545.1972
www.newworldtheater.org

FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
• a grade dispute?
• teacher, roomate or job concerns?
• billing problems?
• harassment?
• ...or any other University related problem?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
523 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING.
✓ Get your Bar Code* Certification
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
November 19th-21st
The Garden Room
Lord Jeffery Inn
Boltwood Ave., Amherst
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 2004

"What we have to do is to be forever curiously testing new opinions and courting new impressions." -Walter Pater

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Colin Powell was the 'voice of moderation'

Secretary of State Colin L. Powell announced his resignation yesterday, as part of a flurry of resignations that will continue to reshape the cabinet of President George W. Bush.

Also resigning were Energy Secretary Spencer Abraham, Education Secretary Rod Page and Agriculture Secretary Ann Veneman.

"It has always been my intention that I would serve one term," Powell said following the announcement. The resignation would become official as soon as a replacement was named, which could potentially take several weeks to a month.

In his resignation letter to the President, dated Nov. 2, 2004, Powell indicated that he and Bush had been discussing his resignation for the past few months, and that both parties agreed it was the best course of action.

Although nothing has been confirmed, current National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice has been suggested as being the top choice to succeed Powell as the nation's top diplomat. Rice had been rumored to be interested in the job of Secretary of Defense, but current defense secretary Donald Rumsfeld has not announced his desire to leave the position.

In his acceptance speech following the concession of Senator John Kerry, Bush said he regretted not being able to unite the country in his first four years, but that he vowed he would do his best to bridge the gap between the liberals and conservatives in this country. Choosing Rice as the next Secretary of State would not seem to fit the President's desire to unify the nation.

Powell has always been praised for being a voice of moderation in the Cabinet, not letting his values clash with his loyalty to the president. Powell has openly disagreed with the president on key issues in the past, but his loyalty was always clear. He was seen as a man guided by principles and integrity, qualities that should be extremely prevalent of any Secretary of State.

Rice, on the other hand, is seen as being the opposite of Powell by many liberal democrats. She has been at Bush's side (and not just the current Bush) for several years now, and has been in the news more than once for having improper intentions and unethical values. Rice's loyalty and Powell's loyalty may be one in the same in terms of personnel, but the similarities stop there.

A name that has been brought up in recent weeks and months for Powell's replacement was John Danforth, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations. Danforth, a Republican, has been praised by both republicans and democrats as having many of the same qualities as Powell. Danforth, like Powell, was well liked and well respected by members of both political parties. He would seem to fit the model that Bush set forth in his acceptance speech much more than a candidate such as Rice.

Rice's appointment to Secretary of State would only divide this country even more than it already is. In a time when a voice such as Powell's is more important than ever, allowing a Cabinet to be so one-sided in the battle of partisan politics would be potentially disastrous (and some would argue it is too late, regardless).

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

A leader shines

Yousef Munayyer

When Yasser Arafat died last week, not only did Palestinians lose their leader, not only did the world lose a Noble Peace laureate, but also the Arab Middle East lost its only democratically elected official. In 1974, when Arafat stood before the representatives of the world, himself representing the Palestinian people, he told them not to force him to choose the freedom fighters gun. Last week, he was buried with that gun in his hands, as the olive branch had long ago been trampled on.

No leader is perfect. No leader is blameless. Yasser Arafat certainly had his faults, just as every human being does, but for having been in the position he was, he did an amazing job. First, the fact that Arafat died of natural causes at the age of 75, as opposed to an assassin's bullet or a missile attack, proves he was no ordinary man. He was always forced to walk a fine line, many times putting his political career on the line to appease one side, and this was his ultimate downfall. But can you blame him?

People tell me that Arafat just wanted to stay in power, and they believe he was a self-centered individual who was corrupt and had only bad intentions. I do not believe this. To an extent he was corrupt, and to an extent he had his own interests in mind; but everyone has their own interests in mind, and every leader is corrupt. Look at the president of the United States.

Arafat was always looked at and criticized as a leader of a nation-state, whereas his job was actually much more difficult than that. You see, when you are the leader of a nation-state and you lose power, the nation-state persists and a new leader takes control. Arafat was the leader who brought his people into focus before the eyes of the world. He was not the president of some well-structured state but rather he was the symbol of a people wronged. And he was not prepared to lose the progress he had made for the Palestinian people over the past 50 years.

I cannot even recall how many people have asked me in the past week, "So what's your take on Arafat?" The first thing that comes to mind is, "Now you ask!?" The "peace process" has been at a standstill for years, Arafat has been in a bunker, and the occupation continues. Yet now, after the man dies, people want to know what I think of him as a leader?

There is one thing that must be perfectly clear: Arafat was never the problem for the Palestinian people. Zionism has been and is still the longest-standing illegal occupation. As far as I am concerned, any Palestinian whose main objective is opposing the occupation and bringing justice to the Palestinian cause is a good enough leader for me. I do not care if they wear a suit, a revolutionary jacket or a headdress. My main concern is that the leader shares the same goals I do; and until the day he died, I believe Arafat did.

Yasser Arafat certainly had his faults, just as every human being does, but for having been in the position he was, he did an amazing job.

As the only elected leader in the Arab Middle East, Arafat represented his people, and perhaps this was what caused him to fall from the eyes of the United States. Yes, Arafat turned down what he was "generously" offered at Camp David in 2000, as any leader of the Palestinian people should. He was offered 18 percent of historic Palestine and given only functional control over that small portion. The Palestinians would not have sovereignty, they would not control their airspace, they would not control their border, and the state would be a façade. The refugees, who were forced from their homes, would not be allowed to return.

How could the leader of the Palestinian people accept this? He couldn't; he would rather continue the struggle, and every Palestinian in his place would have made the same decision. Arafat's decision not to accept the joke offer at Camp David was possibly the most democratic decision made by a leader in recent history.

So what's next for the Palestinian people? Barring any irregularities, which tend to occur when there are tanks outside your window, the Palestinians should have a chance to elect another leader this January. However, though a leader is necessary for negotiation purposes, there are fundamental beliefs held by the Palestinian people that transcend any position of leadership, and those candidates will know this for sure. The refugees cannot be forgotten and 1948 cannot be forgotten. Any Palestin-ian leader who ignores these demands of his people will soon be forgotten himself.

Israel has already decided on a unilateral initiative for peace. In other words, they are going to figure this out for the Palestin-ians and hope things work out. With this plan, Israel does not want to deal with another leader. Rather it will hope to go its own way and continue to ignore the elephant in the room.

Let one thing be clear: the Palestinian people are never going to give up on the rights of the refugees and the need for justifying the atrocities of 1948. Any leader who personifies that is not being hardheaded; he is being representative. And that is the leader I want to represent me.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian editor.

Country music on the rise

Dan McDonnell

I know I'm in the minority on this topic, but I definitely see country music coming into our culture in a big way right now. Just take that new song by Nelly and Tim McGraw as an example. I realize it's not a country song, but McGraw is one of the top names in the country music genre, and a duet with Nelly brought his name to a whole new group of music fans. You just wait and see. You are going to be hearing a lot more from Tim McGraw in the near future. Just try to listen to his new song about his father, "Live Like You Were Dying," and tell me you didn't get chills. I dare you.

I've been listening to country music for most of my life. My father is a big fan and always had it playing on the radio. I was hooked on country at an early age, listening to classics like Willie Nelson (yes, I know you probably haven't heard of him, but he's a legend). I did shy away from it for a few years during high school. I ended up listening to that hard rock and metal garbage, mostly because that's what everyone else was into. But I went back to the ol' country roots pretty quickly.

Over the last two summers I have been to a bunch of country concerts. They are some of the best times I have ever had. The first concert, I just went with a friend of mine from back home. With each concert, the crew grew larger and larger. At one concert this summer, we had a group of about 15 kids hanging out on the lawn of the Tweeter Center singing along with Tim McGraw and newcomers Big & Rich.

Now I know this does not sound all that exciting to most people. I'm sure a lot of you are thinking that doing a swan dive off of the library sounds more appealing. The actual concert, though, is only half the fun. For a concert that starts at 7 p.m., the parking lots are nearly filled by 3 p.m. at the absolute latest.

Country fans spend the entire day in the parking lot with the grill on fire and the coolers becoming lighter and lighter. Concert days are basically full days of beer, burgers and music. There's always one group of people playing Frisbee and one group throwing a football around. Then there's our group.

The collaboration between Nelly and Tim McGraw is just an example of the rising popularity of country musicians ... I'm just saying give country music a chance.

with a nice wiffleball game going on in the middle of a grass parking lot.

Now I'm sure that almost all of you reading this (yes, all four of you) have been to a concert of some sort at one point in your lives. Let's take a rap concert or a rock concert as an example. How many times have you seen someone accidentally bump into someone else and have it lead to a near full-blown riot? It's almost as if it's an unwritten rule that being bumped into allows you to lose your mind and convince yourself that you're the second coming of Mike Tyson. I'm personally waiting for the day that this happens and some guy reacts by leveling someone with a steel chair, then climbing a 10-foot ladder and hitting a big splash on 10 people down below.

At a country concert, the results of the accidental bump are a lot different. During one concert, I was walking around the parking lot and bumped into some guy that could have easily crippled me with one shot. Instead he apologized, offered me a beer and a hot dog, and invited everyone I was with to join up with them for a while. Stuff like this shouldn't happen at a concert. I should have been knocked out cold. Instead, I met 10 more people whose names I forgot about three seconds after I had met them all, and I was hooked up with a free beer and a hot dog.

There's a ton of new country artists out there who can be enjoyed by fans of any type of music. The collaboration between Nelly and Tim McGraw is just an example of the rising popularity of country musicians. Kenny Chesney has gained a very large following of fans all over the country over the past two years. Toby Keith, who played at the Mullins Center last year, has risen to fame mostly through the controversy of his song about Sept. 11.

I'm just saying give country music a chance. I know everyone hears country and thinks of some old guy sitting on a front porch with a shotgun and a pound of chewing tobacco in his cheek with banjo music playing. The concerts I went to had a really good turnout of college-aged people. When you hear country, don't automatically think old people and hicks. It's music for everybody. Take my word for it. Have I ever steered you wrong?

Dan McDonnell is a Collegian columnist.

Bustamante embodies ineffectiveness of SGA

Dan O'Brien

First, former Student Government Association Speaker Jared Nokes attempted to remove the African Latino Asian Native American Caucus Senate seats last year; then, members associated with ALANA released the infamous "KKK-Nine" photos in September; and now, e-mails between former SGA Speaker Patrick Higgins and Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Michael Gargano are causing controversy.

Last Wednesday, SGA President Eduardo Bustamante proclaimed that he would no longer be working with the vice chancellor on any issues involving the Senate. His decision is no surprise. Not doing real work is what the SGA does best.

Several letters to the editor of the Daily Collegian in recent weeks have attacked the SGA's inaction on student issues, and one even called for the disbandment of the SGA and the Office of ALANA Affairs. This opinion seems a bit extreme – even the author said she wasn't serious – but the thought is not too far-fetched. I would certainly be opposed to the dismantling of either SGA or ALANA, because I believe in democracy. However, there have been many calls for these organizations to start from scratch, which at this point does not seem like a bad idea.

I suppose my anger toward these organizations stems from the lack of action they have taken on issues regarding the betterment of students at this university. Right now, each student pays about $80 to go towards the SGA. For what? This hard-earned money goes toward an organization plagued by students who bicker back and forth, put forth allegations against each other, call each other racist, and worst of all, don't get anything of real value accomplished.

One of the most disappointing actions of the SGA happened at their Nov. 10 meeting when Bustamante made it official that he would no longer work with Vice Chancellor Gargano on any issues involving the SGA due to the recent e-mail controversy.

It should be pointed out that never once did Bustamante mention how these e-mails would somehow hurt the student body. Never once did he give solid reasons as to how these e-mails would negatively impact the SGA. And, never once did he mention how these e-mails would impact his work with the administration. From an outsider's perspective, all his reasons appear to be personal.

Bustamante was upset because he was left out of the process, but his decision not to work with Gargano crossed the line of letting personal feelings get in the way of politics.

The e-mails bewteen Gargano and former SGA Speaker Patrick Higgins were Higgins' attempt to remove funding for graduate student Gladys Franco's new position as interim Director of the Office of ALANA Affairs. In the e-mails, Higgins told Gargano that he believed Franco's position interfered with the SGA bylaws. He also persistently asked Gargano when he would stop funding Franco's position.

ALANA claimed they were upset over the plan to pull funding for Franco's new position as well as an attempt to "dismantle the Office of ALANA Affairs," according to memos distributed at the last SGA meeting.

For the record, I have read every single one of these mentioned e-mails. Nothing I have read indicates that Gargano, Higgins, or anyone else involved in the e-mails were trying to dismantle ALANA.

Whether or not it was fair for Higgins to send all the e-mails is a legitimate question. But does it deserve the attention that it's getting?

I cannot put my opinion of Bustamante's decision not to work with Gargano into plainer terms: this decision is not in the best interests of the student body. Granted, the activity in which Gargano participated was not fair to Bustamante; but with the outrageous rises in tuition over the past three years, the tremendous cuts in state funding, and the ridiculous prices of text books (and a new textbook rental system that needs to be implemented soon), Bustamante is missing the target he should be shooting towards, which is helping all the students of UMass.

Our SGA president should keep in mind that in politics, you cannot always get along with your constituents. I do not think Ariel Sharon and Yasser Arafat were exactly pleased to hold talks with each other, but they still at least tried to work on the real issues of the day. (How well they did this is up for another discussion, but they still tried!)

After Bustamante's awful decision, he had few words to back himself up at the SGA meeting.

"[The e-mails are] especially troubling for me," Bustamante said. "I saw a lot of information withheld from me ... I saw a lot of dishonesty exposed to me."

His few words reflect that he is just a president with hurt feelings, which might be the reason why he never once submitted a plan as to how he would now conduct business with the administration. All he has said so far is that he plans to work with only Chancellor John Lombardi's office. But, with ALANA's recent attacks on the administration's new Diversity Committee, I somehow doubt that Lombardi will be greeting Bustamante with open arms.

Dan O'Brien is a Collegian editor.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Quinn faces a 'Tough Crowd' at UMass

Comedian rants for a sold-out Fine Arts Center

By Reid Davenport
Collegian Staff

Saturday night the Center for Student Activities and Student Life brought the comic styling of former "Saturday Night Live" cast member Colin Quinn. Despite his show "Tough Crowd" on Comedy Central being cancelled earlier this season, Quinn was upbeat and ready to entertain the Fine Arts Center crowd.

Quinn started as a comic 20 years ago when he had just given up drinking. He was bartending for a living and needed something to do, so comedy became his anti-drug. His comic influences include such greats as

Richard Pryor and George Carlin, and one of his big influences was a book by John K. Toole called "Confederacy for Dunces."

After a short introduction by University of Massachusetts student Mina Safain, Quinn took the stage and started attacking all of the camera users. One girl in the audience failed to sneak past Colin's radar as she tried to send her friends a picture of him with her cell phone.

"I haven't been up here since the Red Sox took the series," Quinn said as the crowd roared for the Red Sox win. "I mean you guys deserved it. I'll admit it, but those guys are crazy. It's not just the hair and the beards, but I mean Pedro brought a freaking midget into the clubhouse. I mean what's up with that?"

Quinn moved on to his belief that the entire world is going crazy.

"MTV has got Justin Timberlake's nephew, cousin, niece, relative hosting TRL," Quinn said. "They introduce something like, 'Lollipops, rainbows, and clouds.' Then, up next its 'I'm going to kill you,' by some gangster rap artist."

Quinn's act managed to keep up a fast pace throughout the entire show. He moved on to rant about how everything on TV is some reality TV spin-off and even video games are taking part in the who reality as entertainment mess.

The quick pace of Quinn's act may have caused the audience to miss a few punch lines, but he still delivered a strong, veteran-comic's performance. He touched upon his crazy family life and how his relationships worked out, and then he talked about his own way of seeing the war in Iraq.

"It's like all the countries are people in a bar," Quinn said. "Iraq is the abusive boyfriend of Kuwait. So America goes over and tries to straighten things out. Ireland is just the drunk guy that's too drunk to even move."

After Quinn got the crowd a little more warmed up, he began talking about having to deal with his family at Thanksgiving and ended his set by mentioning his embarrassing attempt at making a sex home video.

"There's not one bit of sex in the video," Quinn said. "It's just a dark room with me and my girlfriend yelling at each other and all you can see is my pasty white knees."

During a Q&A session following the show, he was asked about the cancellation of "Tough Crowd."

"We all knew it was coming," Colin noted. "Comedy Central wanted a more entertainment-based show, but I can't go to a comic like Patrice [and say], 'Hey, what do you think about Ashlee Simpson's new show?' It just wouldn't work."

"With the election, Hollywood pushed so hard they helped Bush win."

Colin said. "Hollywood tried to shove it down our throats to the point [that] people wanted to do their own thinking."

In an appearance on the IFC channel's "Dinner for Five" with Jon Favreau, Colin mentioned that he hated the idea of acting all together. He hated it so much that it caused him to turn down a roll that he regrets doing to this day.

"I got a call from Mike Myers saying he had a part for this new movie called, 'Austin Powers.'" Colin said. "He had this character Doctor Evil that he wanted me to play the illegitimate son of. I just couldn't even think of trying to do the acting thing again. So, I turned down the role that made Seth Green's career and I still take crap for it to this day."

"I'm announcing this for the first time," Colin said about his new project. "I'm working on a new sketch show that has never been done before. I can't say what it is, but I promise it will be so big that even those dummies Patrice and Jim Norton can't screw it up."

HALO 2: the wait has finally ended

Press Start to Play

Reid Davenport

Play as Master Chief in Bungie's sequel to their xbox classic

COURTESY BUNGIE.NET

On Nov. 9, 2004, a lot of anxiously waiting gamers finally got the game that is already being called the greatest of the year. Its release date had already been pushed back before, but now no one had reason to believe that it would get pushed back once again as they were constantly reassured that the date was set in stone. On Nov. 9, "Halo 2" was finally going to hit stores across America.

Hundreds of fans who could not wait until normal mall hours lined up outside of Electronics Boutique at the Hampshire Mall awaiting the special midnight release for those who pre-ordered the game. Gamers young and old turned out to get their hands on the first couple hundred copies of "Halo 2." They started showing up at 9 p.m. and were greeted by the store clerks setting up a network game of "Halo" in the store so that customers could play some four-on-four multiplayer games.

When midnight struck, gaming stores up and down the East Coast undoubtedly had hundreds, or even thousands, of people slowly clawing toward the register to pick up their reserved copies. Customers sprinted out of the stores and to their cars to be some of the first few thousand people to play "Halo 2."

The game is everything it was hyped up to be. The rumors of new vehicles and weapons turned out to be mostly fact, but some were fiction. The addition of the flamethrower turned out to be false. The developers felt they had added plenty of new weapons, and to add in a graphically demanding weapon like that would have caused the release date to be pushed back further. Other weapons, vehicles, and full-motion video sequences that were cut from the game can be seen on the DVD that comes with the limited collector's edition of "Halo 2."

The good thing about "Halo 2" is that you do not need to be a big fan of the first to enjoy it. Knowing the storyline from the first one helps, but even the average player shouldn't have a problem learning the controls.

The story this time around is that another Halo has been found, and it is once again up to you to stop the alien race – known as the Covenant – from activating it, which would most likely destroy the entire universe. However, this time you find yourself playing both sides, as you take control of the aliens as well. Through both characters, you will learn about the aliens' beliefs that caused this intergalactic war to begin.

"Halo 2's" graphics are even more mind-blowing than the first. The added ability to use dual weapons makes for some intense battles, and the surrounding environments are nicely detailed. The environments are also ten times larger than those in the original "Halo," so the gamers will have a wide range of areas to explore for each level.

The new dual weapons system makes things much more interesting. As a human soldier your basic weapons are now an assault rifle and a sub-machine gun (SMG). You have the ability to hold two single hand-weapons, such as two SMGs, while having a larger back up weapon, such as the sniper rifle or rocket launcher. The new alien weapons include a Covenant energy sword, the Brute Shot, and the Fuel Rod gun. The weapons that can have dual-wielding abilities are listed in the user's guide that comes with the game.

Once again melee attacks are back and can turn into a very life-saving skill to learn. It will help you save ammo and kill enemies in a shorter amount of time. You can take out the small grunts or "Unggoys" with a few quick punches, or knock down some of the bigger enemies and leave them open for a few quick blasts from an SMG to finish them off.

The vehicles have been revamped and a few new ones have joined the ranks. The alien Shadow is a cool looking new battle tank, and the classic Warthog vehicle has been given an alternative gun mount that is more like a rocket launcher. The developers also added the ability to steal enemy vehicles, attack enemies driving the vehicles using melee attacks, and the ability to drop a grenade inside the bigger tank vehicles to blow them up.

'Halo 2'
X-Box
Publisher Microsoft
Developer Bungie Software
Rated M for Mature

The vehicles have also been given delayed explosions. That means if you take out a tank with a gun, you may still be able to climb into the vehicle only to have it explode on you 30 seconds later. Also, if you can land a solid shot from a rocket launcher or constantly blast a tank with a vehicle's mounted gun, it will make a bigger explosion.

The artificial intelligence of your allied forces is much more helpful and realistic. Fellow soldiers will no longer just stand and let themselves die. They move up when they see you have made the area clear for them to do so. They will also tell you when they are in trouble and will provide you with help if you can keep them alive. They also have no problem making comments about how much they enjoy killing aliens, or how much they don't like you staring at them while you wait for a drop ship to appear.

The multiplayer is also much smoother and enjoyable. The developers took away the scope on the Magnum so that there is no more 'magnum sniping,' as gamers have dubbed the cheap way of getting kills. You can choose from King of the Hill, capture the flag and an extreme version of keep away, where it's every man for himself.

Overall the game is extremely well done and will satisfy all of those gamers who waited three years to get their hands on the game. Even casual and new fans to the game will find themselves trapped in endless hours of game play as the environments drag you along with the continuing story that keeps leaving you with the craving to find out what happens next.

"Halo 2" is now available for X-Box at your local retailer for $49.99, and the limited edition, which comes in a metal case with an extra DVD that includes the making of and history of "Halo" videos, runs for about five to ten dollars more. Each copy comes with a free, two-month trial for X-Box Live, which, along with an Ethernet connection, is required for online play.

Stella to visit Noho

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

This Friday night marks the first time that the comedy group Stella will be coming through Northampton, but it certainly won't be the first time that the audience has seen the members. Pearl Street is bound to be packed with fans of Stella, which comprises Michael Ian Black, Michael Showalter, and David Wain. All three of them are former members of the acclaimed, hysterical sketch show "The State," which aired on MTV in the early '90s. The three were also all involved in the cult film "Wet Hot American Summer," which was directed by Wain, written by Wain and Showalter, and featured Black and Showalter in main roles. Recently, the three of them have been working on many other projects (most notably, Black has become somewhat of the 'star' of VH1's "I love the 70/80/90s" series). However, since 1997 the trio has been working together in their comedy group, Stella, which is now poised to break through on a national level. In a phone interview with the Collegian, Showalter talked about the formation of Stella, what makes them unique, and what the future holds for the group and the individuals involved.

Stella
Pearl Street
Northampton
Friday

"[Stella formed] as a function that we all lived in New York and hung out a lot. It was no big thing. A lot of the other guys from 'The State' had moved to Los Angeles at that point, and the three of us kind of just were hanging out and said, 'Let's start a show.' The way Stella started was the three of us were hosting a cabaret where we would do a comedic introduction then we'd have acts come on and do stand up. Then eventually it just morphed into us doing our thing, and then we started doing videos."

The three have all been very dedicated to Stella's live show and the short films for years, but have not been able to make it their primary focus as their careers have all taken twists and turns.

"Stella's always just been something we've all done on the side while we were doing our other projects. So only in the last couple of years has Stella turned into something that is taking up most of our time. While 'Viva Variety' [a short-lived variety show parody on Comedy Central] and 'Wet Hot' were going on, Stella was kind of in the background."

Even now with the focus on Stella, Showalter seems to take a very laidback attitude to the act. The group has been acclaimed and grown a fairly large fan base due to their unique brand of comedy. They don't perform sketches as such, and they don't really tell jokes.

"[The show is] the three of us onstage holding microphones," Showalter deadpans. "and arguing for about an hour. We show a video, but mostly we just kind of argue and act kind of faggy." Showalter also notes that this is very similar to the set up of most of the videos, wherein Showalter, Black, and Wain come across a fairly standard, everyday situation (e.g. a game of poker), and it evolves into a semi-elaborate misadventure.

"It's kind of a modern-day Marx brothers thing," Showalter says about the group's dynamics, "...but I don't mean the comedy Marx brothers. I mean Karl Marx and his brother Oskar. Oskar was a shoe-cobbler."

Showalter, not to mention his comedic partners, are certainly very focused on their comedy and the evolution of Stella. As their careers all head in different ways (Black has been rumored to be the replacement for Craig Kilborn's "Late, Late Show") and their individual fan bases grow, they are still intent on working as a group. Black has been getting a lot of publicity and attention for his sarcastic commentaries on the various VH1 "I Love" series.

Following this tour, the members of Stella all have a lot on their plates. Showalter has just finished "The Baxter," a film that he wrote and directed. Both Black and Wain are also working on writing and directing films, as well. As a collective, though, Stella has made a pilot for Comedy Central. Showalter describes it, "Every week would be a different adventure à la the videos." He says, however, that there has been no word from the network as to whether or not it would be picked up.

For now, though, Stella will be bringing their very unique, very funny act to the Pearl Street ballroom on Friday.

TBS to hit boston in support of new album 'Where you want to be'

By Craig Leger
Collegian Correspondent

Historically, Avalon claims to be the final resting place of King Arthur. This Thursday, the quick-rising rockers Taking Back Sunday will be bringing Boston's Avalon Night Club to life with their friends Atreyu, Funeral for a Friend, and Like Yesterday.

This sold-out show promises to rank high in memorable Boston nights of the year: the Patriots win the Super bowl, the Democratic National Convention backs up traffic for days, the Red Sox win the World Series, and Taking Back Sunday sells out at the Avalon and rocks all night long.

Taking Back SundaY
Thursday
Avalon
Boston
$20.75

With Atreyu and Taking Back Sunday both riding the wave of extremely well-received new albums, Funeral for a Friend being an up-and-coming band in the national scene and Pure-volume.com's "Pick of the Week," and indie/rock band Like Yesterday all rocking on one stage, it looks as if it will be one big night.

Taking Back Sunday's latest album, "Where You Want to Be," was not only among the year's most highly anticipated albums, but it followed through as the No. 3 album on the Billboard Top 200 chart with 163,000 units in sales for the first week, making the band the highest-selling rock group in the United States for the week. In August of this year, Taking Back Sunday rolled on with their second Alternative Press cover appearance, being named Rolling Stone's "Hot Band" and being listed as Launch's "Emerging Artist" just as the video for "A Decade Under The Influence" was declared Buzzworthy on MTV and MTV2.

In late 2001 after many lineup changes, the band settled on the lineup of vocalist Adam Lazzara, guitarist/backup vocalist Fred Mascherino, guitarist Eddie Reyes, drummer Mark O'Connell, and bassist Matt Rubano. Taking Back Sunday was signed to the reputable Victory Records label in December of 2001, and their debut album, "Tell All Your Friends," hit stores in March of 2002, selling over 2,300 copies in the first week.

After only having done some local touring and opening a few dates of the Victory Records Tour, 2,300 copies of the album was an accomplishment beyond belief to the band. At this point, they knew they were progressing in the right direction, in the direction that every teenage garage band only dreams of.

Only three short years later, Taking Back Sunday is one of the hardest hitting rock bands on the market. After extensive touring in Europe and throughout North America several times over, Taking Back Sunday rocked the main stage of the Vans Warped Tour, where a massive crowd surrounded them. And now, after all of that, Taking Back Sunday is coming to Boston.

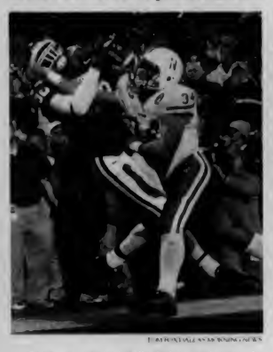
With great anticipation for this concert, it would be surprising if the Avalon were still standing after these bands come to town.

Information from victoryrecords.com/takingbacksunday.html was used in creating this report.

COURTESY TAKINGBACKSUNDAY.COM

Taking Back Sunday will be playing a sold out show at the Avalon ballroom with fellow rockers Atreyu and Funeral for a friend.

Computers again supporting Sooners



BCS from page 8

the country.

The Sooners are tops in five of the computer rankings and second in the other. A team's highest and lowest computer score is tossed out.

USC is second by the computers and Auburn is third.

The BCS computers were responsible for putting Oklahoma in the national title game last season after the Sooners lost the Big 12 title game and dropped to No. 3 in the polls.

Associated Press

Oklahoma tight end Willie Roberts grabs a touchdown for the Sooners against Nebraska on Saturday.

A similar situation is developing.

Unless the Tigers can pull far away from Oklahoma in the polls, the computers will probably send an unbeaten Sooners team to the Orange Bowl to face an unbeaten Southern Cal, according to BCS analyst Jerry Palm.

Palm said computer rankings usually don't fluctuate drastically late in the season and Oklahoma's strength of schedule advantage over Auburn probably won't change. The Tigers play at Alabama on Saturday and in the SEC title game on Dec. 4, likely against Tennessee. The Sooners face Baylor on Saturday and play in the Big 12 title game on Dec. 4 against an opponent to be determined.

Palm said Auburn passing Oklahoma in the computer rankings is "not realistic."

"Pulling even is optimistic," he said.

With the way it stands now, Palm said, Auburn would have to be ahead in each poll by about 60 points to make up Oklahoma's advantage in the computers.

Auburn surged in the polls after its 24-6 victory over Georgia on Saturday. Oklahoma beat Nebraska 30-3, but appeared to be hurt in the polls by recent close calls against Oklahoma State and Texas A&M.

"I believe in the whole season, your body of work through the entire year matters," Stoops said, "but a lot of people just look at 'what have you done for me lately.'"

The computers, however, have been partial to the Sooners' quality wins away from home and strength of schedule.

"How do they come up with strength of schedule?" Tuberville said. "Most of the teams haven't played any of the teams that we've played."

The Sooners' opponents have a combined record of 55-42 and their nonconference opponents were Bowling Green, Oregon and Houston.

Pats still reign in AFC

PATRIOTS from page 8

the New York Jets in the AFC East — with an even more dominant game against the Bills, who had won three of their previous four games. The Patriots outgained them by 303 yards, 428-125 and held the ball more than 22 minutes longer, 41:22 to 18:38. Buffalo's only touchdown came on a punt return.

Vinatieri kicked five field goals, but quarterback Tom Brady saw those as missed opportunities for touchdowns.

"I think everyone is happy with the win," he said, "but we play a game next Monday night so we have got to figure out how to improve from here."

They'll be in Kansas City, which has one of the league's worst defenses and is 3-6 after losing its last two games. That could mean another big game for Corey Dillon, the AFC's second leading rusher after gaining 151 yards on 26 carries against Buffalo.

He is 8-0 since joining the Patriots in an offseason trade with Cincinnati, missing only the Pittsburgh game with a thigh injury. Might they be undefeated if he had played?

"Corey doesn't play defense," Belichick said.

But he has given the coach a much improved running game and an impressive work ethic.

"You know what you're going to get from Corey every day. He brings a very consistent effort and performance level to the practice field," Belichick said. "A coach wants consistency and wants dependability. There really isn't a higher adjective that you can put as a compliment to a player than a consistent, dependable player."

Considering the Patriots' relatively weak schedule, Dillon may go undefeated in his first season with them.

New England plays at home against Baltimore (6-3) after visiting Kansas City then finishes with five games against Cleveland (3-6), Cincinnati (4-5), Miami (1-8), the Jets (6-3) and San Francisco (1-8).

But it's not easy to play well every week.

"It is tough to achieve," linebacker Tedy Bruschi said Monday, "but I think the first thing you have to have is good football players. The way we see ourselves in the locker room is we are good football players. We tell the guys, 'There is a reason you are in this locker room and it is to help us eventually. If you are not playing now, eventually you are going to have to do something.'"

Manning will take over as QB

Coach Tom Coughlin made the move Monday after Warner and the offense struggled for the second consecutive week in a 17-14 loss to the Cardinals in Arizona. The Giants (5-4) have lost three of the last four games after a 4-1 start.

Manning, the top pick in this year's draft and the brother of Indianapolis Colts quarterback Peyton Manning, will face the Atlanta Falcons on Sunday at Giants Stadium.

"He is the future of the New York Giants. It just starts now," Coughlin said of Manning, who lost a close training camp competition with Warner for the starting job. "I really felt the last four games we haven't been playing well offensively. We just need to make a change."

Coughlin told both players on Monday. His meeting with Manning happened around 12:30 p.m.

"It's exciting," said Manning, who has seen limited mop-up action in two games. "This is something I want to do. This is what I want to do for a living. This is why I want to play football, so I can go out there and be the starting quarterback. I'm looking forward to the opportunity. Now it's time to go out there and play football."

While Warner was professional in handling the change, the demotion caught the two-time MVP offguard.

It came a day after he completed 19 of 31 passes for 193 yards and a touchdown. He did not throw an interception or fumble, but the offense also did not score after getting two early touchdowns.

"My play yesterday I don't think had anything to do with that," Warner said of the change. "Read into that as much as you want, but there is a bigger picture here. There's more things that are trying to be accomplished here, and that's why the decision was made."

Warner, who had thrown six touchdowns and four interceptions on 268 attempts, seemed to suggest the organization wanted Manning to play just to get an idea about their $46 million wonder kid.

"I don't think it's political," halfback Tiki Barber said. "We've lost three of four, something has to change. I have talked about this before, how sometimes just change for change sake makes things happen, and that's what we are looking for, some spark."

Coughlin could have considered revamping his offensive line, which has allowed 23 sacks in the last four games and 39 this season. However, his best five players are already playing.

The only recourse was a quarterback change.

Warner, signed in the offseason as a caretaker quarterback after being released by the Rams, did his best to keep Manning on the bench all season. After losing the opener, he led the Giants to four straight wins.

Turnovers by Warner in losses to Detroit and Chicago, and a ton of penalties against Arizona convinced Coughlin to switch starters.

"I'm a little surprised," receiver Amani Toomer said. "The offense is sputtering, but it's not all Kurt. He is kind of the scapegoat."

—Associated Press

Kansas tops hoops poll

By Jim O'Connell
Associated Press

The first poll of the college basketball regular season sure looks a lot like the preseason Top 25.

Syracuse and Illinois switched places at Nos. 5 and 6 Monday, the only movement from the previous rankings.

Only three ranked teams played since the preseason Top 25 was released. Syracuse, Mississippi State and Memphis all swept their opening two games in the Coaches vs. Cancer Classic.

Kansas stayed in the No. 1 spot and was again followed by three Atlantic Coast Conference teams — Wake Forest, Georgia Tech and North Carolina.

Syracuse, which beat Northern Colorado and Princeton to open the season, moved up to 11th and was followed by Illinois, Oklahoma State, Connecticut, Kentucky and Arizona.

Kansas received 26 first-place votes and 1,703 points from the national media panel, while Wake Forest had 23 and 1,685.

Georgia Tech was No. 1 on 10 ballots while North Carolina had eight first-place votes. Illinois and Oklahoma State each had two and Kentucky received one.

Duke led the second 10 and was followed by Mississippi State, Michigan State, Louisville, Maryland, Texas, Pittsburgh, Alabama, North Carolina State and Notre Dame.

The last five ranked teams were Wisconsin, Washington, Florida, Memphis and Gonzaga.

Mississippi State beat Fairfield and Birmingham Southern without preseason All-America Lawrence Roberts. The 6-foot-10 senior forward missed the first game as he served a one-game suspension from the NCAA over his expenses to attend a tryout before the NBA draft. He didn't play in the second game because he was recovering from a broken nose.

Roberts said he expects to play Thursday night in the Coaches vs. Cancer Classic semifinals against Syracuse.

Artest brings shame to the NBA

By Bob Sansevere
Knight Ridder

While the NHL is in the midst of a lockout over economic issues, the NBA has troubles of its own. The NBA isn't going through a lockout, but it does have a few players whose brains may have locked up.

Just when it appeared that Minnesota Timberwolves swingman Latrell Sprewell had cornered the market on self-absorption, along comes Indiana Pacers forward Ron Artest.

He could be even more out of touch with reality than Sprewell.

Well, maybe it's a tie.

Since the league began its regular season earlier this month, the comments and behavior of Sprewell and Artest have overshadowed everything Kevin Garnett, Tim Duncan, and Shaquille O'Neal have done on the court.

If there are a million and one reasons not to care about the NBA, Sprewell and Artest may just represent about a million of them.

They have become role models for the self-centered, greedy and egomaniacal.

Former NBA player Darryl Dawkins used to claim he came from a planet called Lovetron. Everybody laughed.

If Artest claims he is from another planet, nobody will laugh or dispute it.

He definitely is in a world of his own.

How often do you hear of an athlete who gets benched and is appreciative?

Indiana coach Rick Carlisle said early last week that he was benching Artest for two games. Artest's response?

He would have preferred a month off.

The season has just begun, and Artest is claiming he's worn out.

First, the word was that Artest had been busy putting together a rap album and promoting it. And apparently, rap will sap your energy for such mundane things as playing basketball in the NBA.

"I've been doing a little bit too much music," Artest told reporters. "Just needed the rest."

Then, a day later in an interview with ESPN, Artest said that no, he was not putting out a rap album. He claimed that he was producing an R&B album and going into the studio to perform rap "when [he has] off days." He also contradicted himself about his need for rest, saying that no, it wasn't the music that made him feel that way. He claimed he wanted that month off to spend with his four children.

Tom Hauser/Detroit Free Press

Ron Artest has been under scrutiny after mentioning he was tired after "Doing a little bit too much music."

He's portraying himself as a doting father. How laudable. Why didn't he just say that in the first place?

Could it be he hadn't thought of it yet?

Meanwhile, that album Artest produced will be available Nov. 23. "After the album comes out," he said, "I'm going to make sure all of my time is focused on winning a championship."

Isn't it nice that he has his priorities sorted out?

Last week, on the night that the Pacers played the Timberwolves at Target Center, Carlisle said he was benching Artest because the forward had "compromised the integrity of the team."

Told of Carlisle's comment, Artest said, "I don't know what that means."

How about that? He even admits he's clueless.

"It's early in the season," Artest said, "so I feel like I could take some time off early and be ready for the long stretch."

His life is so brutal. He is paid $6.2 million to show up for work 82 days a year. (OK, it's a few more than that when you count playoff games.)

Carlisle, by the way, went easy when he benched Artest for just two games. A benching is not a suspension. Artest got paid and also got what he wanted time off.

Are you the person others come to talk to?

Do what you love.

Become a professional counselor.

Applications for Spring 2005 Now Being Accepted for Master's Programs in Counseling Psychology and Substance Abuse/Addictions Couseling.

Master's Programs are also offered in Marriage and Family Therapy and Dance/Movement Therapy.

ANTIOCH NEW ENGLAND GRADUATE SCHOOL

Celebrating 40 Years of Community Service

40 Avon Street
Keene, NH
603.357.6265
www.antiochne.edu

$POND $MART TOUR 2004

Featuring: MISSION: improvable

Because Financial Decisions Can Last a Lifetime

www.Students.UseCreditWisely.com

Performance Dates:

Nov15@12noon Bluewall
Nov15@7pm Lewis
Nov16@7pm Patterson
Nov17@7pm Gorman
Nov17@8:30pm Cashin
Nov18@7pm Kennedy
Nov19@6pm SOM 137

Mass Marketing

Brought to you by Mass Marketing and Citi Credit-Ed — citi

Hadley Sunoco

"Specializing In All Your Automotive Needs."

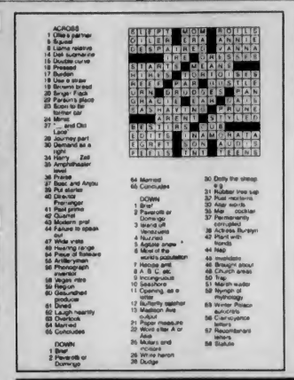
457 Russell St.
Hadley MA. 01035
(413) 253-4623
HadleySunoco@yahoo.com

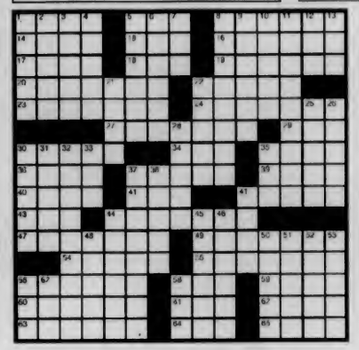
Front Brake Special $69.95
-Includes Brake Pads, Labor and inspection of front rotors and calipers
Most Cars, Light Trucks & SUVS
GET A FREE TIRE ROTATION WITH ANY BRAKE JOB!!!!!
Regular Price: 84.95
Offer valid with Collegian AD only. Not to be combined with any other Brake discounts or offers. Offer expires 11/01/04

SPECIAL
10% Student Discount On Labor With a Valid College ID
WE WILL BEAT ANY COMPETITOR'S WRITTEN ESTIMATE!!!!!

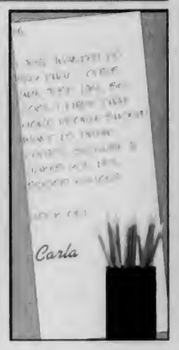
Come try us out today
FREE ESTIMATES!

Some of the many other services we specialize in are: Brakes, tires, CV-shafts, alternators, starters, belts, tune-ups, timing belts and exhaust repair.





Quote of the Day



"Morality, like art, means drawing a line someplace."

-Oscar Wilde

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You need to have a quality conversation with that special someone.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Time to stop borrowing your roommate's clothes. Go shopping.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
All the stress in your life is making you act loopy. You need a stress ball.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You need to really manage your time today, or else you can plan on an all-nighter.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't feel so guilty about wanting to have some time to yourself.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Your car could be running out of gas. Fill her up.

leo • Jul., 23-Aug. 22
There is an 83 percent chance you will go for an unexpected swim.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Today is a good day to resolve unanswered questions.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
For questions of love, you should always talk to your roomate.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
There is a limit to how many times you can play a song before you are attacked.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Day two of your diet has begun. May your will be strong.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Time to bake yourself a batch of cookies. Yes, you can eat them all.

Want to get noticed?! Place an ad in the Collegian. Call 545-3500.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule you non-sales fundraiser with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser 888-923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Amanda Krehak GIS Geographic Information Systems Day 2004. Wednesday 11/17 GIS and mapping applications for academic and career success. Campus Center Concourse 10am-2pm. Open GIS lab 11-1 Morrill 271. Open digital mapping lab 11-12:30 Morrill 245.

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Mass Mahketing and Citibank present the Spend Smart Tour 2004 featuring Mission: IMPROBable. Join us for a fun-filled evening of laughs, free food and most importantly, credit education. Blue Wall Nov 15 @ noon, Southwest Patterson Dorm Nov 16 @ 7pm, Central Gorman Dorm Nov 17 @ 7pm, Sylvan Cashin Dorm Nov 17 @ 8:30pm, Southwest Kennedy Dorm Nov 18 @ 7pm, SOM Atrium Nov 19 @ 6pm. www.Students.UseCreditWisely for credit tips. Brought to you by Mass Mahketing and Citi Credit-Ed™.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Puffton Village 1 Bedroom $765 December/ January – May f_lorusw@yahoo.com 413-687-8806

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

AUTO FOR SALE

1997 Honda Civic Ex 2-door coupe, 104k miles, 5-speed, very good condition, 16" Velox RX-BR rims, power. Contact 508-934-9324.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99. Pentium III Desktop $99. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-771-8223

COMPUTERS FOR SALE

SPRING INTERNSHIPS Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Enr. Contact Fredy 413-687-3849

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – Training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov. 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

Need help filling out Immigration forms? Want advice on arranging documents for filing with INS? Contact the Student Legal Services Office at 545-1995 for help filling out Immigration forms.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Cheapest Prices Guaranteed!
1-800-426-7710

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3922.

WANTED

Egg Donors Needed. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Ages 21-32. Non-smokers only. For more information please visit our website at www.eggbankchoices.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900.

Ever wanted to be a zombie? Well now you can! Feature-length student film looking for large amounts of zombie actors. Email Easystarry@hotmail.com for more details.

Snowboard events intern $50/day stipend. For job description email gtriends@deerfield.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Patriots start on new streak

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

FOXBORO (AP) – The New England Patriots have a new winning streak.

And it started a lot more decisively than the last one, which ended two weeks ago at an NFL best 21 games.

On Sunday night, the defending Super Bowl champs put together their most dominating performance in two seasons when they beat the Buffalo Bills 29-6. One week earlier they went to St. Louis where they beat the Rams 40-22. And the week before that?

That's when they actually lost, a 34-20 setback at Pittsburgh that was their first since Sept. 28, 2003 at Washington.

"It was pretty obvious the Steelers were the better team," Patriots coach Bill Belichick said at the time. "We didn't do much of anything right."

They did plenty of everything right in their two games since then with winning margins greater than they had in 20 of the 21 games during the last streak. That one began with a 38-30, come-from behind win against Tennessee.

The end of it didn't fire up the Patriots to play any better, Belichick said Monday.

"Every game is independent. The preparation and the game plan and the execution of the game is all pretty much self-contained," he said. "I'm not saying that you can't get anything out of a previous game. You correct mistakes and you put emphasis on things that you need to do better."

After losing to the Steelers, the Patriots went out to a 33-14 lead over the Rams after three quarters with linebacker Mike Vrabel catching one touchdown pass and kicker Adam Vinatieri throwing another on a fake field-goal attempt.

Then they imprtwed to 8-1 — and moved two games ahead of

See PATRIOTS on page 6

ROD MAR/SEATTLE TIMES

New England's Corey Dillon rushes for yardage after getting past Seattle's Grant Wistrom in the third quarter of their game at Gillette Stadium, in Foxborough on Sunday, Oct.17. The Patriots have won their last two games, including a 29-6 victory over Buffalo on Sunday.

BCS keeps OU in second place

By Ralph Russo
Associated Press

Computers prefer Oklahoma over Auburn — and Southern California.

The Sooners held on to second place in the Bowl Championship Series standings Monday, staying ahead of third-place Auburn because of a stronger computer ranking.

USC is still first the BCS standings with a grade of .9808. Oklahoma's grade is .9621, and Auburn's is .9350.

Last week, the Sooners led the Tigers by .0567. That lead is down to .0271.

The Trojans, Sooners and Tigers are all 10-0. Each has two games left and one loss by any of them would provide a simple solution to what is shaping up to be another BCS mess. The top two teams in the final BCS standings will play in the Orange Bowl on Jan. 4 for the national title.

Since the BCS' inception in 1998, there's never been three undefeated teams after the regular season in the six BCS conference — Big East, Big 12, Big Ten, Atlantic Coast Conference, Pac-10 and Southeastern Conference.

The Tigers made up ground on the Sooners in the polls on Sunday, tying Oklahoma for second in The Associated Press Top 25 and getting within two points of No. 2 in the coaches poll.

With the voters virtually split on the Sooners and Tigers, the computers are breaking the tie.

"We're in the situation we are — a the tight race here, everybody finishing, and the system the way it is — it's hard to know where you're going to be at or what matters to people, voters or computers," Oklahoma coach Bob Stoops said.

The polls each count for a third of a BCS grade. A compilation of six computer rankings make up the other third, and according to them Oklahoma is the best team in

See BCS on page 6

Bonds wins N.L. MVP

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Barry Bonds won his record seventh NL MVP award in a walk.

Capping a season of suspicion and success, the San Francisco Giants left fielder became the oldest player to win the award.

The 40-year-old received 24 of 32 first-place votes and 407 points Monday in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America to earn the award for the fourth straight season.

"I don't know if one is better than the other. They're all overwhelming," Bonds said.

Los Angeles third baseman Adrian Beltre was second, getting six first-place votes and 311 points, and St. Louis first baseman Albert Pujols was third with one first and 247 points. St. Louis third baseman Scott Rolen got the other first-place vote and finished fourth, followed by teammate Jim Edmonds.

Bonds is the only player with more than three MVP awards and the only one to win more than two in a row. Willie Stargell was previously the oldest to win it, sharing the 1979 NL award with Keith Hernandez at 39 1/2.

Among the four major North American professional sports, he trails only the NHL's Wayne Gretzky, who won nine MVPs. In the NBA, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar leads with six.

Bonds said the lack of a World Series title motivates him, and he intends to play two more seasons.

"I want that championship," he said. "I think that's the one thing that's eluding me from enjoying these other accomplishments."

Bonds became only the third player to hit 700 career homers, and with 703 trails only Hank Aaron (755) and Babe Ruth (714). But following his grand jury testimony in a federal investigation, he repeatedly was questioned whether he used steroids.

His personal trainer has been indicted for illegal distribution of steroids, but Bonds has denied using illegal steroids. He wouldn't address an Oct. 16 report by the San Francisco Chronicle, which said it obtained from an anonymous source a recording of the trainer, Greg Anderson, on which Anderson says Bonds used performance-enhancing drugs in 2003.

"I don't have answer, I really don't, I don't really care about all this stuff. I really don't," he said. "I don't owe anyone a response to anything."

Bonds' season was unparalleled statistically. He hit .362 to win his second NL batting title in three seasons and shattered the major league record with a .609 on-base percentage, topping the previous mark of .582 he set two years ago.

He walked 232 times, 34 more than the previous record he set in 2002 and more than 100 better than anyone else in baseball this season, and his 120 intentional walks obliterated the old mark of 68, also set by Bonds in 2002.

Bonds hit 45 homers in 375 at-bats, while Beltre hit a major league-leading 48 in 598 at-bats and Pujols had 46 in 592.

"I never think I have a chance to win any awards being walked," he said. "Your chances are minuscule compared to their chances."

Bonds' .812 slugging percentage led the major leagues for the fourth straight season but fell short of the record he set at .863 in 2001.

CARLOS AVILA GONZALEZ/SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

San Francisco Giants Barry Bonds waves to the crowd after hitting career home run number 700 on Friday, Sept. 17 in San Francisco.

Brown adjusts to new position

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

FOXBORO (AP) — Troy Brown has had to make a lot of adjustments while playing both sides of the football.

One thing remains the same.

"You always want to score when you get the ball — offense or defense," he said Sunday night after his first career interception — one of four Patriots pickoffs in a 29-6 victory over the Buffalo Bills.

Brown intercepted old friend Drew Bledsoe early in the fourth quarter and ran it back 17 yards to the Buffalo 23 before he was caught from behind. Bledsoe connected with Brown for 112 touchdowns and nearly 200 passes during their time together with the Patriots, but this is the first time only one of them was happy after the catch.

"That's my man. I won't disrespect him in any way," said Brown, who had the ball from his interception stowed away in his locker after the game. "I would like to see him do well. But I do not want to see him come in here and beat us."

A wide receiver helping out on defense due to injuries in the secondary, Brown also caught two passes for 23 yards on offense, the first time in franchise history that a player has had a reception and interception in the same game.

DAVID J. PHILLIP/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Carolina's Karl Hankton tries to chase down New England's Troy Brown in the first half of Super Bowl XXXVIII at Reliant Stadium.

"He's awesome," quarterback Tom Brady, who was 19-for-35 for 233 yards and two touchdowns. "Whatever the coach asks him to do, he does. The interception was awesome."

Adam Vinatieri kicked five field goals, Corey Dillon ran for 151 yards on 26 carries and the Patriots picked off four passes in all. Bledsoe threw three and backup J.P. Losman had one and a fumble against a dominating New England defense.

Bledsoe was just 8-for-19 for 76 yards in all — a quarterback rating of 14.3 in his latest return to Foxboro, where he was the starter for eight seasons before losing his job to Brady in 2001.

The Patriots (8-1) have won two straight since their NFL-best 21-game winning streak ended on Oct. 31 at Pittsburgh. They outgained the Bills 428 yards to 125 and moved two games ahead of the New York Jets in the AFC East.

The Patriots led 20-0 at halftime, scoring on four of their five possessions, while Buffalo (3-6) punted three times and was intercepted twice. The Bills scored only on a punt return — a poor follow up to their strong 22-17 win over the Jets.

Even Willis McGahee, who sparked the Bills to three wins in their previous four games, couldn't do much after New England took an early lead. McGahee ran for more than 100 yards in those victories, his only previous pro starts, but was held to 37 yards on 14 carries by the Patriots.

Without any help from the running game, Bledsoe was his usual inept self — 8-for-19 for 76 yards — against his former team, dropping to 1-5 against the Patriots.

"Not only us," said safety Lawyer Milloy, another former Patriots, "but there are 31 other teams that should be envious of the way they're playing. They have only one loss this year and everyone who plays they has to be ready."

The Patriots, still rolling after last week's 40-22 win at St. Louis, took a 6-0 lead on field goals of 27 and 24 yards by Vinatieri. On their next series, they marched 75 yards on 11 plays, capped by Brady's 13-yard pass to David Patten.

Bledsoe threw his second interception on the next possession. It was returned 29 yards by Tedy Bruschi, and Brady threw a 3-yard touchdown pass to Christian Fauria.

Vinatieri made it 23-0 with a 20-yard field goal in the third quarter. Jonathan Smith then returned Josh Miller's punt 70 yards for a touchdown, but the 2-point conversion attempt failed for Buffalo.

Notes: A contingent from the Boston Red Sox brought the World Series trophy onto the field in a pregame ceremony. ... In the last three quarters, the Patriots outgained the Bills 343-61 and led them in first downs 20-3 and time of possession 34:31-10:29. ... Bills rookie quarterback J.P. Losman saw his first NFL action on Buffalo's last series. He completed one pass for 5 yards and had the other intercepted. ... The Patriots scored first for the 17th straight game.

Doo Wop Shop highlighted new bi-weekly shows

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

TODAY • High: 53 • Low: 36 THURSDAY • High: 56 • Low: 42

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

The resurgence of UMass women's basketball

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 50

Roundtable discussion addresses diversity issues on UMass campus

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

A panel of speakers addressed students last night during a roundtable discussion concerning the "KKK-nine" photographs, the new Diversity Commission and the recent revelation of dozens of emails written by the administration and key members of the Student Government Association.

The discussion was divvied up into the three aforementioned parts, and a representative for each spoke. SGA Speaker Seamus Brennan spoke on behalf of his alleged involvement with the incriminating photographs taken of students last March drinking alcoholic beverages in a University office and mocking a caricature of a Ku Klux Klan Grand Wizard.

Brennan said that he admits being present in the office that night; however, he adamantly denied being involved with alcohol consumption or the drawing of the caricature. He told the audience that he was still working with lawyers and refrained from further comments about the incident.

Dean of Students Jo-anne Vanin had dismissed Brennan from all charges pertaining to the photographs because the contents of the silver can that he was holding were deemed debatable.

Uri Strauss the Graduate Student Senate President, spoke about the new Diversity Commission that has been instated to educate and inform students and faculty members about issues of diversity on campus. Additionally another goal of the commission is to set an array of guidelines and structures to help unify campus diversity.

Graduate Employee Organization member Mark Nelson and Tom Koche of SEIU spoke in behalf of emails recently revealed to have been written by Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano and former Speaker of the SGA Patrick Higgins.

The emails alleged that Higgins and Gargano were in cahoots about the legality of the ALANA (African Latino Asian Native American) caucus seats. According to Gargano the caucus seats are a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Speaker Seamus Brennan was not available for comment at press time.

ANDREW K. HARTS/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ruhaina Raza and Seamus Brennan address students about the issue of diversity on campus, specifically racial overtones within the Student Government Association.

Bush appoints Rice as new secretary of state after Powell resigned

By Scott Lindlaw
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush on Tuesday picked National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice, who once tutored him on global affairs, to be his top diplomat, saying her foreign-policy experience and struggle against racism uniquely qualified her to be America's "face to the world" as secretary of state.

"In Dr. Rice, the world will see the strength, the grace and the decency of our country," Bush said.

Rice will face major challenges across the foreign policy spectrum, trying to advance peace between Israel and the Palestinians, foster democracy in Iraq and persuade North Korea and Iran to step back from suspected nuclear-weapons programs. She is considered more of a hard-liner than Secretary of State Colin Powell, who was out of step with more hawkish members of Bush's national security team.

In a Roosevelt Room announcement, Bush made plain that terrorism and the Middle East conflict topped his list of foreign-policy priorities. Rice's eyes welled with tears as the president cited her "deep, abiding belief in the value and power of liberty, because she has seen freedom denied and freedom reborn."

Bush also chose longtime domestic policy adviser Margaret Spellings to replace Rod Paige as education secretary, administration officials said. Spellings helped shape Bush's school agenda when he was Texas governor and again when he assumed the presidency.

Rice, who would be the first black woman to serve as secretary of state, was somewhat sheltered as a youngster in Alabama from the racial conflicts and segregation of the South. Her schoolteacher parents guided her into ballet, piano and French studies; her mother bought all her Girl Scout cookies so she wouldn't have to go door-to-door. But when she was 9, a bomb exploded at a Baptist church a few miles away, killing four black girls, one of them a schoolmate.

"As a girl in the segregated South, Dr. Rice saw the promise of America violated by racial discrimination and by the violence that comes from hate," Bush said.

"But she was taught by her mother. Angelina, and her father, the Rev. John Rice, that human dignity is the gift of God and that the ideals of America would overcome oppression."

Rice was careful to say nothing about how she would oversee the State Department, its nearly 30,000 employees and its 265 posts around the world.

In a statement read from a prepared text, she confined her remarks to heaping praise on Bush and Powell.

"It is humbling to imagine succeeding my dear friend and mentor, Colin Powell. He is one of the finest public servants our nation has ever produced," Rice said.

Her cautious remarks reflected the potential minefield she faces in Senate confirmation hearings, likely to come the second week of December.

"I think she'll get hard questioning. That's inevitable," said Sen. Mitch McConnell of Kentucky, the majority whip. But McConnell and newly elected Senate Democratic leader Harry Reid of Nevada predicted Rice would win approval.

Rice should, "be confirmed fairly easily unless there's something I don't know," Reid said.

Sitting silently in the first row at Bush's announcement was the president's pick to succeed Rice as national security adviser, Stephen Hadley, who served with Rice for four years.

Asked whether his family knew long hours were in store for him, Hadley quipped: "What's different?"

But Bush elicited a smile from Hadley when he said: "Steve is a man of wisdom and good judgment."

"He has earned my trust, and I look forward to his continued vital service on my national security team," Bush said.

National Security Council officials said they expected no change in the organization's direction, but a lower profile for Hadley.

Whereas Rice has granted regular interviews to promote the administration's foreign policy, Hadley is more media-shy.

Aides describe Hadley as a multi-tasker and seasoned Washington insider with a good sense of humor, even when the news is bad.

Bush's Cabinet has been exceptionally stable, with only four departures in the nearly four years before the election.

U.S. troops recapture Iraqi police stations and bridges in Fallujah

By Katarina Kratovac
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — U.S. and Iraqi troops recaptured police stations and secured bridges in the northern city of Mosul on Tuesday in an offensive aimed at pushing out fighters supporting the insurgent stronghold of Fallujah.

Troops met "very little resistance" in securing several of the dozen or so police stations that had been captured by insurgents, the U.S. military command said. Nineveh province's deputy governor said militants blew up the Zuhour police station ahead of the U.S. advance, but the U.S military denied any stations were destroyed.

Loud explosions and gunfire could be heard as U.S. warplanes and helicopters circled over Mosul, Iraq's third-largest city with more than one million residents.

Mortar shells hit two areas near the main government building in the city center, killing three civilians and wounding 25, hospital officials said. One American soldier was wounded when a car bomb exploded near a U.S. convoy in western Mosul, the military said.

The U.S.-led offensive is aimed at seizing control of the city 225 miles north of Baghdad, where gunmen stormed police stations, bridges and political offices last week. The city's police force was overwhelmed and in many places failed to even put up a fight. Some officers also allegedly cooperated with insurgents.

The operation was launched after U.S. and Iraqi reinforcements were rushed to Mosul. A U.S. Army infantry battalion was recalled from the fighting in Fallujah, 300 Iraqi National Guard soldiers came from garrisons along the borders with Iran and Syria and a special police battalion was sent from Baghdad.

U.S. military spokeswoman Capt. Angela Bowman said the attack began Tuesday as troops closed Mosul's five bridges and American soldiers began securing police stations in the western part of the city.

"We are in the process of securing all of the police stations and returning the police to these stations," she said.

U.S. Marines continued to hunt for fighters hiding in Fallujah, but airstrikes and gunfire waned considerably after a week of heavy fighting that left the Americans in control of the city west of Baghdad that had been the main insurgent bastion.

The U.S. military said it was investigating the fatal shooting of a wounded "enemy combatant" by a Marine in a Fallujah mosque over the weekend. The inquiry was begun after videotaped pool pictures taken Saturday by NBC showed the incident during an operation of the 3rd Battalion, 1st Marine Regiment.

The Marine was removed from the battlefield pending the results of the investigation, the military said.

U.S. aerial missions over Iraq are beginning to slow after a 50 percent jump that accompanied the Fallujah offensive, said Rear Adm. Barry McCullough, commander of the USS John F. Kennedy battle group in the Persian Gulf.

"The operation is starting to wind down now. That doesn't mean there aren't pockets of insurgents and terrorists in Fallujah," McCullough told The Associated Press.

A U.S. soldier was killed and another wounded north of Baghdad on Tuesday when a bomb detonated near their convoy, the U.S. military said.

Stepped-up assaults on insurgents in Fallujah and elsewhere have pushed the U.S. death toll to at least 91 in November, making it the second-deadliest month for American troops since the Iraq invasion in March 2003. Pentagon figures show. The worst month was April, with 135 deaths, when Marines fought fierce battles in Fallujah, only to be withdrawn.

In other violence, a rocket hit a busy commercial district near the government administration building in the northern city of Kirkuk, killing one person and wounding three, Iraqi officials reported. The motive for the attack was not immediately clear.

Meanwhile, hope faded for kidnapped aid worker Margaret Hassan after Al-Jazeera television announced it had a video showing a masked man shooting a blindfolded woman in the head. Hassan's family in London said they believed the longtime director of CARE's operations in Iraq was the victim.

The 59-year-old Hassan, abducted in Baghdad on Oct. 19 by armed gunmen, was the most prominent of more than 170 foreigners kidnapped in Iraq this year. Her captors issued videos showing her pleading for Britain to withdraw its troops from Iraq and calling for the release of female Iraqi prisoners.

In Baghdad, U.S. troops arrested Naseer Ayaef, a deputy head of the Iraqi National Council and a high-ranking member of the Iraqi Islamic Party, said Ayad al-Samarrai, an official in the influential Sunni Muslim political party.

Al-Samarrai contended the arrest was retaliation for the party's criticism of the Fallujah offensive and opposition to security policies of the U.S. command and Iraq's interim government.

There was no comment from U.S. authorities. Prime Minister Ayad Allawi's office said it was demanding that Ayaef be turned over to the government and promised any charges would be investigated fairly.

Fourth person charged in Greenfield murder

GREENFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Authorities have charged a fourth person in the stabbing death of a 19-year-old man on the streets of Greenfield, a killing that has investigators puzzled over motive.

Samuel Diaz, 19, of Northampton was interviewed by police and then arrested Monday night for his alleged role in the death of Anthony Alves of Colrain, Northwestern Assistant District Attorney Joe Quinlan said.

Diaz was ordered held without bail after pleading innocent to first-degree murder Tuesday in Greenfield District Court.

Diaz was among at least four men believed to have been present when Alves was attacked early Saturday morning while waiting for his grandmother to give him a ride from Greenfield to Colrain, Quinlan said.

Alves was stabbed multiple times and left to bleed to death behind a duplex.

Three men were arrested Sunday and charged with first-degree murder: Carlos Madera, 27, Joell Madera, 18, and Santos Diaz, 22. Authorities were trying to determine how the four men are related, Quinlan said.

Authorities were still investigating a motive for the slaying, and were unsure who stabbed Alves and who called authorities to report the attack, Quinlan said.

Authorities believe the men came to Greenfield early Saturday morning when someone in town called them after spotting Alves, Quinlan said.

Alves didn't know the men, but he did have a relationship with the person who made the telephone call, he said.

— Associated Press

ABC apologizes for racy MNF scene

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC apologized Tuesday for a steamy intro to "Monday Night Football" after receiving complaints from viewers and the National Football League.

The spot featured a naked Nicollette Sheridan jumping into the arms of Terrell Owens.

Before the game, ABC showed the actress and the Philadelphia Eagles star in an empty locker room in an attempt to spoof the network hit "Desperate Housewives." Sheridan, who stars in the show, was wearing only a towel and provocatively asked Owens to skip the game for her.

After she dropped her towel, he agreed to be late for the contest and hugged her. Then the shot cut to two more stars of "Desperate Housewives," Teri Hatcher and Felicity Huffman, watching the scene unfold on a television and commenting on desperate women.

"We have heard from many of our viewers about last night's 'MNF' opening segment and we agree that the placement was inappropriate," ABC said. "We apologize."

The NFL called the intro, "inappropriate and unsuitable for our 'Monday Night Football' audience."

"While ABC may have gained attention for one of its other shows, the NFL and its fans lost," NFL spokesman Greg Aiello said.

The Eagles said they appreciated ABC apologizing for the segment.

"It is normal for teams to cooperate with ABC in the development of an opening for its broadcast," the team said.

"After seeing the final piece, we wish it hadn't aired."

ABC has broadcast "Monday Night Football" with a 5-second delay this season, a precaution after Janet Jackson's "wardrobe malfunction" at February's Super Bowl halftime show — when Justin Timberlake ripped off part of Jackson's outfit, exposing her right breast to a TV audience of some 90 million. The game was broadcast on CBS, which is protesting a proposed record fine of $550,000 by the FCC.

— Associated Press

ANDREW K. HARTS/COLLEGIAN STAFF

Dance it up!
Devon Courtney and Terry Fontaine dance it up in the Dance Doo Wop.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Peter Foundas
Managing Editor Andrew Merrill
Business Manager Rich Pacheco
Production Manager Cory Rosenberg
News Executive Cameron Woods
Academic Manager Tiffani Sugalski
Editorial Production Samantha Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Meghan Heeb
Associate Editor Alyson Zillmann
Editorial Editor Paige Crum
News Editor Erika Lovley
Photo Editor Matthew Reid
Sports Editor Mike Marzelli
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
General Assistant Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Josh Kuggens
Finance Manager Barak Shah
Accounting Clerk Virginie Trevaut
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Assistant Operations Linda Wallach
Assistant Accountant Josh Greenberg
Assistant Business Jo-Anne Sorenson
Assistant Finance Thomas Hecht
Assistant Production Rachael Bruno
Graphic Artist Charlie Higgins
Arts Asst. & Asst. Mike Bausch
Arts Asst. & Asst. Monique Jeannot
Assistant Editors Yousef Monayer
Assistant Editors Allison Fillo
Assistant Arts Julie O'Donnell
Assistant Arts Dan O'Brien
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern
Assistant Sports Jeff Howe

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
SA Port
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrew Roberts
COPY EDITOR
Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Molly Eggleston
PRODUCTION STAFF
Melody Natal, Lauren Hyman

Fancy NAILS
Inside Hampshire Mall
413-584-0210
Walk-ins Welcome
FREE French Manicure
w/ full set only
Holiday Special
$2 OFF
w/ full set or fill
with coupon only

policelog

Possible assault in Kennedy Hall this weekend
Pumpkin reportedly thrown into dorm window

WednesdayNovember 9

3:39 p.m. A party stated that $140.00 was stolen from their purse in Washington Hall.

3:41 p.m. A child was reported to be crying at the Herter Hall bus stop. Amherst Fire Department was notified and transported the child to Cooley Dickerson Hospital.

ThursdayNovember 10

2:48 a.m. Several students were reported to be stuck in an elevator in Kennedy Hall.

6:02 p.m. A party stated that their vehicle was broken into at the Fine Arts Center and the passenger side window was jimmied open and the stereo stolen. The approximate value of the stereo was $250.00.

7:01 p.m. A party stated that their vehicle was broken into near the campus center and a CD player, MP3 player, and approximately 200 CDs were stolen.

7:42 p.m. A vehicle was reported to have a broken window in the parking lot next to Sylvan Hall. The owner of the vehicle was notified and brought the vehicle to the police station. the stereo, valued at $185.00, was stolen.

FridayNovember 11

2:12 a.m. A party stated that someone took a pumpkin and threw it through the window of their room. No suspects were found.

1:42 p.m. A car slid across the access road near the water towers and hit a tree. The party driving the car was not hurt, but the vehicle was dented.

9:13 p.m. A police officer reported that a car hit a telephone pole in the parking lot across the street from the physical plant.

The vehicle had damage to the front fender, bumper and the front right tire was flat. The estimated damage was $2,000.

11:53 p.m. A party reported a group of people attempting to destroy a bike on the bike rack of John Quincy Adams Hall. An officer reported that the group was gone when he arrived.

SaturdayNovember 12

12:52 a.m. Following a traffic stop, Robert Chamberlin, 22, of Hampden, was arrested for operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

2:02 a.m. Following a traffic stop, Amos Coelho, 20, of Winthrop, was arrested for failure to stop/yield and operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license.

3:24 a.m. A party reported that a subject was trying to break into the shop at the University Apartments Garage.

The subject was not able to get into the shop but did break a window.

6:56 p.m. A subject called to report that they were assaulted in Kennedy Hall. The subject stated that they were hit, punched, and spit on.

10:35 p.m. Following a traffic stop, Osvaldino Tavares, 22, of Amherst, was arrested for operating a motor vehicle on the sidewalk and operating a motor vehicle without a license.

SundayNovember 13

4:52 a.m. A party stated a subject in a vehicle was intoxicated on North Maple Street. The Hadley Police were notified and put the subject under arrest.

5:30 a.m. An officer stated that six vehicles parked in front of Massachusetts Avenue had damage to their side mirrors.

10:22 p.m. A party reported that they were assaulted earlier in the day. The Sunderland Police were notified and they issued a restraining order.

Patrick Kollecker, 26, of Orem, UT was arrested for intimidating a witness and destruction of property worth over $250.00.

-Compiled by Brendan Heck

Kerry may give presidency a second chance

By Mary Dalrymple
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senator John Kerry, who has $45 million left from his record-breaking Democratic campaign, hinted on Tuesday that he may try again for the presidency.

On his first workday back in the Senate since losing his White House bid, Kerry remained far from the spotlight, granting interviews to hometown reporters and joining the depleted corps of Democrats as they elected the party's new Senate leaders.

In his first extensive interview since his Nov. 2 defeat, Kerry was asked by the Fox News affiliate in Boston about running again in 2008 and reminded the questioner that Ohio is still counting votes from 2004.

He then said, "It is so premature to be thinking about something that far down the road. What I've said is I'm not opening any doors, I'm not shutting any doors." Kerry added, "If there's a next time, we'll do a better job. We'll see."

Reflecting on his loss, Kerry said he was not sitting around thinking about it. "You've got to go on," he said. "Do I find it some mark of failure or distress, the answer is no."

The former presidential nominee described himself as a "fighter," and added, "I can envision a lot of years of fight ahead of me."

In an interview with WCVB-TV, Kerry said, "Fifty-thousand votes — we'd be in a different place, having a different conversation," a reference to Ohio, which decided the race.

The Democrats have no clear front-runner for the 2008 nomination. Kerry has a distinct financial advantage over any rival based on his fund raising.

Kerry had roughly $45 million left in his primary campaign fund as of mid-October and could use that as seed money for another presidential bid. In addition, he had about $7 million on hand in a legal and accounting compliance fund that he could use for legal expenses in a 2008 campaign.

Because Kerry accepted full public financing for the general election phase of this year's race, he will have to give any of that money that remains back to the government.

During his day in the Senate, Kerry's colleagues thanked him, congratulated him and wished him well.

"Every time his name was mentioned, there was enthusiastic applause. Literally, every time his name was mentioned," said Sen. Debbie Stabenow, D-Mich.

EXECUTIVE VALET PARKING
Serving Bradley Airport
Airport Parking College Special!
$25.00*-Up to 7 Days Parking. Valid 11/23-11/30
$50.00*-Up to 5 Weeks Parking. Valid 12/15-02/01/05
Valid College ID Req., Present this coupon or Visit us at: www.CollegeAirportParking.com
800-218-1297
*Plus 4% Access Fee. Cannot be Combined with Other offers

DINING SERVICES PRESENTS
Restaurant Night
Bringing the area's four favorite restaurants and their chefs to you on campus!
Berkshire DC presents Chef Jim Sands
Franklin DC presents The University Club Chef Jane Leary
Hampshire DC presents Famous Bill's Restaurant Chef Lonnie Ricketts
Worcester DC presents Eastside Chef Jake Perkins
Thursday, Nov. 18 from 4-7pm
All are welcome! Use your meal plan or $9.00 cash price.
DINING SERVICES UMass

To All Residential/YCMP Meal Plan Holders:
NEED MORE MEALS?
Now you can purchase additional meals or upgrade your meal plan at the Meal Plan Office at Franklin Dining Commons
Several options available to choose from!
Call 545-1362 or visit the meal plan office today.
RESIDENTIAL The best value on campus
YCMP A world of choices
You must have an active meal plan to upgrade or purchase additional meals.
Form of payment: cash, check or credit card

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL OPINION
WEDNESDAY, NOVEMEBER, 17 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cooperation is essential to move campus forward

After more than a week of wondering what the other side would have to say, the administrative silence has been broken in regards to the recent allegations volleyed between the Student Government Association and the ALANA caucus against Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano.

In a meeting yesterday with Collegian editors, Gargano explained that due to the number of rumors circulating around campus, he felt it was important to finally set the record straight.

Vice Chancellor Gargano indicated that the main concern regarding the emails is not their content but rather how they were obtained by the anonymous source, who has yet to come forward. The fact that this anonymous person was able to ascertain the emails raises questions of student privacy and the security of the campus systems. For this reason, a full-scale investigation to track down the person responsible is under way.

Gargano also indicated that he plans to keep his door open to SGA President Eduardo Bustamante in efforts to establish a healthy working relationship where issues concerning the student body can be resolved in a timely fashion.

Last week, Bustamante announced at the SGA meeting that he would no longer work with the Vice Chancellor on student affairs and the Take Back UMass group even went as far as to call for his resignation.

After meeting with Vice Chancellor Gargano, we, at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, feel that both of these decisions are unnecessary and premature. We wonder how anything remotely important to the student body can be achieved if these internal fights continue to erupt and hinder the process of governing.

The workings of this campus go beyond the personal conflicts within the SGA and ALANA. There are many things that can still be accomplished and cutting off the lines of communication can only prevent progress.

Gargano expressed his desire for the President and Speaker to set aside whatever differences they may feel towards each other and continue to work with him in order to better this University. He also shared with us some of his ideas on how to help the SGA work together and communicate better within itself in order to avoid similar conflicts in the future. We, at the Collegian, agree with him wholeheartedly.

While the investigation of these emails' legitimacy is underway, there is plenty of work to be done in the meanwhile, and refusing to cooperate will not solve the problems here at UMass. The position of President of the SGA holds a lot of power concerning students' interests on campus, and the voice of this campus wants to be heard on a myriad of issues, regardless of what personal conflicts may have arisen in the past few months.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Learning to party Aussie style

World Perspectives
Jennifer Kim

Here's to (insert name)
He/She's true blue
He/She's a pisspot, through and through
He/She's a drunkard so they say
Tried to get to heaven
But went the other way
Down, Down, Down, Down! (drink here)

This little drinking song can be heard boisterously echoing throughout the bars, pubs, parties or any student hangout for that matter. Oh, but just you wait — there are heaps of other drinking songs that the Aussies love to sing. It's rather funny how all the Americans exchanged raised eyebrows with one another after hearing this peculiar song for the first time. Although, now, I recognize some Americans adopting this song or even joining in with the rest of the Aussies during happy hour. These drinking songs weren't the only things to get used to when hitting the night scene. There was more — oh, was there more.

A typical night out on the town doesn't even begin at night. Instead, right after Uni (say around 3 or 4 in the afternoon), they head straight on to happy hour. What can you say? The Uni life is a rough life to lead. It is so rough that you can see a handful of students just chillin' midday at the Unibar in between classes, and having a few drinks with their friends.

The Unibar is the bar on campus, very similar to the Blue Wall Bar. Let's get this straight though: the Unibar here isn't so neglected as it is back at the University of Massachusetts. At UMass, if you're caught drinking at the BlueWall, you know you'll be stared at for pathetically resorting to the campus bar. This is when you know that a person truly has had a rough day. On the other hand, the students here take full advantage of having a bar on campus, and why wouldn't they?

So one could technically say the drinking here begins reasonably early, but it doesn't stop there. This could be rocky for the "cadburys" (a.k.a. lightweights) out there, like me. Straight after dinner, it's back to it again, but this time it's with the drinks that you bought on the way home from Uni.

Even those hip hop and rap songs that are played are from the era of Ice Cube and DJ Kool.

It took most of the Americans a good week or two (and the help of their empty wallets) to realize that drinks (including beer) are a lot pricier here compared to the States. Thus, most were forced to fixate their palettes to "goon" (and no, I don't mean gangsters or hoodlums nor is it short for Goonies). Let me give you the 411 on this "goon." It is in fact the cheapest of cheap wine that you can find, but dressed up in a plastic bag within a cardboard box.

Now, it's time to put our dancing shoes on. The clubs here are great, considering I never had to pay a cover charge once! It's actually very rare to see someone pay. Of course if it is past a certain time, or if you're at a ritzy club along Darling Harbour, Sydney, then do you see someone dish out some money. It's not like the States where going early to beat the cover charge is unheard of. Instead, the Aussies forget about being "fashionably late" and utilize this opportunity to be economical. But can you really blame them? If we had this option in the States, I'm sure more people would do as the Aussies would have done. Oh, wait a second — we do have this option.

Another thing to get used to is the music in the night scene. The music is a blast from the past, and suddenly it feels as though you've stepped into the 80s. Hip hop and rap are played in the clubs as Alternative is played in the States — there's just a touch of it. Even those hip hop and rap songs that are played are from the era of Ice Cube and Dj Kool.

The majority of the night is dancing along to George Michael, Pink Floyd, AC "lightning bolt" DC, and Madonna (from back when she was "like a virgin"). These were most of the songs that were kept hidden in a separate folder in our mp3 file on our computer and usually weren't played publicly. Nonetheless, the Aussies here aren't ashamed; they energetically dance to and even openly request these songs!

The night starts winding down at around one in the morning (exactly when it's the peak time for clubs back at home). It appears that the Aussies have a formula here for the night scene: drink early, dance early, come back home early and repeat for the next night.

Jennifer Kim is a Collegian columnist who is currently on exchange in Australia.

Saturdays behind the fence

Thomas Naughton

"How does it feel to kill your baby?" the woman in a Tweety Bird sweat shirt screamed at a patient entering the small clinic on Commonwealth Avenue in Boston.

The patient stopped to look at the Tweety Bird woman; she didn't shout obscenities or make gestures of any kind. She just turned and looked this woman in the eyes. Those two seconds that their eyes locked seemed like hours as I watched silently, dazed. The patient looked at the Tweety Bird woman with an expression that seemed to say, "Oh, give me a break." It didn't look like this patient seeking an abortion, was very happy or proud of what she was doing; it was just a medical procedure that she just happened to need.

The patient obviously didn't want to spend her Saturday this way and neither did I, nor my friends. We were juniors in high school who were a part of protest groups like Riot Grrrl, or Refuse and Resist. On Saturdays, we would do something we called "Clinic Defense," which basically meant that we'd show up early in the morning at a specific clinic that was being bombarded with religious protestors. We were basically a challenging force to the religious crazies who would threaten the lives of the young women patients, the doctors or the staffers.

We were there in case anyone started getting violent, but more importantly, we were there to support these women in a decision that is one of the hardest to make. I say that we didn't want to spend our Saturdays this way simply because we thought it was terrible that protestors actually got in the way of patients' rights. We hated that it was necessary to defend the choice of an American citizen.

The religious protestors who showed up at these clinics didn't look crazy or militant. They looked like people from your own small town that you wave to in the grocery store or the post office. It was like they had separate lives: once they were exhorted by this trigger issue of abortion, their sometimes frightening passion just burst forth, causing them to say terrible things to young girls and threaten the lives of doctors who were only trying to do their jobs.

I guess that is the difference between my friends and the religious protestors: we saw abortion as simply a medical procedure with some very real consequences. We saw the patient as a person who had weighed her options and chose abortion because she had no other choice. There have been women who have used abortion as a means of contraception, which is not what the procedure is meant for, but regardless of the acts of some careless women, we knew that supporting the patient's right to pursue this procedure was right, just and American.

We weren't abortion cheerleaders or a bunch of screaming teenagers laughing at the idea of dead fetuses. We mostly stood around silently, just watching, listening and waiting to intervene should the situation turn physical. To be honest, most of us couldn't speak. We had never heard such hate be spat from the mouths of otherwise nice looking people. Some of my female friends cried silently as they stood there at the other side of the fence, hearing horrible diatribes jump from the mouths of maternal women who sipped coffee in between berating doctors who entered the building.

I tried to understand where the protestors were coming from, but I couldn't then and still cannot today. What is the alternative to abortion? Adoption? It's funny, those words written close together don't look very different, and I don't think they are. Adoption can be worse than abortion. How many young lives are destroyed by foster families who abuse children or collect gaggles of foster kids in order to get a fat check from the government?

It was just a short operation that no one particularly felt great about, but an operation that remains necessary in our world.

When I was in high school, I used to say that I didn't have an opinion on abortion because I'm a male; it was none of my business. I realize now that my statement was coming from the zeal of youth, the blind hope for equality that kicks in at 17 for some young people. Now that I am older, I know I have an opinion on it because I have seen the procedure performed. When I came to the University of Massachusetts as a freshman, I met a wonderful girl named Anna who showed me a documentary on the clinic that her mother founded, aptly named Four Women.

What I saw was a documentary on women nurses and nurse practitioners who performed this procedure, not out of some sadistic satisfaction, but because their central goal was to keep women safe. I watched the abortion procedure calmly. There was no dramatic music, no mood lighting, and no special appearances by Jesus Christ, M.D. It was just a short operation that no one particularly felt great about, but an operation that remains necessary in our world.

When the tape was over, I thought about myself and my friends at 17, standing on the other side of a chain-link fence, facing angry church-goers, absorbing the volley of insults as young patience passed between the two groups. The reality of the ordeal, of waking up on a Saturday to get yelled at by people you've never met, to have an operation that you don't feel good about, the entire situation is terrible. The alternative, however, a world where this procedure becomes outlawed and unsafe is without a doubt the worst scenario imaginable.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

All the President's men

Andrew Freeman

Ah, that special time of year. It's fall, and just as the trees are shedding their leaves, this nation is shedding its appointed officials.

So far, of 15 secretaries in the president's cabinet, 6 have resigned, ranging from the oft-mentioned John Ashcroft, attorney general, and Colin Powell, secretary of state, to the obscure Ann Veneman, secretary of agriculture. Let's look at the two most important ones: Ashcroft and Powell.

John Ashcroft has a lengthy career in public service, culminating in his 2000 senate loss to Mel Carnahan, who had died two weeks before the election. Carnahan's wife agreed to serve in her husband's place, but nonetheless, the "couldn't beat a dead guy" charge stuck.

Thereafter he was appointed as attorney general, where he proceeded to take offense at the naked statues of Liberty and Justice and ordered them covered. He also began holding daily, morning, prayer sessions in the Justice Department and eliminated the phrase "no higher calling than public service" from official parlance; he felt that service to God was higher.

As part of the War on Librarians, in 2001 he pushed the Patriot Act to allow authorities to investigate suspected terrorists' reading habits, among many, many other provisions. Defending the bill before a compliant Senate, he declared "To those who scare peace-loving people with phantoms of lost liberties, my message is this: Your tactics only aid terrorists — for they erode our national unity and diminish our resolve."

Ashcroft also presided over the administration's disastrous prosecutions of suspected terrorists in the United States, which so far have netted no one; and its detentions in Guantanamo Bay, where prisoners are often held indefinitely. Overall, his legacy is one of failure — failure to catch the terrorists before they attacked, and failure to distinguish between terrorists and American residents afterwards.

His successor is better, though not by much. White House counsel Alberto Gonzalez, who will likely gain Senate approval, is decidedly more moderate than Ashcroft. However, in January 2002 he sent a memo supporting Ashcroft's position that captives taken in Afghanistan need not be treated as prisoners of war, as is customary under the Geneva Convention. This policy later resulted in the infamous Abu Ghraib prison scandals.

On a worse note, Colin Powell, one of the better bureaucrats under Bush, resigned from his position as Secretary of State. A September poll showed Powell has approval ratings of nearly 63 percent, almost 20 points higher than other leading Republicans (certainly higher than Bush), and for good reason. Powell served over 30 years in the military, eventually heading the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the highest echelon of the Pentagon, yet he was put in control of the State Department. Meanwhile, ideologues with little direct military experience like Donald Rumsfeld and Paul Wolfowitz were placed in charge of the Defense Department.

This set the stage for disaster. The hawks in the Defense Department and elsewhere swayed Bush over to invading Iraq. Powell delayed it by seeking UN approval. In early 2003, he went before the UN and lectured on mobile chemical labs and other WMD threats, which the invasion proved to be an utter fallacy. Powell has attempted to make progress on other fronts, including North Korea and the Israel-Palestine conflict, but has received limited support from the Bush administration. His attempts at improving America's image has been sabotaged by hubris from the Bush administration, such as Rumsfeld's characterization of Germany and France as "Old Europe" (anywhere in Europe is old compared to the United States).

While cabinet secretaries have substantial power, none of them have really challenged Bush on important issues.

Powell will be replaced by National Security Advisor Condoleeza Rice, another foreign policy expert and even-tempered administrator, but it is unlikely that we will see an upswing in international relations, barring any major changes in policy by Bush. While cabinet secretaries have substantial power, none of them have really challenged Bush on important issues. The departures of this fall have been mixed, and may result in an improvement for this country, but don't count on it. In the end, the only man whose departure would've changed things is the one we reelected.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

Kindergarten values are gone

Joseph St. John

Whatever happened to the days of saving the rainforests? Who now is watching over the whales now that we college students have graduated from elementary school? Didn't we have penny drives at least once a year in order to buy a portion of the fern gullies of Brazil?

For a whole month in the days of Captain Planet and Sesame Street, my classmates and I would save up our nickels to drop into the construction paper green can, and each week it would be counted to see how many acres our collective milk money could buy.

Now that we are older, who is active in stopping the dolphins from being caught in tuna nets and preventing poachers in sub Saharan Africa from killing rhinos and elephants for their precious ivory tusks? What about the ozone layer, and all the trash that's being shipped to Antarctica on humongous barges?

In elementary school, there were constantly visitors getting our little brains worked up about the environment. Perhaps this was a fad of the '90s that degenerated into apathy. Maybe it's an elementary school scam where caring kindergarten teachers make us think that our five dollars is really going to save Sally the Sloth.

Hey, maybe we did save the world! Maybe our elementary efforts paid off? No news is good news right?

Old growth forests, the artic tundra and endangered species are still crying out for help, even if no one is listening.

No, one would have to be a fool to think that these problems just went away because people stopped caring about them. It's a fact that there is less interest in these topics than there was 10 years ago. My observations tell me there are fewer articles in newspapers, fewer reports on television and fewer personal conversations about these forgotten tragedies. Old growth forests, the arctic tundra and endangered species are still crying out for help, even if no one is listening.

Is it that our problems have changed since then, or that as we grew up, we became so over-saturated with new ones to remember the short tailed albatross? Now we hear a lot about Global Warming, AIDS and of course, President Bush. Have these juggernauts trumped the issues we faced in kindergarten to capture our attention? Maybe we were too young to know about AIDS, hunger and the lack of clean water, but does that mean we should forget about Woody, the red cockaded woodpecker as we learn new things?

Weren't there a lot of endangered species that everyone cared so much about? What about the habitats of these lovable creatures? Have we heard anything about the children that were being killed in China because they were girls? It seems to me that I have heard these questions less and less over the past four years than ever before. Gradually over the years, there has been a shift from worldly problems like these to American political problems that get the most media coverage.

Are reporters and people in general ignoring these issues or have the issues become less important compared to other issues? There is much new talk about the genocide that has taking place in Darfur since 1985. It is certainly about time the world knows about what is happening there. The AIDS epidemic is of course a world priority that is killing millions and is something which developed nations such as ours are capable of fighting. No one can deny the magnanimity of these horrors. Although some say ignorance is bliss, I am glad that people are at least somewhat familiar with these topics.

One thing that we are all aware of is the fact that George Bush is our president. We hear about the bad things he is doing to the economy, the environment and to the American image in the eyes of our neighbors. On November 3, a school bus drove by me when I was walking outside of the UMass Campus, and a little kid yelled out the window "Bush Sucks!"

For many, he is the ultimate problem, the fulcrum of frustration, the heart of barrow. For some, his face makes people angry and causes looks of desperation. This attitude takes away from constructive conversation about other issues however. Instead of speaking about how many people a year are injured in car accidents, people talk about Bush's terrible driving record. Instead of planning a rainforest penny drive, people plan marches to protest his agenda.

The rainforests are still being blazed, and I wonder how many football fields are now being destroyed with each second that you read this. I don't know the answer to that, but I hope that someone out there is still keeping track. If you're out there, make your voice heard because it hasn't been loud enough lately.

Joseph St. John is a Collegian columnist.

Where have all the sitcoms gone?

Stacy Kasdin

When "Survivor" first graced our television screens in early 2000 the nation tuned in. As the first of many reality TV shows it drew a great deal of attention. Viewers liked watching a show about people they felt they could relate to. They liked that the people on this show lived in houses like theirs, in neighborhoods like theirs. They especially liked that they might even get the opportunity to be on one of these shows.

I was never a "Survivor" fan. In fact, I actually haven't seen an episode of it to date. However, I did appreciate the concept, and thought the CBS executives had come up with a very good idea. As happens with most good ideas, the reality TV situation has gotten wildly out of hand.

My first point of order: "Trading Spouses: Meet Your New Mommy." You might also know this show as "Wife Swap." Yes, one is on Fox and the other is on ABC. That pretty much covers the differences between the two. Essentially ABC came up with a good idea, and Fox stole it and was able to air it first. As if a show where the mothers from two families switch places for two weeks isn't bad enough, now there are two of them. I don't quite understand why anyone would want to move in with another family and allow some other woman to take control of theirs.

They say the point is for families to rediscover their love and appreciation for each other, but I watched an episode of one of these shows. One family blatantly liked their substitute mom better than their real one. Now who would want to deal with that, even for cash prize?

Fox's latest piece of brilliance is "Nanny 911." Similarly to the mommy-replacement shows, the premise of "Nanny 911" is having a professional come into an unruly household and show the parents how to properly take care of their children. Again, how on Earth do they find people who want to go on national television and announce to the world that not only do they have no idea how to handle their children, but they need a complete stranger to come in and show them how its done.

Millions of viewers, who will then see these people at the grocery store, at parent-teacher conferences and at the mall, will see them on TV crying to some woman. If all goes according to plan, these people's children will respond better to this woman then they ever have to anyone. I'm wondering, if the people are such bad parents, why hasn't social services dropped in on them?

There are many reality TV shows I can't believe are on television, but I suppose I can't really blame the networks. Why would they cancel a goldmine? This leads me to believe that the real question is why are we watching?

Now let's back up a bit. Before you screw up your kids, you have to get married, and before you get married you have to play the dating game. Of course, you can do all of this on TV. No, I'm not talking about the old school "Dating Game" with Bob Eubanks. I'm talking about "The Bachelor," "The Bachelorette," "Joe Millionaire," etc. At this point it just becomes funny that they're calling this reality TV. If these shows were reality, every girl on the planet would be 5'8", 110 lbs., and a size 2, with perfect teeth and hair that never frizzes. Every guy would be 6'0", 180 lbs., with a washboard stomach and a perfect tan. I go out into the world every day, and I can guarantee you this is not the case.

Totally disregarding the lack of reality in these shows and moving on to the content, I've come to the conclusion that they are basically an excuse for network television to bring in the viewers who have turned to premium cable for their naughty fix. I don't think there has been an episode of any of these shows without a trip to the hot tub. I can't help but think that these contestants must have parents, siblings, employers, or someone else that they'd rather not have accompanying them on their dates. Not to mention that their actions on these shows could very well take them out of the dating pool permanently.

Now I'm not knocking reality TV in general. One show I'm particularly impressed by is "Extreme Makeover: Home Edition." This show picks a home in need of an overhaul that belongs to a deserving family. They send the family on vacation for a week and spend what I can only imagine is millions of dollars fixing the home according to the family's needs. As far as I can tell this is one of the few reality TV shows with a completely selfless premise, other than of course making ABC look good as the bringers of all this good fortune.

Despite how sickening or sweet some of these shows may be, they are pulling in a ton of money for these networks. There are many reality TV shows I can't believe are on television, but I suppose I can't really blame the networks. Why would they cancel a goldmine? This leads me to believe that the real question is why are we watching? Do we like seeing other people in bad situations? Does it make us feel better about ourselves? Does it make us laugh? Do these shows offer solutions to problems we are experiencing in our own lives? I don't know, but whatever it is, no matter how ridiculous, viewers keep tuning in. It looks like reality TV is here to stay.

Stacy Kasdin is a Collegian columnist.

The Facebook and fantasy

Ben Feder

I don't have an exact topic to delve into for this week's column, but I have made two conclusions in the last few days that I would like to share.

I am obsessed with the Facebook. It's the latest craze and I don't think I'm the only victim to its hypnotic spell. I don't know what makes it so addicting, but I started it last week and now I can't stop checking to see if my friends have left me messages or if I've been poked. I have this insatiable desire to find more people I know and add them to my friends list. I add weird things to my clubs and interests like, "hot cheese up front club," or that my favorite book is the thesaurus, just to see if anyone else will show up when I click on those links.

It wasn't until later that I discovered what category of addiction the Facebook falls into. It's the same kind of addiction that keeps you checking and rechecking people's away messages. Even though you checked someone's away message 30 seconds ago, you still right-click their screen name to see if it has changed.

That's when it hit me, and I learned the true nature of the Facebook. It's just one big, glorified buddy list.

That's when it hit me, and I learned the true nature of the Facebook. It's just one big, glorified buddy list.

Think about it. What other purpose can it possibly serve? All you do is add more and more friends to improve your sense of self-worth. The higher the number, the better you feel. But can you honestly say that each of those people listed are ones you actually talk to daily? Or are some simply mutual acquaintances, or better yet, that person you see at the dining hall every lunch. You know you'll never really talk to these people or hang out with them, but still they're there. I'm going to guess that only half or maybe even a third of the profiles found on people's "friends" list are actual friends. All I know is that people I haven't spoken to in years are now interested in placing me in their "friends" category.

My next thought was about fantasy sports. Fantasy football, baseball, hockey, whatever. I've overheard so many people talking about their fantasy teams, their players' stats, upcoming matches, and anything else that it seems like I'm watching a live taping of Sportscenter. All of a sudden, everyone is an expert sports analyst. Acronyms like RISP, CP/AT, and ERA are being thrown around in classrooms and bars. What's great is that everyone understands what those mean.

I came to the conclusion that fantasy sports are similar to the game Dungeons and Dragons. Or really, fantasy sports are Dungeons and Dragons for jocks. Now hear me out before you crumple up the paper and curse my name. I'm not trying to offend either fantasy sports fans or D&D enthusiasts. What I mean is that Dungeons and Dragons, much like fantasy sports, is all about statistics. It's a game driven by numbers with the players constantly rolling dice. Players are constantly thinking and trying to come up with better numbers to beat opponents, numbers that improve the characters and get items with better statistics. Statistics quantify the D&D world.

In fantasy sports, people buy statistic analyses to figure out which players to put where. Players are pouring themselves over stats sheets, consulting ESPN.com and observing their opponents moves in order to make better decisions. The only thing missing is the dice. I have friends completely consumed in the fantasy sports world. It has become their reality, much like how D&D becomes reality to its players.

The key word is fantasy. I once overheard two guys talking about each other's Fantasy Football roster. One was bragging about Donovan McNabb's stats: 270 attempts, with 170 completions, totaling 2081 yards. I was expecting him to add that McNabb just got a new fire sword that has +2 attack points against frost giants. It's all relative. Either you're hoping Peyton Manning will get above 180 completions this week (I hate the Colts but the man has got some arm), or you're venturing into that dungeon to fight that dragon.

Ben Feder is a Collegian columnist.

Spread the wealth; share the ice

S.J. Port

Dear Coach "Toot" Cahoon,

Congratulations on your win this past Sunday!

It must have been thrilling to play two hockey games in a single weekend, tying one and winning the other. But then, I suppose that's a pretty normal weekend for you.

My weekend wasn't as much fun: my hockey game was cancelled. Actually, you might know something about that, since it seems you took the ice-time scheduled for my team's game and used it to give your players an extra practice period. I'm not sure why that practice had to be during the time we had scheduled for our game, but you and the rink manager who schedules the ice must have had valid reasons, right? You wouldn't disrespect another hockey team like that, would you?

This was going to be the second game of our season – our first home game. (You played your 11 and 12 games of the season this weekend – didn't you?) The "our" refers to the Women's Ice Hockey recreational team, a B-team of the UMass Women's Ice Hockey program.

The game was scheduled for 2:00 - 3:20 p.m. last Saturday, we were prepared to challenge the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. On Friday afternoon as a few of my fellow teammates and I drove down I-91 in the snow over the ice and through Springfield to Gateway's Hockey house to get our skates sharpened in preparation of the game we received a call. The call was from our coach, who was sputtering with anger: our ice time had been rescheduled to Saturday evening from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m.

Yes, we all groaned, yes the change in time would postpone our Saturday evening activities, but no, none of us would ever give up the chance to play hockey.

We felt jilted, and disrespected, but agreed to let that go because we were still going to be able to play hockey. Even if, because of the time change, friends and family members who'd come up to see our first home game wouldn't be able to stay for the game. We continued, only slightly less merrily on our way to the Hockey store.

There's something about hockey that I just can't resist: a month or two without it and my body begins to crave the swift glide across the ice.

Friday night we all went to bed early, or relatively early; none of us drank, smoked, or acted like the usual merry pranksters we are come weekends. Although, we are not varsity athletes, we respect the game and kept the upcoming Saturday evening game in mind.

Saturday morning I was wakened by another call from my coach. Again, he was sputtering, although, this time through the dejection of having been moved by another hockey player off our ice. I heard outrage: MIT couldn't play us during the new time period, and thus our game was effectively cancelled.

Whether you knew it or not you moved another hockey team off their game time ice, an unspoiled student organized and run team created purely for the purpose of enjoying the sport we love: hockey.

We don't play our games at the Mullins Center, and neither does the Women's Ice Hockey program's A squad, because that privilege would cost us non-varsity athletes $2,000 per night. We're happy with the practice rink – it's ice and that's all we really need. But when we don't have ice, life starts to suck a little.

We're a club team; we don't need the fancy free-tutors, mandatory study hall, trainers, fancy buses, scholarships, travel schedule, or priority registration for courses: we just need ice time and the respect of our hockey colleagues.

There's something about hockey that I just can't resist: a month or two without it and my body begins to crave the swift glide across the ice, the reach to a long pass – even the smell of my perspiration soaked, rotting equipment.

It must be nice to have the opportunity to play so much hockey – and be supported by your community in your love for the sport.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A JOB WELL DONE

I just wanted to applaud and commend a recent editorial by John Ciampa entitled "Chasing American Morality." I wanted to submit positive feedback to the Collegian as an undergraduate student because I was really impressed with the writer's even-handedness and sincere approach. Ciampa's piece was objective, informative, and well written.

Too often on a college campus emotions can run high and intellectual honesty can give way to incoherent blabber. Yet, here we see a truly respectable piece of writing that is cohesive, factual and stimulating. This is very encouraging to see, and I was so impressed that I felt compelled to say something. I commend John Ciampa on a job well done!

Michael J. DaSilva
UMass student

ADDRESSING THE IMPORTANT ISSUE

Cheers to Stephen Post for bringing to light issue that are more than just conspiracy theories. In his article on Friday "Slavery is Freedom," Post's thoughts were that yet another election was rigged, stolen from under our very noses as we, the people sit idly by and simply take it in faith that the mistakes in the 2000 election will not be repeated.

Take a little trip down to cnn.com and you will find their take on the 2004 political arena and the voting issues debated. What you will find is one instance of an Ohio voting machine producing 4,258 votes for Mr. Bush when the record indicates that, "only 638 voters cast ballots in that precinct." The "state and county election officials did not immediately respond to requests for more details ... about the system and its vendor."

Could it be that they were waiting for Kerry to concede? One instance of electronic voting gone awry? A mistake. But there are more instances popping up all across the country. It no longer seems like such a mistake.

Different methods than the 2000 election, but ultimately the same result, the stealing of an election from those who, as Post says, "express their opinions and expect to be listened to — poor fools." Post ends by saying that now is the time to ask questions. Now is the time to resist." If you have an interest in resistance, go to www.moveon.org.

Evan Mowery
UMass student

www.dailycollegian.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

By Michael Busack
Collegian Staff

It has been over ten years since the inception of the original Doo Wop Shop. With the guys celebrating their 11th year on the UMass campus, the group hopes to reinstate an a capella friendly community in the Amherst area.

"We're on a mission to improve the a capella scene in the area," said veteran group member Ryan Landry. "We are getting the different groups like Six Minutes, and The Vocal Suspects involved, and we're hoping to start a scene."

Landry, a music education major at the University joined the group in 2002 with Cooper Cerulo, a music major who acts as the group's current music director. Also returning this year is Sophomore theatre major Chris Guzzara.

Despite the returning members, the Shop faced the challenges of introducing three freshman members to the group this fall. Adam Aguanno, Dave Duran, and Ian Kibbe joined the Shoppers this semester to try to fill out some vacant spots that were left from several member's departures since the last year.

"It's all really new to us this year, and all of the music is really challenging, but we have been practicing a lot, and we keep getting stronger," said Kibbe. "It's definitely not like high school," he joked.

Since the Shop is fiscally self-sufficient from University funding, they rely solely on concert profits to back recording sessions and future performances. This semester however, in an effort to raise more funds the group jumped at a chance to host a bi-weekly show with the all-girl a capella group Six Minutes, every other Thursday in one of the theaters located in the Herter Annex.

"We want to be able to record a complete studio album in the future," said Cooper Cerulo. "It is difficult though because the only money we make is off of the shows that we do."

In an effort to incorporate old, new, and group favorites, the Shop has introduced many new songs into their repertoire this semester. They plans to sing staples like Billy Joel's "For the Longest Time" and the Sam Cooke hit "These Arms of Mine" alongside newer arrangements like the Beach Boys "Kokomo" and the George Michael signature "Father Figure."

"We like to add some more modern songs in every semester," said Cerulo. "I also like to give the guys the chance to pick some songs that they would like to sing."

The extra show dates and new tunes have seemed to propel the popularity of the group on campus. The shows have gathered large crowds and some positive feedback for the group. Even folks in the Campus Center gathered last night to catch the group practicing a tune or two.

The Doo Wop shop will host two final shows at 7 p.m. at the Herter Annex, tomorrow and Dec. 2. They will also host their final, more formal show of the semester on Dec. 10, at 8 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium with the Six Minutes and the University of New Hampshire's Alabaster Blue.

Legendary guitarist comes to NoHo

By Bradley Farberman
Collegian Staff

"It's hard to find a more fruitful meditation on American music than in the compositions of guitarist Bill Frisell," says The New York Times. "Mixing rock and country with jazz and blues, he's found what connects them: improvisation and a sense of play."

And it's that "sense of play," a quiet ebullience that permeates Frisell's best work, which has brought him to Northampton tonight.

The guitarist's music is meant to be shared; it belongs in the ears and minds of anyone in search of emotion, sensitivity and fun in their concert (or record-buying) experience.

And you can participate in that experience tonight, at the Iron Horse Music Hall. Just take a seat, close your eyes, and let the tunes float past you (you can grab one and hold on to it if you like). Vengeance

But you can't keep it. Ultimately, it belongs to Bill. And he deserves it — the former Berklee College of Music student has spent the past forty-nine years cultivating a sound unique only to him; his odyssey began back in 1955, at the age of four, when he built his first guitar out of cardboard and string.

It didn't sound as good as his current axe, but it was a start. In 1965, he bought his first electric guitar, and in 1971 he gave up the clarinet to focus on his six-string ambitions.

Soon, he would head out to Boston, New York City and Belgium in search of a voice; he liked Bob Dylan, Jimi Hendrix, Jim Hall and Miles Davis. This was no ordinary quest, and it had no ordinary destination.

In 1982, he recorded his first album as a leader (In Line, for ECM). In 1986, he recorded "Lookout for Hope", a record that first paired him with long-time rhythm section Kermit Driscoll (bass) and Joey Baron (drums). This was his first time working with producer Lee Townsend; Townsend has produced many of Frisell's albums since, and manages the guitarist's career to this day.

Twenty years and roughly that many albums later, Frisell released Unspeakable in 2004. A tremendous record full of boundless soundscapes and funky sonic tapestries, it leaves space for Frisell's guitar playing to shine; his band, featuring artists like Tony Scherr (bass), Kenny Wollesen (drums), Don Alias (percussion) and Eyvind Kang (strings), is a powerhouse of creative musicians.

And tonight, with bassist Viktor Krauss and Wollesen in tow, Frisell bring tunes both new and old to life; all you have to do is forfeit $20 in advance, or $23 at the door. The show starts at 7 p.m.

Jazz-rock guitarist Bill Frisell plays at the Iron Horse tonight.

American Dreams: illustrates what we are all made of

By Lindsey Ferris
Collegian Correspondent

The two-time Emmy award winning drama, "American Dreams," is in its 3rd season and now is a better time than any to begin watching.

The popular television show focuses on the Pryor family of Philadelphia during the culturally changing time of the 1960's, and the Vietnam War. Each character has different beliefs and is affected differently by the rapidly changing times. The oldest son, JJ (Will Estes), is a U.S. marine fighting in Vietnam. He has left behind his ex-fiancé and their unborn child, while fighting for his country. Meg (Brittany Snow), his 17-year-old sister is a regular dancer on the hit TV show "American bandstand," and has become active in protesting the war, as she grows from child to adulthood in the 3rd season. The two youngest children, Patty (Sarah Ramos), and Will (Ethan Dampf), both struggle to be socially accepted for their separate reasons. The parents, Jack (Tom Verica) and Helen (Gale O'Grady) Pryor struggle to raise their young children, along with JJ's ex-fiancé, while praying for their son's safe return. The show deals with issues from the 1960's such as racism, feminism, and protesting the war — it's amazing that each week the captivating show continues to find new ways to tug at its viewers hearts and leave them begging for more.

In recent episodes JJ has been reported missing in action. After receiving a goodbye message from him, the Pryor family tries to keep hope that he is alive and has difficulty continuing with their lives. In the most recent episode JJ's ex-fiancé Beth, had his child, a boy named after him. The baby brought the divided family together again and they only hope he'll be able to meet his father some day. This original series is like no other currently on television. It is something new (refreshing) to watch; it strays from the typical lawyer and detective shows. Although these days it is considered reality TV if a person eats animal parts for money or marries a stranger, "American Dreams" is true reality. The viewers become emotionally attached to the characters because the show touches on many real issues. Every emotion and perspective of the 1960's is captured in this one family. True drama is brought back to television in this series.

"American Dreams" has the ability to draw in many young viewers. Along with providing performances by many musical artists each week, the show deals with subject matter they can relate to, such as the war. Many college students are being immensely affected by the war in Iraq by either having friends and family in Iraq, they themselves are there, or they completely oppose it. Many young people have different perspectives on the war, just as the characters in the show do. "American Dreams" is finally a show that deals with real issues, which college students, or young people in general, can relate to and are interested in.

NBC hit series "American Dreams", has made a huge impact on its audience through its heart-warming plot.

Dacko adds depth to the front court aged career numbers of 8.9 points per game, 2.9 assists per game and 2.4 rebounds per game.

WOMEN'S HOOPS from page 8

Save for her short-lived, three-minute comeback attempt 18 days after originally tearing her ACL back in January of 2003, Nelson has started every game she has appeared in at UMass. Having her back in the lineup as the starting point guard is huge, as she will be aproven leader

In the two spot will be freshman Pam Rosanio,who doesn't seem to fit the mold of "rookie."

The youngster out of Southampton, P.A. earned her first stripes in the Minutewomen's first of two preseason exhibitions, when she was one of two players to hit double digits in scoring (11 points) and the only frosh to do so.

The backcourt will have plenty of well-rounded players to fall back on, with an experienced one-two punch of Monique Govan and Ashley Sharpton shadowing the point and shooting positions.

"In the point position, Katie [Nelson] really is the scorer, Monique is the one that sets everyone up," Dacko said. "Provided that the other team is playing zone, Ashley could really step in and be a prolific scorer, but it's hard for her to get open."

Sophomore Joyce Massey will look to get into the mix after practicing well the past several days, while Kaylie Sciavetta will compete for playing time when she recovers from her illness.

Forwards

Tamara Tathan looks to hold court once again at the small forward position, where she started all 28 games in 03-04 as a freshman. The Brampton, Ontario native was an instrumental part of UMass's inside game a year ago, pulling down nearly five boards a game and averaging 9.3 points per game during the campaign.

Although she has been a bit inconsistent as of late, by not taking open shots or blindly driving to the lane, she does have experience going for her.

"After playing so many minutes last year she should have enough confidence to make distinctions and understand what she's doing," Dacko said.

Brooke Campbell has been slated in as a power forward, where she excelled in spite of an injury-shortened season. Senior Edris Bailey is the wild card in this mix. Though she led the Minutewomen in scoring (11.4 per game) and assists (6.4 per game), she hasn't been able to go at 100 percent in the preseason, and will be coming off the bench in the sixth spot.

But if history dictates anything, Bailey will be an exciting player to watch when she's healthy again.

"She's a fun player to watch and a fun player to coach," Dacko said. "When she comes off the bench, she gets every rebound, she gets after the ball, she makes things happen."

Centers

This year's frontcourt has its own version of a human brick wall in the form of 6-foot-4-center Patrycja Gulak, a transfer from St. John's.

After having sat out last season due to transfer rules, the Poland native is ready to go, and one can be assured that her place at the center spot will take some serious pressure off forwards Campbell and Tathan.

One problem: she's got a thing about taking charges.

"It should take pressure off [the forwards] if she takes a charge," Dacko said. "I love her as a person and a player, but she's gotta get meaner."

Perhaps Whitney McDonald, another promising freshman, could provide the said knocking. She has proven her worth as a quality back-up thus far.

UMass a team on the rise

QUINN from page 8

hauled in that board," or if Anthony Anderson had a pass that was a little behind his teammate or deflected by a Concordia defender, I'd shake my head fully believing Donnie McGrath would delivered the pass on point. This was all capped off by watching Steve Lappas roam the sidelines. It was surreal, as I've always known him as the animated coach from Villanova.

Somewhere in the middle of the second half, when the Minutemen began to pull away after being down five to a smaller and clearly less talented Concordia, It hit me. Friar teams in the past have played exactly the same way in these exhibitions, struggle through the first 30 minutes and pulling away in the last 10. I also realized that my bias had made me forget that Rashaun Freeman was just a sophomore and it was unfair to compare him to an All American at this point.

In fact, Freeman might have had a better freshman campaign averaging 15.4 points 8.5 boards to Gomes's 13.8 and 7.8. I was right about Donnie McGrath though; he wouldn't have made those passes. McGrath's passes would have either done little to get the ball to the hoop or gone in to the second row. Anderson is a very solid point guard who can do two things, but Dontie can't, shoot and drive. After getting the bias out of my system, I became a fan of UMass basketball.

Despite an overall sloppy game, the supporting cast had their moments. Sophomores Art Bowers and Maurice Maxwell appeared to be viable second and third scoring options while Stephane Lasme showed flashes of dominance on the interior. If the Minutemen continue to develop and mature, they could emerge as a legitimate contender for the Atlantic 10 title if not this year, definitely next.

For the Minutemen they get a chance to announce their arrival early this year as the Connecticut Huskies come to Amherst on Dec. 9.

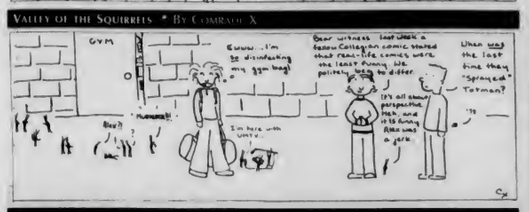
If Massachusetts plays the Huskies tight or even pull off the upset, that should set an excellent tone for the rest of the season, like the Friars did in 70-51 victory over the then No.14 Illinois last season, which, ironically, took place on Dec. 9. If not, the Minutemen should move on and be competitive in the A-10. So if you're a college basketball fan, I implore you to adopt the Minutemen as your own, and support them through what should be an interesting ride.

Dave Quinn is a Collegian Columnist.

THE HARP
"Come party like you're Irish!"
NEW!! Wireless Internet Do your homework...surf the net...WIRELESS INTERNET!!!!
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
Amherst's last great neighborhood pub!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
413-548-6900 Check out our new covered deck! www.theharp.net
MON. - "Bad Karaoke" with Paulie V.
TUES. - Our Famous Trivia Night
WED. - Reggae Night (NO COVER)
TH. - Special Brew (NO COVER)
FRI. - Traditional Irish Session
SAT. - Live Music (All for bands (NO COVER)
Molsen Pints $2.00 Pitcher $6.50
VOTED BEST NEIGHBORHOOD PUB EAST OF THE RIVER

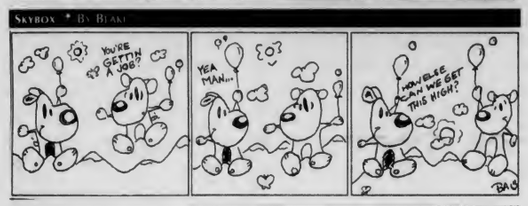
FRUSTRATED?
PUZZLED?
DO YOU HAVE:
A grade dispute?
teacher, roommate or job concerns?
Billing problems?
harassment?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
323 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
Telephone: 413-545-0567
Fax: 413-545-3580
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

Regency Hair Stylists
~ Hair Cuts ~
Regular $20
$15 an appointment with "Marna or Megan"
253-9526
183 North Pleasant Street Amherst
Marna
Megan

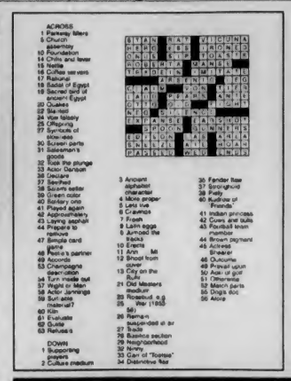


Student Activities Center
UMassAmherst
UP TO THE MINUTE
Thursday, November 18th
Mix It Up Dance Series: Hip Hop Night
Breakdancing lessons at 9pm, followed by MC Battle at 10pm. Compete in free style Rap tournament! Live DJ! Campus Center Auditorium. FREE
Friday, November 19th
Something Every Friday: The Village With William Hurt and Sigourney Weaver. Top of the Campus Center, 9pm & 11pm. FREE
Sunday, November 21st
International Fair
Featuring performances, ethnic food, and information tables from around the world. Prince/Crampton Residence Halls, 12pm - 7pm. FREE
Sunday Night Movie: The Village. With William Hurt and Sigourney Weaver. Top of the Campus Center. 8pm. FREE
Tuesday, November 23rd
International Movie Series: Asoka
Historical epic about the life of Emporer Asoka who renounces his violent past to practice Buddhism. Directed by Santosh Sivan. SOM 108, 8pm. FREE
Friday-Sunday, November 19th-21st
REEL OUT: LBGT Film Festival
Sponsored by the Stonewall Center.
11/18: Brother to Brother, SOM 133, 7pm.
11/19: Tying the Knot, followed by a discussion with filmmaker Jim de Seve. Bartlett 65, 7pm.
11/20: Transgender Awareness Day: Films showing from 11:30am-4:45pm. SOM 137.
11/21: Films from noon to 9pm, SOM 137. Donation requested.

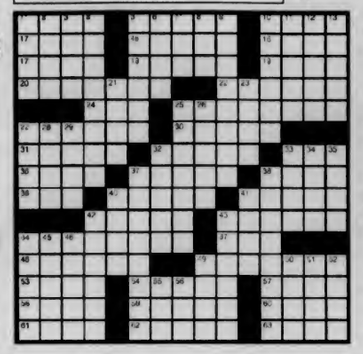
$POND $MART TOUR 2004
Featuring: MISSION: improvable
Because Financial Decisions Can Last a Lifetime
www.Students.UseCreditWisely.com
Performance Dates:
Nov15@12noon Bluewall
Nov15@7pm Lewis
Nov16@7pm Patterson
Nov17@7pm Gorman
Nov17@8:30pm Cashin
Nov18@7pm Kennedy
Nov19@6pm SOM 137
Mass Marketing
Brought to you by Mass Marketing and Citi Credit-ED
citi



You Choose Your Future Your Way
Three weeks of concentrated study
Classes run January 3- January 24
UMass Continuing Education
413-545-2414



Quote of the Day



"What's money? A man is a success if he gets up in the morning and goes to bed at night and in between does what he wants to do."

-Bob Dylan

ACROSS
1 Parkway fillers
5 Church assembly
10 Foundation
14 Chills and fever
15 Coffee
16 Coffee servers
17 Rather
18 Relish of Eggs
19 Sacred bird of ancient Egypt
20 Quakes
22 Ski rest
24 Vice Versa
25 Offspring
27 Synthetic of polyester
30 Screen parts
31 Salesman's goods
32 Over the plunge
33 Actor Gershon
36 Geckos
37 Perched
38 Sicilian seltzer
39 Green color
40 Sanitary one
41 Played again
42 Appliance makers
43 Laying asphalt
44 Prepare to remove
47 Bimbo card
48 Pt.
49 Nadia's partner
50 Accords
53 Champagne description
54 Turn inside out
57 Right or Man
58 Actor Jennings
59 Sun-astic material?
60 Kiln
61 Evaluate
62 Quibble
63 Refuse's

DOWN
1 Supporting prayers
2 Coffee medium
3 Ancient alphabet character
4 Micro prefix
5 Cats' cries
6 Cravings
7 Lyric
8 Lairn eggs
9 Around the ballpark
10 Erects
11 Ann _ Bit
12 Shoot from cover
13 City on the Bulb
21 Old Masters medium
23 Rosebud and Bo _ Pep (1988)
25 Remain suspended in air
27 Trade
28 Balance section
29 Neighborhood
32 Nonny
33 Gen of "Rostes"
34 Distinctive flair
35 Fender flaw
37 Springbird
38 Patty
40 Rudiments of Friendly
41 Indian princess
42 Cows and bulls
45 Football team
46 Sinbad's daughter
48 Bloom's pigment
49 Actress Shalee
46 Outcome
49 Prevail upon
50 Ace of golf
51 Otherwise
52 March pants
53 Dogs doc
56 Alpha

The Moan and Dove
Cheat on your midterms, cheat on your partner, cheat at Texas-hold'em... but don't cheat on the Dove
themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

YOUR AD COULD BE HERE
Ask for Advertising @ 545-3500

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
If you forget to wish your friend a happy birthday, you are doomed.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Today you will be faced with many temptations. Make a wise decision.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You could write a novel about all the stuff that is going on in your life right now.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't go to health services, unless you want to spend half the day there.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Right now, you're feeling the opposite of homesick.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Today there will be a lot of pressure for you to perform. Do something to calm yourself.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You should take a road trip somewhere soon. It will be difficult without a car.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You should keep up the flirting. It seems like you're making progress.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It's about time you started picking your classes for next semester.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You have a tendency to make things into more of a production than they really are.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Today you will feel a perfect calm flowing through your veins.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're making all kinds of noise. You need to take it down a notch.

$$$ Build your business with our business. Place your ad here, in The Collegian. $$$

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Happy 21st Birthday to Aly Zillmann!! May ALL your birthday wishes come true.... hangover free! Much Love from your girls: Sam, Molly, and Annie

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
2 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraise with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser 888-923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact kawahara@linguist.umass.edu. Singapore English speakers contact mwyff@linguist.umass.edu

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Amanda Kichuk GIS Geographic Information Systems Day 2004. Wednesday 11/17 GIS and mapping applications for academic and career success. Campus Center Concourse 10am-2pm. Open GIS lab 11-3 Morrill 271. Open digital mapping lab 11-1 2:30 Morrill 245.

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89! Most weekends, starting November 5th. Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

Mass Mahketing and Citibank present the Spend Smart Tour 2004 featuring Mission: IMPROVable. Join us for a fun-filled evening of laughs, free food and most importantly, credit education. Blue Wall Nov. 15 @ noon, Southwest Patterson Dorm Nov. 16 @ 7pm, Central Gorman Dorm Nov 17 @ 7pm, Sylvan Cashin Dorm Nov 17 @ 8:30pm, Southwest Kennedy Dorm Nov 18 @ 7pm, SOM

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Atrium Nov 19 @ 6pm. www.Students.UseCreditWisely for credit tips. Brought to you by Mass Mahketing and Citi Credit-ED.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apartment 1 Bedroom Sitting room Full Bath Kitchen Amherst Border Call Roshina at 549-6491

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully appliances kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly. Call today 665-3856 visit www.stuartstreetapts.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99. Pentium III Desktop $99. 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING INTERNSHIPS
Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov. 24. Contact SLSO today. 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umass

MOVIE EXTRAS/ ACTORS/ MODELS/ Make $100 - $300/ day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-774-8223

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

DJ for Hire Mission 101 Ent. Contact Fredi 413-687-3849

INSTRUCTION

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING Classes Start Soon! 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!!

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-0997

SERVICES

Have you ever been ripped off by a retailer? Contact the Student Legal Services Office regarding your rights as a consumer. 922 Campus Center, 545-1995.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica. From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break 2005: Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRMMG Online
Cannot be combined with any other offer. $100 off based on quad room. Days vary for trips with airfare. Expires 4/1/2005 www.springbreakdirect.com
1 800 426 7710

WANTED

Riot Footage Will pay good money for your riot footage to be used in a documentary film. Please call 413-687-3902.

Egg Donors Needed. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Ages 21-32. Non-smoker only. For more information please visit our website at www.robertmichaels.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900

Ever wanted to be a zombie? Well now you can! Feature-length student film looking for large amounts of zombie actors. Email Fatefactor@hotmail.com for more details.

Snowboard events intern $50/day stipend. For job description email jfriends@deerfield.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Back with a vengeance

Depth will guide success of UMass

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

When coming off of a six win, 22-loss season, there really is no place else to look but up.

Such is the optimistic outlook the Massachusetts women's basketball team carries with it into the 2004-2005 season, where they will look to have a much better season after going 2-14 in the Atlantic 10 and 6-22 overall. Given some of the strengths of this year's squad — a deep bench, the return of their point guard, finally finding a true center — there's plenty of justification for the buoyancy buzzing through the UMass camp.

This year's women are learning at what coach Marnie Dacko considers an improved pace from last year, though there are still some kinks in the armor.

"They're learning at a quicker rate than last year, but then again there's a lot more [players] this year that need to learn," Dacko said. "So I just think again, there's a certain richness to this team, but at the same time those same people I had been after early need to step up to the plate."

One of those kinks involves that of the transition defense, an element of the game that was exposed at certain times in their scrimmage against Northeastern, and may be fatal against the fast-paced offense of Southern Cal, this Friday.

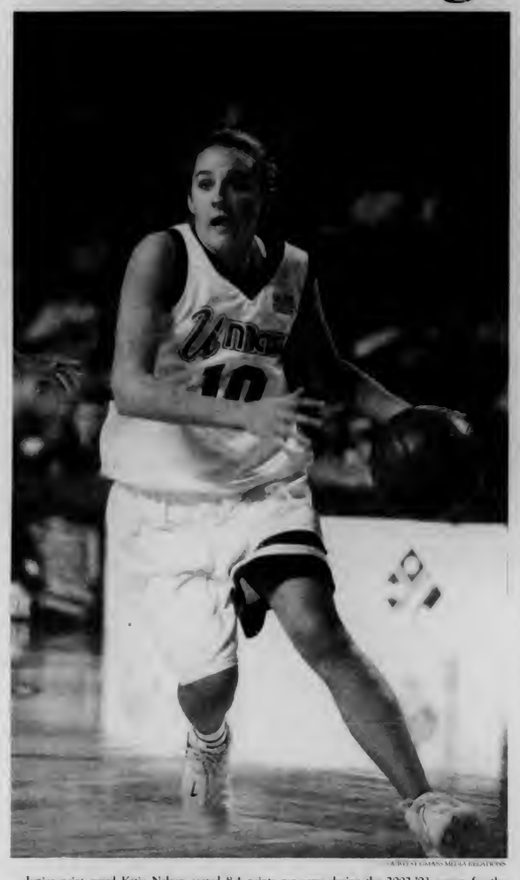
"Right now, that's our focus, transition defense," Dacko said. "We've got to be able to get back on defense and take a stand defensively. It's an unbelievable challenge. Are we ready? We'll see."

In light of last year's disappointing, injury-riddled season, the Minutewomen have been predicted to finish fourth in the A-10 East division by the preseason coaches poll. But it's all hearsay to Dacko.

"You know, I don't really pay attention to that to tell you the truth," she said. "It's important to me that at the end of the year, we do our best to put ourselves in a position to make the NCAAs."

Post-season play is nice, but it will come at the expense of playing the role of underdog, a position put on them by last season's outing.

"I'd love to be the spoiler," Dacko said. "I love to go in as the underdog. "I think when you're the kingpin everybody wants to take you off and everybody's up for you. I think in a way, if people don't respect you, you can surprise a lot of people and I'll take a win any which way I can get them."



But with the cards the Minutewomen are dealt this year, post-season play doesn't seem nearly as impossible as before. That's because this year's version of the Maroon and White will play with a profound bench that goes much deeper than in the past. If the fridge in 2003-2004 was bare to the brim, then this year it is chock full of surprises and goodies.

Guards

Welcome back, Katie Nelson.

After having not played a minute in the last 18 months due to an ACL tear that caused her to redshirt, the junior-eligible guard will be calling the shots just like she was before succumbing to knee surgery. Nelson will see most of the time at point guard, where she has aver-

See WOMEN'S HOOPS on page 6

Junior point guard Katie Nelson scored 8.4 points per game during the 2002-'03 season for the Minutewomen. Nelson missed all of last year due to injury, but will lead UMass for the 2004-'05 season.

Frontcourt trio defend the paint

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

Any basketball team needs size if it wants to out rebound and outmatch opponents — good news for the Minutewomen, who got super sized during the off-season.

Four of the five players over six feet were not on the squad last year.

6-foot-4 red-shirt junior Patrycja Gulak is the tallest and most promising of them all. Gulak, who hails from Olsztyn, Poland, will be looked upon to lead the Minutewomen as the starting center.

Gulak sat out last season after transferring from St. John's University, where she played two seasons and was a two-time All-Big East Academic team member and averaged 8.3 points and 4.8 rebounds per game.

"Gulak delinitely adds a new dimension to the team," coach Marnie Dacko said. "She is a tenacious defender and someone who can make teams think twice about bringing the ball inside."

The junior is a surprisingly good outside shooter for someone her size, and has good stamina running the floor. With a good shooting percentage, Gulak can become a triple threat. Her shot blocking abilities and knack for coming down with rebounds can give any Atlantic 10 defense a headache.

In the 80-32 thrashing of the NWBL All-Stars on Saturday, Gulak owned the boards, picking up 11 rebounds and chipping in with six points.

If Gulak "focuses on putting the ball into the hoop she can become a force to be reckoned with," Dacko said. "I would like to see her to shoot 55-60 percent from inside the arch and pound the ball under the hoop."

Another addition to the '04 UMass women's basketball team is freshman Whitney J. McDonald. McDonald; the 6-foot-2 forward/center will come off the bench for Gulak and play primarily center.

"Whitney is a great post player," Dacko said. "She will have a significant role coming in and picking up where Gulak leaves off. Her great hands make her a good finisher and she will hopefully be ready to log a lot of minutes each game."

Against the NWBL All-Stars, McDonald mirrored Gulak's six points, and came down with seven rebounds.

"The only thing to worry about with [McDonald] is her endurance," Dacko said. "It takes a lot before a player is ready for the strain of playing college basketball, but her stamina should get better as the season goes on."

One of the only areas of concern for the two centers is foul trouble.

Both McDonald and Gulak "have been prone to getting fouls because they have been playing defense with their arms instead of their legs," Dacko said. "With [McDonald] especially, once she logs some collegiate game minutes, she will begin to see that she can no longer rely solely on skill but needs to work on footwork."

A lifetime Providence fan relates to UMass

Dave Quinn

If you're a true basketball fan, this is one of the most exciting times of the year, as the college basketball season is just starting to kick off. 327 teams start off the season with the hopes and dreams of making the cut of 64 teams that get to dance their way through March. It's just 100 percent pure basketball without the distraction of things like contracts or trade demands.

Everybody's got his or her favorite team, whether it is a local team or a team that plays on national TV often, like Duke or UNC. For me, it's always been Providence College. When I was two year old, I ran around the house in a 1987 Friar Final Four T-shirt that hung down past my knees. When I was five, my father, a season ticket holder, took me to my first game. From then on, I've spent many a winter night sitting in section 108, row GG, seat 15, watching future pros including, Austin Croshere, Eric Williams, Ben Gordon, Emeka Okafor, Tim Thomas, Allen Iverson and Ron Artest.

I rode the ups like the 1994 Big East Championship, several trips to the NCAA tournament, including a trip in the Elite Eight in 1997 (more on that later), and the upsets of nationally ranked Big East powerhouses like Connecticut, Syracuse, Georgetown, Boston College, and Pittsburgh. I've also experienced many a down, one and done trips to the Big East Tournament, and heartbreaks and collapses in the NCAA tournament including the 1997 trip to the Elite Eight against Arizona. I had nightmares of Corey Wright bricking the three pointer that would have won the game in regulation. Instead the game went to overtime, and the rest as they say is history.

You would think growing up in Massachusetts I would have been a fan of the Minutemen, but to be totally honest I was indifferent. The A-10 was about as relevant as the Big 10 or the Pac-10. The only time I really became conscious of it was when PC played instate rival URI. Sure, I paid attention when the Minutemen went on that magical Final Four run in 1996, but after that they were promptly shipped to the back burner.

I think all the history will make this season an adjustment for me. Gone are the days where I'll be able to drive to The Dunk to catch a game, or turn on the TV or radio to keep up with what's going on.

Thankfully, several games are being carried ESPN2 and CBS so I won't totally be shut out. However, these long distance relationships tend to struggle to work out and I've already found, and please excuse the pun, a rebound: our very own UMass Minutemen.

Needless to say I had a little bit of bias going the Minutemen's game against Concordia last Friday. Everything I watched I contrasted it to what, in my mind, the Friars would have done. If Rashaun Freeman missed a rebound, I thought to myself,

"Well Ryan Gomes would have

See QUINN on page 6

Vlad takes home first A.L. MVP

By Ronald Blum
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Vladimir Guerrero won the American League MVP award Tuesday, this is just the fifth time a player switched leagues and earned the honor in his first season with his new team.

The Anaheim Angels right fielder received 21 of 28 first-place votes and 354 points in balloting by the Baseball Writers' Association of America.

New York Yankees right fielder Gary Sheffield finished second with five first-place votes and 254 points. Boston players split the remaining two first-place votes, with left fielder Manny Ramirez finishing third with 238 points and designated hitter David Ortiz winding up fourth with 174 points.

Guerrero was prepared for a close vote.

"I was in no way expecting it to be the way it came out," he said through a translator during a conference call from the presidential palace in the Dominican Republic.

Guerrero, 28, signed a $70 million, five-year contract with the Angels last January after eight seasons with the Montreal Expos. He hit .337 with 39 homers and 126 RBIs as Anaheim won the AL West, and led the league with 124 runs and 366 total bases.

He batted .371 in September with 10 homers and 23 RBIs, and went 14-for-30 (.467) with six homers and 11 RBIs in the last six games of the season, helping the Angels finish one game ahead of Oakland.

Anaheim manager Mike Scioscia said Guerrero was "at times carrying our team single-handedly."

"When he came to our team, our expectations were obviously very, very high, and he met every one of them," Scioscia said. "Not many players can do what he did the last week."

The only other non-rookies who became MVPs in their first AL seasons were Baltimore's Frank Robinson (1966), Chicago's Dick Allen (1972) and Detroit's Willie Hernandez (1984). In the NL, Kirk Gibson accomplished the feat with Los Angeles in 1988.

Houston's Roger Clemens won the NL Cy Young Award last week following his first season in the league. Clemens won six Cy Youngs in the AL.

Guerrero became the second Angels player to win, joining Don Baylor (1979). He is the fourth Dominican to be MVP, following Toronto's George Bell (1987), the Chicago Cubs' Sammy Sosa (1998) and Oakland's Miguel Tejada (2002). He became the ninth straight player from the AL West to win.

"Vlad has got such a great temperament. For as talented as he is, he's probably the most unassuming superstar you'd ever be around," Scioscia said. "He's got probably the smallest ego of anybody that has accomplished what he has."

Guerrero was especially happy the three of the top four finishers in the voting were Dominican.

"It's in our blood," he said. "We grow up with baseball."

Guerrero gets a $500,000 bonus for winning the award and Ramirez $100,000 for finishing third. Ortiz didn't get anything for finishing fourth — but would get $400,000 for finishing second through fifth in his contract that starts next season.

Tejada, now with Baltimore, gets a $500,000 bonus for finishing fifth, and Detroit's Ivan Rodriguez gets $100,000 for winding up 10th.

Anaheim was swept by Boston in the first round of the playoffs. Guerrero's first time in the postseason, and he hopes to get back every year.

"It really left a taste in my mouth," he said.

Vladimir Guerrero was named the American League MVP award after leading the Anaheim Angels in in all major offensive categories.

Northampton to get a serving of Bacon
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 7

TODAY FRIDAY SATURDAY
• High: 57 • Low: 43 • High: 59 • Low: 31 • High: 48 • Low: 33
DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

UMass football seniors at the end of the road
SPORTS, PAGE 14

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 51

SGA votes 'no confidence'

By Julie O'Donnell
Collegian Staff

An overwhelming majority of the Student Government Association Senate voted no confidence in Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Academic Life Michael Gargano during last night's meeting.

The majority of the meeting was dedicated to discussing the current controversial situation regarding e-mails exchanged between Gargano and former Speaker of the SGA Patrick Higgins. Student Trustee Matthew Murphy told the senate body that Gargano was simply not fit to do his job or work with students and SGA members.

"This is really not a personal issue," he said, "it is essential for [Gargano and the SGA] to cooperate but at the same time if someone is not doing his job, that person needs to know."

Murphy also said that the main concern with the e-mails is the content not the anonymous source who exposed them. In an interview with the Massachusetts Daily Collegian on Tuesday, Gargano expressed great concern about the person who brought the e-mails forth.

Murphy also cited several instances backing up his allegations that Gargano was not the appropriate person to carry out the vice chancellor duties.

"I was standing there as a witness when Gargano said, 'We need more Abercrombie and Fitch and less GAP on this campus' and again to a student of color who said that he couldn't afford UMass tuition that 'then that is what community colleges are for'. I even bought this new voice recorder so that I can record everything that is said," Murphy mentioned to an applauding Senate body.

He also stated that Gargano was angry with the 'Know your rights' door fliers passed around the dormitories on campus.

"The Vice Chancellor didn't like the idea of students knowing their rights," he said.

Additionally President of the SGA Eduardo Bustamante expressed great concern with the ability for Gargano to do his job effectively and timely. He said he fears that things will not get accomplished through his office.

"[Gargano] is trying to undermine us," Bustamante said, "the first false premise is that this is all about a personality issue and it is most certainly not. Some one once told me to 'treat every day in office like it's your last day' and how are we supposed to get anything accomplished like this?"

Bustamante mentioned that there are routes to take to work with other vice chancellors on campus to achieve goals.

"[Other vice chancellors] are getting things done," he said, "and helping us to achieve our mandate; we need to produce and that is why I ask you to vote no confidence."

After the motion was read and amended upon, there was opportunity for debate for and against the vote of no confidence. Senator Brian Long spoke on behalf of his choice not to vote no confidence.

"I have worked with [Gargano] since the day he stepped in office," Long said, "it is inappropriate and unneeded to do this."

Long alluded to the SGA's incapacity to write a letter to the student body during the ALCS and World Series games enforcing that students have fun but in a respectable manner.

"The Vice Chancellor wouldn't have much regard for the SGA because he asked them to write this letter and it never happened."

Long also said that according to the aforementioned e-mails, there was no documentation from General Council Terrence O'Malley stating that the ALANA [African Latino Asian Native American] Caucus seats were legal or illegal.

"[Terrence O'Malley] said that the Caucus was legal, but that is different from the seats and until we see that letter from the General Council, that is hearsay," Long said.

Long also did not blame the Student Activities Center or Gargano for not verifying the e-mails. He said that OIT employees should be the people who verify e-mail accounts, not the administration.

Senator Shaquille Onikors spoke to the Senate, urging senators to vote no confidence.

"There is a bigger point here, our president came here last week saying that he will no

See SGA on page 3

MEGAN BROUILLETTE / COLLEGIAN

Student Government Association President Eduardo Bustamante addresses the SGA last night in a meeting that resulted in a majority vote of no confidence for Michael Gargano as vice chancellor.

SOM alum reflects on UMass life

By Sean Whelan
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts' Marketing Department hosted alum Dayton Semerjian Tuesday night in the Flavin Family Auditorium. Semerjian gave an energetic speech about his career and his life at UMass compared to Harvard University.

Semerjian received his Bachelors degree in marketing from the UMass Amherst in 1988. He is currently Executive Vice President for Marketing and Strategic Alliances at Concord Communications.

Semerjian comes into the role with more than 15 years of technology industry experience, in areas ranging from market segmentation, demand generation, worldwide sales, and product marketing. Prior to his current success, Semerjian was vice president of worldwide marketing at Shiva, Inc. where he repositioned the company and drove revenue growth to more than $200 million. The numerous credits he has earned over the years surprisingly weren't acquired in a typical fashion.

"I was lucky to get into UMass," he said, referencing his high school academics. He spent two years acquiring a poor grade point average that was not applied to any major, was placed on academic probation twice and received an academic dismissal.

"In high school, you have no idea what you want to do," Semerjian said. "The class options certainly don't include Philosophy, sociology or marketing."

Eventually he successfully appealed his academic dismissal once he developed an interest in marketing, and developed the creed he gave students Tuesday night, "Pick a major, go for it, and dive in."

With renewed vigor and enthusiasm, his GPA improved, he was accepted into SOM and left for a one-year-long domestic exchange in Hawaii.

"I bought a motorcycle, learned how to surf. While a great time was all I was looking for, on paper I claimed an interest in education in another cultural environment," he said.

The cultural experience opened numerous doors for Semerjian. While in Hawaii, his Caucasian background was a source of resentment to the Hawaiians who hold a very strong and proud cultural heritage. Upon graduation, he received a management position that previously had never been given to anyone besides an Ivy League grad. He was responsible for marketing and sales positions due to his cross cultural experience.

"The beaten path of a UMass grad into an ivy league environment: The ivy league students paid more for their education," Semerjian said, citing numerous positives and negatives regarding the educational differences.

The paramount positive aspect of the Ivy League schools centers on the quality of the liberal arts education. He adamantly cited the people skills one can acquire at UMass, and the fact that one can acquire that same ivy education here, but only if the desire and commitment

See SOM on page 2

Students share hardships of West Bank

By Joe Padell
Collegian Staff

Two Palestinian students from the West Bank spoke with University of Massachusetts students and faculty Tuesday night, emphasizing the importance of education to the Palestinian/Israeli conflict.

The West Bank and the Gaza Strip have been under Israeli control since 1967.

Maha Batran, a student at Birzeit University in Ramallah, Palestine spoke about the daily obstacles Palestinian students face.

"Every day school children wake up early, wait for the soldiers to open the gate, and then search them," Batran said. "The specific opening time [of the gate] is not specified," he said, which leaves children stranded on one side or the other.

The gate Batran speaks of is part of a series of new barriers and checkpoints Israel began to erect in 2002 around Palestinian settlements. Today there are around 890 roadblocks and checkpoints in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip, limiting access to education, according to Batran.

"Do you [in the audience] think 'What do I have to put up with in order to reach a university?'" she asked. The routine associated with the checkpoints "is only preventing us from having normal dreams."

Batran believes this explains the presence of suicide bombings in the conflict. She believes suicide bombers only hurt themselves and the Palestinian cause.

"When you have been marginalized it is so easy to hurt others just to free yourself," she said.

Samah Atoot, a former student at Al-Najah University in Nablus, Palestine focused on the effects the conflict has on her family and friends in Palestine.

Atoot showed the audience several photographs of Nablus, one showing taxis bunched together at night on a busy street.

"We don't have these views anymore," she said. Everyone is inside by 6 p.m. "It is very natural for you, it's a curfew."

Another photo depicted a street strewn with debris following the presence of an Israeli tank.

"The Israeli tank is like six tons and when it passes the whole street will be like shaking," Atoot said.

Atoot described the effect roadblocks and checkpoints are having on medical services in the region.

Atoot described a time when she was heading back to Nablus in an ambulance and stopped to pick up a pregnant woman in the process of giving birth.

"The soldiers stopped us for four hours," she said "The woman was bleeding and she was yelling for mercy."

315 children are born at checkpoints every year, according to Atoot.

"The kid was born on the checkpoint and he's paralyzed because of the lack of oxygen we couldn't provide," she said. Checkpoints stifle economic development and growth because of the time they add to any trip into or out of Palestinian communities.

"From my city to Ramallah it's 40 minutes without checkpoints," she said. It takes up to seven hours with checkpoints.

"Administrative detention is another phase of the occupation," Atoot said. When someone is administratively

See STUDENTS on page 4

KC TAPELLA COLLEGIAN

Maha Batran, left, and Samah Atoot, right, speak about the ongoing Israeli occupation, and its effects on college students.

Workers of coffee shop unionizing amid accusations

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

SUNDERLAND — A local business is going through the process of unionizing, and that has led to very tense moments at the coffee shop, leading to accusations and allegations.

According to two employees, Java Hut, a coffee shop in Sunderland, has begun working with the Industrial Workers of the World (IWW) to get legal advice and start the process of forming a union.

"We're looking to start a union," said Java Hut employee Erin McElroy. McElroy and Matthew Roth, another employee, have said that their employers do not want them to join a union and have harassed various employees to intimidate them from joining a union.

"They've brought some people to tears," McElroy said of her boss' pressure.

Roth said that the union the employees are either now in, or trying to join, is the Industrial Union 660 (IU660), which is a branch of the IWW. He said that a majority of the employees are already in the union. Co-owner Daren Pierce said that the rest of the employees will vote in the next few weeks about the rest joining.

Pierce, who owns the store with his brother Sean, has a much different side of the story. Both he and his brother maintain that they have not intimidated the employees.

"I'm not against the union," he said. Pierce said that his main problems with the employees forming a union is that it will affect his day-to-day decisions, such as allowing people to leave for the day when business is slow, that will now have to be a union decision.

"We've done nothing but try to run a good business," he said.

Pierce said that he didn't know what his legal rights were and what the employees' legal rights were. He also said he had to hire a costly lawyer to learn of these things.

According to the employees, there are many concerns between everyone at Java Hut.

McElroy said that the employees at the coffee shop are most upset about what happened to two employees right around the time they approached Pierce about a union.

McElroy said that the two employees were fired when they said that they wanted to join a union, but Pierce said that the employees had a problem with a manager and said that the employees told him that either the manager would leave or they would leave.

"They gave their resignation and all I did was accept it," Pierce said.

According to McElroy, many employees have a problem with the hiring of the manager, especially when the owners talk to financial hardships. She said that the manager had no prior experience in coffee shops.

"A lot of us folks are upset at us hiring him," McElroy said.

Pierce said that several employees had a problem with the manager, and they made accusations of him yelling at customers. He said that he followed up on the allegations and that they proved to be false.

Roth said that he had more

See JAVA on page 2

Insurgent battles kill 27 people in Baghdad

By Tini Tran
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A suicide car bomber blasted an American convoy north of Baghdad and U.S. troops battled insurgents west of the capital Wednesday as a wave of violence across Iraq's Sunni Muslim heartland killed at least 27 people.

American forces pursued their search-and-destroy mission against the remaining holdouts in the former insurgent bastion of Fallujah, and to the north, American forces pressed an offensive to reclaim part of the city of Mosul from militants.

November became one of Iraq's bloodiest months as the U.S. death toll in the war in Iraq reached 1,206 with new Defense Department identifications Tuesday night and Wednesday, according to an Associated Press tally.

On Wednesday, a suicide attacker drove his bomb-laden car into a U.S. convoy during fierce fighting in the town of Beiji, 155 miles north of the Baghdad, killing 10 people and wounding 12, including three American soldiers. Another attack on a convoy of civilian contractors in Beiji caused no

See IRAQ on page 4

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugalski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
COMICS EDITOR Alyson Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Martelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marey Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kiggans
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginia Frecaut
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Busack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE JOURNAL IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 DAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Erika Lovley
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Megan Brinster
COPY EDITOR
Michael Busack
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samatha Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Caitlin Kideckel, Jodi Weisser

Write for Sports
• • • • • • • • •
Call Mike 545-1809

Gay couples celebrate first anniversary of court decision

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

COURTESY BOSTON.COM

A lesbian couple celebrates the one-year anniversary of the Massachusetts Supreme Court decision to legalize gay marriage.

BOSTON (AP) — Newlyweds Gail and Betsy Leondar-Wright now walk hand-in-hand with a greater sense of entitlement.

Rod and Lindel Hart revel in the simple act of checking off the "married" box on applications, even on federal forms that do not recognize their union.

"I will never, ever check the 'single' box again," said Rod, 31, of Greenfield.

Tanya McCloskey feels the full impact of Massachusetts' one-year-old gay marriage decision when a neighbor asks, "So how's the wife?"

"It's still new to me," said McCloskey, 52, who married Marcia Kadish on May 17, the day the landmark court decision took effect and the wave of same-sex weddings began taking place across the state. "It takes me a minute to answer and I get a little giggly."

It was a year ago on Thursday that the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled that the state constitution guaranteed gay and lesbian couples the right to marry. But the aftershocks can still be felt — in a political upheaval that has been credited with swaying the presidential election, in a cultural battle over the future of matrimony, and in the daily lives of the thousands of couples who took vows they once never believed possible.

An Associated Press review of all 8,158 wedding certificates publicly recorded with the state since the dawn of gay marriage shows that at least 2,980 were filed by same-sex couples in 290 of the state's 351 cities and towns.

According to unofficial data compiled by the Registry of Vital Records, 4,266 gay marriage certificates have been sent to the agency but not all have been reviewed or officially recorded.

Cities and towns have two months and 10 days from the date of marriage to send the certificate to the state, so numbers in some communities may be larger than those registered with the state.

Of those reviewed by the AP, a full two-thirds are female couples while the rest are male. The bulk came from in-state couples, while the remainder come from 39 states, the District of Columbia, Brazil, Australia, Germany and New Zealand. The legality of these out-of-state unions depends on whether at least one member of the couple has a residence in Massachusetts or intends to move to the state.

During the first months of same-sex weddings, the state's capital – Boston – was the gay marriage capital, with 407 couples from there exchanging vows. Northampton, a gay-friendly community about 100 miles west of Boston, was second with 99 and Cambridge, Boston's liberal neighbor, was third with 92.

But same-sex marriage was not limited to the state's large cities or gay enclaves. Two couples came from Tolland (pop. 426) while another came from Middlefield (pop. 542), both small towns in western Massachusetts. In all, 17 couples came from towns with populations under 1,000.

The numbers in the documents reviewed by the AP reflect the marriages that have been publicly recorded with the state since May 17 — not the total that have taken place since then.

While marriage has provided concrete benefits to some — lower health insurance payments, rental car savings — it is the simple, intangible joys that many gay couples seem to be savoring a year later: a feeling of acceptance, the hugs of neighbors, the wedding albums they can't seem to get enough of, the special vocabulary of marriage.

"I've been called 'Mrs..'" said Gail Leondar-Wright, who married Betsy, her partner of 13 years, on May 23. "None of us ever thought we would be called a 'Mrs.'"

The most significant marriage perks may not be felt for years, until a spouse enters a nursing home or is rushed to the hospital for surgery. Marriage will entitle them to state financial protections and familial rights, but no federal benefits.

Opponents of same-sex marriage say other long-lasting impacts will not be evident until today's children become adults.

"Many of us have said that the ramifications of these decisions won't be known for a decade or two, when we can see the impact on children who are taught that either a mom is not necessary or a dad is not necessary," said Ron.

Marketing alum talks with students exists. He stressed his admiration for our University, its quality of education, and its insatiable appetite for partying.

SOM from page 1

"Do it Wednesday through Saturday, your peers out every night will be out for the entire next semester," he said.

His tenure at Harvard provided a surprising social life rivaling his at Umass, he said.

"Instead of sneaking a keg into a dorm, or Beirut in a dingy basement, champagne would flow in a Beacon Hill apartment, or a get together of people from across the globe at a Newport Mansion."

Semerjian gave a bit of insight about the mindset of employers regarding a UMass grad.

"Believe they'll have a low opinion of the school, but enter an interview confident, let them know there's a world of distraction here, and there's a world as good as or better than anywhere else, and most importantly, be unapologetic about attending a state school," he said.

Semerjan said there is a subtle difference in classroom structure in a Harvard M.B.A. Program, and that of a typical UMass class.

"At Harvard, there are 90 students in a classroom; you are expected to be entirely knowledgeable on a certain amount of material prior to each class. The professor then looks at a roster, says one name out of the 90 in front of him, and expects 20 minutes of lecture from that student, when the professor asks for a rebuttal, 89 hands go up."

He said academic expectations vary between the two, but in every UMass classroom, numerous students hold themselves to those expectations, and the opportunities and connections that can be created are unrivaled by an ivy league such as Harvard, Yale or Amherst College.

"But the door of opportunity is only open a crack, do you glance into it, or barge in?" he said.

Java Hut brews feud

JAVA from page 1

concerns.

"There's a whole slew of problems," he said.

He added that he wanted a union to change many things, including the unfair firings, inconsistency in disciplinary actions and safety concerns. Roth said that they have some faulty electrical equipment in the store that haven't been totally fixed, and that there have been fires at the store.

"[We want to] change the dynamics of the work environment," Roth said.

According to Roth, at a scheduled meeting on Nov. 3, the employees approached the owners about joining a union. He said that the owners told everyone who was already in a union to leave. He claims he briefly left and the owners interrogated other employees about their involvement.

Roth said that on Nov. 6, high tech surveillance cameras were installed.

"They are trying to monitor us," he said, adding that he thinks they want to know who is in the union and will slowly fire everyone.

However, Roth, who described the working atmosphere as "tense", thinks that this matter is a different battle than just them trying to start a union.

"This is a clear example of a class struggle," he said of the employees versus the employers. Roth said that the employers said that them joining a union will greatly affect them financially, which Pierce agreed with.

Pierce said that Java Hut is a Ma and Pa store, and that the owners work from paycheck to paycheck. He said that he and his brother work very hard, and both get to the shop at 5:30 a.m. every day.

"We're a small business and have done a lot for this community," he said.

Kmart to takeover of Sears for billions

By Anne D'Innocenzio
Associated Press

COURTESY DARKROW.COM

A large sign marks the entrance to the Kmart Coorperation headquarters in Troy, Mich. Kmart is buying Sears for $11 billion.

NEW YORK (AP) — A resurgent Kmart, home of the blue light special, is buying the once-dominant Sears department store chain in a surprising $11 billion gamble it is counting on to help both better compete with Wal-Mart and other big-box retailers.

Led by Kmart Holding Corp. chairman Edward Lampert, the new Sears Holdings Corp. would be the nation's third largest retailer. Both chains would survive, but several hundred stand-alone Kmarts throughout the country are expected to be transformed into Sears stores. The goal: A quick kick-start to sales away from Sears traditional base of shopping malls.

Lampert and Sears chairman and CEO Alan Lacy, in announcing the deal on Wednesday, promised up to $500 million a year in savings within three years from store conversions, back-office job cuts, more efficient buying of goods and possible store closings.

Shares of both Kmart and Sears, Roebuck and Co. surged on the news, but some analysts are skeptical that it amounts to a home run.

"Both have been broken in some sense," said Dan Hess, president and chief executive of Merchant Forecast, a New York-based independent research company. "Kmart has to learn to survive in a Wal-Mart world and Sears needs to learn to survive in a world of Home Depot and Lowe's."

Lampert, 42, was as an assistant to Robert Rubin at Goldman Sachs & Co. before leaving to form a hedge fund at the age of 25. He orchestrated the deal and will lead a new board that will be dominated by Kmart directors.

"We need to have a very low cost structure in order to compete with our biggest competitors," said Lampert, whose Greenwich, Conn.-based investment firm controls Kmart and is Sears largest individual shareholder, with a 15.8 percent stake.

For Sears, the merger allows the company to move more quickly to where it believes its strongest base of customers are. "Off mall is where we need to move very aggressively," said Lacy, who will become vice chairman and chief executive of Sears Holding.

Lacy said he and Lampert have known each other for four years. The idea for a combined company first arose when they were in talks about Sears' purchase of 50 Kmart stores earlier this year, he said.

The new company is expected to have $55 billion in annual revenues and 3,500 outlets. That will mean it will trail only Wal-Mart Stores Inc. and Home Depot Inc. among the biggest U.S. retailers.

It will be headquartered in the northwestern Chicago suburb of Hoffman Estates, where Sears has its headquarters, but will maintain a "significant presence" in Troy, Mich., where Kmart is based.

The deal marks a remarkable comeback for Kmart, which filed for Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection in early 2002, leading to the closing of about 600 stores, termination of 57,000 Kmart employees and cancellation of company stock.

Lampert gained control of Kmart when the retailer emerged from bankruptcy in May 2003 through the conversion of his debt holdings into equity. In March, Kmart posted its first profitable quarter in three years.

While same-store sales have continued to decline, Lampert has maximized cash flow in part by selling off some of the stores to Sears and Home Depot.

On Wednesday, Kmart said it earned $553 million, or $5.45 per share, in the third quarter ended Oct. 27, compared with a loss of $25 million, or 26 cents per share, for the same period a year ago.

Inflation on rise as economy improves

By Jeannie Aversa
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer prices in October posted their biggest increase in five months, pinching people's pocketbooks at the gas pump and the grocery store.

The latest picture of the nation's pricing climate showed that inflation is picking up now that the economy has emerged from a slow spell. That is bolstering the case for the Federal Reserve to bump up short-term interest rates for a fifth time this year when policy-makers meet Dec. 14.

The government's most closely watched inflation gauge, the Consumer Price Index, rose 0.6 percent in October, compared with a 0.2 percent rise in September, the Labor Department said Wednesday. Costlier energy and food were the main culprits behind last month's acceleration.

"Consumers have to shell out quite a bit more to cover those costs," said Carl Tannenbaum, chief economist at LaSalle Bank. Gasoline prices for the month soared 8.6 percent, the biggest increase in more than a year. Fresh fruit prices rose by 6.3 percent, the most in more than 20 years.

Excluding volatile energy and food prices, core prices increased by a more modest 0.2 percent in October, following a 0.3 percent rise the month before.

Other economic news added to the case for another rate increase by the Fed:

— Industrial production shot up 0.7 percent in October, following a 0.1 percent increase in September, the Federal Reserve reported.

— Housing construction jumped 6.4 percent last month to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 2.03 million units — the highest level of this year, the Commerce Department said.

Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan and his colleagues began their campaign in June to raise interest rates, intending to prevent inflation from becoming a threat to the economy.

Thus far, the Fed has ordered four rate increases, each one-quarter of a percentage point. After the most recent increase, last week, an important interest rate was at two percent.

Analysts said that, inflation, while certainly a concern, does not pose a serious danger to the economy now.

Fed policy-makers, in a statement after their meeting last week, said "inflation and longer-term inflation expectations remain well contained." They also said the economy appears to be growing "at a moderate pace despite the rise in energy prices."

From a consumer's point of view, rising inflation can strain the family budget. After adjusting for inflation, weekly earnings of non-supervisory workers dropped 0.4 percent in October, compared with a 0.3 percent rise in September, the Labor Department said.

On Wall Street, investors shrugged off the inflation news and focused on a deal between Kmart Holding Corp. and Sears, Roebuck and Co. The Dow Jones industrials gained 61.92 points to close at 10,549.57.

The CPI report came one day after the government released data showing wholesale costs soared in October by 1.7 percent, the biggest increase in more than 14 years.

With the economy expanding, some companies are finding it easier to raise prices, analysts said. A weaker U.S. dollar also is putting pressure on prices of imported goods, which gives American companies more room to raise prices.

Still, economists expect both wholesale and consumer prices for November will look better. Experts site a moderation in crude oil costs and an expectation that food costs will settle down.

Some economists, however, are concerned that rising prices could

SGA votes no confidence for Gargano longer work with the Vice Chancellor and I support his actions because if he feels that he cannot get anything done via the Vice Chancellor then it's time to take the other route [and work with other administrators]."

SGA from page 1

Senator Pavel Payano expressed disagreement with the direction of the e-mail verification process and said that he was angry that Gargano alluded to the fact that the content of the e-mails was trivial in comparison to who found them.

"That right there is enough for me to vote no confidence," he said, "if you did it then own up to it."

The vote passed overwhelmingly, 40 voted no confidence with six voting against and one abstention.

The vote of no confidence will be sent to Chancellor Lombardi, President Jack Wilson, Faculty Senate members, and all of the vice chancellors. The Chancellor can then appoint specific guidance to advise the SGA or he may chose to deal with the SGA directly. According to Long, the Dean of Students Joanne Yanin was voted no confidence in the late 1990s, however, she is currently Dean of Students.

27 die in Iraq's Sunni section casualties.

IRAQ from page 1

Elsewhere, a three-hour gunbattle between militants and U.S. forces after nightfall left seven people dead and 13 hurt in Ramadi, a city west of Fallujah.

Insurgents fired rocket-propelled grenades, mortar and Kalashnikov rifles at American forces in the city center, Zayout district and along the main highway in town, said Abdel Karim al-Hiti of Ramadi General Hospital.

Ramadi, about 70 miles west of Baghdad, falls within the restive Sunni Triangle area north and west of the capital where the bulk of insurgent attacks have erupted.

Although fighting has ebbed in Fallujah, it has not ceased. The U.S. military said pockets of insurgents remain even though the city is fully occupied by American troops.

On Wednesday, heavy machine-gun fire and explosions rang out in south-central parts of the city as U.S. Marines hunted remaining fighters. In the northern Jolan neighborhood, Marines seven insurgents who officers said had sneaked back into the city by swimming the Euphrates River.

Bullets snapped overhead, and Iraqis collecting bodies of the dead ran for cover behind walls and in buildings as Marines returned fire. After 15 minutes of fighting, three insurgents were dead and one Marine was slightly injured in the hand, officers said.

The rush of warplanes streaking through the low-lying clouds shook the city and blasts sent smoke into the sky. The U.S. military said airstrikes Wednesday were concentrated in southwestern Fallujah, destroying enemy positions.

Iraqi officials have acknowledged that insurgent leaders Omar Hadid and Sheik Abdullah al-Janabi, along with Jordanian terror boss Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, have not been captured and may have slipped away.

A man identified as Hadid appeared Wednesday with three other hooded gunmen on LBC1 Lebanese television and dismissed claims that the Americans control the Fallujah.

"They did not know that they fell in the trap of death," he said. He insisted insurgents were advancing inside Fallujah toward Jolan and the downtown market, adding "I challenge any force which claims to control Fallujah."

Reports surfaced that 31 policemen had been kidnapped in the town of Rutba near the Jordanian border by armed men who stormed a hotel where the officers were staying.

The Karbala police officer who made the report said he escaped a raid Sunday by armed men in the hotel, according to a police spokesman.

The officer said about 20 men attacked the hotel, covering the captives' heads with black bags and tying their hands before dragging them away, the spokesman said. The officer said he was beaten but was not abducted.

Adnan Asadi, deputy interior minister for administrative affairs, said the abduction reports were "not true." He said the police sent for training in Jordan had not returned to Iraq.

In Mosul, where insurgents launched an uprising last week, the situation appeared calmer, with U.S. and Iraqi troops encountering isolated small-arms attacks, the military said.

OPTION BURTON M6 RIDE SPECIAL BLEND
NEVERSUMMER DRAKE OAKLEY GNC VON ZIPPER RED DEFCON DRAGON SAKOYA SANTA CRUZ ALLIAN ELECTRIC QUICKSILVER NIXON fat trax
SNOWBOARDS • BMX • SKATEBOARDS
TIME TO GEAR UP
DON'T BE LEFT OUT IN THE COLD!
• BEST SERVICE
• BEST SELECTION
• BEST PRICES
FAT TRAX LOCATIONS:
Rte. 5, Take I-91 to Exit 18
Easthampton, MA 01027
413-586-8766 Phone
413-586-7137 Fax
Rte. 83
East Longmeadow, MA 01028
413-781-5142 Phone
413-737-7412 Fax
NORTHWAVE 686 HOLDEN K2 ROXY FORUM

Summer in Paris 2005

Two 5-week Summer Sessions & French Immersion for Academic Credit
Other Special Programs
Consult: www.ampe.edu
Contact: summer@amp.fr
Paris Office
Tel: 33 1 40 62 07 20
Fax: 33 1 47 05 34 32
U.S. Office
Tel: 1 303 735 6333
Fax: 1 303 735 6444
THE AMERICAN UNIVERSITY of PARIS

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DINING SERVICES PRESENTS
Restaurant Night
Bringing the area's four favorite restaurants and their chefs to you on campus!
BERKSHIRE DC presents Chef Jim Sands
FRANKLIN DC presents The University Club Chef Jane Leary
HAMPSHIRE DC presents Famous Bill's Restaurant Chef Lonnie Ricketts
WORCESTER DC presents EASTSIDE Chef Jake Perkins
Thursday, Nov. 18 from 4-7pm
All are welcome! Use your meal plan or $9.00 cash price.
DINING SERVICES UMass

Gonzalez to face tough questions in hearings regarding war procedures

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alberto Gonzales will face tough questioning during hearings on his nomination to become the next attorney general but is on track to be confirmed, the Senate Judiciary Committee's top Democrat said Wednesday.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., met with Gonzales and warned him to be prepared for lengthy questioning about his positions on how the Geneva Conventions apply to the war on terrorism and whether his close relationship with President Bush jeopardizes his independence.

"There are going to be issues that are going to come up where the interest of justice may be at odds with the interest of the president as an individual, and you have to go with the interest of justice," Leahy said he told Gonzales.

To cite one high-profile example, Gonzales, if confirmed, will have to decide whether to recuse himself from the investigation into the leak to the press of the identity of undercover CIA officer Valerie Plame. Outgoing Attorney General John Ashcroft did step aside under pressure, and Gonzales testified in June before a grand jury hearing evidence in that case.

"I think this is an issue that will be raised at the confirmation hearings," Leahy said.

COURTESY CNN.COM

Alberto Gonzalez, left, stands with President George W. Bush at a press conference. Gonzalez is expected to face tough questioning next week, on the heels of his nomination as attorney general.

Leahy also said Gonzales, currently the White House legal counsel, is a less controversial figure than Ashcroft, who frequently clashed with Democrats over congressional oversight and tactics used in the war on terror.

"The president could have picked a more polarizing figure. He did not. I applaud him for that," Leahy told reporters after the 30-minute meeting. "I think he has a far better chance of confirmation with substantial votes from both sides of the aisle than a more divisive figure would have."

During a brief photo session with Leahy, Gonzales did not respond to reporters' questions about a controversial memo he wrote in 2002 contending Bush had the right to waive anti-torture laws and international treaties providing protections to prisoners of war. Critics have said that position helped lead to abuses of the type seen at Iraq's Abu Ghraib prison.

Ashcroft will stay on as attorney general until Gonzales is confirmed.

The ludiciary Committee has not yet set a timetable for confirmation hearings, in part because of turmoil over the panel's chairmanship in the next Congress.

WHO says too little flu research being done

By Arthur Max
Associated Press

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — The world is unprepared for an inevitable flu pandemic that could kill tens of millions of people, but profit-driven pharmaceutical companies are putting too little research into the development of vaccines, the World Health Organization said Thursday.

Developing flu vaccines was high on a priority list released by the U.N. agency, which recommended policies to encourage the production of drugs to treat diseases that have been overlooked because of poor sales potential or because research has been inadequate.

WHO listed 17 illnesses, ranging from Alzheimer's to tuberculosis to alcoholic liver disease, which need urgent attention. The report was commissioned by the Dutch presidency of the European Union, and focused on what Europe can do.

"Pharmaceutical research and development are based on a market-driven incentive system relying primarily on patents and protected pricing," said the report. "As a result, a number of health needs are left unaddressed."

It laid out a grim scenario for a global flu pandemic that it said was overdue and which could be far worse than the 1918-19 outbreak that killed an estimated 40 million to 50 million people.

The European Union has allocated less than $5.2 million to support flu vaccine research, said the report. The United States has spent $50 million to $100 million, but even that was "modest compared with investments in developing vaccines for other diseases," it said.

The report, Priority Medicines for Europe and the World Project, points to areas of public health for new incentives and initiatives, including a program combining public and private financing.

It said new approaches are needed to treat bacterial infections, because antibiotics are used so commonly that many strains now resist them. Drug companies see too little incentive to develop antibacterials.

The report points to changing patterns of disease due to aging populations. Chronic illnesses common in Europe, like heart disease, smoking-related problems and diabetes, are now spreading to developing countries.

It also listed "neglected diseases" that are uncommon in Europe but which can be devastating in developing or tropical countries, like malaria and tuberculosis, to which the commercial pharmaceutical companies pay little attention.

Sound waves can help brain blockages

By Jeff Donn
Associated Press

BOSTON — The same type of sound waves that pulsate from sonar fish-finders and ultrasound fetal monitors can dramatically boost the power of anti-clotting medicine and help it dissolve brain blockages in stroke patients, a study suggests.

This technique may one day offer a safe accessory for helping up to 100,000 U.S. patients a year, or 15 percent of the nation's stroke victims, doctors said.

Imaging specialist Dr. Joseph Polak at New England Medical Center said more doctors should now consider adopting the technique.

"It's a relatively big impact for a disease where we don't have many options," he said. The study and Polak's commentary appeared Thursday in The New England Journal of Medicine. The research was conducted by the University of Texas Medical School at Houston with partners in Canada and Spain.

About 700,000 people suffer strokes each year in the United States, making it the leading cause of serious, long-term disability, according to the American Stroke Association. About 163,000 died from a stroke in 2001, third only to heart disease and cancer.

Like a heart attack within the brain, a stroke happens when a clot gets stuck in a blood vessel and cuts off circulation.

COURTESY CNN.COM

Ultrasound helps break up clots in stroke victims, according to a recent study.

Students share hardships of education detained, Atoot claims, they can be held without charges for up to one year.

STUDENTS from page 1

"What kind of democracy is this?" she asked. "This is Israeli democracy."

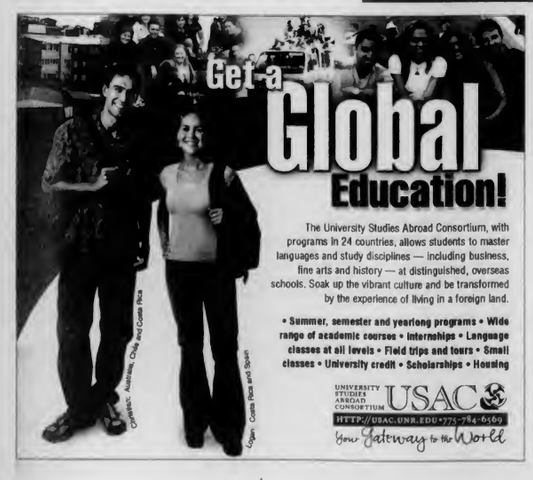
Reaction to the presentation was positive, though some questioned the validity of some of the speakers' statements.

"I liked the presentation and I definitely enjoy seeing a different point of view," Jonah Rubin, a sophomore history major, said. "Some of the facts that I know of just seemed a little bit off to me."

He added that these facts can differ depending on where you are brought up and where you went to school.

Na'ama Gal, a senior Italian studies major, thought bringing students from the West Bank to explain the Palestinian/Israeli conflict made it easier to relate to.

"I'm very happy they were able to bring two students from the West Bank to tell us the sit-



www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

EXECUTIVE VALET PARKING
Serving Bradley Airport
Airport Parking College Special!
$25.00*-Up to 7 Days Parking. Valid 11/23-11/30
$50.00*-Up to 5 Weeks Parking. Valid 12/15-02/01/05
Valid College ID Req., Present this coupon or Visit us at:
www.CollegeAirportParking.com
800-218-1297
*Plus 4% Access Fee Cannot be Combined with Other offers

• NIKOUKARI CHARRON MAHONEY PC •
ATTORNEYS AT LAW
• Family Law Matters
• Criminal - OUI
• Immigration
• Landlord/Tenant Matters
Mondana Nikoukari, Esq.
Samuel L. Charron, Esq.
Christopher K. Mahoney, Esq.
2 Mattoon Street • Springfield, MA 01105
737-8008
www.ncm-pc.com

a grade dispute?
• teacher, roomate or job concerns?
• billing problems?
• harassment?
• ...or any other University related problem?
THE OMBUDS OFFICE CAN HELP
(confidentially, of course!)
students, faculty, and staff are all welcome
523 Campus Center
Office hours: 8:00 a.m. - 5:00 p.m.
telephone: 413-545-0867
fax: 413-545-9720
e-mail: ombuds@ombuds.umass.edu

New Years Eve '05
Louie Devito
18 plus $25.00 in advance
21 plus $20.00 in advance
Tickets now on Sale on Tickets.com and the:
HIPPODROME

The University Studies Abroad Consortium, with programs in 24 countries, allows students to master languages and study disciplines — including business, fine arts and history — at distinguished, overseas schools. Soak up the vibrant culture and be transformed by the experience of living in a foreign land.
• Summer, semester and yearlong programs • Wide range of academic courses • Internships • Language classes at all levels • Field trips and tours • Small classes • University credit • Scholarships • Housing
UNIVERSITY STUDIES ABROAD CONSORTIUM USAC
HTTP://USAC.UNR.EDU • 775-784-6569
Your Gateway to the World

UMASS
Ski 'N' Board Club
The 37th Annual Ski Sale
November 18 - 20th
Thursday 11:00 - 8:00
Friday 11:00 - 8:00
Saturday 11:00 - 6:00
Student Union Ballroom
UMASS Amherst
434 Student Union | 545 - 3437 | skiclub@stuaf.umass.edu
http://www.umass.edu/rso/skiclub

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 2004

"What we have to do is to be forever curiously testing new opinions and courting new impressions." -Walter Pater

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

In our own backyard

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

I grew up in a small hilltown called Heath, about 15 minutes north of Shelburne Falls on the border of Vermont. The northwestern towns of Franklin County are what we locals refer to as West County, and we garner the most intense love and pride for our home.

Just south of West County lies Greenfield. This was the big city for the majority of my childhood, and it had it all — a couple of big streets, two movie theatres, and lots of stores and restaurants. Later in life, Greenfield became my cozy home away from home, an extension of West County, as I worked and studied there for a couple of years.

Yet, I am saddened to say that in the past five years, Greenfield has taken a tragic turn for the worse.

Never a particularly large town, Greenfield's post-Cold War economic downturn has been exacerbated by recent influxes of poor and unemployed residents mainly from Holyoke and Chicopee seeking cheap government subsidized housing. As a result, drug-related and violent crime has been on the rise across the demographic spectrum for the past decade, with arrests increasing an average of at least 300 per year in that time span.

I cannot possibly articulate the pain that I have borne of late in reading of multiple armed bank and convenience store robberies and residential burglaries within weeks of each other in this humble municipality of 19,000. Most recently, I am appalled at the gory murder of 20-year-old Anthony Alves of neighboring Colrain, which occurred within two blocks of Main Street.

As described in this weekend's Boston Globe article aptly entitled "A Death Reflects a Town's Decline", Alves was brutally beaten to death by four unknown youths bearing steel pipes and a machete. As it turns out, the young men arrested for the killing were called in from Northampton to commit the murder and did not even know Alves personally.

Murders don't happen in Greenfield, especially not of the heinous variety, and especially not of people from West County. Understandably, this incident piled on top of all the other startling developments in Greenfield has brought up some serious issues for me.

My first instinct was to feel anger with Alves' murderers and all the other criminals plaguing Greenfield in such a way that would have warranted revenge. I must admit that I even had an initial xenophobic reaction and thought some pretty scary and racist thoughts. Once I got over my initial emotion, however, I got to reckoning and then to wondering just how such structural collapse could occur seemingly overnight.

It's true that there's been a drastic change in the demographic composition of the town in the past decade and that there has been an increase in crime, vagrancy, and unemployment since then, and particularly in violent crime in the past five years, but most of this has been perpetrated by poor white people. The tragedy is not that we now have a more culturally diversified town, it's that the town is in a heap of irremediable trouble.

There is a daily queue outside the employment services and welfare offices. There was already a distinct lack of social programs two years ago before Romney began cutting them. The aisles of the Salvation Army are bare and so many residents now live on insufficient government subsidies that there is no hope of raising a large enough tax base for the town to be able to support its new and growing population.

I expressed these grievances to my mother and the only explanation she could give me was "this is what an empire in decline looks like." Of course she is right. Just 20 years ago, Greenfield was a thriving economic hub at the crossroads of Route 91 and the Mohawk Trail. Now most of all the industrial jobs have been shipped overseas or to southern states where labor unions are weaker. I remember at about the age of 6 most of my friends' fathers were laid off as their employers downsized or skipped town. My own dad, a trained professional, also found himself out of work at the time.

But this is my home. These are sacred grounds and I cannot simply say that this is what happens when empires finally come crashing down and be done with it. I need to do something. I am confined, at the moment, to simply buying locally produced goods and asking state representatives to increase fiscal policy in Western Massachusetts to provide employment and stimulate the economy. The insertion of some much-needed social programs could be just the trick and could also directly combat the violent streak that is quickly becoming a recurrent theme in town.

While I call on my fellow UMassers to do the same, I also feel that this is not enough. We are a strong school of some 24,000 students right down the road from Greenfield and we are in a position to help. More of us should direct our academic attentions toward this area and realize that this is an untapped resource in almost any field of study: sociology, psychology, political science, medicine, film, human and resource management. You name it. Engage in civil society. Make industry contacts. Apply your knowledge and learn some real life lessons.

There are some tremendous opportunities for students to connect with existing programs or even create new ones. Take advantage of the chance to help your local district and increase your prestige at the same time. Please help our community in decline.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian Columnist.

E-mails implicate Gargano

David Lewis

Last week, the Student Government Association began to address a number of recently discovered e-mail correspondences between former SGA Speaker Patrick Higgins, Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Mike Gargano, and SGA lawyer Chuck DiMarc. The e-mails were largely concerned with the legitimacy and funding of the Office of ALANA Affairs (OAA), the campus's main minority advocacy group.

The following information is taken directly from an article entitled, "UMass Admin Collude with KKK-9 Against ALANA Community," in the November edition of "The Graduate Voice," a publication that is widely available on campus.

All of the e-mails in question took place without including SGA President Eddie Bustamante. The e-mails sent by Higgins attempted to remove funding from the position of Gladys Franco, who has been the interim Director of the OAA.

There is an ongoing pattern of hostility between conservative leaders of the SGA and ALANA students. This conflict has made headlines repeatedly over the past year, from the controversy over ALANA senate seats, to the refusal to accept President Bustamante's election, to this current issue. Therefore, it is not surprising that a representative of the SGA would try to dismantle the OAA.

Gargano's and DiMare's responses to Higgins' attacks on the OAA indicate that they are not only sympathetic to Higgins, but that they share his cause. The e-mails demonstrate that Gargano and Higgins had hoped to dismantle the ALANA caucus by proving that it does not have a legal basis to exist.

Over the summer, Gargano pulled the ALANA caucus into his office, telling them that he was suspending the body until the General Counsel could determine its legality. No other campus group received this type of scrutiny.

On June 26, Gargano responded to Higgins.

"I heard back from the General Counsel and the news is different that what we anticipated," Gargano said. The General Counsel had replied that as a minority set-aside, the ALANA caucus was unconstitutional, but the SGA by-laws never mention race as a basis for the caucus, which is usually composed of both white and minority students.

According to an e-mail which Higgins sent to Jared Nokes, Gargano shared with him the news that the ALANA caucus was, in fact, perfectly legal. To this day, Gargano has not informed the caucus, or President Bustamante, that the caucus is technically legal, according to the Graduate Student Voice. The fact that Gargano shared this information with Higgins but withheld it from the SGA President and the ALANA caucus is an incriminating violation of ethical standards by Gargano.

As Vice Chancellor, Michael Gargano is an authority figure on campus, he is not supposed to interfere with the inner workings of the SGA. When the OAA recently submitted a request to hire an assistant director, Gargano refused to sign off on the request. His signature was supposed to be a mere formality since funding was already reserved for that position, but he used his office to actively obstruct the hiring process, which has now been shelved.

As the Vice Chancellor, Michael Gargano is an authority figure on campus, he is not supposed to interfere with the inner workings of the SGA.

Gargano and DiMare are the administrators that supervise both the SGA and OAA. The fact that they engaged in secret conversations with select members of the SGA is a violation of the public trust. These two administrators attempted to subvert the OAA, even though their offices are responsible for supporting student groups. SGA President Eddie Bustamante has refused to continue to work with Gargano in light of Gargano's blatant bias and lack of professionalism.

The e-mail controversy has left a damaging effect on a campus that is already disillusioned with the SGA and the administration. The majority of students seem to feel that the SGA is largely disconnected from the student body it serves. UMass students also feel at odds with the administration at large, which recently has raised fees while cutting important programs such as phys ed., bilingual ed, and the library.

UMass has been steadily losing its reputation as a school that celebrates cultural diversity and serves working communities. Minority enrollment at UMass has declined drastically across the board since 1997. According to SCERA, tuition and fees have increased at least 24 percent since 2002. Average families have shouldered the burden for the recent budget cuts, and campus resources have deteriorated.

One student commented to Gargano that with the increasing fees and acceptance standards, he might no longer be able to afford to go here. He replied, "That's what community colleges are for." What Gargano doesn't get is that UMass is the only high-quality publicly funded option for Massachusetts communities. Gargano's consistent attacks on ALANA students reflect his overall goal of turning UMass into a school that caters to out-of-state students and wealthy families.

Including people of different races and economic situations is an essential part of providing a balanced education. Most white students seem to feel either ambivalent or powerless about this issue, as though it pertains only to minorities. If we don't address this issue now, UMass will soon be a school only for rich white kids.

Gargano has confirmed what many UMass students already knew: the administration is opposed to providing resources to minority students. Gargano has sent a clear message that he does not support the University's stated goal of "a rich cultural environment." As a first step toward improving the conditions at UMass, we must demand the resignation of Gargano before he causes further harm to our university.

David Lewis is a Collegian Columnist.

Arnold needs to keep his distance

Matthew M. Burke

Arnold Schwarzenegger wants to be the President of the United States of America. It's crazy, I know. I had to rub my eyes several times when I read the headline last week, too. As much as I love Arnold for his roles in films like Commando, Conan, Terminator, Predator, and Kindergarten Cop, I must admit that he's gone too far this time. America's security is at stake. From one Republican to another, stop pumping yourself up.

Unfortunately, there is not much in today's global media that surprises me. I have become accustomed and immune to both bizarre and violent news. From terrorist beheadings in Iraq to the fact that beavers in Louisiana recently built a damn out of stolen casino money, I don't even blink anymore. These stories keep rolling off my back like rain. They seem made up.

When Lissa Morgenthaler-Jones and her husband, David Jones, recently started accepting donations to facilitate an amendment to change the Constitution, my jaw dropped and I started paying attention.

These California mutual fund managers, who donated heavily to Schwarzenegger's bid to become Governor, have opened up a Pandora's box. While I think Arnold is a great guy, the Constitution should not be changed to facilitate his candidacy.

As the law stands, any candidate for the highest office has to have been born on U.S. soil. It includes military bases and embassies, but it must be the sovereign soil of the United States. I believe this to be the strongest argument to exclude Arnold.

Arnold became a citizen in 1983 after spending his formative years in Austria. We know he's a family man who has married into a political dynasty here in the U.S. He loves our country and is great for the people of California. If the job is open to him, however, then it must be open to an enormous number of other people who have moved here.

This would mean that former Taliban foot soldiers would be eligible after a certain allotted time of citizenship. North Korean doctors who had just finished testing chemical weapons on prisoners could come here and eventually make a run for the Presidency. Sudanese genocidal maniacs would not be excluded. Outlandish, perhaps, but I would not want to see the discrimination cases that would result going before the Supreme Court. I don't think I'm alone in saying that this would simply be unacceptable.

These efforts to change the Constitution dilute the document, and negatively impact the voice of the American people. If, for example, the President must condemn Ireland for some reason, then it is important that he do it. He may be less inclined to do his duty, however, if he is only 14 years removed from County Cork.

While I think Arnold is a great guy, the Constitution should not be changed to facilitate his candidacy.

Senator Ted Kennedy (D-MA) has supported Arnold in his quest to become the leader of the free world. Why he has done this I do not know. He probably feels that nobody will support the measure so it makes him seem more progressive. He may simply just like Arnold. It's hard to speculate, but I can't help but be a little skeptical with regard to the old Massachusetts Senator's intentions.

The amendment has to be Congressionally approved and then ratified by 38 states. This probably will not happen, but the fact that it is being proposed scares me. There are many problems that could arise if it does get pushed through.

Is it possible that this may lead to an influx in illegal immigrants trying to enter the country in order to vote for their candidate? Or perhaps even the demise of the two-party-system would soon follow? Would a foreign presidency lead to even more jobs leaving the nation? It remains to be seen, but it could possibly spell the end for the United States.

Many qualified foreigners will be excluded from the Presidential election if this amendment to the Constitution is dropped or defeated. I apologize to them for this, but there are many other positions in the public sector that have a great impact on our society, as well.

The Senate, Congress, Supreme Court, and State Government are all fantastic ways to make a difference. I would not expect to be able to be the President of Nigeria just because I decided to move there.

Morgenthaler-Jones is apparently a libertarian and her college friend, co-founder Mimi Chen, is a member of the green party. This group has started the web site for Arnold called www.AmendforArnold.com.

On the site, they blindly pursue this pipedream of having foreigners become eligible for the Presidency. So I wonder, are these people crazy? I think it would be cool to have the Terminator as President, too, but they happen to disagree with him on almost everything he stands for. So, are they plain stupid, or do they stand to profit from such a candidacy?

They've been interviewed by MSNBC, CNN, and CBS. They also run television commercials in California. "You cannot choose the land of your birth. You can choose the land you love," says Morgenthaler-Jones in the group's television ads.

This may be true, but it runs contrary to our Constitution, a document that has served our nation well for a long, long time.

Arnold and his family need to distance themselves from these morons, before he goes down with them.

Matthew M. Burke is a Collegian columnist.

Don't worry, take it easy

Jake Monte

Smile. Reading editorials isn't that serious is it? Of course, Bush won the election, which is considerable reason to frown. Trey Parker and Matt Stone made a horrifically bad movie. Yasser Arafat is dead. Conan O'Brien got the Tonight Show over David Letterman. Terrorist attacks are pending, this time maybe nuclear attacks. But don't worry. The editorial staff at

The Collegian is here to mold reality into something you can swallow.

Must we now sugarcoat everything now for our more sensitive readers? A couple letters to the editor got me thinking. People cry words like stereotypes and all the great ism's any time someone tries to make a point. So this week just for you I have packaged my editorial in nice neat consumer friendly wrapping. No controversy here, just an editorial columnist trying to cheer you up.

We're college students here! Come on people, be selfish! By the time you're out of school and getting a job, we'll be on our way to a new President and a new begining.

It seems that some people on this campus expect us, as columnists, to sugar coat everything for our more sensitive readers. Well, to them I say, absolutely not.

George Bush is president again. So just remember all the political mumbo-jumbo that doesn't affect you. Low job rate, national debt, problems in Iraq or Afghanistan. We're college students! Come on people, be selfish! By the time you're out of school and getting a job, we'll be on our way to a new President and a new beginning. But in all seriousness, many people think John Kerry's campaign was a waste of time and money. I don't agree.

Everything America heard John Kerry say changes the consciousness of the country. It will remind us of more compassionate values during the next four years, and we are forever changed for the better because of those words.

Team America did suck, but on the bright side all the well-respected famous people Trey Parker and Matt Stone made fun of can breathe easier.

If the film had been good those people might be likely to take some of it to heart, so no damage done. Trey Parker and Matt Stone were dealing with the most heated subject in the world today; the war in Iraq, and they couldn't draw a single interesting conclusion. It could have been worse, however. We might have had to praise a film by Trey Parker and Matt Stone as cataclysmic and age defining. Thank God it was a dud.

Yasser Arafat, winner of the 1994 Nobel Peace prize died recently.

Many people thought Arafat was a ruthless terrorist and a roadblock to peace. Look at it this way. We didn't get Bin Laden, but Arafat's death reminds us that the terrorists will just die off if we wait them out. Wouldn't that be a relief? Most of the terrorists are two busy plotting attacks to worry about having kids so due to the process of natural selection nature will gradually wean the terrorists down to nil!

Conan O'Brien got the "Tonight Show" over David Letterman, but like everything else you are simply meant to think this it's a bad thing. Quite the contrary. As everyone knows, Conan O'Brien is hilarious, and if you ask me, there's no one better for the job of hosting the "Tonight Show" than Conan O'Brien.

Ah yes, the future terrorists attacks. I'm afraid on this issue there is nothing good to say. So why not simply forget about it. Now that I've begun the process of making all my editorials suitable for the overly sensitive, I will be forgetting to write about topics that are dreary and depressing. It has been said, "that a critic is someone who cannot be an artist, just as a stool pigeon is someone who cannot be a soldier." So instead of complaining about a comment that is too real, too controversial or too blunt for your ears, say something of substance.

Otherwise I'll be stuck here week after week trying to cheer you up in a fashion that doesn't offend. The standard war cries over stereotypes and ism's will cause all us writers to go into emotional hiding. Controversy is what makes a newspaper interesting. Critics beware; you may be scaring writers to death. In the end, all that matters is that it makes you think.

Jake Monte is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Calvin brings home the Bacon

COURTESY BOX KPUBLICATION COM (1)

By Michael Deehan
Collegian Staff

The Bacon Brothers
Tonight
Calvin Theater
Northampton
$37.50, $25, $17.50

A guitar-wielding rocker is not what most people would expect when they're told that Kevin Bacon is performing. But tonight in Northampton, a rocker is what they will get.

The actor, along with his brother Michael, will take the stage of the Calvin Theater as The Bacon Brothers, the sometimes folk, sometimes country, always rock 'n' roll band that was formed in 1995.

"I feel pretty secure that, in just about any venue, when people walk out of there, they feel they've heard real music," says Michael Bacon on the group's website, www.baconbros.com. "Real" could not be a more accurate description for the elder half of the Bacon team. The lesser known of the pair, Michael has been a hardworking mainstay in the recording industry for decades.

He was the front man for Good News, a folk-infused rock band that made a splash in the 70s early on in his career. Since then the senior Bacon has kept busy by recording solo albums and working in Hollywood scoring television and movies.

Singer/guitarist Kevin Bacon should need no introduction. Featured in over 50 films since debuting in "National Lampoon's Animal House" 26 years ago, Kevin has become one of the leading actors of not only of his generation but also among all of Hollywood. From his role as a culturally oppressed dancer in "Footloose," to his recent co-starring role in the critically acclaimed "Mystic River," Bacon has proved time and again that he is a born performer.

The brothers' band is not about fueling the ego of an already celebrated star, but about bona fide music from authentic musicians. Senior to Kevin by nine years, Michael Bacon has been a lifelong musician. Mike brought music into Kevin's life, and the future star idolized him for it. The obvious fraternal bond between the Bacons creates a fluidity of communication that can be heard throughout the recordings of the band.

Although Kevin followed the acting bug to fame and fortune, the desire to entertain by way of music was rekindled when the opportunity for the brothers to team up was presented in the mid-90s. Since then the band has released three studio albums, their debut "Forosoco" in 1998, followed by "Getting There" in 2000 and 2002's "Can't Complain."

With this year's release of "The Bacon Brothers Live", the duo has proved beyond doubt that they are the real deal. The Bacons deliver genuinely heartfelt songs and enjoy a growing following of fans won over by their upbeat rock and serene harmonizing. Fusing rock, folk, soul and country into a distinctly American sound, Michael and Kevin create a product unique in the music world today, a feat made all the more significant given the celebrity status of the lead singer.

On the road for a small northeastern club tour, the duo brings their expressive and surprisingly charming sound to The Calvin Theater at 8 p.m. tonight.

Granola Funk Express brings organic sound to the Valley

UMass-based band Cold Duck Complex takes the stage with feel-good party sound

COURTESY CATHEDRAL COMPLEX (1) (1)

University of Massachusetts band Cold Duck Complex will share the bill with Granola Funk Express tonight at Pearl Street at 8 p.m.

By Brian Duffey
Collegian Staff

Granola Funk Express and Cold Duck Complex
Tonight
Pearl Street
Northampton

Organic hip-hop, poetry, jazz, funk, reggae, and rock will be showcased tonight at Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton. Former University of Massachusetts battle-of-the-bands champion, Cold Duck Complex, will open for underground national originators, Granola Funk Express. The show begins at 8:30 p.m.

Cold Duck Complex features the smooth lyricism of emcee Platypus Complex. His subject matter ranges from political opinion to relationship struggles. His performances are guaranteed to be original and intense.

The remaining three members, the Cold Duck trio, fuse elements of hip-hop, jazz, and funk. This threesome began collaborating in high school after composing a musical piece on "Curious George."

As a whole, Cold Duck Complex creates feel-good party music that is also thought provoking.

Granola Funk Express, also known as God Force Energy, began in the woods of Florida at a 1994 Rainbow Gathering. The Rainbow Family of Living Light is a worldwide fellowship with no official leaders who gather together in National Forests to pray for peace and tranquility on Earth. The Family of Living Light has many traditions that closely mirror customs and traditions of Native American tribes. At these gatherings the food is free, nobody pays rent, and psychedelic opportunities are abound.

Granola Funk first began as a vegan kitchen and theatre. At the Rainbow Gathering in 1995, the Express began to freestyle, performing poetry without prior rehearsal or preparation. After the gathering ended, ten to twenty individuals took their abilities into cities and towns across the country where they beat-boxed and freestyled for hours on the street.

A core group of these musicians decided to set up shop in Asheville, North Carolina. In Asheville, these artists started to blend improvisation with written material. They took on the name Granola Funk Express, which sparked some internal controversy.

Granola Funk first toured in 1997 to mixed reviews. Yet because of solid performances at venues like the Common Ground in Brattleboro, Vermont, they began to establish a word-of-mouth following. As the music improved, so did the size of their fan base.

They released their first album in 1998, entitled Beat Poem Manufacturing. This band, which combines hip-hop, spoken word poetry, funk, reggae, and rock and roll, has changed their personnel over the years.

Granola Funk Express begins each of their performances with an Ohm. This synchronized prayer-like ritual is intended to clear the mind and prepare the performer and the listener to engage in a powerfully positive experience.

If you haven't seen GFE, you don't know what you're missing. They create a vibe and an energy that is unlike anything available to live audiences today. These cats do not disappoint.

Search for Young Buck continues

By Ryan Pearson
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Police were searching for rapper Young Buck in connection with a stabbing at the Vibe Awards, an assault apparently sparked when Buck's musical mentor, Dr. Dre, was punched just before being handed a lifetime achievement award.

Buck fled the Santa Monica airport hangar where the awards show was being taped Monday night, police Lt. Frank Fahrega said in a statement. A warrant was being prepared alleging assault with a deadly weapon.

The incident was sparked as Snoop Dogg and Vibe magazine founder Quincy Jones were about to give Dre a lifetime achievement award. A man later identified as Jimmy James Johnson approached Dre, who was seated at a table in front of the stage, and appeared to ask for an autograph before punching the veteran hitmaker, police said.

People began shoving, chairs were thrown and punches flew. Some in the audience of about 1,000 scurried for the exits. Alicia Keys, the night's top winner with awards for artist of the year and best R&B song, was among those who fled.

Johnson was dragged away by security staff, but then suffered a serious stab wound when he was attacked by a number of people, including Buck, whose real name is David Darnell Brown, according to police. He is signed to Dr. Dre's record label as part of the G-Unit clique, which was named best group by the music magazine.

"Brown is clearly depicted (on videotape) as holding a knife after the assault and is one of a number of fight participants that was pepper-sprayed by officers in their attempt to stop this fight," Police Chief James Butts told a news conference. "We're asking Mr. David Darnell Brown to surrender himself to police."

Johnson, 26, was in stable condition at a hospital.

"It is unfortunate that an event so many people worked very hard to create has been tainted by the actions of a few individuals," Kenard Gibbs, president of Vibe, said in a statement.

Many in the constantly feuding rap community speculated that longtime Dre antagonist Suge Knight, who attended the awards, arranged for Dre to get punched. Suge and Dre started the legendary Death Row record label together in the late 1980s, then had a bitter separation over money and the violence that has surrounded Knight during his 15 years in the music business.

© STEVE MTV.COM

Rapper Young Buck, of the G-Unit, is wanted in connection with a stabbing at Monday's Vibe awards.

Knight denied any involvement in the attack on Dre.

"One thing about me, if I do something, I'm (taking responsibility)," Knight told reporters after the show. "I'm not an idiot. See, an idiot would go out there and do stuff."

Buck, a native of Nashville, Tenn., is a member of superstar 50 Cent's G-Unit posse. He released his debut solo album, "Straight Outta Cashville," in August, and it debuted at No. 3 on the Billboard charts.

For those who listen to Buck and G-Unit's hardcore rhymes, it's no surprise that Buck would spring to the defense of his godfather Dre, one of the architects of gangsta rap. And although there were metal detectors at the door, performers aren't typically searched when they enter an awards show.

It wasn't the first hip-hop awards show to be interrupted by violence: The 2000 Source Awards were marred by fights, and then got their highest TV ratings ever.

After the Vibe fracas was squelched Monday night, the taping continued. The show, broadcast Tuesday night on UPN, was seamlessly edited to remove any trace of the attack.

"They can't stop me. I don't care," Dre said on television as he accepted his award, showing no signs of injury.

Roller derby's great revival

By Beatriz Terrazas
The Dallas Morning News

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas — Where do you look first? At the half-dozen women who land in a tangle of arms, legs and roller skates? Or at the few who manage to leap or side step the downed pack and keep skating? And is it fair to stand up and cheer when Chola stretches her wheels across the track and trips Eva Knievil — yeeow!!! — then pummels her?

Then there's the roar: wheels, knees and elbows thumping on the track. The emcee shouting, "All right, the game is on!" Players screaming to each other — "Help Guera, help Guera!" and "Go, Loca; you got it, girl!" and "Whip her, whip her!"

The score moves along in the first few minutes — 4-0, then 13-11. All in favor of the Hellcats. After a particularly clumsy jam, the women come back to the bench. Just a few minutes into the bout, Sparky's red curls are mashed flat under her helmet and her fair skin shines with sweat.

"Did you see Terry take me out?" she says. "I was jamming and she took me out!"

Meanwhile, team captain Cha Cha stands in front of her players and shouts, "Putas, what the ... (expletive) was that?"

This is roller derby, the sport that flourished in the United States from the 1930s through the '70s and is now experiencing a revival. And the women dressed in black and red are Las Putas del Fuego, the bad-girl team from the Lonestar Rollergirls league. Of Austin's two leagues, this is the one that plays on a banked track, hallmark of the original sport. Both leagues have four all-women teams.

Playing tonight in Corpus Christi against the Hellcats, the Putas are dressed in everything from tube tops and short skirts to sports bras and biking shorts. Some of the attire is so over-the-top it's campy; others look downright sexy, such as Cha Cha. She's wearing a short, black dress with red flames that lick upward from the hem.

Playing a game that's punctuated with cursing and fighting might be the extreme in girl-power, but the attire the women wear seems a bit anti-feminist at first. There are a lot of splayed legs and exposed midriffs in roller derby. Not to mention penalties that include spankings doled out by audience members. But if that's all you see on the track, then you're not paying attention, say the women. Because the game is about much, much more.

For some of them, roller derby is the outward

See DERBY on page 9

STRATTON/OKEMO
COLLEGE PASS
Only $299*
MORE MOUNTAIN. LESS MONEY.
With a combined 1,184 rideable acres of terrain, 203 trails, and 34 lifts, you can't beat this deal. Take a break from the books and get free with the Stratton/Okemo College Pass. Ski and ride two of Southern Vermont's best mountains all season long for as little as $299*. College students must provide proof of full-time status with documentation from Registrar's Office.
PURCHASE BY 12·3·04
OKEMO MOUNTAIN RESORT
1-800-78-OKEMO
okemo.com
STRATTON VT
1-800-STRATTON
stratton.com
*If purchased before 12/3/04, $399 after 12/3/04. Tax not included. Must be 25 or under.

Don't like what you see here? Write for Arts and cover the stuff you want to read!

For a good time
(writing about Arts)
call Meghan Mike or Monique
@ 545-1361

Roller derby showcases players' physical prowess and passion expression of a midlife crisis. For others, it's an opportunity to enjoy a sport that's intensely physical, intensely visceral and just plain fun. But most of all, roller derby is the perfect venue for a woman to explore all her polar opposites: the demure and the sexy, the coy and vamp, the good and the bad. Spokeswoman Louisa Brinsmade, aka Mau-Mau when playing with the Hellcats, puts it this way: Roller derby gives one permission to be a total woman.

DERBY from page 8

"If you watch a roller derby bout you have the really ... sexy part of it, and you have this amazing physical prowess going on, and you have the real spitfire intensity of passion. ... It will come out in fights, in major plays. It will come out in the way that we relate off the track and after the bout.

"We're sort of trying out and using all of the strengths that women have," she says. "The power of seduction and the power of being sexy and the power of being strong. All of it is combined into what I think, as a whole, many women are made of."

"In many ways, this is a feminist movement," says Chola. "We're just being as bad as we want to be, doing what we love, and being ourselves."

There is a rich diversity among the women tonight – they are teachers, bartenders, engineers, students and mothers. They are Rubenesque, muscular, soft, wiry and petite. They are young and not so young.

By day, Chola, 24, is a systems software specialist. She's only 5-feet-3-inches tall, but on the track, she is hell on wheels. Her passion for roller derby is equaled only by her passion for good tequila.

Tonight, her adrenaline is pumping. Although she has broken up a bar fight or two, she's not above inciting scuffles during a bout. And when the Hellcats' Anita Toke attacks Sparky tonight, Chola skids to a stop and jumps in to defend her fallen teammate.

Her real name is Samantha Ramirez, and she's from San Marcos. Like others in the league, Chola is a self-described rink rat. She started her own skating club in college, but her fascination with derby goes back to when she was 9 or 10. That's when she first saw a documentary about women in roller derby during its heyday.

Landing a spot on the Putas two years ago provided an opportunity to nurse an alter ego she's carried around since childhood. She still remembers seeing the tough girls known in Latino circles as "cholas." They both intrigued and intimidated her.

"As much as they scared me, I always wanted to be one," she says. "I really wanted to be one. I had that in me."

Her track persona wears a short skirt, a red sequined tube top and a very bad-girl teardrop under one eye.

She disputes the idea that dressing sexily to play roller derby exploits a stereotype. And even if it does, so what?

"It's 2004. And it's still so hard for people to grasp that there can be a girl who is good-looking and strong," she says.

"In my opinion, it's one thing if we were getting paid and there was this big fat guy in the seat telling us, 'Wear that,' " she says. Now, that would be exploitation.

Shawna Benson, left, and Ashley Arcikis face-off in a derby bout.

In fact, the only ones telling them what to do are the women themselves. Each player is part owner of the league, which is a limited liability corporation. Revenue generated from sponsors, as well as merchandise, beer and ticket sales pays the rent on their Austin warehouse and other expenses. And if the league ever does more than break even, the women will be able to pay themselves for playing.

As for the team's name, which translates loosely to "Sluts (or whores) of Fire," she knows some Latinos might find it offensive.

"I'm probably speaking for myself," she says. "But I'm proud that we're taking something taboo and forcefully making it acceptable."

"My dad thought it was hilarious," she says. "There's not one thing that people love more than to have the excuse to yell, 'Go, Puta!'"

CVS pharmacy
1 Hour Photo
Student Discount
$1.00 off 1 hour processing (prints only)
$2.00 off 1 hour digital processing (prints & cd)
Valid Student ID required.
Available at the Amherst locations only.
Original roll processing only.

BOB DYLAN
AND HIS BAND
In Show and CONCERT!
SATURDAY NOVEMBER 20
ON SALE NOW
DON'T YOU DARE MISS IT!
MULLINS CENTER
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
Tickets on sale at the Mullins Center Box Office, online at ticketmaster.com, by phone at (413) 733-2500, or at all TicketMaster outlets. For additional information call the Mullins Center at (413) 545-0505. Presented by MassConcerts

Thinking about a spring internship?
Come to an Info Session!
sessions cover the differences between co-ops and internships, how to find opportunities and application procedures
TODAY! Thursday, Nov 18
3 pm in 511 Goodell
and
Monday, Nov 22
3 pm in 511 Goodell
and most Mondays and Thursdays
Mark your calendar!
Career Services invites you to stop by our tent outside Goodell for some free hot cider and career info on Wednesday, December 1
CareerServices
511 Goodell Building • 413-545-2224 • www.umass.edu/careers

Download at your own risk: Studios crack down on piracy

By Gary Gentile
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Following the lead of record companies who curtailed rampant Internet piracy by targeting even small-time file swappers, Hollywood studios have launched a first wave of lawsuits against people who allegedly downloaded recent films such as "Spider-Man 2" and "Troy."

The seven major studios filed the lawsuits for federal copyright infringement on Tuesday in Denver, New York City, San Francisco and St. Louis. Lawsuits may have been filed in other cities, but the Motion Picture Association of America, which represents the studios, declined to say how many were filed and where.

"It's not important," said John Malcolm, senior vice president and director of worldwide anti-piracy operations for the MPAA. "It doesn't matter if it's 10 lawsuits or 500 lawsuits. The idea here is that there is no safe harbor."

Three lawsuits, obtained by The Associated Press, were filed in federal courts in Denver and St. Louis. Two lawsuits were filed in Denver against 22 defendants, while the one in St. Louis targets 18 individuals.

The St. Louis lawsuit is brought against "John Doe" defendants, including four people who are allegedly in possession of one pirated film each. Some of the Internet addresses for the defendants can be traced to high-speed Internet connections made available by Charter Communications, a cable television company based in St. Louis.

The defendants are accused of offering the movies over peer-to-peer file-sharing programs.

Like similar lawsuits filed by the record industry against downloaders of music files, the studios say they will be able to identify the individual defendants later.

Each of the lawsuits lists only a handful of films allegedly offered for downloading online, including "Troy," from Warner Bros., "Spider-Man 2," from Columbia Pictures and "Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen," from The Walt Disney Co.

The lawsuits seek injunctions against the defendants. Copyright law also provides for penalties of up to $30,000 for each motion picture traded over the Internet, and up to $150,000 if such infringement is shown to be willful.

Malcolm said more lawsuits would be filed in additional cities if the current legal action does not stem illegal downloading.

The MPAA is running the risk of being seen as too heavy-handed, especially by suing people who have downloaded a single movie, said Wendy Seltzer, a staff attorney at the Electronic Frontier Foundation.

"We don't think for any industry that suing its fans is the best approach to new technologies," Seltzer said.

As part of its larger effort to combat piracy, the MPAA also said it would step up its educational campaign and offer a free computer program that sniffs out movie and music files on a user's computer as well as any installed file-sharing programs.

The MPAA said the program is expected to be available for download within a week. It has licensed rights to the program, which was first developed in Denmark.

Information detected by the file-detection program would not be shared with it or any other body, the MPAA said, but could be used to remove any "infringing movies or music files" and remove file- sharing programs.

The trade group said the program would be available for the Windows computer operating system on a special Web site established to educate consumers about copyrights.

The program could be a useful tool for parents, especially if they discover from a lawsuit that their child has been downloading pirated movies from the Web, Seltzer said.

The trade group said it would also join with the Video Software Dealers Association to place educational materials in more than 10,000 video stores nationwide. The materials will include anti-piracy ads that are also playing in theaters.

With increasing success, entertainment companies are taking matters into their own hands to fight back against Internet pirates.

The recording industry has successfully seeded hundreds of thousands of degraded, counterfeit copies of music files across popular file-sharing networks to frustrate computer users: These songs, for example, play for a few seconds normally then loop the same lyrics or play static.

Museum's famed walk-through heart restarts thanks to new makeover

By Maryclaire Dale
Associated Press

A museum patron looks at the walk-through heart. The exhibit is located in the Philadelphia-based science museum, Franklin Institute.

PHILADELPHIA — As Philadelphia's science museum pondered an update of its giant walk-through heart, an annual destination for area schoolchildren for 50 years, designers wondered whether to add a modern twist.

Given the nation's health woes, a 21st century heart might boast a bypass valve or stent.

The idea, while seriously considered, was ultimately nixed. The Franklin Institute heart should remain a healthy one, they decided.

"This is an icon and people love it. Touching things people love can be a dangerous thing," said Steve Snyder, the museum's vice president for exhibits and programs.

For Philadelphia-area baby boomers, annual class trips often meant visits to the Liberty Bell or the Franklin Institute heart, whose narrow passages and thumping audio (buh-BOOM, buh-BOOM) both frightened and delighted those who entered.

Melissa Rihm Thibault, of Raleigh, N.C., remembers "the thrill of walking through the corridors of the huge, backlit heart's interior, with the rhythmic beat surrounding me."

"It is a memory I can call up 30 years later!" she wrote in one of dozens of nostalgic tributes to the heart posted on the institute's Web site.

In October, a new crop of schoolchildren clambered through the imaginative, $2 million revamped heart as it reopened after a six-month makeover.

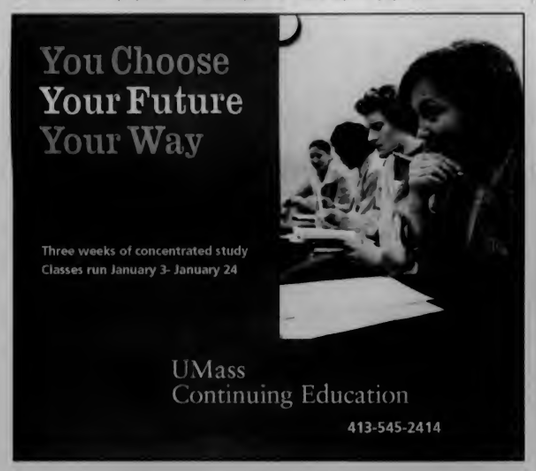
"I thought it was an amazing part of your body," a wide-eyed Lauren Myers, 10, of Wilmington, Del., exclaimed as she exited.

The two-story heart, a papier-mache-on-metal creation, opened as a temporary exhibit called "The Engine of Life" in January 1954 and quickly became the museum's signature attraction. The model underwent two earlier facelifts, but even now survives pretty much intact, save for some fresh paint and new details.

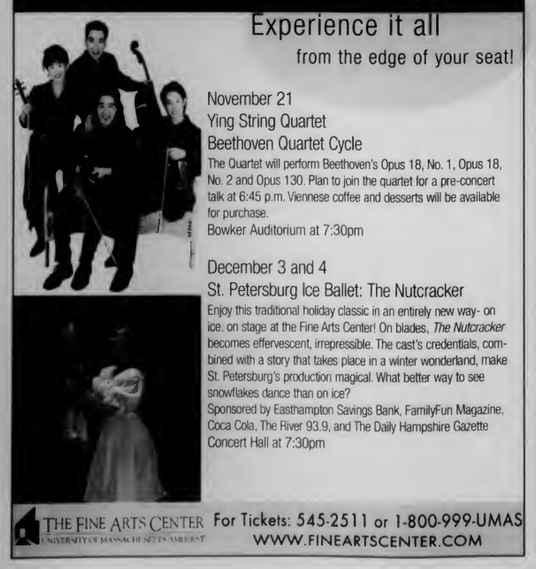
The exhibit designers — including recruits from Disney and toy maker K'Nex — saved their best work for the surrounding displays in the newly enlarged exhibit hall.

Visitors can try to lower their heart rates in a dark meditation booth, play a pinball machine to see how various cultures treated heart ailments (in Meso America A.D. 600, crushed pinewood was rubbed on the chest) or stand on a scale to estimate how much blood their bodies contain (nearly 1 gallon per 100 pounds, or 7 percent of body weight).

And every school should have a vending machine like the one here.



It doesn't dispense real food, but instead provides humorous nuggets about the wisdom of our food choices.

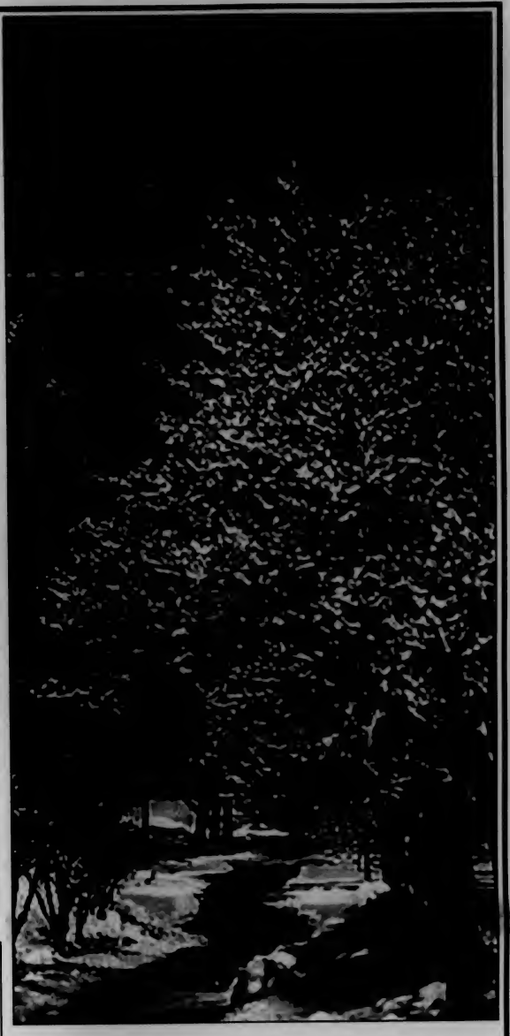


Want that large bagel with cream cheese? It'll cost you, to the tune of 550 calories and 13.5 grams of saturated fat. But the chocolate bar isn't all bad, providing at least a measure of protein and magnesium.

The bagel addict might head straight to the nearby operating theater for an early look at his future — open-heart surgery. Borrowing a page from the real-life medical programs on cable television, a TV screen in the dummy's chest cavity shows footage from a quadruple bypass.

Younger tykes can skip the gory reality and instead crawl through giant tube-shaped arteries on the floor, at least until they reach the plaque blockage.

The exhibit is designed to appeal to a variety of ages and attention spans; about half the museum's 750,000 annual visitors are families and about 35 percent school groups.



SEVERE WEATHER OR EMERGENCY CLOSING INFORMATION UMASS AMHERST

CLOSING OPTIONS*	Delayed Opening Until 11:00am (exam period 10:30am)	Closed All Day	Closed During Day	Cancellation of Evening Activities
		Campus closure in effect until midnight unless campus officially reopens on same day
WATCH OR LISTEN...	starting at 6:00 am	starting at 6:00 am	when decided	Starting at 2:00 pm
		STAY TUNED TO YOUR RADIO FOR ADDITIONAL INFORMATION
INFORMATION	Call Emergency Closing Hot Line 545-3630, watch Housing Service Cable Network (HSCN), or go to WWW.UMASS.EDU
TO RADIO/TV Stations...	Amherst (WFCR, WMUA, WRNX) ~ Greenfield (WHAI) Northampton (WHMP) ~ Pittsfield (WBEC) Springfield (WHYN, WGGB-TV, WWLP-TV) ~ Campus Dorms (HSCN) (see alphabetical listing below for frequency numbers)
WHAT WILL BE AFFECTED	Classes ~ Day Care ~ Offices ~ Activities ~ Textbook Annex ~ Meetings ~ University Store ~ Convenience Stores ~ Continuing Education ~ Bluewall ~ Hatch ~ Snack Bars at Physical Plant, Whitmore, and Hampden
WHAT WON'T BE AFFECTED (Designated ESSENTIAL PERSONNEL will report to work)	Dining Commons ~ Health Services ~ Hotel ~ Police/Security ~ Coffee Shop ~ Physical Plant ~ Conference Services ~ University Operator Other areas as pre-designated (consult your Department Head)
ATHLETICS, FINE ARTS, AND MULLINS CENTER	Athletics, Fine Arts, and Mullins Center events will take place as scheduled unless a separate announcement is made on local radio stations. Athletics Information: Sports Information Hot Line 545-2439 Fine Arts Information: 545-2511, 545-0192, or 545-0480 Mullins Center Information: 545-3001
BUS SERVICE	Buses will run unless announced separately on local radio stations. Call 545-1633 for recorded message or www.umass.edu/bus for details.
LIBRARY Academic Calendar & Intersession	Same as University
Exam Period	Delayed Opening Until 10:30am	The Library will make every effort to open. Call Library Hours Hot Line: 545-0414
Sat/Sun/ Holiday	Listen to radio or call Library Hours Hot Line: 545-0414

* If there is no vertical line, the information applies for each option.

AM		FM
WBEC	1420	WBEC	105.5	WHMP	99.3
WHAI	1240	WFCR	88.5	WHYN	93.1
WHMP	1400	WHAI	98.3	WMUA	91.1
WHYN	560			WRNX	100.9

WGGB – TV Channel 40
WWLP – TV Channel 22

PARKING SNOW POLICY
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST CAMPUS
IN EFFECT FROM 12/01/04 TO 04/15/05

The Amherst Campus Parking Snow Policy affects OVERNIGHT parking (1:00 a.m. to 7:00 a.m.) and parking during a SNOW EMERGENCY CLOSING period.

OVERNIGHT PARKING (1:00 a.m. to 7:00 a.m.):

PARKING ALLOWED (Please park your vehicle next to other parked vehicles)

Lot 24	Lot 62	Lot 25 (north of roadway to Yellow lot)
Lot 30	Lot 63	Lot 32 (west of Lincoln Avenue only)
Lot 41	Lot 65	Lot 43 including Thatcher Way (except at meters)
Lot 42	Yellow Lots	Lot 46 (except at meters)
Lot 52

PARKING ALLOWED – ONLY WITH APPROPRIATE PERMIT (Please park your vehicle next to other parked vehicles)

Lot 21		North Village
Lot 22	Lot 49	Lincoln Apartments
Lot 29	Lot 50	Any posted reserved space
Lot 44	Lot 54

PARKING NOT ALLOWED

Lot 26	Lot 40	Lot 25 (south of the roadway to Yellow lot)
Lot 27	Lot 64	Lot 32 (east of Lincoln Avenue only)
Lot 31	Lot 66	Lot 45 (except by special permit only)
Lot 33	Lot 67	Lot 47 (park in Lot 27 or Lot 44 from 1:00am to 7am)
Lot 34	Lot 68	Any campus roadway (including Southwest horseshoe)
Lot 35	Lot 71	All parking meters, including Fearing Street meters

SNOW EMERGENCY PARKING – ESSENTIAL PERSONNEL ...

During a snow emergency closing period, essential personnel who report to work may only park in the following areas:
Lot 21 (west of Southwest)
Lot 25 (west of Physical Plant and north of roadway to Yellow lot only)
Lot 30 (adjacent to Power Plant)
Lot 31 (north of Engineering and Lederle Graduate Research Center)
Lot 32 (west of Lincoln Avenue only, closest to Prince Dormitory)
Lot 34 (south of Isenberg SOM)
Lot 62 (south of Morrill Science Center)
Lot 63 Worcester Dining Common lot only (west of Worcester DC)

SUGGESTIONS / IDEAS FOR PARKING "SMART" ON A SNOW DAY ...

1. Park your vehicle next to other parked vehicles.
2. Use the UMass bus service.
3. Car pool rides whenever possible.
4. Walk if possible.
5. Have someone drop you off.
6. If space is not available in your assigned lot, go to either Lot 25 (north of roadway) or Yellow lot (both west of Physical Plant). During snow conditions, it is not possible to guarantee normal lot capacity will be available.
7. If you receive a parking citation and believe it was improperly issued, you may appeal it at Parking Services within 14 days from the date issued. Appeals can be submitted in writing, appealed in person to the Hearing Clerk, or emailed to hearings@admin.umass.edu

RESCHEDULING OF FINAL EXAMS ON OFFICIAL SNOW DAYS - FALL 2004

In order to reschedule final examinations in case of snow, two alternate exam periods have been devised. They are 6:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m. each exam day. The use of these alternative periods in the event of closings is outlined below. This policy goes into effect ONLY if the University is officially closed. The snow day Hot Line is 545-3630. If the University is open, all exams are expected to take place as scheduled. Each faculty member should inform his or her class of the planned time and location of the rescheduled final exam in the event of a snow day. All rescheduled exams will be held in the same location as published in the final exam schedule.

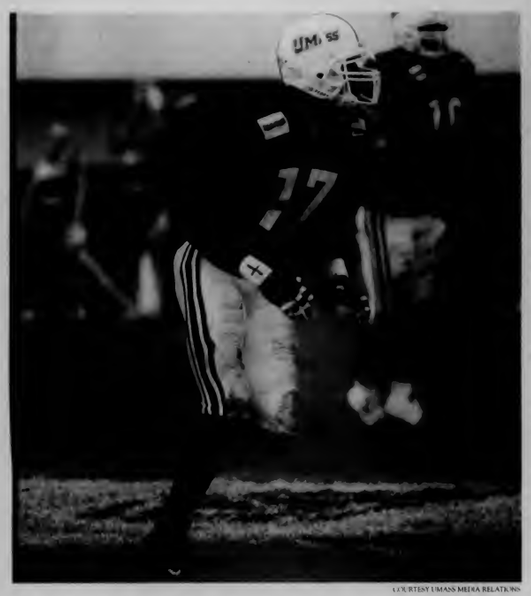
If the University is closed until 10:30 a.m.

8:00 am	rescheduled to 6:30 pm same day
10:30 am	held as originally scheduled
1:30 pm	held as originally scheduled
4:00 pm	held as originally scheduled
except:
8:00 am Dec. 22	rescheduled to 1:30 pm Dec. 22

If the University is closed all day but open in the evening:

8:00 am	rescheduled to 6:30 pm same day
10:30 am	rescheduled to 8:45 pm same day
1:30 pm	rescheduled to 6:30 pm next exam day
4:00 pm	rescheduled to 8:45 pm next exam day
except:
1:30 pm Dec. 21	rescheduled to 1:30 pm Dec. 22
4:00 pm Dec. 21	rescheduled to 4:00 pm Dec. 22

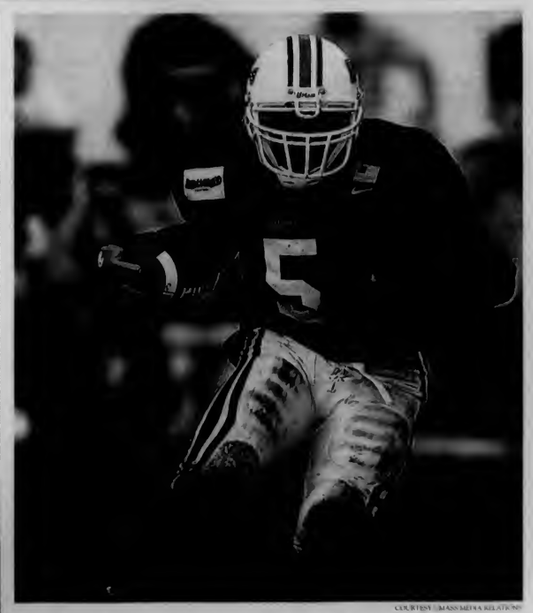
If the University is closed all afternoon and all evening:



8:00 am	held as originally scheduled
10:30 am	held as originally scheduled
1:30 pm	rescheduled to 6:30 pm next exam day
4:00 pm	rescheduled to 8:45 pm next exam day
except:
1:30 pm Dec. 21	rescheduled to 1:30 pm Dec. 22
4:00 pm Dec. 21	rescheduled to 4:00 pm Dec. 22

If the University is closed all day and all evening:

8:00 am	rescheduled to 6:30 pm next exam day
10:30 am	rescheduled to 8:45 pm next exam day
1:30 pm	rescheduled to 6:30 pm exam day after next
4:00 pm	rescheduled to 8:45 pm exam day after next
except:
1:30 pm Dec. 20	rescheduled to 1:30 pm Dec. 22
4:00 pm Dec. 20	rescheduled to 4:00 pm Dec. 22
8:00 am Dec. 21	rescheduled to 1:30 pm Dec. 22
10:30 am Dec. 21	rescheduled to 4:00 pm Dec. 22
1:30 pm Dec. 21	rescheduled to 6:30 pm Dec. 22
4:00 pm Dec. 21	rescheduled to 8:45 pm Dec. 22
8:00 am Dec. 22	rescheduled to 8:00 am Dec. 23
10:30 am Dec. 22	rescheduled to 10:30 am Dec. 23



Projected Starters

Offense	Offense
QB 10 - Tim Day, Junior	QB 11 – Anton Clarkson, Sophomore
RB 5 - Steve Baylark, Senior	RB 21 – Terry Crenshaw, Sophomore
FB 40 - Rich Demers, Senior	WR 88 – Charles Sullivan, Freshman
WR 11 – Jason Peebler, Senior	WR 12 - Isaac Irby, Senior
TE 44 – Mike Douglas, Junior	LT 52 – Jed Prisby, Sophomore
LT 77 – Colin Stoetzel, Junior	LG 65 – Tom McHugh, Junior
LG 74 – Rob Kane, Senior	C 75 – Patrick O'Brien, Senior
C 62 – Alex Miller, Sophomore	RG 64 – Chris Durkin, Sophomore
RG 73 – David Thompson, Sophomore	RT 77 – Willie Colon, Junior
RT 68 – Matt Austin, Freshman	WR 83 – Brian Wolman, Junior
WR 88 – J.J. Moore, Freshman	WR 2 – Devale Ellis, Junior
Defense	Defense
DE 95 – Keron Williams, Junior	DE 98 – Daniel Garay, Junior
DT 57 – Justin Schweighardt, Junior	DT 97 – Mickey Keene, Senior
DT 99 –Wilner Alexis, Freshman	DT 71 – Edward Greene, Junior
DE 48 – David Burris, Freshman	DE 94 – Stephen Bowen, Junior
OLB 56 – Charles Walker, Sophomore	OLB 42 – Gian Villante, Sophomore
MLB 51 – Serge Tikum, Junior (Captain)	ILB 50 – Cole Haley, Junior
OLB 35 – L.A. Love, Junior	ILB 55 – Tom Daddino, Freshman
CB 26 – Tracy Belton, Sophomore	OLB 48 – Chris Sebald, Sophomore
FS 34 – Shannon James, Junior	CB 5 – Prentice James, Junior
SS 22 – Brandon Smith, Freshman	FS 27 – Sheriet Little, Junior
CB 3 – R.J. Cobbs, Junior	CB 20 – James Glee, Senior
Special Teams	Special Teams
K 46 – Michael Torres, Sophomore	K 6 - Chris Onorato, Senior
P 13 – Christian Koegel, Sophomore	P 16 - Joe Nolan, Senior
KR 22 – Bryan Smith, Freshman	KR 1 - Brian Booth, Junior
PR 3 – R.J. Cobbs, Junior	PR 25 – Kareem Huggins, Freshman

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Starting strong safety James Ihedigbo, shown here in action last season, will miss this Saturday's season finale against Hofstra due to a suspension for an unspecified violation of team rules.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Junior tailback Steve Baylark has gone over 100 yards rushing in each of the last four games.

UMass to host A-10 rival Hofstra in season finale game, and they're going to keep coming at you until they're successful. We need to put our guys in position to stem the tide on defense, and keep them from getting in a rhythm and picking us apart through the air."

FOOTBALL from page 14

On the season Clarkson, who took over as the starter for Bobby Seck earlier this season, has put up the gaudy numbers expected from a Pride signal-caller. Taking advantage of the numerous four and five wide receiver spreads he often deploys, he's completed nearly 60 percent of his passes in throwing for 1,863 and 18 touchdowns against just six interceptions.

Working without star receiver Marques Colston, who was lost mid-season due to injury, Clarkson has found reliable targets in returning starter Isaac Irby and fellow wideouts Charles Sullivan and Devale Ellis, each of whom has caught over 50 passes individually and have combined for a whopping 27 touchdowns.

"There's no question, they have a lot of athletes at the skill positions," Brown said. "They're big guys who can really run, and they make plays. It'll be up to our guys to be on their games."

Ellis, who is second on the team with 58 receptions and leads Hofstra with 12 touchdowns, is familiar to the UMass squad, as he is the brother of UMass linebacker Bryan Ellis, a freshman who is red shirting during the 2004 season. Known for his exceptional speed and explosiveness, Ellis will provide matchup problems for the Minutemen wherever he lines up.

"He's their big play guy," Brown said. "They've always had guys who can beat you in a split second, and he's one of those guys. We need to be sure we account for him wherever he is on the field."

Despite being a predominantly pass-oriented team, Hofstra has also had success running the ball on the legs of Terry Crenshaw, who has carried 183 times for 856 yards and seven touchdowns in giving the Pride some semblance of balance on offense.

"Their running game can get overlooked because of how much they pass," Brown said. "[Crenshaw] is a capable back with a lot of ability who we can't afford to let get going. If they smack us around with the run, then that will open things up even more through the air."

On the opposite side, Brown plans on using junior tailback Steve Baylark as he has in each game over the past month: early and often. After a slow start, Baylark has come on strong with four consecutive 100-yard rushing games, and has emerged as a steadying force for what has been an erratic offensive attack at times.

"There's no secret to the fact that when we started giving the ball to Steve, we started winning," Brown said. "He's a great back who wants the ball, and we feel comfortable giving it to him knowing he can get us those tough yards."

Also important offensively for UMass will be the play of their two senior offensive captains: wide receiver Jason Peebler and guard Rob Kane. Peebler, who started fast and has faded down the stretch after being hampered by injury, caught a touchdown pass in UMass' last contest at Northeastern, a will likely be looking to make an impact in his final game in the maroon and white.

Kane, meanwhile, has continued his steady play on the offensive line, and will once again be counted on to both open holes for Baylark and protect quarterback Tim Day.

Both players efforts are noticed and appreciated by Brown, who admittedly would like nothing less than to send his first group of UMass seniors off with a win."

"Without question, this game is for our seniors," Brown said. "This is a chance for us to compete again and keep playing well, but it's also a chance to send them off the right way."

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
333 Russell St., Rt. 9
Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174
Sale date 11/18 - 11/24
responsible for typographical errors.

Beer

Heineken 24 Bottles $20.99	Sierra Nevada Pale Ale 12 pk Bottles $11.99	Sleeman 12 pk Bottles $9.99
Bud & Bud Light 30 pk Cans $18.99	Harpoon 12 pk Bottles $10.99	Tecate/Dos Equis 12 pk Bottles $9.99
Coors Light 20 pk Bottles $12.99	Bass Ale Pack 12 pk Bottle $10.99	Heineken Draught 12 pk Bottle $7.99

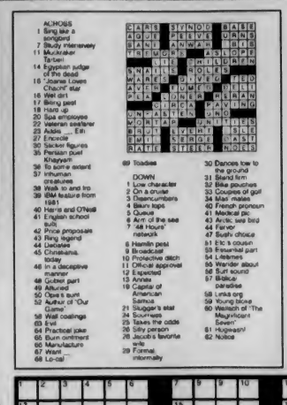
Wine	Liquor
Duckhorn 2000 Napa Cabernet 750 ml....$49.99	Belvedere Vodka 750ml....$24.99
Beaulieu Vineyards Tapestry 750ml....$32.99	Chopin Vodka 750 ml....$24.99
Solaris Winery Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot, Pinot Noir 750ml....$11.99	Courvoisier V.S. Cognac 750 ml....$23.99
B.V. Century Cellars Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot, 1.5lt.$10.99	Maker's Mark Bourbon 750 ml....$19.99
Mac Murray Ranch Pinot Gris, Pinot Noir 750ml....$9.99	Beefeater Gin 1 liter....$17.99
Graceland Cellars Jailhouse Merlot, Blue Suede Chard, The King Cab. 750ml....$9.99	Belvedere Pomarancza Vodka 375 ml....$13.99
Kendall Jackson Chardonnay, Pinot Noir 750ml....$9.99	Belvedere Cytrus Vodka 375 ml....$13.99
Barton & Guestier French Tom Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750ml....$7.99	Sauza Gold Tequila 750 ml....$13.99

Hours: Monday - Saturday 9am - 11pm, Sunday 12pm - 11pm

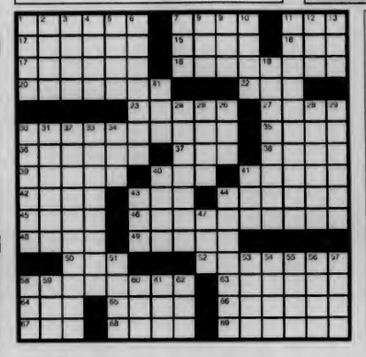
Spring Break
Some experiences don't belong on your resume
Book your trip now!
Cancun, Mexico $793
» 7 nights at the Girasol
Nassau, Bahamas $659
» 7 nights at the Colony Club
(across From the beach)
Negril, Jamaica $794
» 7 nights at the Fun Holiday BeachFront Resort
Subject to change and availability. Taxes included, but other Fees are not. Fares include roundtrip airfare From Boston. Prices are based on quad occupancy.
U of M Campus Center, Rm. 224
(413) 256.1261
www.statravel.com
STA TRAVEL
STUDENT TRAVEL & BEYOND

Panda East
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!
Open Hours:
Mon - Thur: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Fri & Sat: 11:30am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12pm-10pm
Delivery: 413.549.0077
telephone 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
We accept OCMP and all major credit cards.
We serve Chinese and Japanese food and also feature a sushi bar.

Amherst Computerworks, Inc.
PC & Laptop Sales/Service/Repair 5-College Certified Vendor
Laptop & LCD Projector Rentals
Repairing Macs and all brands of PC's
Selling new Custom desktop & laptop PC's
9 East Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
Est. 1990
Phone: (413) 548-8900
Fax: (413) 548-8030
acc@acipc.com



STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center



Quote of the Day

"The sea was angry that day my friends. Like an old man trying to send back soup in a deli."

-George, Seinfeld

Amherst Brewing Company
The place where there's always fun and entertainment brewin'!
November 18th Karaoke w/ Cloud Nine Productions
November 20th Either Orbit American Rock
November 22nd The Amity Front Neo-shiny Band NFL FOOTBALL ON A 51" WIDE SCREEN TV WITH FREE BUFFET BARBEAT HALFTIME
www.amherstbrewing.com
Live Music Every Saturday & Monday Night

Make a Dream come true... submit a comic

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
That Avril Lavigne poster has got to go in a bad way.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You should tidy up your room a bit. You're going to have a surprise guest.

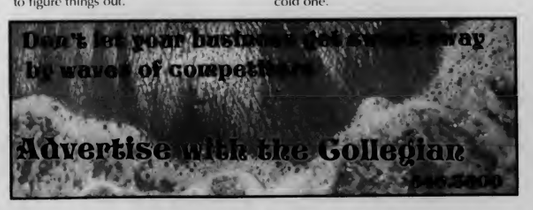
aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Today your bed is going to feel more wonderful than it has ever felt before.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You are going to have a golden opportunity to do something you've always wanted to.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You're halfway there, living on a prayer. Hold on to what you've got.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Right now, you need to take some time to figure things out.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Be careful around expensive equipment. You, or your friends, might have an accident.



virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Today you are a bubbling fountain of profundity.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't be afraid to ask questions about anything and everything.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If only you could walk in a straight line, like normal people.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You're going to go blind from staring at your computer screen like it's your job.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Put on your wool socks. It's gonna be a cold one.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule you non-sales fundraise with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser 888-923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

Montreal Montreal Madness Weekends from $89. Most weekends, starting November 5th Global Express Tours www.MontrealExpress.net 781-979-9001

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

Mass Mahketing and Citibank present the Spend Smaht Tour 2004 featuring Mission: IMPROVable. Join us for a fun-filled evening of laughs, free food and most importantly, credit education. Blue Wall Nov 15 @ noon, Southwest Patterson Dorm Nov 16 @ 7pm, Central Gorman Dorm Nov 17 @ 7pm, Sylvan Cashin Dorm Nov 17 @ 8:30pm, Southwest Kennedy Dorm Nov 18 @ 7pm, SOM Atrium Nov 19 @ 6pm. www.Students.UseCreditWisely for credit tips. Brought to you by Mass Mahketing and Citi Credit-Ed$pm.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Apartment 1 Bedroom Sitting room Full bath Kitchen Amherst Boarder Call Roohina at 549-6091

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING INTERNSHIPS Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

EMPLOYMENT

MOVIE EXTRAS! ACTORS! MODELS! Make $100 - $300 / day No experience required PT/FT All Looks Needed Call 800-773-8223

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

FOR SALE

Avon Special MP3 & 100's of gifts under $10 Buy or Sell. Kat ISR 413-585-1581.

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and

SERVICES

Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

TRAVEL

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRSVNG Online cannot be combined with any other offer. Limit - off based on quad room. Only valid for trips with airfare. Expires 1/1/2005.
www.sunsplashtours.com
1 800 426 7710

WANTED

Ever wanted to be a zombie? Well now you can! Feature-length student film looking for large amounts of zombie actors. Email Faytaers@hotmail.com for more details.

Snowboard events intern $50/day stipend. For job description email jfriends@deerfield.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY NOVEMBER 18, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The end of the road

11 seniors will play their final game as UMass hosts Hofstra

BY MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When the Massachusetts football team takes the field at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium for the final time in 2004 on Saturday, it will indeed do so with a lot to prove.

Over the course of a season that has been dominated by change, slowed by transition and thrown off course by the worst of luck, Don Brown's Minutemen have certainly experienced their ups and downs both on the field and off. There have been times where things have worked perfectly as planned, but for the most part the Maroon and White has had to endure a series of trials and tribulations that have tested the team's collective mettle to the fullest. It has been a campaign not for the faint of heart.

Yet just as the Minutemen reached their low point — a 28-7 loss at James Madison on Oct. 9 — they somehow managed to regroup, and eventually recharge. Now, as the season winds down to a close, UMass is playing its best football of the Don Brown era, the type of football Brown and the team knew they were capable of playing.

Thus when Atlantic 10 North rival Hofstra invades Amherst this weekend for the third consecutive season, there will be more than simple bragging rights at stake. Coming off of a bye week, Brown's Minutemen are keenly aware of the momentum they've gathered, and the progress they've made, but more importantly they realize the significance of the game for their seniors, playing in front of the home crowd for the final time in their UMass careers. With that, they also realize the need to go out in one last blaze of glory, on a high note, and with a win.

"There's no question, this team has watched and felt itself get better over the course of each and every game," Brown said. "It's frustrating in a way to finally be clicking now that the season is ending, but it speaks a lot to the poise and character of this team to not pack it in when things weren't going well, and to keep playing football."

The task will not be an easy one for UMass on Saturday, as the Pride will enter play boasting the No.1 offense in the Atlantic 10. Led by first-year starting quarterback Anton Clarkson, head coach Joe Gardi's run-and-shoot attack will put the pressure on UMass' talented defensive backfield from whistle to whistle — a challenge that the defensive-minded Brown clearly looks forward to.

"As a defensive guy, I always like a challenge like this," Brown said. "Hofstra wants to beat you with their throw

See FOOTBALL on page 12

GAME DAY CENTRAL

Hofstra ★	Massachusetts
(5-5 Overall 3-4 Patriot League)	(5-5 Overall 3-4 Atlantic 10)
Last Week: Lost to Northeastern 37-34 in 2OT	Last Week: Bye Week

Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium – Amherst, Massachusetts (17,000/Grass)
Kickoff: 12 noon

TELEVISION: METRO TV - New York (Carl Reuter: play-by-play, Steve Jackson: color commentary)

RADIO: UMass Football Radio Network – WRNX 100.9 FM Holyoke, flagship (Bob Behler: play-by-play, Doug White: color commentary)
UMass Student Radio – WMUA 91.1 FM Amherst (Jonathan Junkins: play-by-play, Matt Festo: color commentary)
Hofstra Radio – WRHU 88.7 FM Hempstead, New York (Jared Greenberg: play-by-play, Pete McCarthy: color commentary)

Series record: Hofstra leads 5-2
Last meeting: UMass 27 Hofstra 22 - October 18, 2003, Amherst, MA

2004 UMass Football Senior Class

21 - Ricky Applah	18 - Steve Howell
87 - Luis Ballestas	74 - Rob Kane
8 - Leroy Brooks	11 - Jason Peebler
40 - Rich Demers	43 - Steve Wysocki
47 - Mike Gillespie	82 - Sean Young
33 - Matt Goldstein

COURTESY OF STUDENT-ATHLETE RELATIONS

Senior captain Jason Peebler will play the final game in his UMass career on Saturday against Hofstra.

Bears sign former UMass star Jeremy Cain to four-year deal

After spending the last 10 weeks on the practice squad, former Massachusetts linebacker Jeremy Cain was added to the Chicago Bears' active roster after signing a four-year contract with the team earlier this week. Terms of the contract were not disclosed, and the team placed defensive back Alfonso Marshall on injured reserve to make room for Cain.

The Bears originally signed Cain in late April after he was not selected in the 2004 National Football League Draft. The linebacker was invited to camp and spent the preseason on the active roster, but found himself on the practice squad at the start of the season.

A two-time All America selection and a candidate for the Buck Buchanan Award, during both of his final seasons at UMass, Cain currently ranks fifth in career tackles on the school's all-time list with 363, and fourth in career solo tackles with 252.

Serving as a tri-captain in 2003 under coach Mark Whipple, Cain was named first team All-Atlantic 10 after totaling 107 tackles and four sacks in leading UMass to an A-10 championship. He also garnered All America honors from both Don Hansen's National Weekly Football Gazette and The Sports Network, while also being named to the Division I-AA all-star team.

-Mike Marzelli

Men's and women's cross country competes in NCAA Regional

BY MARTHA POWERS & ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Saturday, the UMass men's cross-country team finished 21st out of 37 teams in the NCAA Northeast Regional meet. The Minutemen had been looking to perform better, but any more attempts will have to wait until next year, as this was the team's last meet of the season.

"It was disappointing for us to follow the same pattern where two or three people perform a little above average, a few perform below average, and some perform average," Coach O'Brien said.

Finishing first for UMass was junior Ryan Corbett, placing 62nd. Senior Matt Clark finished 120th, and senior Andy McCarron followed closely in 126th. Junior Paul Noone came in 141st, and freshman Matt Klypka was 155th. Rounding out the top seven was freshman Ryan Durkin in 159th, and freshman Nils Fischer in 173rd.

"I guess [our placing] was not completely unexpected. It appears as though we are making progress, but we are not all making it at the same time," O'Brien said.

MATTHEW REDDY/COLLEGIAN

The UMass men's and women's cross country team concluded their respective seasons last weekend.

"I think that even though we are at the end of the season, we are still an inexperienced team. The team needs more time running and competing to gain the confidence they need to actually allow themselves to physically compete at the level I think they are capable of."

"They haven't competed at that level yet, so we're trying to establish a baseline for them to be confident at a certain level. It takes a while to get there. I would like to see it come faster, and I'm sure they would too. I think it's like anything, if you don't have your routine worked out to the best yet, sometimes you're on and sometimes you're not quite on," O'Brien said.

The team was also less than satisfied with their finish. "I think they were disappointed. They would like to feel as though they get better every week, and in theory you should, but in reality sometimes you just have to take some different steps," O'Brien said.

"You can't just put your shoes on and run a race and become better simply because it is one week later. The kids have to take some steps. I think we had some guys do that this week. We had some guys try different race plans that worked out, but we just haven't had enough time to polish that out. Mostly I think that they are disappointed because they knew that they have the potential to be a better team," O'Brien said.

Even though the team's record improved from last year, it was not all that everyone had expected. "My hope is that everyone has had enough experiences individually. I think we had three good races this year as a team. Our first race, our second race, and the Central Connecticut race where more people that not had above average races. So, that is three out of seven," O'Brien.

"The guys have had a smattering of visibility into what their potential is, and that picture is positive. Our practice routine improved tremendously, and we were able to accomplish a higher-level workout. They are running more miles per week than last year, and they have run more quality workouts."

"We had a few more injuries than I anticipated, and we had a few more sub-par races. But for the most part, I think we had enough good things to give the kids some kind of vision as to where they can go. But at the same time we had some disappointments in trying to reach what we had hoped to do this year. We gained a lot, but not all we had hoped to gain," O'Brien said.

"But, hopefully that will be enough to give them a step up for the track season."

The Massachusetts Women's cross country team finished 21st overall at this weekend's NCAA Regional meet.

Freshman Christina Derosa, who finished first place among UMass runners in every meet this season, placed 63rd out of a total of 230 runners, and led UMass to 21st placing out of thirty-five teams. Along with Derosa were two veteran senior captains, Amanda Dahlberg (117th place) and Alexis Anzelone(129th place), who gave UMass consistency all season long.

Cuisle Kierens, Erin O'Donnell, Ashley Davidson and Trica Silva ran with a minute amount of time in-between them and displayed a good performance against the northeast's best. Providence and Columbia were the top two teams and will move on to the national competition.

Throughout the season, UMass finished seventh at the New Hampshire Invitational, first at the UMass invitational, second at the Orange Classic, eleventh at the New England Championships, sixth at the Albany Invitational, fifth at the Atlantic Ten Championships, and twenty-first at regionals.

According to Lafreniere, the problem last season was that the girls were practicing well, but not bringing it to the meets. This year however, thanks to consistent top runners Derosa, Anzelone, Dahlberg and Kierens, the improvement was noticeable.

The seniors for UMass that ran the last cross-country meet of their college careers are Dahlberg, Anzelone, Silva and Loren Donohue. While these leaders will be missed, Lafreniere has much to look forward to for the future and hopes to build on this successful season.

Six out of the 16 runners this season were freshman and with Lafreniere's excellent track record when it comes to recruiting, the future looks bright for the prominent UMass coach.

Past, present, and the future of the gay culture
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

FRIDAY: High: 59, Low: 29
SATURDAY: High: 49, Low: 35
SUNDAY: High: 51, Low: 41
DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Minutemen travel to Orono to play Black Bears
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 52

Lombardi announces Capital Plan

BY CASEY NOVAK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Chancellor John V. Lombardi announced "good news" to the University of Massachusetts Faculty Senate Thursday, declaring "with some degree of confidence" that the $400 million Capital Plan, which would consist of the renovation and reconstruction of existing buildings, as well as three new major constructions, should be underway in the near future.

At the 634th Regular Meeting of the Faculty Senate, Lombardi explained that the Capital Plan would include a new Integrated Sciences building for undergraduates, an expansion of Skinner Hall in order to bring all nursing programs on the campus together, as well as adding a new, well-ventilated Visual Arts Studio.

"In the process of dealing with these three big buildings, we've taken the opportunity to try and do them all together," Lombardi said.

According to the plan, all of the buildings will be located on North Pleasant Street, which will allow them to be integrated together with the usage of pathways and better traffic flow. However, the Chancellor warned about the hassle and inconvenience the construction will cause during the live years it would take to complete.

"All of us will be living with an extraordinarily messed up campus," Lombardi cautioned. That means there will be detours and all kinds of things we will need to cope with.

"But remember to celebrate it. It's new dirt — celebrate it because it is what will save us and allow us to be successful in our faculty and our staff and our students," he said. "It will also allow us to maintain our competitiveness so that while we struggle with detours we want to celebrate that change because without it, we will not be successful. So this is all good news."

ADRIENNE ROSS/COLLEGIAN

Chancellor John Lombardi addresses the Faculty Senate yesterday. He revealed that plans for large scale campus renovations and construction of new dormitories are underway.

Among the renovations, Lombardi said the Campus Center's roof and windows need to be replaced in order to stop leaks. The renovations are estimated to cost about nine million dollars.

Fire alarms also need to be upgraded and elevators in many buildings need replacement, according to Lombardi.

Renovations would also take place in Morrill, Goessman, the Graduate Research Center and Lab Safety.

"All of [these improvement costs] go into the total of $400 million that will be spent," said Lombardi. "Some of this will be borrowed money, some will be taken out of our operating budget, which is done every year, and another small amount comes from the state."

After the meeting, Lombardi discussed that the renovation plans also include building a new dormitory with about 800 beds behind Sylvan, on the old women's athletic field.

"We would begin this project in early to mid-Fall of 2005," Lombardi said. Although there is no architect yet, the Chancellor added that the design is now in progress.

Even if the University's enrollment does not grow, there are still too many students in most dormitories on campus, Lombardi said. He said the new dorm near Sylvan could also be used to house students while empting already existing rooms in order to make renovations.

Depending on how fast enrollment grows; Lombardi said the plan would include adding a total of around 1,800 beds.

During the meeting, Lombardi also spoke on the importance of replacing faculty lost on campus during the last big retirement cycle.

"So far we have been extremely successful in recruiting truly wonderful new faculty," Lombardi said. "But at the same time we have not yet brought the number of faculty up to a number that makes any of us feel warm, cozy and comfortable."

According to the chancellor, there are still less than 1,000 faculty members at UMass, but he would like to bring that number to at least 1,100.

"This is a very significant challenge for us and relates to our ability to generate revenue," he said.

Lombardi also offered words of praise to SPIRE, saying that so far it appears to be working without any significant errors and students have been enrolling at rates that are as good and better than ever before.

"We continue to hold our breath, but all signs are good," Lombardi said. "That doesn't mean we are entirely happy with every part of SPIRE, but at least the damn thing is working."

Du Bois library to receive local donations soon

BY RYAN ALGATE
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Jeffrey Amherst Bookshop and College Store will donate 10 percent of its Thanksgiving weekend proceeds to benefit the University of Massachusetts' W.E.B Du Bois Library for the second year in a row.

For Howard Gersten, the bookstore's owner, it remains a meaningful fundraising effort.

"I think it's important to give as much as you can [to the library,]" Gersten said. "It's such a great library — a great resource for the students. And we would like to support it as much as we can."

In addition to the proceeds from Thanksgiving weekend, the bookshop will begin donating 10 percent of daily earnings to the UMass library beginning next Friday. Shoppers at the bookshop will also be able to participate in a drawing for store gift certificates.

Although this particular fundraising drive was established only last year, Gersten has worked to raise funds for local libraries for much longer.

"Every year for maybe the last 20 years we have done something similar with the Jones Library," he said.

Through a mutual agreement between the Friends of the Jones Library and Gersten, the bookshop donates 10 percent of sales for the first weekend of December to the Jones Library annually. Because it is so close to Christmas, the Jones Library benefit has historically been a successful one.

Last year, Gersten approached UMass library administrators with the idea for a Thanksgiving weekend benefit. They obliged, and the first benefit generated more than $500. This year, Gersten hopes to make an even greater contribution.

According to Emily Silverman, director of Library Communication and Development, the students will very soon benefit from the money raised.

"Once we determine what's most needed for the students, the money will be applied directly towards buying specific materials for the library," she said.

In order to determine what the most pressing needs are Silverman consults other librarians, each of whom is assigned to a specific academic field. After considering their recommendations, Silverman expects that the money raised will be dispersed across several academic fields. Likely expenses include full-text databases, new books, magazines and computer equipment, as well as staffing for the library.

Although proceeds from the Jeffrey Amherst benefit are earmarked for direct spending, most donations to the UMass library are invested in endowment funds. Traditionally, the donations sit and accumulate interest in these endowments. Later, this interest is used to buy materials for the library.

"We have several different endowed funds, but over time we need additional annual support, which is why we are very appreciative of all the potential shoppers," she said.

"It's a really nice chunk of money for the library," added Susan McBride, Silverman's assistant.

This year's benefit is in keeping with a reciprocal business relationship between the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and the Jeffrey Amherst bookshop. In the past, the book-

See DU BOIS on page 2

Professor urges computer use in hospitals

BY MARIA VARMAZIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Dr. Raymond Yang, a professor of Environmental and Radiological Health Sciences at Colorado State University, presented several cases of health problems caused by various chemical interactions that could better understood with the help of computer models yesterday in Goodell Hall. His lecture was titled "Chemical Mixtures and Multiple Stressors: Health Concerns."

Yang said that data gathered from a hazardous waste situation presents scientists with a potentially infinite number of chemical combinations to analyze, which makes finding a conclusive solution seemingly impossible by human reasoning alone. He added that advances in technology are important for complex situations.

"It's very complex, but to a computer it's nothing," he said. One of his first examples of health ramifications of chemical mixtures was that of Gulf War Syndrome, an illness that has affected approximately 29 percent of all 700,000 troops deployed during the first Gulf War.

"Some physicians attribute it to 'it's all in your head,'" said Yang. "My thinking is totally different."

The demolition of Iraqi chemical-filled munitions sent clouds of hazardous gas into the air troops breathed, possibly affecting 100,000 of them. Yang firmly believes Gulf War Syndrome is a direct result of multiple stressors conflicting and reacting in soldiers.

"Soldiers were given as many as 17 vaccines," he said, adding that one of which was never approved by the FDA. "What might be the end result of that — nobody knows."

Another example of multiple chemicals and stressors conflicting within the human body is that of Adverse Drug Reaction (ADR).

He explained that oftentimes severely ill hospital patients are given an average of eight drugs at a time, which can result in drug reactions.

Yang claimed that ADR is the fourth- to sixth-leading cause of death in the United States.

"I wouldn't be surprised if toxicological overaction was responsible for some of those deaths," he said.

When exposure to hazardous chemicals in war or a disaster situation is combined with environmental stresses such as harsh wind or smoke, Yang stressed that there are "infinite different kinds of combinations" that could result in reactions in the human body. He explained that even personal health factors as simple as a common cold will change how a human body reacts to chemical exposure.

ADRIENNE ROSS/COLLEGIAN

Professor Raymond Yang from Colorado State University speaks on technology use for medical purposes.

"The only way to deal with this kind of issue is in concert with computer simulation," Yang said.

Analyzing experimental data would be far too daunting and time consuming by human hands, and Yang hoped students attending his lecture would be convinced to conduct their own research using computers.

From data gathered from experiments with rats and plugging that data into software custom made for his studies, Yang was able to predict what would happen to humans when exposed to certain stressors.

"You come up with a model that is useful and basically you do your experiment on a computer," he said. "You have endless, endless resources to do this."

Veterans denounce Iraqi occupation

BY MATT ELDER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Marine veteran Mike Hoffman led a four-person panel Wednesday in the Campus Center, denouncing the war in Iraq while sharing some of his stories from over seas.

The panel spoke to over 50 people, and included Susan Schuman, the founder of Military Families Speak Out, Annie Zirin of the International Socialist Organization and Matt Andrews of the UMass Antiwar Coalition.

"I've got dead Iraqis on my hands and it kills me everyday," said Hoffman, who was involved in the initial military push into Baghdad.

The panel's agenda for the evening was to discuss many reasons why the troops should be sent home. Everyone on the panel seemed to agree that the media is not portraying the war accurately.

Schuman said that the press did not talk about her son Justin, who was gone for 15 months, sitting in an eight-by-10 foot abandoned Police barracks for a year. She said that her son lacked proper food, water and equipment.

"I think our voice is powerful," Schuman said of her group Military Families Speak out, which has over 5,000 families in it. She said that she thinks people will listen to her more because of how close she is to the situation.

Hoffman agreed that many troops in Iraq are not given necessities like food and equipment. Hoffman said that he joined the Marines in 1999, when a recruiter approached him while he was working at his local mall. He said he was working a "dead end" job there.

The veteran said that the recruiter offered him three meals a day, a steady paycheck, and a roof over his head. He accepted the offer.

However, Hoffman said that he started to see the reason why he was being shipped off to Iraq, which he found out days before he was scheduled to leave the Marines.

"When I signed up, I didn't sign up to fight for oil," he said. Schuman said that two of Justin's friends committed suicide while in Iraq, and that the media does not cover stories of that nature.

"The war will never go away for my son, that is clear," she said. Hoffman agreed with the seriousness of depression in the military.

He said that when he came home he had to seek psychological treatment for post-traumatic stress disorder, a condition that is common among people in the military.

When the discussion turned to question-and-answer, the first person came out and proudly spoke to the audience about the war.

Greg Krill came to the front of the room and talked about how his experience in Iraq was much different than Hoffman's. He said he was fed better over there than he is here, and most of the people he talked to voiced anger about the United States not coming to their country a decade earlier.

"All I cared about was the Iraqis," he said. He added his belief that we cannot simply leave the country, as many people suggested throughout the night.

However, Hoffman main-

See VETS on page 2

US troops find command center in Iraq

BY MAGGIE MICHAEL
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — U.S. troops sweeping through Fallujah on Thursday found what appeared to be a command center used by followers of Jordanian terrorist Abu Musab al-Zarqawi, and a U.S. general expressed confidence the battle for the city has "broken the back of the insurgency."

A separate raid near the suspected command center uncovered a bomb-making workshop where an SUV registered in Texas was being converted into a car bomb and a classroom that held flight plans and instructions on shooting down planes, according to a CNN crew embedded with the U.S. Army.

Gunbattles still flared in Fallujah as troops hunted holdout insurgents five days after the military said its forces had occupied the entire city 40 miles west of Baghdad. One U.S. Marine and one Iraqi soldier were killed, U.S. officials said.

At a base outside Fallujah, Lt. Gen. John Sattler, commander of the 1st Marine Expeditionary Force, said the U.S. casualty toll in the Fallujah offensive stood at 51 dead and about 425 wounded. An estimated 1,200 insurgents have been killed, with about 1,025 enemy fighters detained, the military says.

Sattler told reporters he felt the U.S.-led attack on the city had dealt a serious blow to the insurgency.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Peter Foundas
Managing Editor Andrew Merritt
Business Manager Rich Pacheco
Production Manager Cory Rosenberg
News Supervisor Cameron Woods
Assistant Manager Tiffany Sugalski
Internal Production Samantha Nielsen
Arts & Living Editor Meghan Healy
Comics Editor Alyson Zillmann
Editorial Editor Paige Crum
News Editor Erika Lesley
Photo Editor Matthew Reid
Sports Editor Mike Marzelli
Original Work Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Administrator Marty Eppas
Distribution Manager Josh Kiggans
Finance Manager Hirak Shah
Accounting Clerk Virginie Frocault
Human Resources Sandra Marquez
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising Josh Greenberg
Assistant Business Jacklyn Sorenson
Assistant Events Thomas Hecht
Assistant Production Rachael Bruno
Layout Assistant Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Mike Busack
Asst. Arts & Living Monique Jemmott
Assistant Editorial Yousef Munayyer
Assistant Editorial Allison Edles
Assistant News Julie O'Donnell
Assistant News Dan O'Brien
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern
Assistant Sports Jeff Howe

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the academic year except during vacations and examination periods. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on approximately $1 million annual budget. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Index Log. In 1891, the Weekly Collegian is born. In 1914, the Weekly Collegian is 1915. Published three times weekly since January 1994. For subscription rates and information, call 545-3500.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Adrienne Bossi
COPY EDITOR
Meghan Healy
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Matthew Reid, Nick Belanger

Campus Perspectives

By Adrienne Bossi

What interesting tradition does your family have for Thanksgiving ?

sophomore

"We go to dinner at Katella Deli in Southern California, but next year they are all coming out here for Thanksgiving."

Shirfa Yonis
Chemisty major

sophomore

"My family usually makes chicken, duck, or even beef. Anything but turkey!"

Karl E. Salomon
Economics major

senior

"My mom bakes eight different kinds of pie."

Jeremiah Read
Biology major

senior

"TURKEY!!!!!"

Caitlin Trahan
Food science major

Officials investigating Mad Cow claims

By Tom Raum
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is checking a possible new case of mad cow disease, officials said Thursday, rattling the nation's cattle industry, food processors and beef-oriented restaurant chains.

Additional checks are being conducted after initial testing proved inconclusive on the suspect brain tissue. Officials said the animal never entered the food or feed chain.

The Agriculture Department gave no information on the location or origin of the slaughtered animal and said results from advanced tests were not expected before four to seven days.

Ranches and businesses dependent on beef are still feeling financial effects from the nation's only confirmed case of the fatal brain-wasting disease last December.

And Thursday's announcement sent cattle prices tumbling on fears that foreign markets would remain closed to U.S. beef. Shares of McDonald's, Wendy's, and other restaurant chains that feature hamburgers also slumped, as did those of U.S. meat producers.

Mad cow disease, or bovine spongiform encephalopathy, attacks an animal's nervous system. People who eat food contaminated with BSE can contract a rare disease that is nearly always fatal, variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease.

"The inconclusive result does not mean we have found another case of BSE in this country," said Andrea Morgan, associate deputy administrator of the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

COURTESY THEBIGPICTURE.COM

Beef from cows that is being imported into the U.S. may be tainted with Mad Cow Disease, which has launched a federal investigation.

The "inconclusive result" was the same term the agency used in June when two potential cases turned out to be false alarms. Inconclusive results "are a normal component of screening tests, which are designed to be extremely sensitive so they will detect any sample that could possibly be positive," Morgan said.

"USDA remains confident in the safety of the U.S. beef supply," she added.

An industry representative seconded that view.

"Inconclusive test results are just what they sound like — inconclusive," said J. Patrick Boyle, president of the American Meat Institute. "Regardless of the outcome of this test result, U.S. beef is safe."

Library receiving local donations

DU BOIS from page 1

shop has helped raise funds by selling books donated by the library. In turn, the library has often ordered new books through the bookshop.

"They are an independent bookstore, so we would like to buy our materials from them whenever possible. It's a nice synergy," she said.

As part of this continuing tradition, UMass professor Stephen Gelbach, the former dean of the School of Public Health, will offer a reading and signing of his recent book "American Plagues: Lessons from Our Battles with Disease" at the bookshop during the Thanksgiving weekend.

If you would like to help support the UMass library through this benefit, but cannot currently afford new books, Silverman recommends ordering them this weekend for future purchase.

"It counts. It will still go towards helping us," she said.

The Jeffrey Amherst Bookshop and College Store is located at 55 S. Pleasant Street in Amherst center. For more information, call them at 413-253-3381, or contact by e-mail at jeffamhbk@aol.com

Local veterans share experiences in Iraq

VETS from page 1

tained the stance that he took all night.

"The best way to help them is not to occupy them," Hoffman said as he stated a survey that said 80 percent of the Iraqis see the U.S. forces as occupiers and not liberators.

"Us being there is causing a lot of violence," he said.

Hoffman continued talking about how much damage we have done to their country. "We have decimated this country," he said, referring to Iraq and the violence that occurs there.

Hoffman said that one of the reasons he has started to speak out is because of a group of Vietnam veterans helped him out, saying they too know what really happens in wartime. Many people in the audience compared the two wars.

Despite their different stances on many matters, Krill and Hoffman shook hands after the discussion ended.

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL of AMERICA

WANT A HOT JOB?
Learn to be a Professional Bartender!
Classes Starting Now!
Boston Bartenders School
218 Memorial Avenue • West Springfield
1-800-357-3210
www.bostonbartender.com

EXECUTIVE VALET PARKING
Serving Bradley Airport
Airport Parking College Special!
$25.00*-Up to 7 Days Parking. Valid 11/23-11/30
$50.00*-Up to 5 Weeks Parking. Valid 12/15-02/01/05
Valid College ID Req., Present this coupon or Visit us at:
www.CollegeAirportParking.com
800-218-1297
*Plus 4% Access Fee. Cannot be Combined with Other offers bluejeanlady

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 2004

"It is hard enough to remember my opinions, without also remembering my reasons for them."
-Friedrich Nietzsche

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

More than a metaphor

Sanam Hakim

When I was a kid, like most children, there were foods I wouldn't eat just because they looked gross, people on television that I laughed at because they were dressed funny and buildings I was scared to go in because they looked scary.

Adults around me smiled, patted my head and said, "Sanam, don't ever judge a book by its cover."

As the years went on, and I advanced in my education, not judging a book by its cover wasn't even a good metaphor anymore. What if the book's cover was accidentally ripped off? What if the book had a really bad cover but was placed between really good books? What if the book had an amazing cover but was written by a bad author? What if the title sounds bad but the picture looks good? What if everyone else tells me it's a bad book? Can I judge it then?

Take, for example, everything that is going on with the SGA right now.

The entire student body has learned a few new names like SGA, SCERA and ALANA, and throws those words around with mindless and inappropriate judgments attached to them.

First of all, the SGA is every fee-paying undergraduate student, not the 10 or so students you read about in the paper. The SGA is broken down into branches, one of which is the Legislative branch, also known as the Senate, which is the one we read about every Thursday on the main page of the paper. The names mentioned in these Thursday Senate articles are always the same names, over and over again, yet somehow people are saying that we should just throw out the entire SGA.

These statements make no sense and are derived from reading the front page of the Collegian, which is essentially from the viewpoint of the person who wrote the article. Do not judge the student governing body by your weekly Collegian article with mention of only a few people; judge it by your own volition. If you want to propose throwing out the entire SGA, go to a Senate meeting. Get all your facts straight and then pass judgment.

Second of all, the "scandalous" photos of students drinking in the SCERA office are now being called "SCERA photos," and SCERA is being called a racist organization, which is completely unfair and uncalled for. To refer to "SCERA" photos and/or call SCERA 'a racist organization' is bringing down the entire agency and hindering its progress.

I personally work for SCERA, and I am not a racist. In fact, racism is something that I have been fighting against since I was a child. To hear anyone judge my moral character based on the actions of a few people in that office, or for anyone to tell me that I am working for a racist organization. If you would like to call that office 'racist,' please contact me or visit the office first to back up your statements because these blind accusations are hurting the agency.

Third of all, the term "ALANA" is being used as one word to label multiple groups of people.

In reality, the term "ALANA" is synonymous to the word "minority," so when people say "ALANA this and ALANA that," they are talking about every minority on this campus. In reality, it's in reference to only a handful of people. This generic "ALANA" label that's being thrown around is usually in reference to five different active groups: The Office of ALANA Affairs, the ALANA Caucus, ALANA RSO's, ALANA Caucus-appointed senators and the entire ALANA community.

If you are going to propose any article about "dismantling" ALANA, at least propose it correctly. Getting rid of ALANA is proposing to get rid of all minorities. Don't judge an entire group of people based on the actions of a few. If you disagree with what a few people are doing, getting rid of the whole thing is a ridiculous proposition. Learn your terms. Get all your facts straight. Then make a judgment.

On a more personal level, I have been a columnist for the Daily Collegian for almost three years. Next to each column I write is my full name: Sanam Hakim. I am proud of my name, but sometimes I am judged by it. Sanam Hakim is a Middle Eastern name. Therefore I must be Muslim, wear a veil, have a thick accent and only hang out with other Middle Easterners.

It is only when you read a book that you attain the understanding and ability to judge it. If you don't feel like reading, keep your mouth shut, because your judgments are blind and do nothing but harm to this University.

Last year, someone called me on the phone and told me he was writing a story about an Arabic girl for one of his classes. He told me he saw my name in the paper, and decided to call me because he wanted to hear what an Arabic accent sounded like.

First of all, I am not an Arab. I am an Iranian. Second of all, I have no accent, although I can speak both Farsi and Spanish. This year, I wrote an article about how women dress like prostitutes for Halloween, and I got a response from someone, addressing me as 'Miss Hakim' about 30 times, who told me that it was not fair to criticize women who want to wear a naughty nurse costume instead of a burka. A burka is a loose veil garment worn by some Muslim women. I do not wear a burka or veil my face and I am not even Muslim. I am a Baha'i. Do not judge people by their names, because chances are really good that you will be wrong.

I propose that we should change the old metaphor about judging books by their covers and bring in a new idea. No one should have the right to judge any book, regardless of who says it's good or bad, what the title is or what the cover looks like, unless they read the book first. It is only when you read a book that you attain the understanding and ability to judge it. If you don't feel like reading, keep your mouth shut, because your judgments are blind and do nothing but harm to this University.

Sanam Hakim is a Collegian columnist.

How right can we go?

Matthew Reid

Colin Powell's recent resignation as Secretary of State was bad enough. It's one thing to lose one of the greatest public servants this country has seen in years, but to make things worse, Powell's replacement will be National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice. So much for Bush's plane to bridge the gap in this already divided country.

In his Nov. 3 acceptance speech, following the concession of Sen. John Kerry, Bush admitted he failed at unifying the people of the United States. The gap between the left and right was wider than ever when Bush won a second term, but he said he would do everything in his power to fix the problem. He isn't off to a good start by placing someone who is possibly farther to the right than he is as the nation's top diplomat.

Powell, a four-star general and one of the great voices of moderation in the government, is being replaced by, essentially, a smarter, shrewder version of George Bush. Any balancing that Powell was doing in the Cabinet has all but disappeared. And as the Iraq situation gets worse and worse, and the death toll rises higher and higher by the day, we need Powell's presence more than ever.

Sources in the U.N. rumored that U.S. ambassador to the United Nations John Danforth was a potential replacement for Powell. Danforth would have been more of a logical choice given the president's post-election speech. Danforth is a Republican, like Powell, but he also shares Powell's diplomatic experience and tact and has won the praise and respect of politicians on both side of the political isle. He would have continued to serve as a balancing force amidst Bush's ultra conservative base. But alas, Rice was chosen instead.

Prior to Rice's appointment, Bush chose White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales to replace John Ashcroft as Attorney General. Yes, this is the same Alberto Gonzales who called the Geneva Conventions "obsolete." But, it's not like Ashcroft was much of a winner to begin with. Bush has also named Stephen Hadley as the new National Security Advisor, replacing Rice. Hadley was Rice's deputy at the National Security Council.

[Rice] represents everything that is wrong with the Bush administration, which would seem to hinder the whole "bridging the gap" thing Bush had in mind.

Rice replacing Powell, on the other hand, is about as far of a downgrade as you can get. She lacks the experience on the diplomatic stage that Powell possessed and has never been one for diplomacy. She represents everything that is wrong with the Bush administration, which would seem to hinder the whole "bridging the gap" thing Bush had in mind. And on top of all that, she didn't even want the job in the first place, having said she was primarily interested in the Secretary of Defense position.

I do realize that Rice is a brilliant, strong-willed person. She was a professor (at Stanford, no less) in her mid-twenties. Ten years later she was advising one President Bush, and a little over 10 years after that she was advising another President Bush. She is decisive, fierce and confident.

But does that make up for the fact that she played a crucial role in the preemptive invasion of Iraq, leading to the deaths of God-knows-how-many lives? Does it make up for the fact that she covered up the truth along the way? Does it make up for the fact that in the process, she helped ruin our alliances with several European nations? Hardly.

One good thing I can say about Rice being named Secretary of State is that we will be able to believe what she says. With Powell, it was clear that he was struggling to find the balance between his ideology and his loyalty to his Commander-in-Chief. It must have been frustrating to have to sell policies that he didn't truly believe in. He believed in the president because it was the American thing to do, not because he truly believed what they were doing was in the best interests of the country.

With Rice in the driver's seat, there will be no question whether or not she believes in what the President is pushing for. Bush no longer has to deal with a Secretary of State that doesn't share his excessive fever for the war in Iraq, and all can be one big, happy family. In the end, that's seemingly the whole point of Bush's second-term team, to make a Cabinet of as many like-minded (and essentially right-minded) people as possible.

Matthew Reid is a Collegian editor.

The myth of us vs. them

Ben Duffy

While counter-protesting at the Republican National Convention this August, I encountered some of the strangest banners and placards I had ever seen. The one that stood out the most was the mass-produced rainbow banner that seemed to be everywhere. The banner was paraded about and hung in every window on the march route, declaring that "We the People object to the Bush Agenda." Such an article of hubris had I never seen in my entire life.

A protestor carrying the above-mentioned banner stopped to debate with me, wanting to ask me a political question. I told him that I would answer his question, if he would respond to a question of mine as well. He asked his question and I answered it as truthfully as I could. Then I asked my question: what made him think that he spoke for "We the People"?

"Well, these are people" he said, motioning toward the protest behind him.

"Yes they are people," I replied. "But they aren't 'the People.' Are you suggesting that I'm not a person because I don't agree with the protestors?"

"No," he concluded. He acknowledged that I was a human being. At this point, a policeman separated us.

It's "us" against "them". If you need any help understanding just who falls into which catergory, just ask your local Leftist.

As he moved away from me, the man screamed that I was attacking him personally because I had run out of logical arguments of my own.

But I wasn't attacking him personally. Rather, I was asking him an honest question. In a nation as divided as ours, how could these protestors speak for "We the People"?

The terminology reminds me of a certain Marxist philosophy that greatly oversimplifies society, pitting a tiny group of "haves" against a massive group of "have-nots." It stems from the ideology that the proletariat should rise up against their masters, seize the means of production and realize the fruits of their labor. It's "us" against "them." If you need any help understanding just who falls into which category, just ask your local Leftist.

"Us" is a sweeping group of the downtrodden — women, minorities, homosexuals, the poor, industrial workers, young people and anyone earning less than six figures. "Them" is defined as a tiny class of rich, old, WASP-ish men who invariably own stock in Carlisle or a major oil company. It's a classic political tactic that hasn't changed much since Hitler tried it in the 1930s.

Take, for example, Howard Zinn and his latest book, "A People's History of the United States." Zinn has a number of books that feature the word "people" prominently in the title. Don't be fooled: "people" in this context means far-leftist and nothing more.

Consider Michael Moore's "Stupid White Men," which refers to Ralph Nader as "someone who will represent the bottom 90 percent of this country." Later, he says that the Democrats and the Republicans should merge, because they've been working together for years in the interests of the richest 10 percent.

I want to ask Michael Moore a question. If the bottom 90 percent is dying to have a new party that he thinks would better serve our interests, what's stopping us? I'm part of that 90 percent, and yet I shudder to think of Moore's dream political party that presumably would fall to the left of the Democrats.

I suppose that Moore would tell me that we're locked into a two-party system, that some devoted liberals vote for the Democrats as the lesser of two evils, even though they're really followers of Nader or Cobb deep down inside. He suggests such an idea in his book. To an extent he's right, though it's almost impossible to gauge how many Democrats are actually greens that sold out.

But what about the 51 percent of Americans who voted for Bush this year? Surely they weren't secretly yearning for a Nader victory. Surely they don't all belong to the top 10 percent. Surely they aren't all elite members of the Texas oilman good-old-boy network. Surely there must be women, minorities, gays, working class people, young people and poor people among them. What happens to this theory when it confronts reality at the voting booths?

In fact, Bush has more right to speak for "the People" than either Michael Moore or the NYC protestors. After all, he won a majority of the popular vote. Sure, it wasn't a landslide, but it was more than Clinton got in either 1992 or 1996, when he reaped 43 percent and 49 percent of the vote respectively.

Bush was hardly unanimously approved, and it would be a mistake to think that all Americans are in love with him. But he was hardly unanimously disapproved either, which seems to refute the idea that "We the People object to the Bush agenda."

In reality, no individual can speak for "We the People." We're a nation of 293 million citizens, all having different interests, backgrounds and values. There are very few ideas that can unite the vast majority of us.

Usually we just have to agree to disagree with the other members of our diverse society. Anyone who thinks that he can speak for the entire populace is taking arrogance to a new level. Anyone who claims to speak for "We the People" and then proceeds to be embarrassed on Election Day is a buffoon.

I hope this election will force the protestors to put their rainbow banners away in the attic. I really hope that it will make Howard Zinn and Michael Moore abandon their presumption that they are the spokesmen of the masses. Unfortunately, I have little confidence that either of those things will happen.

Ben Duffy is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SENDING THE WRONG MESSAGE ABOUT ABORTION

I have to disagree with Thomas Naughton's opinions on abortion in "Saturday's Behind the Fence," especially his comparison of abortion and adoption. To say that the words written close together do not look much different, may be literally true, but is otherwise insulting. It is insulting to all of the millions of adoptive families in America that have given a child unconditional love; it is insulting to all of the foster families that provide safe and nurturing homes for children in transition, for children who would otherwise be living in an unsafe environment.

Foster care and adoption are not the same thing. Yes, there are horrible foster homes, where children are abused, and I am sure that there are horrid adoptive parents as well. However, there are also horrible birth parents, parents that collect money from the state and let their children sit in the same dirty diaper for two weeks.

But life is life, and even if it is not ideal, it should be respected in my opinion. In most cases, adopted children grow up just as non-adopted children: happy, healthy and loved. So is Mr. Naughton saying that those children, or anyone who was adopted or came from a less than perfect home should have been aborted?

I am not an angry "church-goer" as people that do not believe in abortion were referred to in his column, but I do not agree with abortion. To those who believe that "it is just a short operation that no one feels particularly great about," remember that abortion is an elective procedure.

We are not talking about open-heart surgery here, this is something that you are choosing to have done. If you were going to the doctors for say, laser eye surgery, which is also an elective procedure, and you didn't feel particularly great about it, than you probably wouldn't go through with it. Just the simple fact that I have never met a girl that has had an abortion and not had any guilt or sadness about that child (or fetus for those of you who do not believe it is a child yet — either way it has a beating heart) proves to me that it is wrong.

I'm not the type to put down a girl that has had an abortion. I would not want to make someone feel bad about what they had already done.

But what about before the abortion? What about before you have unprotected sex? Or make a "mistake"? I am talking about education, and the message we are sending to our daughters. Instead of teaching self-esteem, sex education and responsibility, we are telling girls that it is OK to be sexy, it is OK to have sex, and even though we really don't want you to get pregnant until you're ready, it's okay if you do because we can fix it. And we are telling our sons that it is all the girl's responsibility if she becomes pregnant with an unwanted child.

The abortion pill is as readily available to young girls as Tootsie Pops are to little children. It is disgusting; it is the wrong message. The fact that you cannot vote until 18, drink alcohol until 21, or even go on a school field trip without your parents' permission, but you can legally in some places have an abortion without your parents consent is unfathomable to me.

What ever happened to it takes a village to raise a child? Where is the support from family, from friends to say, "you didn't plan this baby, but you will love it, we will help you get through this"?

Ruby Toledo
Amherst Resident and mother

COLUMNIST DOES NOT SPEAK FOR TEAM

The Women's Ice Hockey club does not support the statements made by S.J. Port in the article printed on Nov. 17. In fact, without the Men's Varsity Ice Hockey program, there would be no Mullins Center in which to skate. So thank you boys and Toot, we've got nothing but respect and support for you guys. Congrats on tying the No. 1 ranked team this weekend.

Samantha Louras
President
Women's Ice Hockey

Your words could be here.
Submit a letter or column.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Going Gay

Not so alternative lifestyles

From Ellen to Madonna and Britney: Chronicling gay culture in the past decade

Gay seems to be everywhere nowadays. You can't go more than a week without hearing something about one of the many homosexual issues that have recently come into the foreground of politics, culture and society.

Chris Gazzara

From the freshly legal marriage rights of homosexual men and women in Massachusetts, to the many hit television shows gracing the airwaves, it seems that they are here, they are queer, and we are enjoying it.

Where did this all come from? Well, it's hard to pin down. There have been numerous familiar gay artists, singers, actors and celebrities in the past 50 years, without any enormous boost in gay-friendly pop culture. James Dean, Rock Hudson, Janis Joplin and Elton John are a few of the more frequently known homosexual celebrities from the past. Things didn't really pick up until the hit television sitcom Roseanne began to take an active role in opening up gays to the media. Roseanne's boss, Leon, was gay and so was her friend Nancy, played by outspoken bisexual actress Sandra Bernhard. Even her mother came out later on in the series. Shortly thereafter, lesbian rock artist Melissa Etheridge scored big with her aptly-titled L.P. "Yes I Am," in 1995.

Two years later, after experiencing some success in the limelight, Ellen Degeneres decided it was her time to announce to the public that she too is gay. The episode of ABC's "Ellen" in which Ellen's self-modeled character came out of the closet, was so controversial that Birmingham, Ala. pulled out network support the night the show aired. Despite critical acclaim for the gutsy move and an Emmy Award, the show was canceled in 1998.

The new millennium brought a drastic turn about in the way we viewed homosexuals in popular culture. The success of Will and Grace, a sitcom about the relationship between a gay man and his best girlfriend, seemed a ticket to the big time for gay culture.

The show "Queer as Folk" blasted onto the scene, exposing an entirely gay and lesbian cast for the first time ever to a nation of Showtime viewers. The show centers on several men and women living different lifestyles representative of the different aspects of gay culture. This show was instrumental in giving gays a sense of identity. Finally they had a show of their own.

"Queer Eye for the Straight Guy," a reality show where the premise is for five gay men with different style specialities to makeover sloppy straight men, exploded after just one season. Their motto is "Five gay men, out to make over the world — one straight guy at a time." The show was so successful, it inked a deal with NBC almost right off the bat. Since then, the "Fab Five" have become an incredible phenomenon.

Since the introduction of "Queer Eye" to the public last year, gay culture seems to be melding in with straight culture almost effortlessly. The sultry kiss shared by Britney Spears and Madonna at the 2003 MTV Video Music Awards received less harsh criticism than did the infamous "wardrobe malfunction" between Ms. Janet "Damita-Jo" Jackson and Justin Timberlake. CBS is still fighting the $500,000 fine imposed by the FCC due to the tragic incident, whereas Britney and Madonna are forever doomed to share shiny necklaces and kabbalah bracelets.

Gay people everywhere are enjoying the newly found freedom of expressing themselves thanks to the tireless efforts of these and many more unmentioned artists who work to create a more accepting, diverse country for all of us. When looking back over these moments of glory for the gay cause, it is important to remember that these are not infiltrations into our society, but merely a beginning to a more accurate perception of the people who live in this great country. It is my hope that one day, every person in this country will feel truly represented in our media, but for now, what an awesome place to start.

Chris Gazzara is a collegian columnist.

Stonewall Center plans a four-day weekend with REELout

By Lindsey Ferris
Collegian Correspondent

Looking for something to do this weekend that will be both entertaining and different from the typical end-of-week activities? The Stonewall Center has put together the REEL Out Film Festival to give you just that.

The festival is presented yearly by the center and shows films that deal with lesbian, bisexual, gay and transgender issues. Each film being shown is either a premier or a film that has received critical praised. The film festival is fairly new and the Stonewall Center hopes to continue the tradition throughout the years, center official Melanie Marcon said.

The film-filled weekend started yesterday and continues through Sunday. REEL Out began with "Brother to Brother" in the Isenberg School of Management building last night at 7 p.m. This dramatic film focused on the Harlem Renaissance told through the experiences of Bruce Nugent and his voyage with a black gay artist. Nugent is cofounder of the revolutionary literature journal "Fire."

It continues tonight with the debut of "Tying the Knot" at 7 p.m. in Bartlett Hall, room 65. This is a documentary that makes a compelling argument for gay marriage. It also focuses on the history and change of marriage. There will be a discussion with the filmmaker, Jim de Seve after the screening, and a second showing of the film at 9 p.m.

Transgender Awareness Day is on Saturday and the Stonewall Center has planned several events. The Junk Film Festival, which is a travelling festival put on by Malaqueerche Productions, will start the day's festivities. On the bill are pieces from independent underground films like "Venus Boyz," a documentary about female masculinity. There will be four short Trans films shown following "Venus Boyz," and finally, the day will end with "Cookie Project," a film that tells the life of Cookie, a transsexual lesbian. Each film on Saturday will be shown in SOM 137.

The films shown on the final day of REEL Out, Sunday, will be shown in SOM 137 as well. The day starts out at noon with "By Hook or By Crook," a film following the life and friendship of a "small town butch" and a "wise-acre adoptee" for three weeks.

"Yossi and Jagger" is being screened too. A true story, the film tells the story of two soldiers in the Israel army and their love for one another.

There will be six short gay and lesbian films shown after this love story. The romantic film "The Trip" is the story of the love affair of two men and their lives together and will be displayed after the short films. "Amour de France" is another intriguing story about a mother and wife who experiences a feeling she never experienced before: affection for another woman. "Radical Harmonies" focuses on the subject and the history of the Women's Music Cultural Movement. The festival is finished up with a romantic comedy about a group of multiracial and poly-sexual friends titled "Relax! It's Just Sex."

The Stonewall Center hopes to educate and entertain students with the festival and provide a weekend of interesting films. Showing times and locations can be found at www.umass.edu/stonewall.

A night of dress up: Drag Ball returns to UMass

Every year there is at least one guy. October 31 rolls around and there he is, decked out in a Salvation Army dress and a blonde wig, making a mockery of drag. Well, with Halloween come and gone it is time for the true masters of disguise to take the stage. When Pride Alliance host's it's annual Drag Ball tomorrow night boys will be girls, girls will be boys but everyone will be in top form.

The event kicks off at 9 p.m. at the Top of the Campus Center and will feature music, dancing and live entertainment from some of the area's best drag performers — members of the University of Massachusetts community.

The Pride Alliance, a Registered Student Organization serving the needs of lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgendered students and their allies on campus, has been a presence at UMass since 1970, known then as the Student Homophile League. In the 34 years it has been around the group has defined their mission as two-fold; Its "primary function is to offer a supportive atmosphere in which gay people can meet to discuss mutual problems, receive legal advice and medical advice, and participate in encounter groups, consciousness raising sessions, as well as social events. Its secondary function is to educate the community about homosexuality as a lifestyle and refute the myths about gay life," according to the group's Web site, www.umass.edu/rso/pride.

The annual fall Drag Ball is just one of the many events sponsored by the Pride Alliance through out the academic year. The group also actively plans events for National Coming Out Day, held yearly in early October, as well as the festival known as Queerfest, held annually in the spring.

The Ball will begin with performances by Five College students, rehearsed and choreographed in preparation for the night's festivities. Hosted by a Five College student, the event will kick off at 9 p.m. and wind down at 1 a.m. UMass students get in for $3, and those who arrive dressed for the occasion can expect a $1 discount. Drag queens and kings are welcome, as are those not in drag. Five College students can get in the door for $4 and everyone else for $5.

— Meghan Healy

COURTESY (FROM TOP LEFT)
GRAHAMCARSOME.COM
MERVEY.COM
YESYAK.FR
THEJOURNALTIMES.COM
STANFORD.EDU
DIGITALFILM.COM
ART54.COM
SUNSPOT.UK
SPCENTER.ORG
KEITHCRUELLSOUALBUM.ORG

Local man creates thriller based on tale of princenton girl

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

PRINCETON — It's a local legend that has spooked children and made adults wonder.

In 1755, 4-year-old Lucy Keyes vanished in the shadow of Wachusett Mountain while collecting sand around a nearby lake. Unable to ever find her, Lucy's mother went insane.

Years after the death of Lucy's parents, an explanation finally surfaced for the little girl's disappearance. A letter said to have been written by the Keyes' reclusive neighbor, Tilly Littlejohn, amounted to a detailed confession of Lucy's murder over a property dispute with her father.

"I struck her three heavy blows on the head with a stone," the letter said. "I then hid the body in a hollow log, and went to my house."

The letter goes on to describe Littlejohn burying Lucy's body beneath a pile of leaves and rocks. To cover any traces of a grave, he built a bonfire above it.

And then the haunting began.

"(At sunset I heard the cry of Mrs. Keyes, calling for Lucy, and 'Lucy!' 'Lucy!' would be repeated from the mountain, and then from the hill, and then again and again from farther and farther away," the letter says. "It seemed as if all the spirits of the air were calling on me for Lucy."

Now, 250 years later, local movie director John Stimpson is making a film that retells the tale of Lucy Keyes and the ghost story that goes with it: The woods, local legend has it, still ring with the call of Lucy's mother looking for her lost daughter.

"The story intrigued me right away," Stimpson said recently during a day of shooting "The Legend of Lucy Keyes," an independent film running on a budget expected to stay under $1 million. "It fascinated me as a filmmaker, and I knew it was a story I wanted to tell."

Fed up with chasing an acting career in hectic Los Angeles, Stimpson — who grew up in Wellesley — turned to writing and directing movies and moved to Princeton about 17 years ago. He didn't know it at first, but he later found out that his property abuts the land purchased by the Keyes family in the 1751.

Stimpson's story places a young couple — played by Julie Delpy, who starred in "Before Sunset," and Justin Theroux, who was in "Mulholland Drive" — in modern-day Princeton with their two daughters. The couple, Jeanne and Guy Cooley, unwittingly buy a farmhouse that had belonged to the Keyes family. Once they find out, the Cooley family starts experiencing the spirits of Lucy and her mother.

Then, their youngest daughter — also named Lucy — disappears. "Their lives shadow the story of Lucy Keyes," Stimpson said. "It's a modern-day tale exploring the history and the legend."

Stimpson won't give away all the plot details, but said his supernatural thriller has a happy ending. And he took a few liberties with the historical accounts of what happened to Lucy. Instead of having her vanish while collecting sand around Wachusett Lake, his retelling of the story has her disappear while picking blueberries.

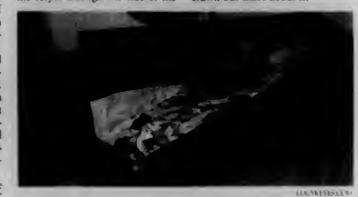
"I didn't want to deal with the logistics of shooting by the lake," he said.

And with respect to anyone who might be related to Littlejohn, he's changed the name of the person who confessed to killing Lucy. "Some people claim he didn't really write the letter, and some people say he didn't own any land," Stimpson said. "Whatever. I'm just making a movie."

The movie, produced by Waltham-based Moody Street Pictures, is being filmed entirely in Princeton and on the 2,006-foot Wachusett Mountain, which straddles Westminster. Some of Princeton's 3,700 residents have been enlisted as extras, filling coffee shop and town hall meeting scenes.

The producers are hoping the film will get some sort of theatrical release in this country, and will also push for foreign and video distribution when the movie is completed by spring.

"I wish my grandmother was here to see all this," said John Bennett, a deputy chief on the town's volunteer fire department, who is in a scene where Lucy Cooley is taken to the hospital after breaking her arm. "I'm related to the Keyes through her side of the family, and she would've gotten a kick out of a movie being made about the story."



Because there's nothing left of the Keyes' farmhouse, the film crew has moved the fictional Cooley family into the home owned by Joe and Ellen O'Brien. The O'Briens, in turn, have moved into a hotel for the 18 days of filming.

"So far it's been interesting to see what they've done in our backyard," Joe O'Brien said.

Trailers and trucks are parked a few yards from his house while cameras and lighting equipment bustle around his property as the crew of about 75 people go through the slow and deliberate process of shooting and re-shooting scenes.

If there are any ghosts haunting the Princeton woods, there's a chance they may have been scared away from all the activity rumbling through this otherwise quiet area.

"Have I seen any ghosts? No," Stimpson said. "I wish I could say yes. I've been out walking in the woods at dusk and I've felt my skin crawl, but that's about it."

Simpson, who is making a movie based upon the murder Lucy Keyes has discovered artifacts including the 250 year old crib of Keyes.

Interpol makes new wave comeback

By Matt O'Rourke
Collegian Staff

For those who thought the new wave movement was a thing of the past, Interpol is your worst nightmare. For those who loved that era, look no further for a group to provide a renaissance. Surfacing from the underground on their debut album, "Turn On the Bright Lights," Interpol single-handedly revived a genre of music thought to be lung dead. Combining the garage rock power of the Strokes and the new wave sound of Joy Division, their sophomore album "Antics" (perhaps named in tribute to Tim Ant's album "Antics in the Forbidden Zone") rocks at times, while feeling bland at others.

"Antics" begins with organs blaring, and well placed guitar chords playing along with lead singer Paul Banks proclaiming "We're ain't goin' to the town/We're going to the city." Perhaps this is Interpol's way of stating, that they are sticking with their roots of underground rock. Heavy undertones and pedal effects provide a feeling that the music is all coming together at a single point, with some occasional noise pollution. A decent track overall, but not their best work.

"Evil" does no harm to the ears, as it can be appreciated on several different levels. From a lyrical standpoint, puns are well placed, if not intentional. Paul Banks sings, without the aide of voice changers, "Rosemary, Heaven restores you in life", and while the religious factor is obvious, it's well placed as Banks addresses two ideas at once. The bass line sings, and the drums are basic but brilliant and driving. Kessler's guitar rhythm is also fitting, playing off the previous musical phrase in the second minute beautifully.

"Take You On a Cruise" plays well, but can be a bit much with a certain overlying (perhaps overused) guitar effect, which sounds similar to ship leaving port. Although that may be the obvious purpose, it still can become a bit much at time. Carlos D's dancing bass line is played off by Daniel Kessler's guitar picking, and later filled with Sam Fogarino's dancehall drum pulse. Overall the song can be in the listener's face, with almost too much going on at once within a single wall of sound. Some will take a liking to this one quicker than others.

"C'mere" is the highlight track of the album. Interpol strives for, and succeeds, in pushing a garage rock song, while still maintaining their traditional new wave sound. Kessler's guitars chime in Banks' singing of "Its way too late to be locked inside ourselves/the trouble is that you're in love with someone else." At its heart, "C'mere" is a driving love song, or a song about questioning love. While the concept is obviously unoriginal, the arrangement is well composed. From the bass line to the pushing guitars, the song will easily become stuck inside of your head, and you'll find yourself coming back again and again to listen.

Interpol struggles with the concept of allowing the lead singer to be the prominent sound. It's OK once in a while to let Banks drown in the guitar-driven background, at least it provides variation. However, "A Time To Be So Small", the concluding track on the album, fails to do just that. The listener shouldn't have to struggle to understand what the singer is singing. The instrumentation is the foreground, and it too can be a bit too much to handle. Around the third minute, there is a slight drum and bass break, which can be refreshing before the next wave of sound.

"Antics" is not the same album as "Turn On the Bright Lights", but it can be quite similar at times, but one must note this doesn't mean it's of a lesser quality overall. The arrangements are for those who love guitar with a drowning effect, so Radiohead and Killers fans take heed: Interpol has revived a lost sound, and it's not fading any time soon.

Eve has two choose between two friends

Original Sin
Eve

I somehow managed to get caught up in a very sticky love triangle. I am entirely responsible for this creation, but I do not regret its monstrous implication in the slightest. Unfortunately for them though, the two corners of the triangle happen to be childhood friends. Not just playground pals, they share a perpetually rooted brotherly love, which in fact might already be tainted by their uncontrollable temptation.

Our relationship was once completely harmless, yet it was inevitable that someone would get hurt, and I am still baffled at why it wasn't me. Each one of the three points. I have found seem justified in their actions.

The first guy was my first choice. I have known him since primary school, and I had wished that one day he might look my way. We became acquaintances in high school, casual friends during college, and only realized recently that he lives with two of my closest friends. We spent a lot of time together, slowly building an unexplainable feeling of lustful tension. Our chemistry, our energies, collided irresistibly with intense passion. A feeling one may never experience often, but we fed our need and embodied this fortune.

Yet, I was still surprised when he called me the next day, and continued to do so for five months thereafter. We made an agreement, though, on that day. Our encounters were to remain strictly casual with no-strings-attached, and I could not have been happier, but is it really possible to maintain an ongoing casual affair without developing emotions? I have learned it is only possible if both of the participants are keeping their emotions occupied with other people, and no one has any expectations., but when the third party arrived, a surge of the emotional reality swept through all of us without warning.

The third piece to our puzzle, his eternal friend, swept me off my feet one evening, completely unaware of our situation. By the time his pursuit seemed serious, my casual relationship with the first guy just happened to slow down. Yet, I felt it was necessary to unravel the simple truth, and he was heartbroken.

However, after a few conversations and small arguments, the first guy let it happen, and I was heartbroken. Did he have no feelings for what we had whatsoever? And so I gave into the second guy. He was nicer, compassionate and actually cared for what we began to have. We also just happened to go to the same school, and it was perfectly comfortable, but soon after, it was too comfortable, too plain, too calm. I missed the excitement I once had with the first guy. He was passionate and kept the meaning of us as a simple unit.

When I realized that is all I really want at the moment, I untied the knot with his friend. Weeks later, my first choice called to tell me he was coming up to visit. Both of them invited me to see an exhibit together, and I was flattered. There were no hard feelings, no more hearts breaking, but hearts were still beating. As the evening began, and then the night settled in, we all settled in. Conversation was comfortable and the company was warm, but then I noticed they were unintentionally competing for my attention, fighting for my interest, and neither of them saw what the other was doing. How can two close friends be so disloyal to each other? But, then again, their dishonesty and unfaithfulness to one another began at the very beginning, and I've realized it is not my problem.

The first guy and I will always have a lasting bond of sexual chemistry, and the second will always be the ideal choice for a commitment, and in the end, the first corner of our dynamic finally chose to admit that he does feel, he does care, and he was upset he let me go, and he left this certainty at that. It was all I really needed to hear to put our past to rest, and I am now able to enjoy the memory and smile.

CINEMARK
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL 6
30 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 11/19/04 and Sunday 11/21 thru Tuesday 11/23/04
DIGITAL SURROUND SOUND IN ALL AUDITORIUMS
Purchase Tickets Online @ cinemark.com
After The Sunset PG13 11:50 2:00 4:45 7:20 9:45*
Seed Of Chucky R 11:10 4:25 10:00*
The Polar Express G 11:20 11:45 1:55 2:25 4:40 5:05 7:05 9:35*
The Incredibles PG 11:00 11:30 1:45 2:15 4:30 5:00 7:15 7:45 10:10
Alfie R 7:30 10:15
The Grudge PG13 1:45 7:15
Saw R 11:55 2:30 5:00 7:30 9:55
Shall We Dance? PG13 10:25
National Treasure PG 11:05 1:00 2:00 4:05 4:50 7:00 7:40 9:50 10:30*
Ray PG13 11:35 4:00 8:00
Spongebob Squarepants: The Movie PG 11:40 1:50 4:10 7:10 9:30
Bridget Jones: Edge Of Reason R 11:15 1:50 4:30 7:25 10:05*
Closed Thurs 11/25
Ends Thurs 11/18
cinemark.com

This is the "HOT" Yoga
BIKRAM YOGA Amherst
www.bikramyoga.com
665-yoga
The room is heated to open you.
The series is powerful to challenge you.
The yoga is BIKRAM to change you...
Designed for all levels. BIKRAM yoga will challenge you physically, focus you mentally and allow you to relax on a very deep level
TRY IT FOR 10 CONSECUTIVE DAYS FOR ONLY $20!!!

Worship at Dwight Chapel
We are an Interdenominational Evangelical Church serving the entire valley since 1886.
Sunday morning worship at 8:30 & 10:45
FREE SHUTTLE FROM UMASS (HAIGIS MALL @ 10AM)
If you are interested to know more about the church, visit us at www.Dwightchapel.org
For more information call 413-256-8059
Dwight Chapel, 885 Federal Street, Belchertown, MA 01007

U.S. AIR FORCE
CROSS INTO THE BLUE
THINK OUTSIDE
FOUR PERPENDICULAR
SIDES ON A
GEOMETRICALLY
SQUARED BASE.
It takes ingenuity, teamwork and a great deal of effort to pull off some of the high-profile engineering projects being done in the United States Air Force. Engineers who come aboard are immediately put on the fast track and have advancement opportunities typically not found in the private sector. From weapons systems and space station materials to the next generation of X-planes, whatever the project is, it's always fresh, always important and always cutting edge. If this sounds like something you might be interested in, visit our Web site at AIRFORCE.COM or call us at 1-800-423-USAF to request more information.
©2004 Paid for by the U.S. Air Force. All rights reserved.

Youth will help lead UMass against USC averaged 25 points, nine rebounds and four steals as a senior at Chinguacousy High School in Ontario.

WOMEN'S HOOPS from page 8

She was also the MVP of the All-Canada Basketball game and named the 2003-04 Miss Basketball in Canada. During the off-season, Tatham was selected to the Canadian Junior National Team and helped the Canadians earn their first trip to the World Championships.

In the Bronze Medal game, Tatham lead Canada with 11 points, two rebounds, two assists and three steals in a come-from-behind victory over Brazil.

"We were very excited to get Alisha, her sister [Tamara] has done very well for us and I'm looking forward to seeing how they will work off each other," Dacko said.

Joining the group of freshman is redshirt-junior Katie Nelson, who missed last season after undergoing knee surgery to repair an ACL tear.

Throw 6-foot-4 center Patrycja Gulak into the mix, and UMass should have a shot at making it deep into the A-10 playoffs. Gulak sat out last season after transferring from St. John's and is expected to be in the starting line-up.

USC is coming off 15-13 season, in which they went 11-7 in the Pac-10 and finished tied for third in the conference.

Led by first-year coach Mark Trakh. The Women of Troy return only one full-time starter but nine letterwinners.

Meghan Gnekow is the top USC returning scorer. The guard averaged 7.9 points and 5.5 rebound per game last season.

DePaul went 23-7 last year (10-4 in Conference USA) before finishing fourth in the conference tournament. The Blue Demons were the only Conference USA school to crack the Associated Press' preseason Top 25 poll. The DePaul player to watch is junior forward Khara Smith. Smith received votes but came up short of making the AP preseason All-America team.

Smith hold the best field goal percentage in school history (.605), and has scored at least 10 points in 54 of 66 career games.

Murray State is coming off an 82-48 exhibition win over the Blue Chip Legends last Saturday.

Federer defeats Moya at ATP Masters Cup

By Michael A. Lutz
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Roger Federer was at his best after midnight. Too bad hardly anyone was there to see it.

With less than 500 fans remaining in the stands after a deflating day of rain delays, Federer made several clutch shots to hold off Lleyton Hewitt 6-3, 6-4 in the second round of the ATP Masters Cup Championships on Wednesday night.

"There was only so much crowd left. It was kind of a very strange and awkward feeling," Federer said. "We're not too used to that, especially me since I've been playing center court basically every match since I've become No. 1."

Carlos Moya had to sit through a rain delay of nearly eight hours before beating Gaston Gaudio 6-3, 6-4 in an earlier second-round match.

Federer was leading 4-2 in the second set when showers again halted play, this time for an hour. After play resumed, the Swiss star closed it out on the first match point with an overhead, beating Hewitt for the fifth straight time in a match that ended just before 1 a.m. Thursday.

"There were some good rallies," Federer said. "That was a good game, that last one. I've had trouble against him serving matches out."

Federer, who improved to 7-7 in his career against Hewitt, has a 2-0 record in the Red Group of the round-robin format. Hewitt dropped to 1-1. The four players with the best round-robin records from the two groups will play in Saturday's semifinals. The winners will meet Sunday for the championship.

Federer got the first break in the fourth game of the opening set with a backhand crosscourt passing shot. Then he had to stave off two break points in the fifth game to hold his serve. After the second deuce, Federer hit an ace and a backhand winner.

Sorenstam among golf's elite

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Annika Sorenstam competed against the men last year at Colonial.

Now she is being compared with them.

Sorenstam has won nine times around the world this year, same as Vijay Singh.

And her four-year run as the No. 1 player on the LPGA Tour is equally impressive, if not more, to the way Tiger Woods dominated the PGA Tour during a five-year stretch.

"The kind of golf she's playing, it's unbelievable," Meg Mallon said Wednesday. "Everyone is talking about Vijay's year. She's done it for the last six years."

And that's what might be most impressive of all.

Sorenstam comes into the season-ending ADT Championship at Trump International in the same position as the previous three years — on top of her game, atop the money list and the player to beat on the LPGA Tour.

"When Annika is in the field, everybody is aware of it," said Grace Park, who's No. 2 on the money list and will be paired with Sorenstam when the tournament starts Thursday. We know the competition will be that much tougher."

Winning never gets old, but it has become routine for Sorenstam.

She won a major for the fourth straight year. She already has crossed the $2 million mark for the fourth straight time, an amazing feat considering no other woman has done it once. She already has wrapped up LPGA Tour player of the year and has gone four straight seasons with at least six victories.

The difference this year is that Sorenstam started taking more time off.

The ADT Championship, a season-ending tournament for the top 30 players on the money list, is only her 18th start on the LPGA Tour. She's working less off the course, but learning to get more quality out of her practice sessions.

The bad news for the rest of the LPGA is that she is as good as ever.

"I've played less and still played at the same level," Sorenstam said. "I stepped away from the game a lot more this year, and I'm still able to be up there. People from the outside might not see that, but I've noticed that."

Sorenstam played only 17 times a year ago, but that was different. She spent long, hard hours in the gym and on the range to get ready for the Colonial, where she became the first woman in 58 years to compete on the PGA Tour.

"I've had more time at home and less on the road," she said. "I think the negative — which I thought would be, but I haven't really noticed any — is that I wouldn't play as much and I'd be a little more rusty. But I'm surprised how consistent I'm playing the weeks I've played."

Still, she's starting to wonder how long it can last.

Sorenstam once dropped hints about an early retirement, although she said she would continue to play as long as she's motivated and enjoys competing.

The question is whether anyone can challenge her.

Just like with Woods, there has been a revolving door of rivals — Karrie Webb, Se Ri Pak, Juli Inkster. The fresh challenge now comes from Park, Lorena Ochoa, even Mallon, who won the U.S. Women's Open.

"When you have a player on top dominating, people catch up," Sorenstam said. "It's just a matter of time. It's tough to be on top. I've always found it easier to chase something or somebody."

She was on top last year at Trump International, taking a three-shot lead into the final round and everyone assumed the tournament was over. Mallon had other ideas, rallying with a 67 for a one-shot victory.

Now, the defending champion is just happy to be playing.

Mallon's back went out on her two weeks ago, causing her to miss two LPGA events and a silly season event against the men. She figured she was day-to-day when she arrived Monday, and managed to get through the pro-am.

"I will be very grateful for teeing off," she said. "I will be very grateful for getting through a round of golf without having my back go out. But I also need to get myself mentally saying, 'You need to be competitive.' Hopefully, that will all come into play."

No matter what she does at Trump International, nothing will take away from Mallon's year. She won the biggest trophy in women's golf at the U.S. Open. She also won the Canadian Open, and a third event in Ohio, not far from where she went to college at Ohio State.

"It was a magical summer for me," Mallon said.

Sorenstam feels the same way about her season, even though everyone is used to the results.

"Maybe people take it for granted, but I definitely don't," Sorenstam said. "I'm very proud of this year. I think I've played some excellent golf. When you don't play as much, maybe people don't pay attention."

Annika Sorenstam blasts out of a bunker on the first hole in the second round of the Colonial PGA tournament Friday, May 23, 2003.

BOB T. ENNIS/SPECIAL TO THE SOUTH STAR TELEGRAM

Finances will influence the IOC

By Steve Wilstein
Associated Press

The fat "Bid Books" for the 2012 Summer Olympics are in the money-grubbing hands of the International Olympic Committee.

Finances, as always, will be a big issue. How much can the IOC shake down from the cities?

Stadiums, arenas and athletes' villages are big items. Which cities will promise the most majestic vision to enhance the status of the self-perpetuating, self-indulgent Olympic Move-ment?

Security is critical. Who can be counted on to provide a zone of peace in a world that could be very different eight years from now?

Politics is the X-factor, a theme not touched on in the bids but not far from the minds of everyone in the process. Will President Bush's re-election and the diminished American popularity overseas hurt New York's chances? Will France's opposition to the Iraq war give Paris an edge?

"We don't know which detail is most important for each person," Paris bid leader Philippe Baudillon said Wednesday. "One person is perhaps upset by the war, but has historical links with one country. I am fully aware of such geopolitical questions. Individuals are going to vote according to different factors, including emotional factors."

The volumes submitted by New York, Paris, London, Madrid and Moscow are stuffed with figures and sketches, hopes and dreams. They are the slick, pricey products of years of work. Four will get tossed in the garbage next summer. One will become the blueprint for seven years of hard work ahead when the winner is named on July 6, 2005.

Expect the usual glee by the winning city, and the usual groans by the losers. Yet it is never certain in this sort of competition whether the winner will turn out to be a loser, and vice versa.

"We call it the 'winner's curse,'" Evan Osborne, who teaches sports economics at Wright State University in Ohio, said as he watched costs soar in Athens. "The cities that win the bid for the Olympics are the cities that most overestimate what they are worth."

Athens got a taste of sticker shock last week when the bill arrived for last summer's games — $11.6 billion and climbing.

That government tally was almost double the original estimate and made the games by far the most expensive in Olympic history. Sydney 2000 cost $1.5 billion; Atlanta 1996 cost $1.72 billion. Athens spent almost that much — $1.39 billion — on security alone.

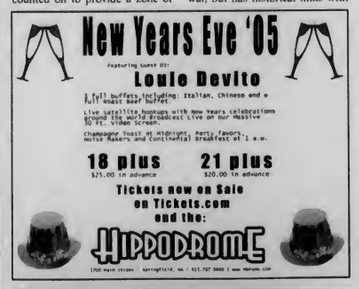
Athens' running total so far does not include infrastructure costs for items like a new $344 million tram line, a suburban rail network and the extension of the Athens metro system to the airport — things the city needed but wouldn't have gotten so quickly if it hadn't won the Olympics bid.

Nor does that bill include the future cost (more than $100 million a year) of maintaining $2.83 billion worth of new or refurbished stadiums and arenas.

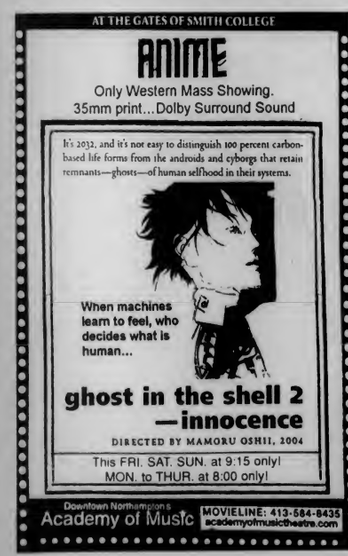
White elephants have been marching through the Olympics for years.

None of that deters the champions of bids for 2012. Dan Doctoroff, leading the charge for New York, says the city's 600-page "Bid Book" meets or exceeds all IOC requirements.

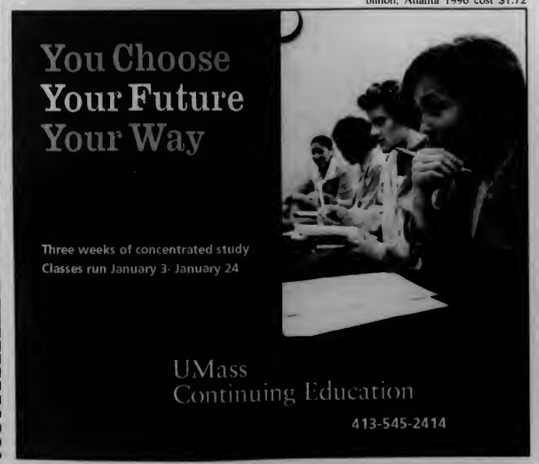
He spoke of the energy, excitement and power of New York, and he expounded on the city's "parallel values with the Olympic Movement" in bringing the world together in peaceful competition and the pursuit of individual dreams.



Doctoroff is no mere dreamer, himself. He's the city's mayor for economic development and rebuilding and the founder of NYC2012. He's been pushing this Olympic bid from the start, saying it will spur growth in the city.

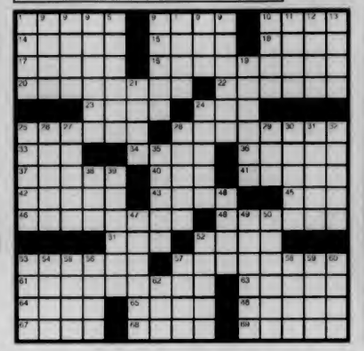


He might be right about that, but sports economists have doubts about whether mega-events like the Olympics and stadiums built on public funds ever make financial sense.



The Olympics at almost any cost might be worth it if they contribute to world peace. They might be justified by cities for the attention they bring to their culture. They surely enrich certain developers and unions. Whether the Games really boost the local economy and image in a meaningful, lasting way is doubtful.

None of the cities bidding for the 2012 games needs the Olympics to establish, or even enhance, its image. New York will be no grander with or without the games, though a winning bid would accelerate development of a few underused areas. Paris will still be beautiful Paris, London will still be its stately, efficient self. Madrid will try to outshine Barcelona, which dumped a $20 milllon debt on the Spanish economy, but won't essentially change. Moscow, a fringe choice, won't suddenly turn into Miami.



QUOTE OF THE DAY

"While democracy in the long run is the most stable form of government, in the short run, it is among the most fragile."

-Madeleine Albright

The Moan and Dove

Great Beer. Tastes 10 times better. Has 3 times the alcohol. Why are you wasting your money?

themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

Make a Dream come true...
SUBMIT A COMIC

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Stand firm for what you believe is right and fair, and have patience.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Surround yourself with the right people. Then, relax and enjoy.

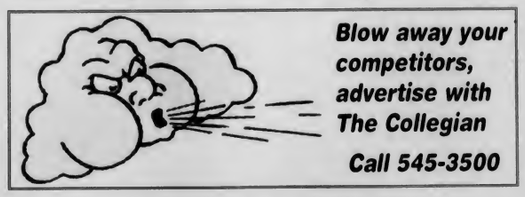
aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Don't let hardships get you down. Have them be your motivation.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
You should celebrate. Go somewhere and do something you've never done before.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Actions speak a lot louder than words to the people who matter now.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't go back to something you had before; try something completely new.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Emotions may win the argument today over reason, take care.



virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You have a very creative friend who sometimes drives you crazy.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't worry about the money, that will only inhibit your style.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Ideas you haven't thought of are available, from a kind person you know

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Tell people what you need. Somebody may give you something.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't even pretend you know more than you do. The opposite tactic's suggested.

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

Apartment 1 Bedroom Sitting room Full bath Kitchen Amherst Boarder Call Roohina at 549-6091

Mass Mahketing and Citibank present the Spend Smaht Tour 2004 featuring Mission: IMPROVable. Join us for a fun-filled evening of laughs, free food and most importantly, credit education. Blue Wall Nov 15 @ noon, Southwest Patterson Dorm Nov 16 @ 7pm, Central Gorman Dorm Nov 17 @ 7pm, Sylvan Cashin Dorm Nov 17 @ 8:30pm, Southwest Kennedy Dorm Nov 18 @ 7pm, SOM Atrium Nov 19 @ 6pm. www.Students-UseCreditWisely for credit tips. Brought to you by Mass Mahketing and Citi Credit-Ed℠.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Toyota Corolla 4-Door. $1500, Excellent Condition in and out. New front tires, CD-Player, Hitch, AC, Manual Transmission. 131K miles. Call 617-729-7066.

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING INTERNSHIPS Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

Make money taking online surveys. Earn $10 to $125 for surveys. Earn $25 to $250 for focus groups. Visit www.cash4students.com/umas

FOR SALE

Avon Special MP3 & 100's of gifts under $10 Buy or Sell. Kat ISR 413-585-1581.

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

TRAVEL

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica. From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRMVE Online
1-800 426 7710

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2005. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

WANTED

Ever wanted to be a zombie? Well now you can! Feature-length student film looking for large amounts of zombie actors. Email Fayefuery@hotmail.com for more details.

Snowboard events intern $50/day stipend. For job description email jfriends@deerfield.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 19, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass gets ready to Bear down

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

The first 20 years of Hockey East have produced a number of thrilling rivalries. While Boston College and Boston University were at each other's throats long before the league began, Hockey East has brought them together, and created a number of other new dogfights that never fail to impress.

The newest rivalry is also among the best. Beginning with the shocking upset at Alfond Arena in Orono, Maine, and culminating with March's triple-overtime conference final, Massachusetts and Maine have clearly become another clash that gets highlighted on the calendar every year.

The conference's newest rivalry enters its next chapter tonight, when the Minutemen travel to Orono to play the Black Bears for the first time since Ben Murphy redirected Mathew Deschamps' shot past Gabe Winer to give Maine the Hockey East title at Boston's FleetCenter.

The Minutemen (6-4-1, 3-2-1 Hockey East) enter the game hot off a weekend that saw them tie No. 1-ranked Boston College and blow out Mercyhurst 6-1. With two games to go before their Thanksgiving weekend trip to Colorado, they'll have the No. 12 Black Bears (7-6-0, 3-3-0 HEA) in their way tonight, as well as Vermont in Burlington on Tuesday. UMass' next home game is on Dec. 3 against Providence.

Last year at this time, the Minutemen were relying on junior goaltender Gabe Winer for nearly every game, but this year have switched to a rotating system that alternates Winer and senior Tim Warner on what has thus far been a game-by-game basis. The strategy takes a page from the playbook of the Black Bears, who found plenty of success switching off between Jimmy Howard and Frank Doyle last year.

This year, however, the teams' netminding situations have reversed, as Howard has become the de facto No. 1, with freshman Matt Lundin backing him up after Doyle graduated in May. Lundin has allowed four goals and made 60 saves in five appearances, but it's clear that Howard, who was between the pipes for the Black Bears' conference championship win, as well as their 1-0 loss to future Minuteman opponent Denver in the national title game.

The rotating goaltender theory is beginning to stick for the Minutemen, for while Winer began to excel early this season, Warner showed with a 23-save performance against Mercyhurst — coming 2:22 short of his first career shutout — that he is well-suited to receive more playing time than in past years. Winer has remained solid, meanwhile, and his 51-save performance in the Minutemen's 3-3 draw with BC earned him the Hockey East Player of the Week award.

KAREN WINGERD/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore foward Obi Aduba has a goal and an assist this year for the Minutemen. UMass will play the Maine Black Bears today in Orono for a 7 p.m. face-off. The Maroon and White last played Maine in the Hockey East Championship on March 30, in Boston. UMass lost the game 2-1 in triple overtime.

NHL season looking bleak

By Nancy Armour
Associated Press

CHICAGO (AP) — The NHL players' union is answering the league's hard stance with one of its own, offering little hope for resolution of the lockout that threatens to wipe out the entire season.

The NHL Players' Association and 62 agents presented a unified front as they emerged from a six-hour informational session Wednesday, saying the union has presented a solid proposal and it's now up to the owners to come to the bargaining table.

If the owners refuse to budge, hockey won't be played "for a long, long time," agent Ritch Winter said.

"I guarantee the framework laid by the NHLPA will be what we will sign at one point," Winter said. "I can only hope the owners pay a little more attention, understand what it proposes, because it appears for the most part they do not. When they do, they'll understand the players as a group have given in a way that guarantees we can play hockey."

The lockout, in its 63rd day, was imposed by commissioner Gary Bettman after the collective bargaining agreement expired Sept. 15. The NHL and the players association haven't met since Sept. 9, and have no plans to return to the bargaining table.

The All-Star game has already been canceled, and the Stanley Cup finals are in danger of being wiped out for the first time since 1919, when the series between Montreal and Seattle was stopped after five games due a Spanish influenza epidemic.

"We've got real concerns that we're going to lose the season, there's no question," agent Don Baizley said. "Both sides remain resolute at this moment, so there is a real risk of losing the season, there's no question about that. But everybody hopes that can be avoided."

The union made the last proposal in September, a plan centered on a luxury tax instead of a salary cap. The NHL rejected it because the league says that won't achieve "cost certainty" — a term the players say is tantamount to a salary cap.

A handful of players said last month they would be willing to play under a salary-cap system, or would return to the ice next season if the NHL decided to use replacement players if a deal wasn't reached.

But agents at the meeting Wednesday said they supported NHLPA executive director Bob Goodenow. He explained the union's proposal in detail to the agents and shared the union's correspondence with the league.

"There's no question that all the agents and the players are on the same page with Bob," agent Mark Gandler said. "Everybody wants the season to start. But by the same token, not on the terms that are proposed by the league."

Though there had been some talk that the NHLPA might present the league with a new proposal, Goodenow said there are no plans for that right now.

"We understand that there are certain teams that have got some difficulties, there's no question at all about that. And our proposal recognizes that," Goodenow said. "But what the league's asking from the players is a cap system. The league is asking for players to correct situations which the CBA is not really the fault of.

UMASS

Weekend Schedule

Friday, Nov. 19

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Basketball	at USC Moran Realty Classic	6:30 p.m.
Men's Hockey	at Maine	7:00 p.m.

Saturday, Nov. 20

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Football	vs. Hofstra	12:00 p.m.
Women's Basketball	at. DePaul/Murray State	6:30/8:30 p.m.
Men's Swimming	vs. New Hampshire	1:00 p.m.
Women's Swimming	vs. New Hampshire	1:00 p.m.

Revamped squad faces first test of the season

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

After a 80-32 pre-season thrashing of the NWBL All-Stars on Nov. 6, the Massachusetts women's basketball team is ready to kick off the regular season this weekend at the Moran Realty Classic in Chicago, Ill.

UMass will play Southern California in the first game of the tournament tonight. With a win, the Minutewomen would move on to play either No. 20 DePaul or Murray State.

"We will be playing against some very good teams this weekend but I think we are ready," coach Marnie ' Dacko said. "I am already seeing a lot of improvement since practices started. USC always has a good team but if we can play good team defense we should be ok."

Against the NWBL All-Stars, senior Brooke Campbell led the way for UMass with 13 points on 6-for-8 shooting. Freshman guard/forward Pam Rosanio chipped in with 11 points.

After going 6-22 last season (2-14 Atlantic 10) and losing 89 percent of its scoring to graduation, Dacko is optimistic about seven new additions. The new faces include five highly recruited freshmen and two transfers.

Newcomer Alisha Tatham is regarded as one of UMass' top recruits in recent history. She

See WOMEN'S HOOPS on page 6

COLLEGIAN FILE PHOTO

Point guard Monique Govan scored two points in the Minutewomen's 80-32 victory over the NWBL All-Stars on Nov. 6.

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 53

Moviegoers take a ride on the 'Polar Express'

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

TODAY	TUESDAY	WEDNESDAY
• High: 56 • Low: 35	• High: 55 • Low: 39	• High: 54 • Low: 39

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Minutemen prevail in season finale

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Stonewall and Everywomen's Centers show gay-marriage film

By Nina Lowy
Collegian Correspondent

Last Friday evening the Stonewall Center and the Everywomen's Center presented the area premier of the film "Tying the Knot" as part of the Lesbian Bisexual Gay and Transgender Film Festival, which ran from November 18-21; A discussion with the film's creator, Jim DeSeve, followed the screening.

The documentary chronicled the effort for marriage and legal rights that gay couples have been fighting for throughout time. It contained interviews, excerpts of rallies as well as clips of legislative hearings. The film was released last month across the country in New York, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Boston and St. Louis, among other cities.

The film was being edited in a timely fashion since the Massachusetts Supreme Court had upheld its decision of granting the right for gay and lesbian couples to marry, last November. DeSeve told the audience he had started the film at the end of 1999, and was working steadily for four years, intensely keeping up with all of the changes.

DeSeve, who recently legally married his partner in Canada, has already enjoyed the success of two other films "Burying the Saints" a personal family portrait, and "Sigrid and Rudi Do New York" which was aired on PBS.

"The movie came from a personal point initially. As I Investigated, I found the rights of marriage.... I wanted to show the changes of Massachusetts through history," DeSeve said.

DeSeve also explained that he wanted to capture realistic situations, not only, "metro gays from the coasts," he joked, referring to portrayed stereotypes of gays and lesbians in the media.

A man from a rural farm in Oklahoma and a woman from Tampa, FL told their stories about the losses of their beloved partners and how they received no benefits from the government.

"Tying the Knot" presented the argument that marriage had no religious significance in the Catholic Church until the Middle Ages. Before then, marriage existed strictly for feudal purposes so people

See TYING THE KNOT on page 2

MATTHEW REISS/COLLEGIAN

Jim DeSeve, the creator of the 'Tying the Knot' a documentary about gay-marriage struggles, answered questions of students after the screening.

Powell visits Middle East to help Israelis pick Arafat's successor

By Mark Lavie
Associated Press

JERUSALEM — Secretary of State Colin Powell embarked Sunday on a mission to revive the Middle East peace process after Yasser Arafat's death, saying he will ask Israel to help with the upcoming Palestinian election to pick a successor.

Israel said it would consider pulling back troops from disputed areas in the West Bank.

On his way to the Middle East, Powell told reporters on his plane that U.S.-Palestinian cooperation in setting up the elections "will encourage a degree of cooperation that can spread into other areas."

"This is a moment of opportunity," Powell said. "I'll be encouraging both sides to do everything they can to make sure that this election comes off and that the maximum number of Palestinians get the opportunity to participate."

He said there were "many things" the Israelis could do to help, and he will discuss them during a Monday meeting with Israeli officials.

Powell arrived in Israel hours after Assistant Secretary of State William Burns held talks with both sides, becoming the first senior U.S. diplomat to meet with top Palestinians in several months.

Powell has separate meetings scheduled with Israeli and Palestinian officials Monday.

The visits are part of an international push for progress toward a new Israel-Palestinian accord after Arafat's death Nov. 11 and ahead of Jan. 9 elections to pick his successor as president of the Palestinian Authority. The United States and Israel boycotted Arafat, charging he was tainted with terrorism.

British Foreign Secretary Jack Straw will visit the region this week, and Spanish Foreign Minister Miguel Moratinos is expected Dec. 2.

"I am here to stress strong American support for the Palestinian election," Burns said after meeting interim Palestinian Authority President Rauhi Fattouh in the West Bank city of Ramallah.

Near Ramallah in Beitunia, Israeli Special Forces killed a Palestinian fugitive and two other militants in a car Sunday, the military said. The military said the Palestinians opened fire first. Palestinian security officials said the three were members of the Al Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades, a

See ISRAEL on page 2

Steel Art exhibit at Durfee Conservatory draws attention courtesy of the Art Department's metal shop students

By Samantha Smith
Collegian Correspondent

Last Thursday, the Durfee Conservatory proudly displayed an array of steel sculptures, courtesy of the Art Department Metal Shop.

Upon arriving at the Steel and Foliage Sculpture Exhibit, one could see numerous pieces, all illustrating a unique perspective and distinctive flair. The works, which were specifically constructed for in and outside the Conservatory, were proudly displayed by their artists. One artist, Ben Silva, was happy to explain what went behind his piece "Palpitations 1-3."

"They're dodecahedrons," he said, "I incorporated geometry and organic forms. I wanted to juxtapose those." Silva has been working with steel for about a year and a half, and the dedication involved with working with such a sturdy medium is impressive.

"The large dodecahedron took about thirty hours to make," he said. Despite how long it took to finish the piece, Silva noted that he liked working with steel, saying he enjoyed its strength.

Another artist at the exhibit, Aaron Rutz, had much to say regarding his piece "Fire on the Mountain." His work included various pieces of steel, all of which were salvaged from a park atop of Mt. Tom that had been ruined in a fire. One aspect of the piece was shaped into a flame, "to represent the fire."

The fire-shaped steel was placed on a rotating pedestal that came from a merry-go-round at the park. Rutz explained this was used to, "tie it all together." It created a fiery effect while incorporating a piece of steel that was destroyed in a fire.

Another piece of steel was placed horizontally adjacent to the flame, which Rutz said was done to "create a different plane" for the work. Included with the steel was also a tree that was also salvaged from the fire at Mt. Tom.

Rutz also created another work for the Exhibit, entitled "Line." This piece, he explained, was made to, "give a celebratory feel to the conservatory." This work involved a rectangle, which included two solar lights.

This was the first time Rutz had used steel as a medium, but he noted that he enjoyed using it.

Those observing all of the steel works were also pleased to have such an exhibit at the Durfee Conservatory. Armand Prevost, interim director of Durfee, was very happy with the turnout of the exhibit this year.

"This is one of the best ones we've had at Durfee," he said. "There are a lot of excellent pieces here."

One of the proudest observers at the exhibit, assistant professor of the welding class Line Bruntse, was especially pleased with the outcome.

"Everything has gone really really well," Bruntse said. "The works looks fabulous, and this is the best semester I've taught my seven years of teaching. They're all absolute gems."

Another reason Brunse was excited about the exhibit was because of the positive exposure Durfee received from the show.

"Durfee is one of the lesser-known places on campus," she explained. "It's great to have the chance to do something like this with Durfee." Bruntse emphasized that she was delighted to "create a visibility to help the conservatory."

"I liked the 'Fire on the Mountain'," said UMass student Clara DoNascimento. "It achieves its goal of looking like real fire with the rotating pedestal." DoNascimento also stated that it was evident that "all the artists put in a lot of effort into their pieces."

The Steel and Foliage Sculpture Exhibit was a grand success according to viewers. Not only did it allow talented artists to display their works, but it also gave students an opportunity to go to Durfee Conservatory and see how pretty one of the best-kept secrets of the UMass campus is.

ADRIENNE ROSSI/COLLEGIAN

A student ponders over a large metal structure on display at the Durfee Conservatory last Thursday.

ADRIENNE ROSSI/COLLEGIAN

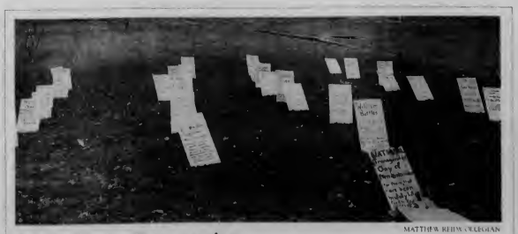
Two students admire a unique sculpture at the Durfee Conservatory.

Chaos and violence erupts in Baghdad; street battles ignite

By Hamza Hendawi
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq - The Iraqi capital, on edge for months because of unrelenting violence, has shed its business-as-usual veneer and become a city at war.

Last week's U.S.-Iraqi raid on the Abu Hanifa mosque - one of the most revered shrines for Sunni Muslims - sparked street battles, assassinations and a rash of bombings.



The chaos has fanned sectarian tension and deepened Sunni distrust of interim Prime Minister Ayad Allawi, a Shiite installed by the Americans five months ago. It has also heightened the anxiety of the city's six million people — already worn down by years of sanctions and tyranny, then war, military occupation, crime and deprivation.

"Baghdad is now a battlefield and we are in the middle of it," said Qasim al-Sabti, an artist who kept his children home from school Saturday, which is a work day in Iraq. When he sent his children back to school Sunday, the teachers didn't show up.

Merchants in the outdoor markets, where most people buy their meat, vegetables and household supplies, say crowds are below normal. Many shops near sites of car bombings have closed.

Adding to the sense of unease, U.S. military helicopters have begun flying lower over the city. The distant roar of jets has become a fixture of Baghdad at night.

See IRAQ on page 2

MATTHEW REISS/COLLEGIAN

Remembering Transgenders

Dozens of memorials stand near the Campus Pond in memory of those transgendered individuals lost. The month of November marks Transgender Awareness Month.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugalski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
CAMPUS EDITOR Alyson Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
SPORTS EDITOR Erika Lorley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Martelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADMITTING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kiggins
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginie Frecaut
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADMITTING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS JaeYeo Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hrehi
ADMITTING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Busack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Manayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FINANCED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE PRIMARILY. IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE AS AN THE COLLEGE INDEPENDENT. IN 1902 THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1918 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARD-WINNING SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADDITIONAL RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL (413) 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Mike Marzelli
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Megan Brinster
COPY EDITOR
Matt Elder
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha M. Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Ali Zillmann, Amanda Allen

Wanna work for right graphics?
Call Samantha @ 545-3864

'Tying the Knot' documentary shown

TYING THE KNOT from page 1

would be able to eat and survive.

Marriages were compared to business relationships before they evolved into love-based relationships. Another point the film argued focused on Republican criticism of gay marriage. Republican representatives claimed that gay marriage would not be in the best interest of children. The film attacked this point by asking how broken homes and divorce are in the best interest of children. "Tying the Knot" expressed the demand for the same 1,138 federal rights that insure heterosexual marriages.

"It's maddening, political, frustrating," filmmaker DeSeve described fundraising as the most challenging part of his film. He said that the most rewarding part for him was changing the minds of five Connecticut state legislators.

DeSeve said that he felt it was his moral obligation to change peoples' minds about the subject. He said the film is directed towards people who still need convincing.

"Gay marriage is not on most peoples' minds. Most people don't care about it, and they're easily fooled by the Right [wing] using rhetoric," DeSeve said.

"I think we've got a long road ahead of us. Progress is slow but moving in an upward curve. Massachusetts got a crack in the road, and the progress will probably be state by state. New York will probably be following. Ultimately it will take action to the Supreme Court," said DeSeve on his outlook for the future of gay marriage.

UNH student hit and killed by car

DURHAM, N.H. (AP) - A University of New Hampshire student from Massachusetts was killed early Sunday when hit by a car near campus. Another student was charged.

Sophomore Richard Hegerich, 20, of Hanover, Mass., was hit on Main Street around 1 a.m., police said.

Another student, Kevin Whittaker, 19, of Nashua, has been charged with drunken driving and conduct after an accident.

Hegerich, a business major, was a member of the men's swim team. He died at the scene.

The university's crisis response team met Sunday, and UNH counseling staff will be available to teammates and students living in his dorm. Counselors will be available to students and faculty in Hegerich's classes.

Whittaker was being held on $5,000 cash bail and was scheduled to be arraigned in Dover District Court on Monday.

-Associated Press

EXECUTIVE
VALET PARKING
Serving Bradley Airport
Airport Parking College Special!
$25.00*-Up to 7 Days Parking. Valid 11/23-11/30
$50.00*-Up to 5 Weeks Parking. Valid 12/15-02/01/05
Valid College ID Req., Present this coupon or Visit us at:
www.CollegeAirportParking.com
800-218-1297
*Plus 4% Access Fee Cannot be Combined with Other offers

Violence continues in Iraq

IRAQ from page 1

The latest escalation appeared to have been triggered by a U.S.-Iraqi raid Friday on the Abu Hanifa mosque in the Sunni neighborhood of Azamiyah as worshippers were leaving after midday prayers. Witnesses said three people were killed, and 40 were arrested.

The next day, heavy street fighting erupted in Azamiyah between U.S. and Iraqi forces and Sunni insurgents who tried to storm a police station. The fighting, involving mortars, rocket propelled grenades and roadside bombs, raged for several hours and left several stores ablaze, according to witnesses.

Almost simultaneously, clashes broke out in at least five other Baghdad neighborhoods. In all, at least 10 people, including one American soldier, were killed throughout the capital Saturday.

Lt. Col. James Hutton, spokesman for the U.S. Army's 1st Cavalry Division, which is in charge of security in Baghdad, acknowledged that there has been an increase in insurgent activity in the capital.

But he linked the increase to the lighting in Fallujah, where U.S. troops are still fighting pockets of resistance after recapturing the city last week, rather than the raid on the Abu Hanifa mosque.

The government has said the raid was carried out because of suspicions of "terrorist activity" there. It appears the operation was part of a crackdown on militant Sunni clerics, many of whom are believed to have links to some insurgent groups and who had spoken out against the Fallujah operation.

The Friday raid came at a time when sectarian tensions in Baghdad were already running high over the assault on the mainly Sunni Arab city of Fallujah. Baghdad's population is a potentially explosive mix of Sunnis, Shiites and Kurds. With frustration mounting over soaring crime, unemployment and poor services, Allawi can ill-afford to allow Baghdad to descend further into chaos.

The signs, however, are not encouraging. With the Jan. 30 national election now only two months away, the rivalry between various ethnic and religious groups is intensifying.

Adding to the public discontent is a fuel shortage — ironic in a country with some of the world's largest petroleum reserves. Motorists must line up for hours behind hundreds of other cars at gasoline stations throughout the city.

Electricity supplies remain erratic, with frequent outages. Residents of some Baghdad neighborhoods complain there has been no garbage collection for weeks, leaving them no choice but to burn their trash.

A nighttime curfew imposed this month under a 60-day state of emergency empties the city shortly after sunset.

MATTHEW REID/COLLEGIAN

A fair to remember!

Activites Coordinator Susana Ho and Kosal Sarou sit in front of thier 'Cambodian Students Association' display during this weekend's International Fair.

Powell assists Middle East

ISRAEL from page 1

violent offshoot of the ruling Fatah party.

Israeli troops also shot and killed an armed Palestinian who tried to attack a Gaza road used by Jewish settlers, the Israeli army and Islamic Jihad said.

In the meeting with Burns, Palestinian leaders asked the United States to pressure Israel to remove troops from West Bank cities and towns to allow campaigning and a free election.

"We are determined to do everything we can to help in that process and we also support steps by Israel which are needed to facilitate this election," Burns said, without elaborating.

Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman Mark Regev said Israel has "every intention of redeploying ttroops) so as to allow them to have their process of election."

Shortly after the latest round of Mideast violence erupted in 2000, Israel sent troops back into West Bank areas ceded to the Palestinians under interim peace accords. Troops set up dozens of roadblocks and cut off cities and towns, often confining hundreds of thousands of Palestinians to their home communities.

Dine & Win!
Dining Services and Coca-Cola want to fly You and a Guest to Cancun during intersession!
Enter to win a Trip for 2 to the all inclusive Club Med in Cancun Mexico!
water sports included
Compliments of UMass Dining Services and Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Greenfield
DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst
Coca-Cola

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 2004

"I have opinions of my own—strong opinions—but I don't always agree with them"
-George Bush

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Too much focus on ABC football commercial

ABC and the NFL recently had a fallout regarding ABC's promo for the start of "Monday Night Football". The promo, which contained sexual connotations, caused quite the stir that resulted in the public denouncement of the commercial from the NHL and the public apology of the network that aired it. In light of last year's super bowl halftime show where Janet Jackson had one of her breasts exposed on live television, there has been a lot of concern about the effects such airings will have on the children who are watching them. While there is a natural protective air that the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) embodies and upholds, we must not overlook the fact that the commercial in question was not selling sex, it was advertising for a television show.

As a result of the Super Bowl incident last year, the FCC fined CBS a total of $550,000 dollars, or $27,500 to each of the 20 channels that is owned by CBS, according to The New York Times. Currently, the FCC is said to be reviewing complaints about the commercial that was aired last week. The main issue here is that ABC is an affiliate of the Walt Disney Company, whose programming is directly targeted at children.

We live in a time when it is becoming virtually impossible to shelter children from every little disturbance that parents might deem inappropriate. The program "Monday Night Football" itself is not a show that is typically geared towards younger viewers. Therefore, it is expected to have a little more adult-style advertising leading up to the show. Granted, the commercial was not very tasteful in combining an actress from the popular ABC show "Desperate Housewives" Nicollette Sheridan with Terrell Owens, receiver for the Eagles; having them be in a locker room before the game with Sheridan in a towel and Owens saying "the Eagles can win without me."

To try and get the FCC involved rather than just accepting the apology of the network, letting them learn their lesson and moving on shows how we, as a society, can be less understanding than we preach. In the commercial aired, there was no nudity shown and in the days that followed, ABC has taken full responsibility for the disturbance that the commercial has caused. There is no blame game being played, except by those who feel that implying sex on the television is just as bad as actually depicting it.

The commercial was no doubt in poor taste and the network is surely suffering for it. However, for us as a country to not let it be what it was and get past it is just as bad as if we were to replay it over and over again on television. The FCC will underniably attempt to take some sort of action in the future regarding the commercial. Whatever they decide will appease, once and for all, the complaints being fired against ABC. However, until then, we as a collective group of entertainment-seeking individuals must realize that the only way to make everyone completely happy and avoid all confrontation and offensive material is for everyone to just stop watching television.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

ADOPTION ABUSE LOGIC FLAWED

It is very unfortunate that Mr. Naughton did not give more thought to his comments that indicated "adoption can be worse than abortion." As the Director of a local adoption agency which primarily works with the State to recruit and develop families who will adopt the older child who has been in State foster care for three years on average, I can assure your readers that Mr. Naughton's assumptions not only miss the mark but inadvertently insult the hundreds of dedicated adoptive families with whom we have worked over the past 30 years, who have opened their hearts and their homes to very fragile and abused children.

Yes, unfortunately, the extremely rare case of an abusive foster care situation has been in the papers both locally and nationally. It is extremely important to distinguish again between these very rare occurrences among the many dedicated foster parents and the stability and permanence that an adoptive family provides. It is painfully ironic that Mr. Naughton's comments were made during National Adoption Month. I have just come back from the Northampton Court's second annual Adoption Day in which 14 children were adopted with great fanfare, balloons, cakes and affection from all present.

As one young adoptee put it in her remarks to all those assembled in the court, thanks need to go to the social workers and lawyers but mainly to the family who has chosen to give her a second chance at life. Again, in what may have been a throw away line in his column on abortion, Mr. Naughton needs to be aware what a second chance adoption is for the hundreds of children in Massachusetts foster care waiting for an adoptive family.

Jeffrey P. Roth-Howe
Executive Director, Children's Aid and Family Service of Hampshire County

UMASS DRIVERS SET GOOD EXAMPLE

When a freshman first arrives at college, they are inundated with new surroundings in their first days. Worries about new friends dissipate, unfamiliar living conditions settle in and eventually classes begin. This has been my experience at UMass Amherst. However, there was one other detail about this University that struck me immediately. Or, rather, it's what didn't strike me.

As I made my way across campus, I stopped as I approached a crosswalk. Parents and teachers have ingrained this process of "Stop and look left, right, and then left again" in me since pre-school.

Yet, I was quite stunned to realize that even before I had reached the street, the cars traveling in both directions had stopped so as to allow me to continue my journey uninterrupted.

The surprise did not wear off until this happened many times over the course of the first weeks. It seems that as soon as I begin to think about crossing the street, drivers read my brain waves and slow to a halt.

When asking friends about this phenomenon, they greeted me with the same feeling of "I know what you're talking about! You noticed that too?

When I prodded for possible explanations, most pointed out the street signs, which read, "Stop for Pedestrians in Crosswalk - $100 Fine." However, that is a statewide law in Massachusetts, and I have never encountered such pedestrian hospitality in my suburban hometown or in the City of Boston.

I must say that I am quite impressed with the cautious drivers around campus. I have never seen such polite drivers, certainly not in Boston or New York City. Here is, finally, one way in which the University should be an example for the entire state and beyond.

While students can enjoy the respect given to those who decide (or must) walk across campus, one must continue to be cautious. Especially when in New York City or Boston – I am afraid I might forget where I am!

Matt Hoffman
UMass student

Bill bad for students

Allison Edles

In a new bill approved yesterday by the House of Representatives and the Senate, more college students will be left to pay for their college educations without as much help from federal financial aid as in previous years. The bill came about due to a revision of the formula that is responsible for determining the amount of financial aid each family/student receives.

As if it wasn't hard enough for students to pay for college, the government has now gone and cut down more resources that many students relied on to get them through their college careers. By passing this bill, a bill that was shot down by Congress last year, college students across the nation will be left scrambling for last-minute loans because their federal grants will no longer be awarded to them.

"Nearly 100,000 more students may lose their federal grants entirely, as Congress considers legislation that could place more of the financial burden for college on students and their families," said a New York Times article. By passing this bill, it is limiting a student's opportunity to pursue higher education after they graduate high school. To go along with that theory, many students will, no doubt, reevaluate their future plans if they were planning on becoming a doctor or lawyer, both professions that require additional schooling after a student has earned their undergraduate degree.

The formula that is in contention, "allows families to deduct some of what they pay in state taxes," as was mentioned in the article. The article also mentions that the drawback from the federal government's point of view, specifically the Office of Management and Budget, to the current formula is it will add an extra $300 million "to a program that is already running at a shortfall." For students who attend a university out of state, their financial aid is already significantly less than their in-state peers for obvious reasons. Now, add in the factor that the families whose parents are in the $35,000 to $40,000 yearly earnings category are the ones who will be most affected by this. Typically, families who earn that kind of money seek out state schools because it is cheaper and they can, more often than not, rely on Pell grants from the federal government. Now, about 90,000 students whose families fall within that bracket will have their choices for school funding drastically cut down.

By passing this bill, a bill that was shot down by Congress last year, college students across the nation will be left scrambling for last-minute loans because their federal grants will no longer be awarded to them.

The biggest and most serious effect that this bill will have will be on high school graduates, in particular the ones who were accepted to schools based on the financial aid received for that year. If one of those students fell into the aforementioned yearly earnings category and received a Pell grant for their first year of college, the odds of them receiving it again the following year are greatly decreased. The problem with the way financial aid is distributed is that the distributors are only seeing the family on paper in comparison to other families. For example, in many instances, students with multiple siblings have a better chance of receiving financial aid than a family with an only child, especially when they assume the same economic environment for both.

As a result of the high cost of colleges and universities as is, it is quite often the case that many students don't fully pay off their student loans until they are well into their thirties. As a result of this bill's approval, it has lumped middle class and lower class income families into the same boat, a boat that will receive little to any financial aid from the federal government. Barring individual scholarship opportunities around college campuses, the remaining financial aid that will be left as a result of this bill will be dished out based on even stricter standards than before. Consequently, for a state school such as UMass in particular, the financial aid packages for all students will be significantly less than in previous years.

It is understandable that the federal government will be choosy when dispensing their money, especially given the amount of national debt the country has acquired. However, student financial aid is not the place to be stingy. By cutting back on Pell grants being distributed to students, it is only hindering the capabilities and the amount of students that wish to seek a higher education and have been told since day one that an affordable college education is one that should not be avoided based on financial need.

Allison Edles is a Collegian editor.

Giving thanks for this year

Chris Eckel

Thanksgiving is right around the corner. Some might tell you it's the best of Americana: family, football and food. Some of you might decry it as a remembrance of atrocities committed against Native Americans. However each of us may feel about this holiday, everyone hopefully has something to be thankful for at this time of year - those little sparks of bliss that keep you going through the longest of days. In case you're struggling to find your blessings and need a little help, here are some insights into my happy place.

(If you are from New York or certain other parts of this country, you're out of luck on this one this year - skip this paragraph.) Local sports are a good source of cheer. In case you hadn't noticed, the best teams in the most popular of American sports, football and baseball, happen to play within our little state. Wear those hats with pride, even you bandwagon fans. UMass also has a lot of great teams playing well, and there's no better way to procrastinate and while away the day than spending it at the Mullins Center.

Great music always helps me to see the best in life. And no, I don't mean musicians like Britney Spears or others who might be able to read ghostwriter lyrics and shake their (insert your favorite body part here), but can't write or sing for themselves. I mean Interpol, Coldplay, Jay-Z, Modest Mouse, The Streets, Kayne West, Less than Jake, O.A.R., Franz Ferdinand, Outkast, N*E*R*D and all the rest. I don't know about you, but hearing a good song can alter my entire mood for the better. There's so much great music out there, there has to be something you can dig. Squish closer to that cute girl or boy with the iPod and steal some new inspiration.

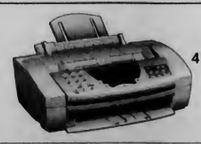
I'm cheered up by "The O.C.". Seriously. I got into it with my sister over last winter break when it first aired. I missed some episodes in the spring because of SGA, but now I'm back on the O.C. wagon. It gets so ridiculous I spend half my classes imagining new plotlines. Nothing seems out of bounds for these guys. Next week, I'm predicting that Marissa is going to have to choose between Ryan and his suddenly discovered long-lost evil twin brother who just woke up from a coma after a plane crash in the Alaskan wilderness where he was cared for by wolves and made millions panning for gold. She can't deal with choosing one over the other, so she decides to run away to Paris and star in skin-care commercials.

Lightning round! I'm happy for those little things that I take for granted that put a great finishing touch on a day. I'm talking about the perfect sundae at Sweets, Adult Swim, long showers, intense rain, my video games and movies, my stuffed animals always staying up late waiting for me and my extra blanket to keep me warm as it gets colder.

I'm appreciative of good writing, and I don't mean myself. I mean real writers, or at least decent impersonators. People like Ernest Hemingway and Rick Reilly. People like Bill Simmons and Dan Brown. Now, you can quibble with my choices. But you can't deny that burying yourself in a good book or article helps the crazy world around you dissolve away, just for a bit. We all need afternoons or late nights like that once in a while.

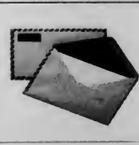
I'm grateful for friends, both old and new. The new friends, all of which were met through that modern marvel Facebook. (Apparently some people did read my last column, and did take me up on the Facebook offer.) The old friends, I'd list you all but can't, so just assume you've got my love and respect. I can't say too many good things about you all. You know who you are, and you've been through it all with me over the years - thanks for that. Here's to six more months of whatever college life throws at us.

I've saved the best for last. I'm thankful for my family: my Mom and Dad, who have taught and continue to teach me how to excel, how to deal with life's little disappointments, how to carry myself with class, and so many other valuable lessons; my brother, who is my team's first-round draft pick no matter what needs to get done, and who always leaves a good impression on everybody to whom I introduce him; and my sister, who worries so much, but really has nothing to worry about.



With comforts and people like that around me, it's no wonder that nothing gets me down for too long. I hope you all have the same luck. Happy Thanksgiving, UMass!

Chris Eckel is a Collegian columnist.



SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'The Polar Express' pulls into theaters

By Tambi Munn
Collegian Staff

After a year-long wait since the first appearance of the movie poster in theaters "The Polar Express" has arrived. The much-anticipated film is an adaptation of the Caldecott Award winning book of the same name by Chris Van Allsburg. The story emphasizes, like other stories about Christmas, that seeing really isn't believing and in this story, one boy is desperately trying to believe in the magic of Santa Claus, despite all the evidence he has collected that tells him no such thing exists.

The boy goes to bed on Christmas Eve, but like most children, he is having trouble sleeping, not because of the excitement, but because he is listening for the proof he so desperately needs. Suddenly his room begins to shake and there is a loud steamy whistle to signify that the Polar Express has pulled up to lead the boy on the road to discovery.

Tom Hanks lends his voice to The Conductor who yells to the bewildered boy, "All aboard!" Thus begins the trip to the North Pole with a few other lucky children — including a poor boy, who in the past has had no reason to believe in Santa due to a lack of presents at his house Christmas morning, an obnoxious know-it-all boy, whose irritating voice sounds very out of place and ruins the beauty in the scenes he is in, and a brave girl, whose adult actions and vocabulary are unbelievable even for a fantastical film such as this.

"The Polar Express" is a far more adventurous and exciting train ride with a lot more twists and turns in the film than in the book. For instance, the mere cocoa scene in the book is a fun choreographed dance with waiters and chefs in the film. Cups, saucers, teapots and cocoa are flying as the waiters run to catch them and the children watch in amazement as their seats are turned to face each other. The waiter's aprons become tablecloths for imaginary tables, the children gratefully drink their hot chocolate, and the conductor controls the whole scene to ensure the cocoa's smooth delivery.

There is definitely one question that has to be answered: why is it that films intended for little children have some of the scariest scenes? The boy is walking with the Conductor and the Brave Girl through the train, but he inadvertently gets separated from them in the car that houses many old and misused toys. Marionettes with freakish faces hang from the ceiling of the car and one of them suddenly verbally attacks the boy for being a doubter. The marionette is being controlled by this rather creepy hobo who has quite frightening facial expressions. To further the fear, an elf at the North Pole tries to take a present from a kid and says, "You can trusssst me," lengthening the "s" sound like Gollum from "Lord of the Rings."

The versatility of Tom Hanks shines through as the voices of The Boy, The Conductor, The Boy's father, the freaky hobo, and Santa, but the classic Tom Hanks "hha" sounds, the ones that come deep down from his chest, give him away in a few of his character voices. The voice of the boy is truly an amazing accomplishment for Hanks. It is unbelievable how realistically he can sound like a small boy.

The characters jump off the pages of the book and become life-like as these amazing technologically animated people for the film. A great many scenes had to be added to Allsburg's story to make the short Christmas tale into a full-length film. It is quite beautiful and its scenes look impeccably like the book's illustrations with the falling snow and cold, winter colors of the night and the warm, cheerful colors of the North Pole. Mixed with a glorious score there are completely mesmerizing moments. The film is a welcome asset to the library of Christmas films but it is missing a certain something that could turn it into the classic that Allsburg's book has become.

'The Polar Express'
Directed by Robert Zemeckis
Starring Tom Hanks, Daryl Sabara
Warner Bros.
Rated G
100 mins.
Grade B

Dylan shows Mullins what legends are made of

By Brian Duffey
Collegian Staff

AMHERST —Young and old alike flooded the Mullins Center Saturday night to listen to living legend Bob Dylan. Although his lyrics were not easily understood, the show was solid. Dylan's band was impressive, as was Bob's work on the harmonica.

Born Robert Allen Zimmerman in Duluth, Minnesota in 1941, Dylan's musical career has spanned four decades. He recently finished a collection of personal stories entitled "Chronicles, Volume 1."

Bob Dylan
Mullins Center
Amherst
Nov. 20

This former civil rights activist was dressed in a black suit with a matching top hat. Dylan and his band played for a little over two hours. There was a mix of slow sad tunes and upbeat toe-tapping selections.

His rendition of "Mr. Tambourine Man" was received warmly by the crowd. Those in attendance cheered as Dylan sang, "I'm not sleepy and there is no place I'm going to." He completed the tune with a harmonica solo that was vintage Dylan. This version was certainly flawed and somewhat disappointing, but just hearing Bob Dylan sing the chorus was enough to bring a smile to your face. Being in the same room as this American icon was more satisfying than his music.

Greenfield Community College student, Shauna Mizula, said that she wrote a paper on this Dylan song as a junior in high school. Mizula was not thrilled with his performance, but did feel that it was "mellow and relaxing."

Dylan did a haunting version of "The Ballad of Hollis Brown." Self-proclaimed "long-time fan" Carolyn Bower said this was her favorite tune of the night. "The arrangement was tough," Bower explained. Bower and her husband were all smiles after the show, but they did admit that Dylan's music has weakened over the years.

The crowd erupted when Dylan and his bandmates returned to the stage for an encore. They played a memorable version of "Like a Rolling Stone." Both children and baby-boomers clapped and sang along as Dylan belted, "How does it feel, to be without a home, like a complete unknown, like a rolling stone?" This was the best tune of the night.

Bob Dylan finished the night with a ruckus rendition of "All Along the Watchtower." "There must be some way out of here, said the joker to the thief; there's too much confusion, I can't get no relief," sang the legendary performer. His voice was suspect on this song, but his band made up for his vocal inadequacies. It was a strong conclusion to the evening's performance.

UMass alumnus Avin Mathur said, "he was so professional, the guitars were awesome and the band was tight."

Mathur's friend, Ken Bredon, has seen Dylan four times. Bredon said, "All Along the Watchtower was great, there were a lot of good songs."

Mount Holyoke senior, Teal Maxwell, said, "He was incredible, he's a legend, you gotta see him."

Ithaca College student, Flexis Vesely, stated, "I wanted more old stuff, but the purpose was just to see Bob Dylan."

Taking Back Sunday takes back Boston

By Craig Leger
Collegian Correspondent

BOSTON — As advertised, Thursday, November 18th went down in the Beantown record books as one of the greatest nights of rock of the year. The amazing lineup of Like Yesterday, Funeral for a Friend, Atreyu, and the creators of everyone's favorite CD of the year, Taking Back Sunday, lit up the Avalon Ballroom as if Christmas had already arrived.

Taking Back Sunday
The Avalon
Boston
Nov. 18

With a sold out crowd on hand at the WFNX Radio Station sponsored event dubbed "Stick a Fork in It" the right mixture of music and promotions teamed up to host a great show.

Like Yesterday opened the show with a strong performance that showcased their indie-rock capabilities. They were followed by the melodic hardcore amazement that is Funeral for a Friend. These two bands together put on a great performance, pumping up the crowd that had already been jumping with anticipation for the next two acts.

After the usual 15 minutes of stage preparation, the distinct sound of an electric guitar let everyone know it was time for Atreyu's set. These hard rockers out of Orange County, California played a 40-minute set that consisted of much head banging and guitar solos by their amazing lead guitarist. The end of their set featured the same guitarist as well as the band's bassist, on top of an amplifier playing their instruments behind their heads... absolutely amazing.

As you can only imagine, after a set such as Atreyu's, the sold out crowd packed in tighter and tighter until feet could not be moved and short girls were begging to be lifted up to breathe. At this point in time, FNX radio personalities Swasey and Amngelle from "The Swasey Show" came out and introduced Taking Back Sunday.

All of a sudden, the distinct sound of the opening to "Set Phasers to Stun" the opening song on Taking

See SUNDAY on page 5

Granola and Cold Duck serve up area's funkiest performance

By Brian Duffey
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Local sensation Cold Duck Complex opened for underground giant Granola Funk Express on Thursday night in Northampton. These groups put together a musically diverse program that had individuals inside Pearl Street Night Club dancing and carousing.

Cold Duck began their set in front of a small crowd with minimal energy. As the set progressed, the audience grew and their enthusiasm strengthened.

Emcee Platypus Complex was impressive and did not stumble over a single word. As the crowd got more involved, Platypus stepped up his stage presence. With the microphone in hand, his style is similar to Zach de la Rocha of the now defunct Rage Against the Machine. Platypus Complex, AKA Casey Hayman, performed an Old Dirty Bastard track in memory of the Wu Tang Clan member's recent passing.

Casey said his stage name symbolizes what he refers to as an ongoing struggle to identify himself. This sentiment is described in the lyric, "is he an asshole, is he a genius, or is he insane." His witty lyricism is evident in lines such as "I'd like to say I'm ill, but I'd be lying cause I've been vaccinated."

Hayman, a senior at UMass, explained that he hesitates from working with other wordsmiths because of the personal nature of his material, which he feels may be compromised. He says that he would have to get know a person before working on a collaboration. Platypus said he's always coming up with new material in unlikely places, like in the classroom.

Cold Duck Complex
Granola Funk Express
Pearl Street
Northampton
Nov. 18

His musical influences are Mobb Deep, Wu Tang Clan, De La Soul, and Tribe Called Quest. Hayman said that he experiences some nervousness before he takes the stage, something that has lessened throughout his career. He likens performing on stage to working out or lovemaking.

Cold Duck bass guitarist Joe Cardozo was satisfied with Thursday's performance. Cardozo did say that Pearl Street is a tough place to play because of the sound dynamics. Cardozo, who plays everyday, explained that the group plays together four to five times a week, between practicing and performing. Led Zeppelin and The Slip have influenced Joe musically.

The group, which also includes drummer Makaya McCraven and keyboardist Jeff D'Antona, will be opening for Mr. Lif and Acrobatic at Pearl Street on Dec. 4. They will be headlining a show at the Iron Horse in Northampton on Jan. 29. Their full-length album, Figureheads, is available at Newbury Comics. For the Record, and at coldduckcomplex.com.

Cold Duck fan, Becky Levert, said, "They sounded amazing."

Granola Funk Express emcee, Foulmouth Jerk, said that his group is a, "nationwide group of musicians." Foulmouth is originally from New Jersey, but now resides in Asheville, North Carolina. He said that GFE has been able to withstand the test of time because of their close friendships.

Foulmouth confessed to his on the road habits, which he admits are at times somewhat excessive. He works daily on his material in order to keep money in his pocket. His material comes from, "my immediate surroundings, things I need to get off my chest." Growing up, this New Jersey native was heavily influenced by Big Daddy Kane. He stated that he is unimpressed with most current hip-hop music, but he does listen to Outkast, Tame 1, and Murs. He has several solo albums including, "Skrilla Warfare."

He explained that friends join GFE as they tour the county. Top Raman, a friend of the band, performed before the Express took the stage. His performance was not well received. Although he is lyrically endowed, his rhymes were offensive and unlike the upbeat positive vibe put forth by GFE.

Granola Funk took the stage and shook Pearl Street from start to finish. Many of those in attendance were familiar with the lyrics including, "I wasn't raised by the street, I was raised by the highway." This tune celebrates the nomadic nature of the bands' members, who spend a third of every year touring the country, according to GFE emcee, Agent 23.

The crowd participation provided GFE with added fuel. Agent 23 said that Pearl Street is always one of the group's best tour stops. Agent 23, also known as Cactus, said that the crowd's energy is a "huge factor" in his group's performance. Cactus said that each GFE show is unique and different.

Granola Funk performed a new track titled, "Three in the Morning," which the crowd loved. In addition to their pre-written material, GFE did several freestyle songs, where several emcees went back and forth with improvisational, unrehearsed poetry. The group also added a few instrumental dance tunes that had everyone moving.

Keene State College art student, Megan Miller, said the performance was, "really good, good beats and good lyrics. They always put out a good vibe."

Josh Cole, a student at Holyoke Community College, complimented, "I like the beats."

Caitlin Doyle, who came to the show from Providence, Rhode Island, screamed, "I loved every minute of it, it exceeded my expectations."

Information about tour dates, merchandise, and music is available at granolafunk.com.

Taking Back Sunday show rocks the Avalon

SUNDAY from page 4

Back Sunday's album "Where you want to be" echoed throughout the hall. The crowd of over a thousand fans roared in possibly the most deafening cheer heard in Massachusetts since just a few weeks ago (ahem... Red Sox!) As the lights illuminated the stage, the band was rocking and singer Adam Lazzara danced out sporting a Mickey Mouse sweater that appeared to be able to fit a fifth grader.

Throughout the entire Taking Back Sunday set, the Avalon was absolutely insane. At times there were fans jumping off one another's shoulders, fans seemingly having deep moments within songs, and a sing-a-long for an hour straight that can only be compared to the likes of a Disney movie.

Within the hour set, Taking Back Sunday played 14 songs, including 8 off of the "Where You Want to Be" album and 6 older tracks. Each song was very well received by the audience. The acrobatics that Adam Lazzara performed with the microphone performing only added to the amazing onstage show. At times it seemed almost like fans were waiting for him to "walk the dog" with all of his yo-yo like motions with the microphone. He managed though to mix in a few of the coveted mic-chord noose actions. It all made for a great visual effect.

Possibly the only negative aspect to the entire set was the ridiculously bright spotlights that were shining from behind the stage into the eyes of the crowd, which is believed to have been so that people could not take pictures during the set.

After the time with TBS had come to an end, the band thanked everyone for coming out to the show, before they ran back stage. After a moment, a roaring chant of "One More Song!" ignited in the crowd. The band kindly obliged, and ran back on stage. Initially, Adam and guitarist/vocalist Fred Mascherino came out and began performing the bands acoustic staple "New American Classic" along with what seemed like every person in the building singing along.

Halfway through the song, the rest of the band joined them on stage and played the song out and followed it with yet another older song. They once again left the stage following the encore. The crowd of over a thousand fans screamed in awe as to what they had just witnessed and been a part of.

To say the least, not one person left the Avalon on Thursday night with a dry shirt. The intensity that was shared that evening was rare. It isn't often that most people witness a concert this amazing. I'm sure it is something that will travel with people for a very long time.

If you ever get a chance to check out Taking Back Sunday live, they come highly recommended. You wouldn't want to have to, "close your eyes and just settle, settle."

Taking Back Sunday played at Boston's Avalon Club on Thursday, along with Like Yesterday and others.

Happy Thanksgiving

from the staff of Dining Services

YCMP
RESIDENTIAL

UMASS BASKETBALL
CAMPUS CENTER PEP RALLY
12PM

CATCH COACH STEVE LAPPAS AND THE MEN'S BASKETBALL TEAM TODAY!!!!
@ THE CAMPUS CENTER

THE COUNTDOWN IS COMING TO AN END
Only 1 Day left until...

UMASS BASKETBALL Vs. BSC PANTHERS
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 23
7:00PM
THE MULLINS CENTER

Get Your Tickets Now!!!
Campus Center • Mullins Center Box Office

Seniors go out with a bang

FOOTBALL from page 8

Ellis in going over 100 yards receiving, catching six passes for 105 yards and a touchdown.

"We finished this season playing the type of football we were capable of playing," Peebler said. "It's up to these guys to keep the momentum going and come back strong next year looking to build on what we started."

While the focus of the afternoon was on the graduating seniors, junior defensive back R.J. Cobbs ultimately got the biggest kick out of the afternoon. With his team holding on to a slim 33-30 lead with 2:35 to play, Hofstra took over at its own 40-yard line looking to drive for the tying or winning score.

On first down, however, Cobbs read Clarkson's eyes, jumped the intended receiver's route and picked off the pass. After an initial bobble, Cobbs tucked the interception away and returned it 43 yards for the touchdown that proved to be the clincher. Cobbs then celebrated by punting the football out of the stadium, drawing flags from each and every official.

"I told coach if I take one to the house I was going to do something spectacular," said Cobbs, whose touchdown was the first this season for a UMass defense that led the A-10 in interceptions with 17. "I didn't have too many balls thrown to my side, I almost dropped it, I was bobbling it, but I got it."

UMass opened the scoring with the game's first 13 points, including a nine-yard touchdown strike from Day to Peebler and a one-yard scoring sneak by Day, before Hofstra answered back with two second quarter touchdowns to give the Pride a 14-13 edge at halftime.

The Minutemen then posted the initial two scores of the second half, as tight end Chris Hopkins recorded his first career touchdown reception on a nine-yard pass from Day and Moore hauled in a 26-yard touchdown catch with 4:12 remaining in the third quarter to stake the Maroon and White to a 26-14 lead.

The Pride answered right back again however, scoring 16 consecutive points on two touchdowns and a 44-yard field goal by Chris Onorato to jump out to a 30-26 advantage.

Yet in the end, UMass had the final say, as Day found Peebler one final time in No. 11's stellar career, giving the Minutemen a lead they would not relinquish.

Tough weekend in Chicago

WHOOPS from page 8

two and made them both.

The tie was short-lived, however, as Cameron's jumper 11 seconds later put the Women of Troy in the lead again, and USC went into the half leading 25-22.

Rebounding paid off for the time being in the second half. Trailing 43-36 with under 10 minutes to go in the game, the Minutewomen went on an 11-2 tear to give themselves their first lead of the game. Edris Bailey started things off with a mid-range jumper at the eight-minute mark, and Katie Nelson nailed down a three-pointer with four to go to put them up 47-45.

But once again, it was short-lived, Lenoir hit a layup with 3:48 left to tie the ball game again, and the Trojans never looked back. They would finish out the game with a 7-2 run.

Saturday's consolation game against the Murray State Racers was more of the same: committing turnovers and losing the lead, falling 56-50.

This time, there was no record-setting amount of turnovers, but the extinguished lead was greater.

Murray State's Jessica Hirsch led all scorers with 24 points —19 coming in the second half — while Katie Nelson led the Minutewomen with 12.

It was the Racers who were playing catch-up this time as the Maroon and White slowly built a small lead through the first half. The Racers were up 4-0 three minutes into the game, and it was the last time they would see a lead until 15 minutes to go in the second.

Nelson was leading the charge, hitting several lay-ups and a crucial trey to keep the Minutewomen one step ahead. But this was no Nelson show, as UMass' bench accounted for 18 of the 50 points.

Heading into the locker room, the Minutewomen were leading 26-21. When both teams emerged again, it was a completely different game.

Different in the sense that the Racers went on a tremendous charge, opening the half with an 18-5 scoring run on the efforts of Hirsch, who scored 15 of the 18 points in that run. Within six minutes, the Racers turned a five-point deficit into a 39-31 lead and never looked back after that point.

The Racers pushed the lead out to 10 with six minutes to go before UMass found a second wind and tried to regain the lead. Brooke Campbell and Ashley Sharpton made consecutive baskets to cut the Racers' lead to three with two minutes to go — making the score 52-49 — and had to burn a timeout.

Katie Willinger made two free throws on the next trip down, and the Minutewomen were unable to score again.

NBA hands down stiff suspensions stemming from weekend brawl in Detroit

By Chris Sheridan
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Ron Artest was suspended for the rest of the season Sunday as the NBA came down hard on three members of the Indiana Pacers for fighting with fans when a melee broke out at the end of a game against the Detroit Pistons.

Overall, nine players from the teams were banned for more than 140 games, including some of the harshest penalties the league ever issued. Artest is the first player to be suspended for nearly an entire season for a fight during a game.

"The message the league sent was so powerful to players that they'll never do that again," Pistons CEO Tom Wilson said.

Indiana's Stephen Jackson was suspended for 30 games and Jermaine O'Neal for 25. Detroit's Ben Wallace — whose shove of Artest after a foul led to the five-minute fracas — drew a six-game ban, while Pacers guard Anthony Johnson got five games.

"I'm sick about that for Indiana. I'm devastated for them," Pistons coach Larry Brown said. "And we lost our heart and soul."

Four players were suspended for a game apiece: Indiana's Reggie Miller and Detroit's Chauncey Billups, Elden Campbell and Derrick Coleman. All of the suspensions are without pay.

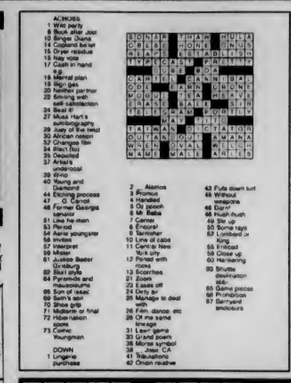
Artest, O'Neal and Jackson — who all threw punches at fans in the stands or on the court at the end of the nationally televised Pacers-Pistons game Friday night — began serving their suspensions Saturday. Indiana, limited to just six players because of the suspensions and injuries, dropped an 86-83 decision to Orlando.

"The actions of the players involved wildly exceeded the professionalism and self-control that should fairly be expected from NBA players," NBA commissioner David Stern said in a statement, adding that the league must not "allow our sport to be debased by what seem to be declining expectations."

The NBA also has to "redefine the bounds of acceptable conduct for fans attending our games and resolve to permanently exclude those who overstep those bounds," Stern said.

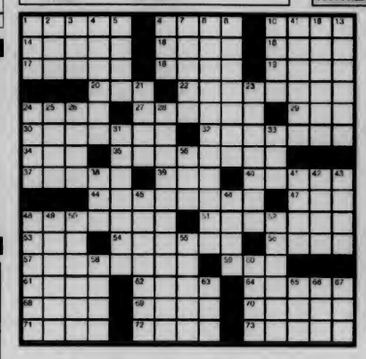
He added that security procedures in all NBA arenas will be reviewed, and rules need to be added to prevent a repeat of what happened at Auburn Hills, Mich., on Friday.

For Sunday night's home game against the Charlotte Bobcats — Detroit's first outing since the melee — the Pistons doubled the number of armed police to about 20 in the arena and increased other arena security personnel by about 25 percent.



When some spectators lined up to take pictures with Pistons guard Lindsey Hunter on the court before the game, two police officers stood just a few feet away.

Amherst Computerworks, Inc.
PC & Laptop Sales/Service/Repair 5-College Certified Vendor
Laptop & LCD Projector Rentals
Repairing Macs and all brands of PC's
Selling new Custom desktop & laptop PC's
9 East Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
Est. 1990
Phone: (413) 548-8900
Fax: (413) 548-8030
aci@acipc.com



STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

The University of Massachusetts Amherst
Commission on Campus Diversity
and
Chair Orlando Taylor
Extend an invitation to the UMass Amherst Community to attend
a Public Forum on Campus Diversity and listen to presentations from the Campus Community
Thursday, December 9
7:00 to 10:00 p.m.
Curry Hicks Gymnasium
For more information, including how to register as a presenter, visit the Campus Diversity website www.umass.edu/campusdiversity

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
The place where there's always fun and entertainment brewing!
November 22nd
The Amity Front
Neo-string Band
November 29th
Cold Duck Trio
Jazz
-EVERY-Thursday & Saturday
Rock, Blues, and Funk
No Cover
Music Starts at 10PM
NFL FOOTBALL ON A 61" WIDE SCREEN TV WITH FREE BUFFET BARBLE AT HALFTIME www.amherstbrewing.com

Make a Dream come true...
SUBMIT A COMIC

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your friends appreciate the way you hang in there through all the abuse.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Sometimes all you need is a heart-to-heart conversation with an old friend.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You should do some heart-healthy exercises today.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Now is the time to consider your plans to travel abroad in the future.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
You can't go poking people in the real world.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You never know what good things might happen when you take chances.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Sometimes, you just have to learn to say no.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Today you're going to come across another random connection. It's a small world.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Try not to think about all the brain cells you killed this weekend.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Be prepared for an embarrassing choral outburst at sometime during the day.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
All those problems you've been having are just an indication of someone's love for you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
This weekend was full of good surprises. It could have gone very differently.

Quote of the Day

"You're about as useful as a one-legged man at an arse kicking contest."

-Rowan Atkinson

Blow away your competitors, advertise with The Collegian
Call 545-3500

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY Megan Healy!!! You rock the party! Much Love SaMi, Aly, Matt Reid, and all of your wonderful employees at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian!

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

ANNOUNCEMENTS

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus 4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraise with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser 888-923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apartment 1 Bedroom Sitting room Full bath Kitchen Amherst Boarder Call Roohina at 549-6091

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Spacious 2 bedroom apartment pay only 1 month to move in now offering flexible lease term discounted rent on select styles free heat and hot water, free cable and high speed internet, fully applianced kitchens, washer/dryer in select styles. On bus route, cat friendly Call today 665-3856 visit www.sugarloafestates.com Monday-Friday 8-5:30 pm and Saturday 10-4 Limited Time Offer

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

APARTMENT FOR RENT

One bedroom apt. for rent. Puffton Village. Starting in Jan. 765/month. Call 978-502-9036 ASAP

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Toyota Corolla 4-Door $1500, Excellent Condition in and out. New front tires, CD-Player, Hitch, AC, Manual Transmission. 131K miles. Call 617-729-7066.

COMPUTER

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING INTERNSHIPS Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

FOR SALE

MP3 $50 Avon Special MP3 & 100's of gifts under $10 Buy or Sell. Kat ISR 413-585-1581.

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

TRAVEL

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student

TRAVEL

Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRMMG Online
1 person by combined w/ any other offer $100 off based on quad room. Only valid for trips with airfare. Expires 4/1/2005
1 800 426 7710

WANTED

Snowboard events intern $50/day stipend. For job description email jfriends@deerfield.edu

We take personal ads! Place yours today! Call 545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Going out on top

Minutemen send senior class off with win, winning season

By MIKE MARZELLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There will be a lot of memories and accomplishments that make up the legacy of the Massachusetts football team's 2004 seniors, but most of all, they will be remembered simply as winners.

Finishing with a 27-20 overall career record and having lost only three games at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium over the past three seasons, Ricky Appiah, Luis Ballestas, Leroy Brooks, Rich Demers, Mike Gillespie, Matt Goldstein, Steve Howell, Rob Kane, Jason Peebler, Steve Wysocki and Sean Young will mostly be remembered for contributing to a 2003 Atlantic 10 championship and a birth in the Division I-AA playoffs.

UMass	40
Hofstra	30

Yet in the end, their greatest accomplishment as a class may have been the turnaround they helped orchestrate over the course of this past season; a turnaround that culminated on Saturday afternoon, when the Minutemen downed Hofstra 40-30 before a home crowd of 5,867 to secure their sixth winning season in seven years.

"Obviously it was a big game for us and a big game for our seniors, and that was really our motivation for the last couple of weeks, to send them out with three consecutive winning seasons," UMass coach Don Brown said.

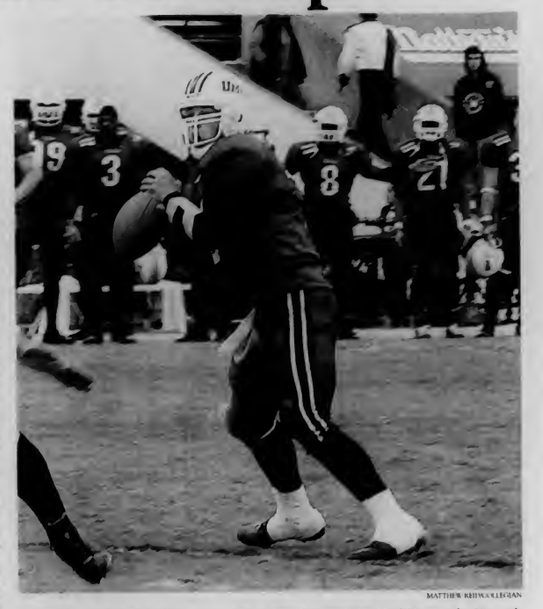
UMass, which had ascended as high as No. 9 in the I-AA polls after a quick 2-0 start, dropped four consecutive games and was saddled with a 2-4 record at the midway point in the season. Yet despite being out of the playoff hunt and faced with nothing to play for other than pride, the Minutemen rallied and caught fire, winning four of their final five games to finish second in the Atlantic 10 North Division standings.

"We have lofty expectations here every year. When we were 2-4, I think [6-5] is successful," Brown said. "We know we're a good football team…these last five games we certainly came together, and that's what I'll remember the most, not the disappointments."

Leading the way in his final game in the Maroon and White was senior wide receiver and captain Jason Peebler. Making one final case for All America consideration and a shot at the National Football League, Peebler caught eight passes for 161 yards and two touchdowns, including the eventual winning score on a 56-yard touchdown reception late in the fourth quarter.

Peebler completed his career second on UMass' all-time list in receiving yards with 2395 and in career touchdowns with 27, and ranks third in school history in catches with 123. He finished his senior season with a team-leading 48 catches for 976 yards.

"I think it will hit me tomorrow that it's over," Peebler said. "I'm so proud of these guys and what we've been able to accomplish, and I'll have a lot of great memories of UMass and my career here."



Joining Peebler in leading UMass' offense was junior tailback Steve Baylark, who carried 25 times for 80 yards to ultimately best Maine's Marcus Williams and win the A-10's rushing title with 1,138 yards on the season. It marks the second consecutive season Baylark has rushed for over 1,000 yards, and he currently ranks fifth on UMass' all-time rushing list.

"[The conference rushing title] was something we wanted for [Baylark]," Brown said. "He's worked hard for a long time to get where he is today, and he deserved us giving him a chance to accomplish something like that. It's something he should be very proud of, and something we're proud of him for."

Junior quarterback Tim Day had a banner day as well in the final game of his first season as a starter, completing 22-of-36 for 344 yards and four touchdowns. His counterpart Anton Clarkson was solid as well for Hofstra, completing 32-of-51 for 376 yards and a touchdown.

Wide receiver Devale Ellis paced the Pride offense with the best game of his collegiate career, catching a game-high 16 passes for 225 yards and a touchdown. Isaac Irby also caught seven passes for 86 yards for Hofstra, while UMass' J.J. Moore joined Peebler and

See FOOTBALL on page 6

MATTHEW REHWOLDT/COLLEGIAN

Tim Day picked apart the Hofstra secondary on Saturday, completing 22-of-36 passes for 344 yards and four touchdowns. His solid play over the last month was a big reason for UMass' great finish.

Black Bears stomp UMass

By JEFF HOWE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ORONO (Maine) — Heading into Friday night, those who surround themselves with Massachusetts or Maine hockey knew that this game had a little less at stake than the previous time these two teams met.

It wasn't for the Hockey East championship; it was one of 24 regular season Hockey East games. It wasn't before a capacity crowd at the FleetCenter, the biggest hockey stage in New England; it was in front of 5,641 fans at Harold Alfond Sports Arena. And Ben Murphy wouldn't be around to end the game after playing nearly six full periods of hockey, as he didn't dress due to an MCL sprain.

Maine	6
UMass	2

But for the game's first 30 minutes, it fully appeared that the newest editions of the Minutemen (6-5-1, 3-3-1 Hockey East) and No. 9 Black Bears (8-6-0, 4-3-0 Hockey East) were poised to top the excitement of last year's championship game — unquestionably — one of the most thrilling hockey games ever seen at any level.

The referees called a very loose game, and there was constant action up and down the ice with plenty of full-speed hits, momentum swings and tons of involvement from the crowd, which sits almost directly over the ice, providing the most intense atmosphere the Minutemen have played in all season.

But halfway through the second period the momentum shifted for the final time as Maine took advantage of several Massachusetts mistakes to recapture its lead and successfully implement its systematical defense, which allowed the Black Bears to completely control the pace of the game.

"We continued to work hard, and I think that was the difference [between the first and second half of the game]," Maine coach Tim Whitehead said. "I thought we protected Jimmy (Howard) a little bit better [once we took the lead]. We limited their chances, which was good. We limited their second shots and gave ourselves an opportunity to win. We played good defense."

Maine out shot UMass 37-12 throughout the game, as the Minutemen only forced Jimmy Howard — who had the best statistical season for a goalie in NCAA history last season — to make 10 saves.

Eight-and-a-half minutes into the game, Brent Shepheard of Maine picked up a loose puck to UMass goalie Gabe Winer's right and wristed the puck top-shelf past Winer, making the Black Bears the owners of the first goal of the night.

About eight minutes later, Minuteman David Leaderer intercepted a pass just beyond the blue line of Maine's zone and skated up the right side of the ice before dropping a pass back to Matt Anderson, who put a shot on net. Jimmy Howard made the save, but P.J. Fenton gathered the puck off the rebound and easily fired a shot home as Howard was out of position from the first shot.

With the score still tied just under two minutes into the second period, Fenton was trying to center a pass to Anderson from the right point, but the puck was deflected by a Maine defender, and it found its way through Howard's legs, giving Fenton the eighth goal of his freshman season.

UMass' lead was short-lived, however, as John Ronan received a pass from Jon Jankus at the left point and put the puck over Winer's right shoulder to tie the game just two minutes later.

Later in the period, Winer made a poor clear attempt when he sent the puck into two Black Bears on the left boards. Tim Maxwell came away with the puck and hit Jankus with a pass. Winer was unable to collect Jankus' shot, and Josh Soares converted on his rebound try, putting Maine back in the lead.

Things got worse for the Minutemen when Bret Tyler intercepted a pass at center ice and found Keenan Hopson, who was able to make his way right in front of the net and score to give the Black Bears a 4-2 lead.

With that, Maine was really able to settle into its notorious trapping defense, and it suffocated UMass' attack, giving the Minutemen very little chance to mount a comeback.

With hopes of generating some quick offense, UMass coach Don Cahoon switched up his lines, and he started the third period with a line of Fenton, Anderson and Stephen Werner, the team's top-three point scorers. This contrasted with the lines Cahoon began the game with, which were about as balanced as all four lines could be on this UMass team.

"We were only down by two goals, and I figured if I could get a line together that generates a little offense, then possibly [we could come back]," Cahoon said. "We've been in games before where we've stunk the house up, and we managed to find a way back into the game and make a game of it in the last 20 minutes, and who knows what can happen? Tonight, no such luck."

Cahoon also benched Winer — who made 59 saves in the triple-overtime final — before the final period started for Tim Warner.

"Gabe had an average night," Cahoon said. "He wasn't particularly bad, but he wasn't particularly good, either. We could have had Martin Brodeur in the net, and it wouldn't have made a difference tonight."

Massachusetts could only rally for a single third period shot, though, and Maine dominated play in the final 20 minutes and finished the Minutemen off with two more goals.

"It was as bad of a performance as I could ever imagine putting together with this group of guys," Cahoon said. "Obviously, the coaching staff didn't do a good job of getting these guys ready for this game, and these guys didn't do a good job of getting themselves ready. So between those two factors, it was about as deplorable of an effort as we could make."

UMass will play the second leg of its four-game road trip against Vermont tomorrow night at 7 p.m.

KAREN WINGERA/COLLEGIAN

Tim Warner entered the game in the third period on Friday night against the Black Bears in relief of starter Gabe Winer. Neither goalie could stop the Maine scoring attack, and Maine made easy work of UMass.

UMass hoops rally to be held today in Blue Wall

With the Massachusetts men's basketball season set to kick off tomorrow night at the Mullins Center, the UMass sports management department is hosting a lunchtime rally at the Blue Wall inside the Campus Center to provide students with the opportunity to meet and greet players and coaches, as well as hear coach Steve Lappas' thoughts on the upcoming season.

Scheduled to begin at 11 A.M and continue until 1 P.M, the rally will feature music from a disc jockey and performances by the UMass cheerleaders and mascot Sam the Minuteman, along with a question-and-answer session with Lappas and an open forum for general comments from the coach and players as well. Students who attend the rally will have the opportunity to pick up their free student tickets at that time.

"Our purpose with the Monday lunch time event is to get the word out to as many students as possible that an exciting college basketball season is about to get under way," Rob Metzler, one of the events co-organizers, said. "The athletic department is trying to do everything possible to bring UMass students together behind great events and strong teams this winter season."

-Mike Marzelli

Tough weekend for UM in Chicago

By BRENDAN HALL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Hopping onto the plane Thursday for Chicago, the Massachusetts women's basketball team had some high hopes for themselves as they prepared to take on Southern California in the Moran Realty Classic.

The flight back home was a different matter, however, as they came away from Chicago with an 0-2 record after losing in the final minutes to the Women of Troy on Friday and then giving away a first-half lead against Murray State.

USC	54
UMass	49
Murray State	56
UMass	50

UMass' trip to the Windy City was a historic one, as the Minutewomen committed a record 31 turnovers against the Trojans despite out rebounding them 47-37.

And despite playing 39 minutes of great defense with a close lead on the Women of Troy, it was the last one that proved fatal, as USC outscored the Minutewomen 7-2 in the final three minutes to hand them a 54-49 defeat in what was an emotional game.

"The one positive we take from this [weekend] is that we played 39 minutes of good defense against Southern Cal," coach Marnie Dacko said. "This was such an emotional game to try and get up for Murray State." Freshman Pam Rosanio led all scorers with 11 points, and USC's Camille Lenoir was the only other player to reach double figures.

"I'm proud of Pam," Dacko said. "She's doing a nice job out there. She tried hard. Katie tried hard, too, but we've got to get more combinations of scoring from different players."

The Minutewomen were playing catch-up for the first half, never gaining the lead and tying the score only once. The Women of Troy started the game with a 9-3 run off contributions from Jamie Hagiya, Brynn Cameron and a three-pointer from Meghan Gnekow.

But not to be outdone, the Minutewomen returned the favor with a 7-0 run that tied the game for the moment. Tamara Tatham started the run off with six minutes to go in the first, tapping in a lay-up to cut USC's lead to five. Three minutes later, Brooke Campbell went to the line for

See WHOOPS on page 6

SpongeBob SquarePants hits the big screen
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

TODAY: High: 53 Low: 39 | WEDNESDAY: High: 55 Low: 42 | THURSDAY: High: 62 Low: 29
DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Minutemen will have a new look in 2004-05
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 54

Gargano denies withholding ALANA stats

By JULIE O'DONNELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano denied allegations that he is withholding important statistical information requested by President of the Student Government Association Eduardo Bustamante last summer about the ALANA (African Latino Asian Native American) community.

Bustamante filed a Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) last summer to Gargano, University General Council Brian Burke and Marilyn Blaustein from the Office of Institutional Re-search. The act requested information such as the zip codes of ALANA students, minority student retention rates, and the number of students who graduated. According to University law, an answer must be given after an FOIA has been requested within ten days of the initial request.

"From what I gather, some of the information is so specific that ... there is a concern that it would affect FERPA [Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act]," said Gargano.

Gargano also said that a great deal of information that was requested does not violate FERPA regulations and is available on the Office of Information Research Web site.

"In a nutshell, the delay is because of the [FERPA] and a lot of the information is on the OIR Web site anyway. Some of the information was right down to the specific zip codes."

Gargano said that he does not know why Bustamante continues to be upset over the delay, because "most of the information is on the Web site."

Gargano said that he was also surprised but not shocked that the SGA Senate voted no confidence in him last Wednesday.

"I wrote to Eddie and told him that 'I was disappointed to learn of your decision and I am hopeful that you will reconsider.'"

Bustamante said last week that it is perfectly feasible to work with vice chancellors and members of the faculty other than Gargano to get student issues accomplished this year, and Gargano agrees. "[The SGA] is free to work with any of the various constituents on campus, so I think that it is clear that we will not be slowed down as long as we stick to our mission," he said.

Gargano, however, does not feel that the vote of no confidence will greatly affect the way he is perceived by students. "The student body knows that my door is open," he said, "they can come to me with whatever issues, questions or concerns they have. This doesn't prevent other students to come to me. I am not nervous, why should I be? I am doing my job to the best of my ability."

Former Speaker of the SGA Patrick Higgins and Gargano have also addressed the legality of the ALANA Caucus seats earlier this summer via a series of e-mails. In the e-mails, Higgins said that he believed that the seats were not legal, and a violation of the Fourteenth Amendment. Gargano responded by asking Higgins to seek legal advisement from the state's General Council Terrence O'Malley.

According to Gargano, neither Higgins or Bustamante could agree on a date to meet with O'Malley, and the pair then wrote to him requesting his legal opinion. Gargano said O'Malley responded to the question via a phone call to the vice chancellor's office last June.

"[O'Malley] would not offer his legal opinion [on the status of the Caucus seats]," Gargano said. "He said that he needed greater clarity amongst the SGA and that [its members] need to come to some sort of resolution. This is a campus-based issue."

Gargano also offered his opinion on what the SGA should consider to get this issue resolved. "What I would recommend is similar to what [SGA members] tried to do this summer and have a meeting with the general council and ask for his guidance."

Bustamante was not available for comment at press time.

MATTHEW REHWOLDT/COLLEGIAN

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and academic life announces the Diversity Commission in this Oct. 15 photo.

Aid workers flee as Suddan violence flares

By MOHAMED OSMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KHARTOUM, Sudan — Fighting near a village in Sudan's crisis-plagued Darfur region killed at least 17 people Monday, while helicopters rescued dozens of workers who fled into the bush to escape.

State Minister Ahmed Haroon said rebels attacked the strategic North Darfur town of Tawilla early Monday, killing 17 people and destroying the town's hospital. He said an unknown number of people were injured. A statement by an aid organization said government planes also dropped bombs on the town.

But Haroon denied that the government had violated a cease-fire between rebels and the government.

"These areas are under our control. Those who talk of violations are making unsubstantiated accusations," he said.

During the clashes between rebels and Arab militiamen in Tawilla, African Union peacekeepers airlifted 45 people who had spent several hours hiding in the bush outside the town of Tawilla during clashes between rebels and Arab militiamen, U.N. spokesman George Somerwill told The Associated Press.

Kate Haiff, Sudan country director for Save The Children, UK, said more than 30 Sudanese workers for her organization and some other people were airlifted to the North Darfur capital of El Fasher.

Somerwill, speaking by telephone to the AP in Cairo, said no humanitarian aid is reaching thousands of people displaced by violence in Tawilla.

A tribal dispute over livestock sparked the clashes, which began Sunday and led to rebel Sudan Liberation Army forces attacking the government-allied Arab militia known as the Janjaweed, Somerwill said.

Tawilla is a strategic location which the government uses to supply forces based in western Sudan, near the Chad border, and areas in Darfur's northwest. It is also home to about 30,000 African villagers displaced by the conflict.

A Save the Children statement said a Sudanese government plane dropped several bombs on Tawilla, with one landing 50 yards from one of the organization's feeding centers.

Somerwill said African Union forces confirmed that Sudanese "air assets were used, but we can't confirm there was hostile action."

If the reports are correct, they represent an apparent breach of Nov. 9 accords between rebels and the government, including a Sudanese agreement to create "no-fly zones" over Darfur. Rebels and African Union mediators had demanded the zones following widespread accusations of government bombings of villages.

Disability center founder urges journalists to watch their words

By ADAM O'NEAL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

AMHERST — An expert on disability news reporting is urging journalism students at the University of Massachusetts to watch their language in order to be more accurate and fair when reporting about those with disabilities.

Suzanne C. Levine, the founder and executive director of the National Center on Disability and Journalism, told journalism students, "we, as reporters, need to take out judgment from our language. We want to be accurate," she said, because leaving judgment in further disables people through stereotype.

Stereotypes of people with disabilities are insidious in popular media, she said, and are focused into seven stereotypes that Jack A. Nelson discusses in his book titled "The Disabled, The Media, and the Information Age":

Pitiable and Pathetic — disabled people depicted as child-like or incompetent, a drain on taxpayers (e.g. fundraising telethons).

"Super-Crip"— through great courage and determination, a disabled person triumphs, his actions often considered superhuman (e.g. many TV and movie dramas).

Sinister, Evil and Criminal — the person or character's disability is used to suggest that he is morally deficient (e.g. Hunchback of Notre Dame, Dr. Strangelove).

Better Off Dead — anyone with a serious physical impairment is incapable of a fulfilling life and would be better off dead (e.g. TV drama "Whose Life Is It, Anyway?").

Maladjusted — disabled people depicted as bitter and self-pitying, their predicament is their own fault.

A Burden — the implication that those with disabilities need to be taken care of by "normal people," they are burdens to family, friends and society.

Unable to Live a Successful Life — those with disabilities are stigmatized by their disability and are unworthy of attention.

The Better Off Dead stereotype is especially significant, Levine said. "Disability is associated with dying, so we fear it." Such fear is vital for understanding the stereotype, she said.

In the early 1990s, according to Levine, John Clogstone conducted a study on the coverage of disability issues in American newspapers. He found two general ways of reporting on disability issues: focusing on the differences between disabled and normal people — in other words, perpetuating the stereotypes listed above — or looking at the issues from a civil rights perspective. The study found that the majority of American newspapers used the first method of reporting, Levine said.

Because much disability reporting remains inaccurate and unfair, Levine urged journalism students and others to closely analyze disability reporting. She recommended carefully studying three elements of a story: angle — the approach or perspective the story takes; sources — whether they're credible and connected to the subject matter; and language — if stereotypical, inaccurate or unfair?

Careful patrolling of stories for these three factors can reduce inaccurate reporting on disability and provide a truer view for all, she suggested.

Disability is pervasive in this country, Levine said. When she asked who in the room had a connection to someone with a disability, all eleven people raised their hands.

Roughly 49.7 million people in the United States have some sort of disability, she said, but the number differs depending on how one defines "disability." Levine said she defines a "disability" as something that "affects a major life function," though she said her organization takes no position on the definition.

The National Center on Disability and Journalism, founded in San Francisco in 1998, is an independent, impartial, non-profit journalism education organization, which works with journalists and educators on disability reporting issues in an attempt to promote more accurate, fair and diverse news reporting.

Levine said her idea for the organization came from her experience as a free-lance photographer within disability communities and what she saw being represented in the mainstream news. In June, Levine moved the non-profit to Boston.

"California is very different in terms of disability issues than Massachusetts," she said, "Boston is much more inaccessible than San Francisco." Since she has only been in Boston for five months, she said she is still adjusting to and learning about the city. Her preliminary evaluation of the Boston Globe, in terms of accurate and fair disability reporting, was "inconsistent."

UMass ranks among top 20 in state enterprise survey

By ERIC ATHAS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Last week, the University of Massachusetts was ranked amongst the top 20 in an annual survey that measures the reputation of Massachusetts's enterprises. The survey, conducted by Morrissey & Co. ranked UMass at number 13 out of 20, two spots lower than where it was last year.

According to University officials, the ranking that UMass received reflects the University's high standards as far as academics and finance. It also reflects on the overall reputation of the school. As UMass continues to receive higher rankings, the result will continue to make UMass a more competitive school.

Opinion Dynamics Corporation conducted the study, titled "The Massachusetts Corporate Reputation Survey." Ranking is based on overall reputation, products and services, place to work, social responsibility, ethics and corporate governance and financial stability.

"An organization's reputation is its most valuable asset. It is the composite picture of how it is viewed by its key audiences," said CEO Peter Morrissey. "The highly rated institutions in the Massachusetts Corporate Reputation Survey have earned the recognition, credibility and trust of the area's business leaders through their actions and behaviors, not through words alone. For them, reputation is about deeds, not spin."

UMass shared its ranking with high-profile institutions such as Tufts University (fifth) and prestige businesses like Fidelity Investments (eighth). Harvard University was at the top of the list, as it was last year. Along with universities and businesses, the survey also looks at healthcare providers such as Children's Hospital and Massachusetts General Hospital.

The other universities that shared the top 20 with UMass were UMass Lowell, UMass Boston, Northeastern and Boston University. Businesses such as Gillette, Yankee Candle and Fleet Boston also made the top 20.

Morrissey and Co. is a reputation management firm who stand by their belief that "organizations with strong, positive reputations enjoy more successful sales initiatives and more consistent financial performance, greater trust with investors and partners, stronger customer satisfaction and loyalty, higher quality employees, better publicity and deeper community relations."

The survey was conducted for the first time last year and was the first to look at the opinions and views of businesses in this sense. The survey revealed that although big businesses like Fidelity and Fleet are involved in the rankings, it is non-profit organizations that are viewed to have the best reputations.

The survey is conducted using a point system in which the organizations with the best reputations receive high points, and then the scale moves down as the reputation diminishes. However, the lower the point does not necessarily mean a negative continuation for the business.

"While a high reputation score indicates that an institution is held in high regard, a low score does not necessarily indicate that an institution is viewed negatively," said President of Opinion Dynamics Corporation John Gorman. "In most instances, a low score was caused more by a lack of familiarity than by a negative perception. Still, a lack of recognition among business leaders can hinder success as much as having a 'problem' perception."

The ranking involves both private and public institutions. While the University's 13th-spot ranking is two spots lower than last year, it is still seen to be a positive for UMass, especially to be out in the same pool as Tufts, Boston University, Fidelity, and Harvard, according to University officials.

Mother cuts arms off infant

PLANO, Texas — A mother cut off the arms of her baby daughter Monday, then called 911 and waited calmly until authorities arrived, police said.

Dena Schlosser, 35, was charged with murder after the girl died at a hospital in Plano, a Dallas suburb. Child-protective authorities said she had a history of post-partum depression.

Authorities said when they arrived at the family's apartment, they found the nearly 11-month-old baby with her arms severed. Schlosser was waiting calmly, with blood on her clothing, police spokesman Carl Duke said.

Schlosser lived at the apartment with other family members, including her two older daughters. Police said the girls, ages 6 and 9, were not home when they arrived.

Texas Child Protective Services was called to the home in January after Schlosser was seen run-

See INFANT on page 2

JAY MONROE/COLLEGIAN

A night to remember

Guests at the annual Pride Alliance Drag Ball showcase their attire Saturday night at the Top of the Campus Center. The ball took place from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Merritt
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ADVERTISING MANAGER Tiffany Sugalski
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
COPY EDITOR Alyson Zillmann
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marzelli
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Kiggans
FINANCE MANAGER Hersh Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginie Frecaut
HUMAN RESOURCE Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT FINANCE Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Busack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jemmott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAYS THROUGH FRIDAYS DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 1:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Cameron J. Woods
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Curtis Killian
COPY EDITOR
Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Nate Freedman, Elliott Chong

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Racial bias behind over 7,400 hate crimes

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Racial prejudice, most often directed at black people, was behind more than half of the nation's 7,400 reported hate crime incidents in 2003, the FBI said Monday.

Reports of hate crimes motivated by anti-black bias totaled 2,548 in 2003, more than double the total hate crimes against all other racial groups. There were 3,150 black victims in these reports, including four who were murdered, according to the annual FBI figures.

The overall total of 7,489 hate crime incidents reported in 2003 was slightly above the 7,462 reported in 2002, the lowest number since 1994. Race bias was behind 3,844 of the 2003 cases.

Intimidation, vandalism and property destruction account for nearly two-thirds of the nation's hate crimes.

Although the FBI report does not provide details, a database maintained by the nonprofit Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Ala., shows that such incidents range from spray-painting of swastikas and racial slurs on people's property to menacing with guns and verbal threats.

There were also hundreds of violent hate crimes in 2003, including 14 murders. There were more than 2,700 assaults, 444 robberies, burglaries and thefts related to prejudice, and 34 arson incidents.

Heidi Beirich, spokeswoman for the Southern Poverty Law Center, said the FBI's hate crime totals are probably low because reporting by local law enforcement agencies is voluntary, and some states have weak hate crime laws. Some states, for example, don't recognize prejudice against sexual orientation as the basis for a hate crime.

"We have found several flaws. We think there's really more like 50,000 hate crimes out there each year," Beirich said.

The FBI report shows that crimes categorized as anti-Islamic remained at the about same level in 2003 — 149 crimes — as the year before. There was a spike in such crimes immediately after the 2001 terror attacks, helping drive the overall hate crime number much higher that year to 9,730.

By far the most reports of hate crimes based on religion involved Jews, with 927 incidents in 2003, about the same as in 2002.

"The urgent national need for both a tough law enforcement response and education and programming to confront violent bigotry has only increased over the past three years," said Michael Lieberman of the Anti-Defamation League.

The report also found more than 1,200 hate crimes based on sexual orientation, including 783 against male homosexuals. That included six murders.

Infant dies alone

INFANT from page 2

ning down the street from her apartment, with one of her daughters, then 5, bicycling after her, authorities said. When police and CPS arrived, the child told them her mother had left her 6-day-old baby sister alone in the apartment.

Schlosser appeared to be suffering from postpartum depression, Marissa Gonzales, a CPS spokeswoman, told the Dallas Morning News.

Schlosser was hospitalized for a few days. Her other two daughters were released to their father, who told authorities Schlosser had been acting strangely since the birth of the third child.

Once she was released from the hospital, Schlosser agreed to seek counseling and see a psychiatrist, Gonzales said. Caseworkers continued to visit the family through the spring and summer, and the case was closed Aug. 9.

-Associated Press

Bush travels to Colombia

By Terence Hunt
Associated Press

COURTESY MSNBC.COM

President Bush watches Colombian President Alvaro Uribe speak at a press conference in Cartagena, Colombia yesterday.

CARTAGENA, Colombia — Under a security web of warplanes, battleships and 15,000 troops, President Bush praised Colombia's battle against drugs and Marxist guerrillas Monday and pledged to keep U.S. aid flowing so "this courageous nation can win its war against narcoterrorists."

In a country that is the world's largest producer of cocaine and a major supplier of heroin, Bush said President Alvaro Uribe is achieving results with a massive aerial fumigation program against coca — the main ingredient in cocaine — and an aggressive military buildup against insurgents, who fund themselves through drug trafficking, kidnapping and extortion.

"The number of acres under cultivation are down significantly," Bush said, standing with Uribe in shirt sleeves at seaside lecterns. "The number of arrests are up. The number of murders is down. In other words, this man's plan is working."

Uribe said Colombia is winning the fight, but has not yet won. "We have made progress but the serpent is still alive," Uribe said.

Bush's pledge reaffirms U.S. commitments to a $3.3 billion, five-year military aid program known as Plan Colombia. Bush said the plan launched in August 2000 enjoys widespread support in Congress and that he would work with lawmakers to keep it funded. Without mentioning a specific figure, Bush said he would seek enough funds to make the plan effective.

Red Sox ticket prices climbing

BOSTON (AP) — The World Series champion Boston Red Sox raised their ticket prices by an average of 7 percent for next year, the team announced Monday as it released its schedule for the 2005 season.

The Red Sox will open at Yankee Stadium on April 4 and then have their home opener on April 11 against New York. That will give the Yankees a chance to watch while the Red Sox raise the World Series banner above Fenway Park.

The teams will also play each other to finish the regular season at Fenway Park Sept. 30-Oct. 2. Other notable games include June 10-12 in Chicago — Boston's first visit to Wrigley Field since the Red Sox played the Cubs in the 1918 Series. The Cincinnati Reds, who beat the Red Sox in the 1975 Series, will visit Fenway Park June 13-15.

Despite playing in baseball's oldest and smallest ballpark and charging the highest average ticket prices in the nation, the Red Sox sold every available seat last season and set an attendance record for the fifth consecutive year.

Most box seats will go up by $10 for 2005, with standing room going up from $18 to $20. More seats have been shifted into the upper bleacher category, lowering their price from $20 to $12.

The team said that 57 percent of the ticket prices will remain the same or go up by $1.

"We will invest that revenue to assemble a winning team worthy of our fans' support, and to maintain one of Major League Baseball's highest payrolls," team president Larry Lucchino said. "We are committed to being aggressive in defense of our World Series title."

The Red Sox will announce on Tuesday plans for offseason improvements to Fenway Park that are intended to help ease crowding.

-Associated Press

ARIENNE ROSSIOL/COLLEGIAN

Let it snow

Emily Carino, a senior exercise major, and Adam Sutton, a UMass graduate, test out a pair of Rossignol skiis at the Ski and Board Club's annual Ski and Board sale last weekend in the Student Union.

Stop by the tent!
Wednesday, December 1
10 am - 3 pm
outside Goodell
Come by and... learn about Career Services check out our new offices in 511 Goodell meet a career counselor and have some free hot cider and donuts!
CareerServices
511 Goodell Building • 413-545-2224 • www.umass.edu/careers

Amherst Computerworks, Inc.
PC & Laptop Sales/Service/Repair 5-College Certified Vendor
Laptop & LCD Projector Rentals
Repairing Macs and all brands of PC's
Selling new Custom desktop & laptop PC's
9 East Pleasant St.
Amherst, MA 01002
Phone: (413) 548-8900
Fax: (413) 548-8030
Est. 1990
aci@acipc.com

Hadley Sunoco
"Specializing In All Your Automotive Needs."
457 Russell St.
Hadley MA. 01035
(413) 253-4623
HadleySunoco@yahoo.com
Front Brake Special
$69.95
-Includes Brake Pads. Labor and inspection of front rotors and calipers
Most Cars, Light trucks & SUVS
GET A FREE TIRE ROTATION WITH ANY BRAKE JOB!!!!!!
Regular Price: 84.95
Offer valid with Collegian AD only. Not to be combined with any other Brake discounts or offers.
Offer Expires 12/1/04
SPECIAL
10% Student Discount On Labor With a Valid College ID
WE WILL BEAT ANY COMPETITOR'S WRITTEN ESTIMATE!!!!!
Come try us out today
FREE ESTIMATES!
Some of the many other services we specialize in are: Brakes, tires, CV-shafts, alternators, starters, belts, tune-ups, timing belts and exhaust repair.

Bay state becomes two- party again

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts has become a two-party state again.

The Libertarian and Green-Rainbow parties have lost their major party status — and an automatic spot on the presidential ballot — because none of their statewide candidates won at least 3 percent of the vote on Nov. 2, according to official election figures released by the Secretary of the Commonwealth on Monday.

Green-Rainbow won a spot on the ballot in 2000 when Ralph Nader ran for president on its ticket. Libertarians have had a spot since 1998 when a Secretary of the Commonwealth candidate won 4.5 percent of the vote.

A total of 2,927,455 Massachusetts voters cast ballots on Nov. 2, setting a new record, according to the figures. That is 193,449 higher — 7 percent more — than four years ago, when the previous record was set.

-Associated Press

News is looking for writers and photographers from Hampshire, Amherst, Smith, and Holyoke Colleges.
Call Erika
545-1809

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL OPINION
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 2004
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

If there's a will, there's a way

Colin Jones

There are a million phrases just like it. Obvious points of truth that you've been hearing all your life, since you were a little kid: An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. Don't put all your eggs in one basket. If you catch a man a fish you'll feed him for a day, but if you teach a man to fish you'll feed him for life. And of course, that myth about the sticks and stones.

The one that seems the most relevant to all of us here at the University, fortunate enough to be pursuing higher education, is equally as cliché and innate as the others, but is most important because it's the hardest to follow and the easiest to forget. If there's a will, there's a way.

Senioritis has already infected a number of my friends. They are either jaded with their classes and this area, are tired of scraping by on next to nothing, or just want to see what else the world has to offer outside of this quaint little college town. I can sympathize with them without question.

Although I personally won't graduate this year, the same little thrills that I got as an underclassmen don't do it for me anymore. I really don't care about the next big party and who is going to be there, or find my classes more fascinating than daunting. But to those of you who are graduating in May, fresh meat for the proverbial jungle that is the working world, don't allow yourselves to become so bogged down in your fear of the future that you cannot enjoy the rest of your time here.

College is not a means to an end. For that matter, neither is life. The satisfaction should come from the process, not from the results.

Many people that I have talked to are largely unsatisfied and disillusioned with their college experience. Well, although you can't change the past, you don't have to allow it to repeat itself. There are ways to get the satisfaction and excitement you once felt back, if you are willing to take the necessary steps. Maybe there is someone you've seen around campus over the years that you've always wanted to meet. Maybe you had a professor that profoundly influenced you in some way and you've always wanted to thank but have just never had the time. Maybe you've always wanted to express yourself in some way, artistically or otherwise, but you were always too busy or too afraid.

As they say, there's no time like the present. It is easy for us to find reasons to justify our lack of action because then we never really risk anything. We're safe. When we take a risk it brings with it the possibility of negative results: rejection, failure and for some of us, even success. We all need to get over our fear of these things because they are a part of life.

We're not in high school anymore, and at some point we're going to have to take chances. If you can look at things with a little perspective, you can come to a realization. All of us are young, and we have our whole lives ahead of us. There will be spots along the road ahead where we will lose our way; at times we'll fall flat on our faces. Once you recognize that this is inevitable, you can view any attempt to burst out of your bubble as a success even if it's a failure.

College is not a means to an end. For that matter, neither is life. The satisfaction should come from the process, not from the results. Too many people I have talked to have realized that they don't like what they are doing, that their heart lies in something else, and yet they compromise their passion in the face of circumstance.

As far as I'm concerned, the uni-que and individual combination of body, mind and spirit that make you who you are only exists once. If we only live once, we should never compromise who we are. If you want to change your major, to pursue a different dream than the one that you had when you started, do it. If you really want it bad enough, you can get it.

Often times, the biggest obstacles we have to overcome are the ones we put in front of ourselves. This is not to say that there are no difficulties. Many are related in some way to financial circumstances that for all intents and purposes seem insurmountable, but even these mountains can be climbed.

Case in point: a good buddy of mine who transferred to this school sophomore year just decided that he doesn't like his major or this school. He was set to graduate in May, and now he has withdrawn from the spring semester, during which time he plans to work and save money while he figures things out. He's not even sure what school he'll transfer to, but he knows what he loves and he has faith in himself that no matter what, things will be okay. For me, that is the very definition of courage. To quote the late, great Freddie Mercury, "Can't we give ourselves one more chance?"

Colin Jones is a Collegian columnist.

The real disability is society

Katelyn Harding

As we entered the restaurant, I could feel all of my senses heightening, my eyes noticing every glance, my ears picking up every sound that occurred around us. I could immediately feel myself transforming into defensive mode, ready to attack anyone who dared to say an unkind word or share a look of disgust. Sadly, the reason I felt the need to get worked up over seemingly nothing was the mere fact that my cousin and I had taken out his friend Paulie, who is autistic.

Just as I had anticipated, people stared. Paulie Demko is about thirty years old but was diagnosed with autism a few days after birth. His education will remain at a fourth grade level for the rest of his life. Other than that, Paulie is as normal as you and I. Paulie represents the group in society that people tend to overlook, the ones who are discriminated against every day, without the realization of doing it. He belongs to the set of people that are labeled as having a disability.

Growing up with a best friend whose brother is severely special needs, I have grown compassionate for the disabled and try to learn about them as much as I can. In my observations, I've noticed that many people treat people with disabilities as if they were of a lower life form than themselves.

My definition of a person with disabilities not only includes persons with mental retardation, but also people who have suffered in accidents and maybe have had surgery that left their bodies looking less than "perfect."

Think back to a time where you saw someone with any sort of defect: one leg, a patch over an eye or maybe even scars all over his or her face. Did you notice that person and continue to stare even though you established the quality that made him or her different? Are these attributes really defects, or just a variation of the human body? In today's society, one would like to believe that prejudices are lightening up, but this one has been deep-rooted in society for some time, and there is little hope that this form of discrimination will go away anytime soon.

In today's society, one would like to believe that prejudices are lightening up, but this one has been deep-rooted in society for some time, and there is little hope that this form of discrimination will go away anytime soon.

Back at the restaurant with Paulie, we were seated when our table was ready. To our relief, our waitress was very friendly and was able to communicate with Paulie very well. He even decided he liked her so much that he gave her a kiss on the cheek. Afterward, my cousin and I talked about how annoying it is that people have to stare just because Paulie may seem a little different. It makes me very angry that people are so ignorant that they feel the need to gawk at someone who stands out. Paulie is an amazing person, and he has helped me realize is it the small things in life that really do matter.

People with mental retardation can look at a person, like them for their personality and values and not judge them on their status in society and physical characteristics. This is something that everyone should do: judge people on their character and nothing else. Just because a person might be disabled, that does not mean they are incapable of realizing when a person is being kind and generous to them.

Today's culture is so obsessed with flawlessness and good looks that we tend to look down upon others we deem are not as good looking. The naive people who believe they are perfect and look down upon those with a handicap, tend to consider themselves to be "ordinary." How do they know they are ordinary, and what is it that makes them so? What gives them the right to make these decisions anyway?

People in society who are branded with the label "disability" have a hard time changing people's minds. To begin with, they are already at a disadvantage, because people have already formed biased opinions of them. It is a sad pretense that people are not more open and caring to others in general.

This country should be one that can be proud to say that we as Americans stand together, but in reality, there are so many different groups in this society that have wrong feelings of resentment towards each other. Instead of further dividing our communities, we should be trying to come together as a unit because that is where our strength will build. People with disabilities can contribute just as much to our society as anyone else; they are just never given the opportunity.

Katelyn Harding is a UMass student.

The empire in the mirror

Yousef Munayyer

So what do Belgium, South Korea, Honduras, Italy, Cuba, Greece, Indonesia and Kenya have in common? You may look at this mixed group and ponder what on earth they could share. Different continents, different populations and different forms of government make this question difficult. The answer is rather simple even though it's not something we constantly think about, and that is the problem.

All of these countries are home to American naval or army bases. This is a mere selection of the total number of countries in which the U.S has troops. No other nation on earth has troops and bases so widely distributed across the planet. America is, without doubt, a modern day empire.

The question is why is it that the American public has such a hard time accepting and acknowledging that reality?

The Roman Empire was filled with pride. Every Roman marched for Caesar or Rome. Some of the empires most valiant soldiers never laid eyes upon the city yet they entered battle with pride. The English empire, upon which the sun was not supposed to set, had soldiers marching into Sudan with battles cries about "King and Country."

Today, with what is arguably the greatest empire in the history of empires, the subjects are reluctant to play their traditional roles. With so much of the world under American influence, there is no doubt the United States has hegemonic power. With a recent history of disregarding the international community, we have proven that unilateralism is our way.

In 1898, American Imperialism began in the wake of the Spanish-American war. The Philippines, Puerto Rico and Cuba came under American control. Others would argue that even before that point American imperialism began with its manifest destiny to reach another ocean. Still others will argue that the same manifest destiny is the driving force in the minds of many policy makers today. From Haiti to Iraq, the American empire throughout history has wreaked havoc upon all which lies in its path. The effects of imperialism are still evident today in all these places.

Since 1898, imperialism has been embraced in practice but shunned in discourse.

Perhaps this is because of something rooted within the American culture. Having been a colony one can make the argument that "empire" was a sore spot in the American historical narrative. Even the farewell address of George Washington warned us about involvement abroad.

No other nation on earth has troops and bases so widely distributed across the planet. America is without a doubt, a modern day empire.

Perhaps this is because we have grown to learn what empires really are and the affects they have on the native populations that they demoralize.

Or maybe Americans simply find empires morally wrong. The ideological recommendations of the First World War president Woodrow Wilson called for the principle of self-determination. The idea that an individual had the right to be governed by his own people and not some foreign government gained acceptance.

When eight different crusades were launched from Europe hundreds of years ago, the claim to legitimacy was based on divine order. In other words, the motivation for leaving your fatherland and invading another's was based on a moral principle.

When the Spaniards conquered much of America and encountered natives, many of them, were reluctant to harshly treat the inhabitants of the land. The Spanish crown for years delayed reforming its policy with natives and hid behind the cloak of "moral" legitimacy as they found the need to Christianize the new world. It was not till most of the native population of the Caribbean had died off that the Spanish had begun to realize the sheer hypocrisy in brutally expressing religion.

The colonizers of the last centuries that took over parts of Africa, Asia and the Middle East excused their actions by using yet another moral principle. They believed they were advancing the barbaric societies and bringing them out of their savage ways.

Today, the new global empire does much the same thing. We invade foreign lands and justify this with moral principles. This time, however, it's not direct commands from the divine or the need to spread the good news. Rather it is the burden of bringing "democracy" to those who do not have it.

The trend that develops is one of awakening. Eventually the crusaders gave up on Jerusalem (though some would argue they are at it again). The Spanish realized Jesus would not approve of killing Indians. The colonizers realized Algerians, Somalis, Indians and Viet-namese did not want civilization imposed on them, but rather they wanted the Independence to have their own civilizations.

How long will it be before we realize the Iraqis and Afghanis do not want any of the democracy we are trying to force down their throats? If they want democracy, they can do it themselves. They are after all, civilized.

So here is our chance to learn from history. You see the imperial theater is accustomed to tragedy as every empire that rises consequently falls. We have arrived at a critical juncture in the development of the Ameri-can identity. We have the choice to acknowledge our imperialism and attempt to avert the dangerous path we are on in nations we have occupied or to continue our immorality by justifying it with the so-called moral principles.

It is not till we see ourselves for what we are that we can begin to work on what we really want to be.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian editor.

Get to know your reality

Mike Sances

The present obsession over religiousness in politics was, in the weeks before the election, somewhat predictable. Several detailed and insightful articles sprung up during those last days, valiant attempts at encapsulating and exposing the role of faith in the Bush presidency before the voters went to the polls.

Chief among these was Ron Suskind's "Without a Doubt," published on Oct. 17 in the "New York Times Magazine." If you haven't read it yet, go to the library, look it up and do so immediately. It is an essential guide at understanding how this administration works.

The crux of the piece is the idea of a "new reality," espoused by a senior Bush aide to Suskind in the summer of 2002. According to the aide, the Bush administration has brazenly set out to construct reality through its actions — as opposed to the reverse course, favored by journalists like Suskind, among other naive and radical dissidents.

What does the new reality look like? In sum, what it comes down to is an utter contempt for the most basic standards of argumentation: that is, that when you assert something, you are also obligated to provide evidence for your claims. Witness Afghanistan, Iraq, the treatment of suspected terrorists — the list continues and is by no means limited to foreign policy alone.

The media's lack of skepticism works incredibly well with an administration fueled by faith.

So far, both the media and the Democratic Party have proven ill equipped to respond effectively to the new reality. The press's failure rises out of a larger problem: the death of journalism. Over time, journalists have forgotten how to ask questions. These days, they simply print what they are told to by those in power. The Washington Post, for example, in its mea culpa over prewar reporting on Iraq, was unrepentant toward fulfilling its role as a "mouthpiece" (their phrase) for the White House. If the President said Iraq had weapons of mass destruction, then that's what made the front page. The media's lack of skepticism works incredibly well with an administration fueled by faith.

Columnist Paul Krugman (incidentally, also of the "New York Times") sums up the current state of the media as follows: "If Bush said that the earth was flat, Fox News would say 'yes, the earth is flat and anyone who disagrees hates America,' and the mainstream media, for the most part, would run articles with the headline 'Shape of the Earth: Views Differ.'" In other words, equal time to both positions, regardless of how absurd a given argument might be. In the name of objectivity, of "fair and balanced" journalism, anything goes in this new marketplace of ideas.

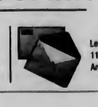
Anything? Well, not quite. If I were to call up Fox News, for example, and argue that everyone who voted for Bush ought to be deported to a Muslim theocracy as anti-American traitors, I doubt they'd put me on the air. Needless to say, the people they do put on the air would never say that. John Kerry could barely get away with saying that the war was being "mismanaged," and when a Democrat came along who actually did have the courage to challenge mainstream conventions (give Osama bin Laden a fair trial when he is caught? Go back to Soviet Russia!), he was effectively crushed by the media's obtuseness and by his party's mediocrity and sent home to Vermont with his tail between his legs.

These problems have been endemic in both the press and the Democratic Party for some years. The genius of the Bush administration seems to lie in its ability to exploit them so successfully. Like many of the administration's vices, the primary distinction between Bush and his predecessors is one of style: preventive war is hardly a new concept: explicitly reserving the right to wage one at any time, anywhere, is. The same is true with regards to the contempt for those who would dare to question the powerful.

But just as with preventive war, the openness of this new war on doubt makes it far more dangerous, especially when the problem is framed as "moral values" or "faith," as has happened in the wake of the election. Hopefully, Democrats will resist falling into the trap. If anything, they ought to have learned by now that they can't out-Republican the Republicans.

But that's for them to decide. As for us, if we wish to withstand another four years of George Bush, then the strategy might be easier than we thought: respect facts, ask questions and continue to speak out for what we believe in. In other words, do as much as we can to adopt the responsibilities that have been abandoned to us by the press and by the "liberal" opposition. Because what these people really hate, what they truly fear, is to be doubted. Acknowledging this reality, questioning it, will be the first step toward defeating it.

Mike Sances is a Collegian columnist.



SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Spongetacular

Nickelodeon's cartoon sponge and friends break free from television in their first full length film.

'The SpongeBob Square-Pants Movie'

Directed by Steven Hillenburg

Starring Alec Baldwin Scarlett Johansson

Paramount

Rated PG

88 mins.

Grade B+

By AMANDA GARDNER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

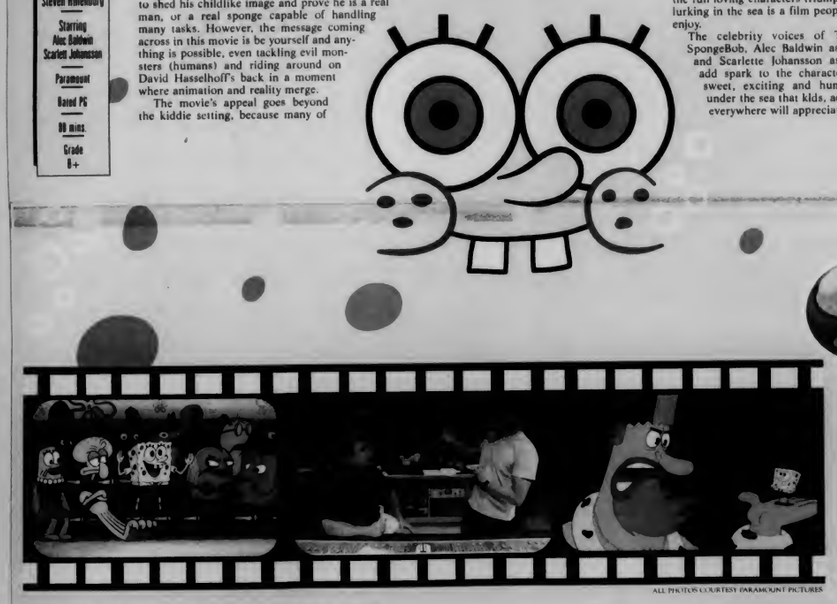
Welcome to Bikini Bottom: a life under the sea where sponges work at hamburger restaurants and worship a dancing peanut. A place where every water animal, whether it's a squid, lobster or even a talking computer wait in line at the Krusty Krab to eat the sea's best hamburger. A world where all different types of creatures, enjoy singing and riding around in giant hamburger cars.

This is the under the sea adventure, "The SpongeBob SquarePants Movie," starring the faithful yellow sponge and his goofy companion Patrick the Starfish as they venture into the evil Shell City to rescue King Neptune's Crown and save Bikini Bottom from the evil Plankton.

SpongeBob is a loving character that is trying to shed his childlike image and prove he is a real man, or a real sponge capable of handling many tasks. However, the message coming across in this movie is be yourself and anything is possible, even tackling evil monsters (humans) and riding around on David Hasselhoff's back in a moment where animation and reality merge.

The movie's appeal goes beyond the kiddie setting, because many of the jokes are geared toward adults, including SpongeBob pouring out his sorrows over ice cream and having a terrible hangover in the morning.

While the kids laugh and enjoy SpongeBob's silly sense of humor and his ability to get himself out of sticky situations, just by being himself, they can learn a lesson about being true to oneself. On their way to Shell City, they almost get caught in a bar fight, lose their giant hamburger car and are nearly stepped on by an evil motorcycle riding green giant, without losing any dignity.



> "SpongeBob is a loving character that is trying to shed his childlike image and prove he is a real man, or a real sponge ..."

The movie's real motivator is Princess Mindi, a blue mermaid who convinces SpongeBob and Patrick that their green leaf mustaches make them real men. The two feel strong and powerful for the first time.

The musical numbers throughout the film are also pleasurable, because everyone can sing along with SpongeBob and cheer him on through every obstruction that crosses his path. How can anyone not enjoy the Goofy Goober singing peanut wearing sunglasses and colorful underwear?

On a sour note, the 88-minute movie seemed to go on forever. The children along with this adult, got a bit restless, considering the plot problems could have been solved much earlier. The animation is certainly not anything special, but the fun loving characters triumphing over all evil lurking in the sea is a film people of all ages can enjoy.

The celebrity voices of Tom Kenney as SpongeBob, Alec Baldwin as the evil Dennis and Scarlette Johansson as Princess Mindi add spark to the characters and create a sweet, exciting and humorous existence under the sea that kids, adults and sponges everywhere will appreciate.

ALL PHOTOS COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Who lives in a pineapple under the sea?

In an effort to beef up the cast for the first full length SpongeBob movie, casting directors attracted big names in Hollywood such as Alec Baldwin (Dennis the hit man), and Scarlett Johansson (Mindy the Mermaid). Though despite all of the big names some say the Nickelodeon film seemed to drag on at times.

UMass Marching Band shines at the Bands of America

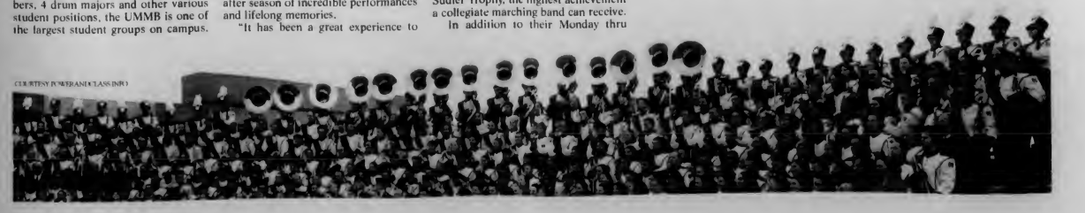
"I'm sorry, I can't. I have a 4:40 class,' that's what you need to tell people! When they say 'Hey, come to the mall' or 'let's go to dinner' or 'come walk my dog' what do you say?"

"I'm sorry, I can't. I have a 4:40 class," a chorus of 300 voices repeats back to the man on the ladder. That man is Michael Klesch, assistant director and musical arranger for the Power and Class of New England, the University of Massachusetts Minuteman Marching Band.

The band, with 200 wind players, 40 percussionists, 45 color guard members, 4 drum majors and other various student positions, the UMMB is one of the largest student groups on campus. The entire program is student run, from organizing and handing out uniforms to getting the proper buses to make sure the band gets to all their performances on time. Under the direction of marching band maven George N. Parks, the UMMB is know nationwide as one of the best collegiate bands in the country.

Parks, along with Klesch and associate director and percussion guru Thom Hannum (affectionately known throughout the UMMB as "the big three") act as Shepard's as they guide their flock of 300 safely through season after season of incredible performances and lifelong memories.

"It has been a great experience to work with them over my three years in the marching band" says Michelle Sparr, a senior accounting major, "they have given us an opportunity to be a part of a great organization."



During the bands storied history, they have marched in two Inaugural Parades (for Reagan in 1980 and George W. Bush in 2000), performed at numerous venues across the country, including the RCA Dome in Indianapolis three times, and other places across North America. The pinnacle of the UMMB's success came in 1998 when the band was awarded the Sudler Trophy, the highest achievement a collegiate marching band can receive.

In addition to their Monday thru Friday practices, the band can be found most Saturday mornings at 8 a.m. on the practice fields behind the Mullins Center, trying to wake up Southwest (to the residents of Southwest, you have my deepest apologies), but the general mind of the band seems to be "If we're up, then they might as well be up too." After their rehearsal, the band eats lunch and changes into uniform and makes their way down to the stadium.

The band parades its way through the southern part of campus and makes a stop at the pyramids in Southwest to give an impromptu concert featuring music from this years show, "West Side Story" as well as a medley of Elton John tunes and continue to McGuirk stadium where they perform pre-game, a half time show, and their traditional post game performance at every home game. Between the football games, the band travels to various other parts of the region for performances.

This season, the band was the highlight of the 300th Anniversary parade in Sutton. They also made their yearly

See BAND on page 5

COURTESY POWER AND CLASS (NBN)

Marching Band brings power and class to Indianapolis trip to Allentown, Pa. to perform at an intercollegiate band festival where some of the best college bands on the east coast perform. They traveled to Boston College to cheer on the football team, followed by a performance at Faneuil Hall and they were even the opening act for Bill Cosby during homecoming.

BAND from page 4

The highlight of this season was without question their trip as an exhibition band to Bands of America Grand National Championships at the RCA Dome in Indianapolis, Ind. earlier this month. The band had prepared all season for their four-day trip, which started out on Thursday, Nov. 2 from Amherst for Indianapolis.

They made a stop at McDowell High School in Erie, Pa. and made the front page of the local section of the Erie Times. After a good night sleep on the McDowell gym floor, the UMMB put on a rousing performance for the students at the school and then it was off to their anticipated destination, Indianapolis.

The Bands of America Grand National Championships showcases the best high school marching bands from across the country. Students from states as far away as California and Texas made the journey to compete in Indianapolis. The competition started on Thursday, with 99 bands in competition. Those 99 were then paired down to 22, which would perform on Saturday during the day. From those 22, 12 would be chosen to perform at the Grand Nationals Final Performance on Saturday night, where one of them would be crowned 2004 Bands of America Grand National Champion.

Upon their arrival on Friday in Indianapolis, the band unloaded the busses and was whisked away to the Pan-American Plaza to play for the announcement of the 22 finalists that would perform on Saturday in the dome. After their rousing performance of "West Side Story", the band concluded their performance with an enthusiastic, and crowd-pleasing rendition of their Elton John medley while fireworks exploded over the Indianapolis skyline. After their performance in the plaza, the UMMB headed inside the RCA Dome for a private rehearsal with the dome all to themselves, which not many bands get to do.

Saturday was the day that the entire band had been looking forward to since band camp had started in August. They entered the dome on Saturday afternoon ready for the performance of their lives. The UMMB was treated to the Indianapolis Colt's visitor's locker room to dress and prepare for their performance. During warm ups, Klesch gave the band a pep talk: "This is it. You've been working all season for this. You're ready. Get out there and give them something to remember." The band proceeded to the airlock, and the mix of excitement and nervousness was overwhelming.

"You're going to remember this performance for the rest of your lives," Parks told the band before they went on. The airlock gates opened and the UMMB proudly took the field.

With the bright lights, the Astroturf, and thousands of cheering people filling the stands, the UMMB was primed and ready for the performance of their lives. The two giant Jumbotrons on either end of the stadium welcomed, "The Power and Class of New England. The University of Massachusetts Minuteman Marching Band from Amherst Massachusetts." Drum Major John Kohronen called the band to attention, and with three sharp whistle blasts, the band was in gear and they gave what many considered the performance of the season, if not their entire life.

"BOA was amazing. All the events, the good and the bad leading up to it, just made it that much more rewarding," said sophomore Dev Lutchman, a sociology major. "To be received so well by all those people, to have random mothers and students come up to me and other tenors telling us how they loved our show, it was special"

Junior mechanical engineering major Andy Cook echoed Lutchman's thoughts: "Marching band does three things for me," said Cook. "It keeps me busy on otherwise lazy weekends, lets me spend a good amount of time with my closest friends who I met in the band, and gives me an outlet to play a little music in a very laid back atmosphere. [Bands of America] was pretty amazing, the audience response was incredible."

After their crowd-pleasing performance, the band was able to explore Indianapolis, and then went back to the dome to watch the 12 final bands compete. There the band sat, a proud and talented representation of the University of Massachusetts, surrounded by their closest friends, which is a huge part of the UMMB. "The friends I've made through band will definitely be my friends for life. Yeah, my friends back home will definitely be there too, but the friends I've made from marching band all share a common bond; band camps, rehearsing in the cold, sleeping on gym floors. All of those things really brought us close together," said Lutchman.

Once the final band had performed, Lee Greenwood gave a stirring rendition of "God Bless the U.S.A" (with the help of the UMMB from the balcony) and the 2004 Grand National Champion had been declared. In case you're wondering, Lawrence Central High School from Indianapolis was the winner.

The band filed out of the Dome, all while being congratulated and complimented on their performance. They headed out towards the buses, to pack up and head back to Amherst. Although they were exhausted from their whirlwind four-day trip, they got on the buses and left Indianapolis tired and kept their "eyes with pride", exemplifying just why they are the "Power and Class of New England".

Joe Piedrafite is a Collegian columnist.

Bringing home the Bacons

By MICHAEL DEEHAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Kevin Bacon came, he saw, he shook his butt.

Thursday night at Northampton's Calvin Theater, The Bacon Brothers put on a surprisingly lively and energetic performance. The duo, made up of brothers Kevin and Michael Bacon, took to the stage armed with material from their previous three releases and a few select cover songs.

As the audience began to pour in, a startling theme revealed itself and did little to heighten my expectations: the entire audience, it seemed, was made up of women (some accompanied by husbands) of at least 35 and up. I began to worry that this was a bad idea.

Opening the show was newcomer Melani Smith. Performing with her simple backing band, Melani showed her vocal chops on such songs as the politically charged "God" and the love-gone-bad piece "Simple Girl." Perhaps the most powerful portion of Smith's set was the personal letter put to music called "Mr. Smith." In the song, Melani recites a letter she wrote to her father, who left his family when the songstress was young. The song proved to be thought provoking and haunting in its simplicity and significance.

The Bacons stage setup was sparse, just a few guitars and other assorted instruments littering the stage. After a huge ovation for Mr. Kevin Bacon, the audience settled down for the Bacon Brothers' patented folk-rock combo. Michael Bacon proved his talent right from the start of the show. Within a few short songs' time, the elder Bacon had done everything from accompany his brother on guitar, to sing the lead of a song (with a voice that sounds remarkably like Christopher Guest's folk singing character from the film "A Mighty Wind"), to playing an incredibly moving solo on the cello. This classic cello solo soon turned into a cello/rock jam, and then into the song "Supposed to be Tuesday". The song featured Kevin Bacon for the first time truly showing his musical and vocal skills, a feat that finally won over the skeptical audience.

The rest of the set was made up of cuts from the Bacons own catalog as well as the Beatles song "If I Needed Someone". Some of the more upbeat songs, such as "I'm So Glad I'm Not Married," resulted in the country twang-inflicted actor Kevin dancing around on stage to the delight of the adoring crowd of middle-age women. And yes, there was much butt-shaking.

The Bacon Brothers
Calvin Theatre
Northampton
Nov. 19

The rock continued with a cover of The Rolling Stones "This Could Be the Last Time" and a medley featuring riffs by Jimmy Hendrix, Aerosmith and the legendary rocker James Taylor.

The biggest surprise of the night came at the very end of the encore set. The band came back on stage to the shouts of a deservedly riled crowd. That's when all hell broke loose. With the first few words of Kenny Loggin's song "Footloose," the estrogen inside the Calvin Theater reached a boiling point. "Footloose" was made famous by the Kevin Bacon-starring movie of the same name – and people remembered it. The ensuing mob of gyrating and "dancing" fans made the night complete. I came away from the performance with a newfound respect for The Bacon Brothers as a true, genuine group of artists that just happens to have a famous, butt-shaking actor for a singer.

Though some may consider the Bacon Brothers a novelty because of Kevin's acting career, skeptics were surprised by Thursday's performance

UMASS Campus Recreation

GET THOSE FORMS IN BY:

Spring Basketball (M/W/C) 11/29

Mandatory clinics for Spring Basketball officials are scheduled in two parts. Clinics are scheduled for January 24 &25 at 6 p.m. and January 26 &27 at 7 p.m. Call for requirements and locations.

On The Web: www.umass.edu/umim

Happy Thanksgiving

from the staff of Dining Services

YCMP

RESIDENTIAL

To All Residential/YCMP Meal Plan Holders:

NEED MORE MEALS?

Now you can purchase additional meals or upgrade your meal plan at the Meal Plan Office at Franklin Dining Commons

Several options available to choose from!
Call 545-1362 or visit the meal plan office today.

RESIDENTIAL Meal Plan

YCMP Your Campus Meal Plan

You must have an active meal plan to upgrade or purchase additional meals.

Form of payment: cash, check or credit card

Strong frontcourt fuels UMass

MEN'S HOOPS from page 8

if they keep working ... Chris [Chadwick] is also a guy who can really give us a boost as well. He's worked hard in the off season, and we're confident that he's going to give us another formidable option off the bench."

Walk-ons Drew Rossi and Mike Jones will also provide added depth at the position.

Frontcourt

There is little doubt that the 2004-04 Massachusetts Minutemen will only go as far as reigning Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year Rashaun Freeman can take them.

A physically dominant force with a soft touch around the rim and an exceptional arsenal of offensive moves, Freeman led the Minutemen with 15.4 points per game and 8.5 rebounds per game in '03-04, and is a leading candidate for A-10 Player of the Year honors. After shooting almost 55 percent from the floor, recording 12 double-doubles and being named A-10 Rookie of the Week seven times, Freeman must remain consistently stellar on the offensive end for UMass, and continue to be a physical force on defense.

"Ray has a chance to become one of the elite players in the conference, no doubt about it," Lappas said. "He's worked hard in the offseason again, and is ready to pick right up where he left off last year. We're counting on him again for a great season, because we know he's capable of special things."

Another key for UMass along the front line will be sophomore forward Stephane Lasme. One of the conference's premier shot blockers, Lasme ranked second in the A-10 with 51 blocks last season, an average of 1.8 per game. Tall, athletic and an exceptional leaper, Lasme is a key figure for the '04-05 Minutemen. If he can continue to develop into an intimidating defensive force and the avoid problems with foul trouble that plagued him much of last season, he'll give Lappas a difference-maker in the pivot who will help take the heat off of Freeman defensively and help slow opponents inside game. If he can also further his game offensively to the point where he can contribute consistently, it will be an additional bonus for the Maroon and White.

"Stephane is a guy who has really come a long way since last season," Lappas said. "He's still very new to the game, and he's learning things every day that are just helping him get better and better. The more experience he gets, the more he'll be able to help us."

Back for his third season at UMass is Jeff Viggiano. The Suffield, Conn. native has started for Lappas through the majority of the past two seasons, and will provide key leadership and stability off the bench both at the wing and inside as an occasional power forward. Viggiano averaged 9.7 points and 5.4 rebounds per game for UMass last season but, despite being recruited as a shooter, still hasn't shown the consistency from behind the arc to be a mainstay within the offense. Nonetheless, Viggiano is one of the toughest players on the team, and the many intangibles he brings will help keep the Minutemen together on both ends of the court.

Highly touted freshman Lawrence Carrier will also help take some of the pressure off of Carrier, and will team with Viggiano in giving Lappas a pair of forwards who can play both inside and out. A former top five high school recruit who played at the Salisbury (Conn.) School after moving east from Southern California, Carrier is known for his deadly 3-point shooting ability. He needs to work himself into better shape at this point, but has the athleticism and potential to be a true difference-maker on the offensive end. If he can work on his transition game and finish strong on offense to allow himself more open looks around the perimeter, he will likely get better with as the season progresses.

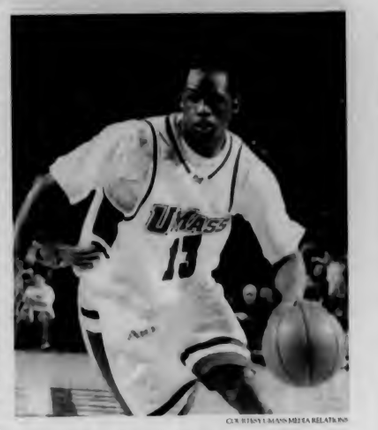
"We have the chance to go big or go small, and that flexibility is good," Lappas said. "We have guys like [Viggiano] who can play a number of roles, and those guys can really help us in finding the best possible matchups on both ends."

The final two-thirds of UMass' 2004 recruiting class will also be put in a position to help the Minutemen this season. Canadian high school product Olivier Lamoureux missed most of early season practice after hernia surgery, but has rebounded nicely and has the potential to come in and help right away. A tall, lanky forward who can shoot and run the floor, Lamoureux remains untested against the big, physical forwards in the A-10, and needs to prove he can hold his own inside.

Holding his own will not be a problem for 6-foot-11 325-pound Bristol, Conn. native Jeff "Big Deli" Salovski. A monster of a man who can move bodies inside, Lappas says Salovski still needs to lose some weight and gain quickness and stamina before he can contribute regularly, but strongly emphasizes that he thinks "Big Deli" will one day become a solid A-10 big man.

"The young kids that we've brought in are guys we really think can contribute, but we don't necessarily need them to because we have such a strong returning group," Lappas said. "Over the course of the season, I think the three freshman are going to have their chance to make a difference, but they won't have the pressure on them of having to do it all right away."

Senior Brennan Martin will also contribute at the forward position, and will compliment UMass' inside presence with his strong shooting ability. Sophomore forward Alassane Kouyate, meanwhile, had double knee surgery in the off-season, and has had difficulty during the recovery process. He is continuing to rest his knees and weigh his options, and will likely be out for the foreseeable future.



Walk-on Tim Collins will also provide depth at the position.

COURTESY KAREN WINGER

In the thick of things

Junior foward John Toffey has an assist this year for UMass. The Minutemen will face off against Vermont today at 7 p.m.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Chris Chadwick averaged 1.1 points per game last year for the Minutemen. Chadwick will see more time at guard this year for UMass.

UMass looks to rebound at Holy Cross

By Brendian Hall
Collegian Staff

After last weekend's trip to Chicago, a tournament in which they outrebounded but lost to both Southern California and Murray State, the Massachusetts women's team will be looking to get into a rhythm tonight at Holy Cross.

A win this evening in Worcester against the Crusaders would be obviously pleasing to coach Marnie Dacko, but it won't exactly be a piece of cake — especially when one factor is turnovers.

Against USC on Friday, the Maroon and White committed a record 31 turnovers, a good portion coming unforced.

"I'm concerned with how well we're going to make our own adjustments as far as taking care of the basketball," Dacko said. "A lot of those turnovers were unforced ... we dribbled the ball off our knee, off our foot, threw it out of bounds. A couple of players averaged six turnovers a game, but that's something that can be remedied."

Whatever remedy that is had, better act quick. If they want to hang with the Crusaders, turning the ball over — whether carelessly or not — is not an option.

Against Providence College on Nov. 19, the Crusaders' defense forced a whopping 26 turnovers, which eventually led to 68-40 thumping of the Lady Friars.

Two days later, facing Buffalo, the Crusader defense stood tall yet again, this time forcing an even more astounding 29 turnovers and pounding the Bulls 73-42.

In a span of two games, Holy Cross outscored their opponent 141-82 and forced 55 turnovers. Meanwhile, the Minutewomen gave the ball away almost as many times, totaling 53 in the Moran Realty Classic.

Nonetheless, going 0-3 is not in the Maroon and White's agenda.

"It's pretty important, you know. Going 0-3 isn't what any team wants to do," junior guard Katie Nelson said. "I think we played pretty well in our first game. We'd gain a lot of confidence with a win."

But the game that UMass has played hasn't been all that bad. Look no further than the defense, and more importantly the rebounding skills of Patrycja Gulak, Brooke Campbell, Tamara Tatham and the like. The frontcourt outrebounded the Women of Troy 47-37, including 32-23 defensively, and then proceeded to outboard the Lady Racers on Saturday 47-34.

Putting together a good defensive stand for the length of a game, however, may need a little touching up.

"If you're going to pick out a highlight, defense and rebounding would be your two highlights," Dacko said. "[But] are we playing defense for 40 minutes? No. Are we rebounding better? Yes."

The ups and downs of UMass basketball

MCGOVERN from page 8

Talk of the season ahead became the same old song. "They should be good, they have potential, this year will be better," were comments you could almost set your watch to as fall slowly faded into the doldrums of another New England winter.

This year, however, things are starting to look different for the Minutemen. Things look like they are finally turning around.

For the first time since Lappas has arrived, the lineup isn't chock full of Bruiser Flint's (Lappas's predecessor) recruits. It is a team that has depth beyond the sixth man and there is actually more than one viable scoring option.

Instead of sharp-shooting point guard Anthony Anderson carrying the load and surrounded by question marks, there are a few other players, including last year's leading-scorer and Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year Rashaun Freeman.

However, as any knowledgeable UMass fan will attest to, they've been in this situation before. Reminiscent of the Crooks-Rhymer tandem of old, many Minutemen supporters may be wary to put all of their faith in another point guard/big man offensive scheme, but if you look at the lineup on paper the talent on this team goes a bit deeper.

For the first time in awhile there will be a fight for starting positions.

Jeff Viggiano, who last year was a shoe-in to start at small forward, now has to compete with defensive-minded Maurice Maxwell. Although there may be some discrepancy to who starts from week to week, this competition will be beneficial for both players.

Aside from the swing-man rotation, UMass has one of the most intimidating front courts in recent memory. Freeman, who is a lock at power forward, and Stephane Lasme, who may be the best defensive center in the A-10 this year, will guard the paint for the Minutemen. However, Lasme has this problem where he gets himself into foul trouble ... fast.

For any other UMass team of the past four years, foul trouble down low would decipher into problems, but not this year. Freshmen Jeff "Big Deli" Salovski, who stands at 6-foot 11 and an imposing 325 pounds, and Lawrence Carrier, who was once a top-10 recruit in the nation are both ready and able to not only defend, but also dominate the paint.

As any sports fan knows, it's hard to get excited after three mediocre seasons in a row. Fans of the Minutemen will be skeptical, as they should, until the product they root for finally delivers. But maybe this year is different; perhaps the right pieces are actually in place and a positive chapter will be written in the ongoing saga of UMass basketball. I guess we'll just have to wait and see what happens this year.

And it all starts tonight.

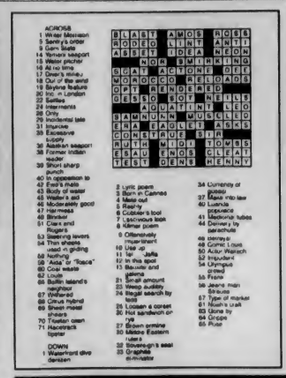
Bob McGovern is a Collegian Columnist he can be contacted at McGovern@collegian.com

CENTER SERIES WINTER 2004

Experience it all
from the edge of your seat!

November 21
Ying String Quartet
Beethoven Quartet Cycle
The Quartet will perform Beethoven's Opus 18, No. 1, Opus 18, No. 2 and Opus 130. Plan to join the quartet for a pre-concert talk at 6:45 p.m. Viennese coffee and desserts will be available for purchase.
Bowker Auditorium at 7:30pm

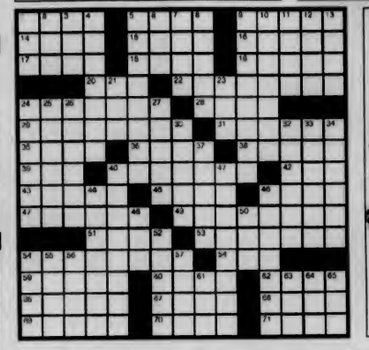
December 3 and 4
St. Petersburg Ice Ballet: The Nutcracker
Enjoy this traditional holiday classic in an entirely new way- on ice, on stage at the Fine Arts Center! On blades, The Nutcracker becomes effervescent, irrepressible. The cast's credentials, combined with a story that takes place in a winter wonderland, make St. Petersburg's production magical. What better way to see snowflakes dance than on ice?
Sponsored by Easthampton Savings Bank, FamilyFun Magazine, Coca Cola, The River 93.9, and The Daily Hampshire Gazette
Concert Hall at 7:30pm



The Fine Arts Center
University of Massachusetts Amherst
For Tickets: 545-2511 or 1-800-999-UMAS
WWW.FINEARTSCENTER.COM

EXECUTIVE VALET PARKING
Serving Bradley Airport
Airport Parking College Special!
$25.00*-Up to 7 Days Parking. Valid 11/23-11/30
$50.00*-Up to 5 Weeks Parking. Valid 12/15-02/01/05
Valid College ID Req., Present this coupon or Visit us at:
www.CollegeAirportParking.com
800-218-1297
*Plus 4% Access Fee. Cannot be Combined with Other offers

MAD MAGGIE'S
The Legend
Billiard Parlor
1500 Main Street
(Tower Square-next to Marriott Hotel)
Springfield
737-2400
"Billiards, Fun For The Entire Family"
New Hours:
MON-THURS. 6:30 PM - 11 PM
FRI. 6:00 PM - 1 AM
SAT. 5:30PM - 1 AM
SUN. 5:30PM - 11:30PM
High School & College Students Welcome
Serving Beer & Wine
Validated, Secure Indoor Parking
Great Place To Bring Your Date
Handicapped Accessible Pool Tables
CLIP AND SAVE DISCOUNT CARD
$1.00 OFF PER HOUR FOR YOUR PARTY
VALID OCTOBER THRU MAY



ACROSS
1 Winter Wonderland
5 Santa's order
9 Calm Stella
14 Yemen's seaport
15 Water pitcher
16 At no time
17 Dean's study
18 Out of the wind
19 Skyline feature
20 Inc. in London
22 Settles
24 Interments
28 Only
29 Incidental tale
31 Ewe's mate
33 Excessive supply
36 Alaskan seaport
38 Former Indian leader
39 Short sharp punch
40 In opposition to 42 Fred's mate
43 Body of water
45 Waiter's aid
46 Moderately good
47 Hair mess
48 Dr. Seuss
Grace and Rogers
53 Steering levers
54 Thin shaves used in grilling
58 Nothing
59 "Aida" or "Rasa"
60 Coal waste
62 Louis
63 Buffet island's neighbor
67 Shelter of
68 Circus Hybrid
69 Sandwich shops
70 Tiretan oxen
71 Havelock's lyceur

DOWN
1 Waterfront dive denizen
2 Lyric poem
3 Born in Cannes
4 Make out
5 Rashly
6 Cobbler's tool
7 Lascivious look
8 Kilmer poem
9 Offensively impertinent
10 Use up
11 Ta'- Jafa
12 In this spot
13 Bauble and gaming
21 Small amount
23 Vocalist Judkins
24 Illegal search by feds
25 Loosen a corset
30 Hot sandwich on rye
27 Brown ermine
30 Melow Eastern rulers
32 Scavenger's seat
35 Graphite
36 Sovereign's seal
37 Make into law
40 Lukinuk
41 Opposite
43 Dressing robes
44 Delivery by parachute
46 Intercept
48 Cosmo Lopez
50 Actor Wallach
52 Impudent
54 Olympus priest
55 Flame
56 Jeans' main measure
57 Type of marker
61 Noah's craft
63 Gone by
64 Circle
65 Pulse

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
If you listen to your headphones when you walk to class you won't hear anyone.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You should actually start studying for that test tomorrow.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Sometimes there are days when everything seems to go right. Today is not one of those.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
For now, junk food is your friend. Good thing you're going home for Thanksgiving.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Last night you had some pretty amazing dreams. Too bad you don't remember.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't let current family woes get in the way of your happiness.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The world needs more chinchillas. They are the rodent mutt.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Today you need to do some serious laughing. You've been wound up pretty tight.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Most people stop arguing when they know they're wrong. Don't be so stubborn.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
This is your time to be all mushy gushy. Give someone a surprise hug.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Go to the ice cream machine all by yourself. Nobody wants to hold your hand.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Keep going like you are, and there could be a new sport in your future.

Quote of the Day

"We have to talk about liberating minds as well as liberating society."

-Angela Davis

Blow away your competitors, advertise with The Collegian
Call 545-3500

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Announcements

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraise with CampusFundraiser. Contact CampusFundraiser 888-923-3238 or visit www.campus-fundraiser.com

Apartment for Rent

Apartment 1 Bedroom Sitting room Full bath Kitchen Amherst Boarder Call Roohina at 549-6091

One bedroom apt. for rent. Puffton Village. Starting in Jan. 765/month. Call 978-502-9036 ASAP

Apartment for Rent

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

Auto for Sale

1994 Toyota Corolla 4-Door. $1500. Excellent Condition in and out. New front tires, CD-Player, Hitch, AC, Manual Transmission. 131K miles. Call 617-729-7066.

Computers

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

Employment

SPRING INTERNSHIPS
Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

Roommate Wanted

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

Services

Computer Consultants $20/hr we come to your dorm/house Certified technicians. Call Kris (413) 253-0215

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birthcontrol, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Prav Street, Amherst 548-9992.

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

Travel

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Travel

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

Spring Break 2005. Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

Travel

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRISM. Online
1 800 426 7710

Wanted

Snowboard events intern $50/day stipend. For job description email jfriends@deerfield.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Revival in the Pioneer Valley

UMass combines strong youth and experience in the 2004-05 season

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

For those in and around Massachusetts men's basketball, there is little to no doubt that this is a make-or-break year for head coach Steve Lappas and the Minutemen. A year after going 11-17 and bowing out in the first round of the Atlantic 10 tournament for the second consecutive season, UMass returns all five starters and a plethora of cautious optimism surrounding the program.

Lappas has displayed a prowess for igniting dormant programs from the doldrums of mediocrity, and it was for that very reason that he was brought to Amherst. After three consecutive losing seasons, however, the uneasiness of losing has begun to grow uncomfortable for the Maroon and White's thin but loyal fan base. Nonetheless, in his stays at Manhattan and Villanova, Lappas combined to go 51-16 in his fourth season at the helm, and the veteran coach has every reason to believe his young and talented group will be primed for success in 2003-04.

With a year of experience under their belt and a few more pieces of the puzzle fitting in around them, this group has the potential to be the team that reignites the basketball flame and takes back the cold, bitter Amherst winter that once belonged solely to basketball and nothing else. With success will come interest, and with interest will come fans, but one will not come without the other. The opportunity is there for the taking, as are the fans who have waited anxiously for the return to glory of UMass basketball, all that's left is for this group to make it happen.

Backcourt

As he has over each of the past three seasons, Lappas will once again rely on senior point guard Anthony Anderson to take charge of his young team and direct traffic on both ends of the court. A four-year starter and a two-year captain, Anderson now has three years' experience running Lappas' motion offense, and the 2001 Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year has evolved into a reliable floor general who takes care of the ball and can effectively create his own offense.

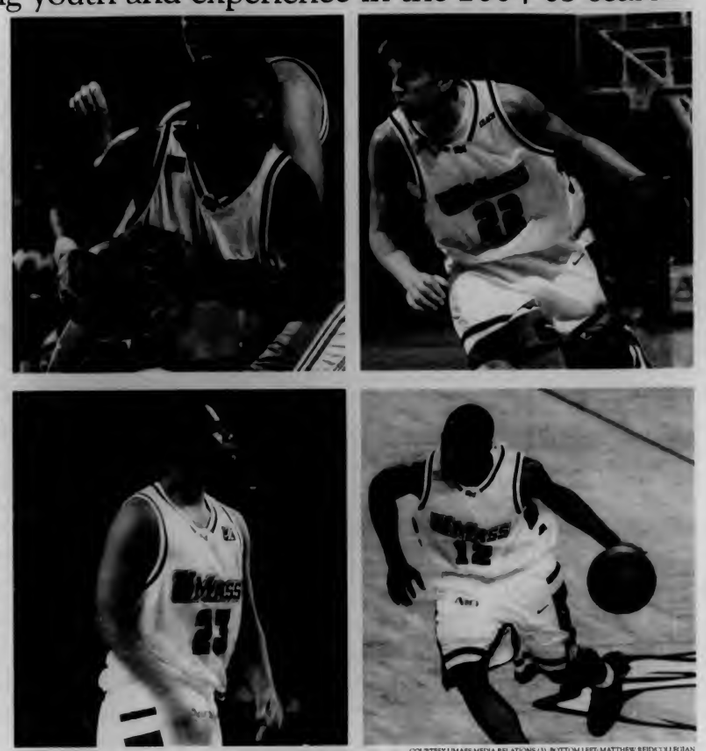
His shot selection is shaky at times — he often passes up open looks in attempting to get teammates involved — but he remains one of the Atlantic 10's premier shooters after connecting on nearly 39 percent of his three-point attempts and averaging 12.9 points per game last season.

Anderson will also be looking to make a final mark in the UMass record books in this, his final season in Amherst. The Lynn native currently sits third on the program's all time list in three-pointers made (227), fourth in three-point attempts (584) and fifth in three-point percentage (.389).

Additionally, he is one of only six players in UMass history who have recorded 100 or more assists in three consecutive seasons, and if he can accomplish the feat again, he will join Carl Smith as the only two players in school history to reach that level in four consecutive campaigns.

"Anthony knows exactly what to do out there at all times," Lappas said. "He's a very smart player who understands what we're trying to do in the offense, and he really serves as another coach on the floor. The guys look up to him and respect him, and he's the kind of player who can really help to hold a young team together."

Joining Anderson in the backcourt will be sophomore guard Art Bowers, who was named to the A-10 All Rookie Team after averaging 9.7 points, 3.5 rebounds and 3.2 assists during his freshman campaign. A pure scorer known for his dynamic mid-range game, Bowers will be relied on heavily to pick up more of the scoring slack along the perimeter. He has proven he has a knack all his own offensively, but must improve on his 3-point shooting to take the pressure off of Anderson and help draw defenders away from the post.



Classmate Maurice Maxwell, who is listed as a forward on the roster but will likely serve in a variety of roles on the wing, has a chance to become an elite defender in the A-10 with his long wingspan and good athleticism, but must show he can shoot the ball consistently to balance out his offensive game. He displayed good court awareness and an exceptional ability to attack the basket in averaging just over eight points per game in 2003-04, and if he can further his feel for the offense he may find himself filling in for Anderson at the point in certain situations.

Senior Chris Chadwick, a solid combo guard will once again serve as the team's backup point guard, is a player whom Lappas feels is poised for success this season, and has shed nearly 20 pounds to get back in what Lappas calls "much better shape." A steady hand at the point who is fearless with the ball, Chadwick is a streaky shooter who can help the Minutemen with senior leadership at either guard position, and gives the Maroon and White four relatively interchangeable parts at the guard position.

"Around the perimeter, we have the chance to be very solid both offensively and defensively," Lappas said. "We have guys who do a lot of different things well, and with the year of experience they got last year they should be primed to succeed for us this year.

"Artie Bowers and Maurice Maxwell are guys that we're counting on to step up this season, and we feel they both have a chance to be very good players

See MEN'S HOOPS on page 6

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS (3), BOTTOM LEFT: MATTHEW REIDCOLLEGIAN

Clockwise: Rashaun Freeman, Jeff Viggiano, Anthony Anderson, and Lawerence Carrier will be key contributers for the Minutemen this year. UMass posseses its deepest squad in nearly five years and will be led into the 2004-05 campaign by captain Anthony Anderson.

Men's Basketball 2004-05 Roster

#	Name	Class	Pos.	Height	Weight
12	Anthony Anderson	Senior	G	5-11	170
34	Art Bowers	Sophomore	G	6-4	190
25	Lawrence Carrier	Freshman	F	6-8	225
2	Chris Chadwick	Senior	G	6-3	195
20	Tim Collins	Senior	F	6-5	210
1	Rashaun Freeman	Sophomore	F	6-9	255
21	Alassane Kouyate	Sophomore	F	6-8	200
11	Olivier Lamoureux	Freshman	F	6-9	215
5	Stephane Lasme	Sophomore	F	6-8	190
0	Brennan Martin	Senior	F	6-6	190
3	Maurice Maxwell	Sophomore	F	6-5	175
10	Drew Rossi	Sophomore	G	6-0	170
24	Jeff Salovski	Freshman	C	6-11	325
22	Jeff Viggiano	Junior	F	6-6	215

Coaches
Steve Lappas – Head Coach
John Leonard – Assistant Coach
Andrew Theokas – Assistant Coach
Christopher Walker – Assistant Coach
Craig Carter – Director of Basketball Operations
Jermaine Kimbrough – Staff Assistant
Matt Korner – Academic Advisor
Bonnie Otto – Basketball Secretary
Jason Yellin – Sports Information Director

Hoops starts season against worthy foe

With all the makings of an explosive season for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, it has to start converting skeptics today against a very talented Birmingham Southern team.

After defeating Concordia, 73-64, in an exhibition game 11 days ago the Minutemen had some concerns about their defense, their offense, and the status of their point guard and captain Anthony Anderson.

Anderson, who had only one day of practice before taking on Concordia, had a mere eight points on three-for-eight shooting. UMass coach Steve Lappas is quick to put that game behind him and is pleased with the progress Anderson has made.

"He'd only been back for a day before he played that game, but yea he's definitely back to normal," Lappas said.

One of the main issues for the Maroon and White will be its approach to a team that is extremely proficient from behind the arch. Birmingham Southern lacks a powerful game in the paint, but what it lack in size it makes up for in guard play.

With this, the Minutemen will need to shut down the perimeter and close off the Panther's exterior passing lanes. Lappas knows that UMass's perimeter defense has been one of its weaknesses over the past few seasons, and sees tonight as an opportunity to work on defending an adept shooting team.

"They're a smart team and they're a very good three-point shooting team," Lappas said. "We didn't defend the three-point line particularly well last year, so that's going to be a big thing for us."

One issue that may arise will be the health of guard/forward Maurice Maxwell, who hurt his thumb in practice yesterday. Maxwell, who is one of the premier defenders for UMass this year, went to get X-rays after practice; his status was yet to be determined.

If Maxwell is healthy, the Minutemen will start Anderson and sophomore Artie Bowers at the guard positions, and Rashaun Freeman, Maxwell, and Stephane Lasme in the frontcourt.

Birmingham Southern, who is coming off an 81-70 dismantling of Northeastern on Friday, has been slated as the pre-season favorite to win the Big South division.

-Bob McGovern

Men's Basketball 2004-05 Schedule

All times Eastern

Tue	11/23/2004	Birmingham Southern	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 PM
Sun	11/28/2004	Yale	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 PM
Wed	12/01/2004	Northeastern	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 PM
Sat	12/04/2004	Gonzaga	Seattle, Wash.	4:00 PM
Thu	12/09/2004	Connecticut	Amherst, Mass.	9:00 PM
Sun	12/12/2004	Miami	Coral Gables, Fla.	2:00 PM
Sun	12/19/2004	Davidson	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 PM
Thu	12/23/2004	Rider	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 PM
Tue	12/28/2004	Boston University	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 PM
Sun	01/02/2005	Boston College	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 PM
Wed	01/05/2005	Temple*	Amherst, Mass.	8:00 PM
Sat	01/08/2005	Xavier*	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 PM
Wed	01/12/2005	Saint Joseph's*	Philadelphia, Pa.	8:00 PM
Sat	01/15/2005	George Washington*	Washington, D.C.	NOON
Wed	01/19/2005	Fordham*	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 PM
Sat	01/22/2005	Saint Joseph's*	Amherst, Mass.	NOON
Wed	01/26/2005	St. Bonaventure*	Olean, N.Y.	7:00 PM
Sat	01/29/2005	Richmond*	Amherst, Mass.	NOON
Sat	02/05/2005	St. Bonaventure*	Amherst, Mass.	NOON
Wed	02/09/2005	Rhode Island*	Kingston, R.I.	7:30 PM
Sat	02/12/2005	Fordham*	Bronx, N.Y.	1:00 PM
Tue	02/15/2005	Florida State	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 PM
Sat	02/19/2005	La Salle*	Philadelphia, Pa.	4:00 PM
Wed	02/23/2005	Rhode Island*	Amherst, Mass.	7:00 PM
Sat	02/26/2005	Temple*	Philadelphia, Pa.	2:00 PM
Tue	03/01/2005	Dayton*	Dayton, Ohio	7:00 PM
Sat	03/05/2005	Duquesne*	Amherst, Mass.	2:00 PM

* Denotes Atlantic 10 Conference game

The revival of the basketball program

Bob McGovern

I remember it like it was yesterday.

Coming into UMass as a freshman, I had little knowledge of college athletics in the Pioneer Valley aside from the Massachusetts men's basketball team. When the paperwork was sent in and I was ready to head north from Florida to Amherst, friends told me, "Hey man, you're going to have a great basketball team up there."

So there I was, excited for the 2001-02 season, sitting in the then-crowded student section of the Mullins Center, with players like Shannon Crooks and Kitwana Rhymer headlining the squad. Steve Lappas was new to UMass and at first glance, everything appeared perfect.

They went 4-0 to start off the season, dropping national powerhouses Oregon 62-58 and North Carolina State 69-62 and were cruising towards a home matchup against University Connecticut, with only Holy Cross standing in the way.

That's when everything went terribly wrong.

In front of nearly 7,000 screaming fans, the Crusaders downed the Minutemen and from then on the program wasn't the same. Michael Smiley, a sharpshooter from Holy Cross, shot the lights out that night and a team that looked totally overmatched on paper and on the court went to bed that night victors.

But I kept coming.

My friends and I would sit in our seats, roughly 10 rows back and watch game after disappointing game. The crowds started to diminish over the past three years, hockey took over, and what was once a thriving basketball school became a campus of frustration.

See MCGOVERN on page 6

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 56

Ralph Stanley plays the Iron Horse.

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

WEDNESDAY: High: 56 Low: 52 | THURSDAY: High: 61 Low: 27 | FRIDAY: High: 44 Low: 23

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Minutemen win home opener 64-60

SPORTS, PAGE 6

Annual Dean's seminar presents 'Arts in America at Cultural Crossroads'

By Sean Whelan
Collegian Staff

Robert Lynch addressed issues that American artists face in his lecture Monday afternoon in the Campus Center. Lynch's talk was titled, "Arts in America at a Cultural Crossroads: The Future of Cultural Support and Policy."

The event was the third annual CHFA Dean's seminar, emphasizing a theme of CHFA graduates' roles in the real world. Lynch's blending of humor and subject matter captivated an audience larger than anticipated for nearly two hours.

Lynch graduated from the University of Massachusetts as an English major in 1971. Currently he is president and CEO of Americans for the Arts, and has been with the organization since its inception in 1996. In addition, Lynch has received many prestigious awards and serves on numerous boards of directors, including The National cultural advocacy group.

He has spent more than 30 years of work in the arts industry, and composes music on the piano, mandolin, and guitar. After divulging this information Lynch was quick to say, "I'm certainly not any good at any of the three." Following the audience's laughter, Lynch stated, "An uncountable number of people write poetry on any surface they can find, twenty-five million Americans sing in choruses, and thirty milllion make quilts," reminding the audience of the numerous forms of artistic expression.

Lynch's professional motivation has been driven by his personal desire to empower communities and leaders to advance the arts and to broaden social appreciation of the arts on all levels. The road to his present destination, "Was not easy, in fact it was a lie, let me rephrase that, a marketing strategy."

Lynch was referring to an organization he cleverly created on paper titled, "New England Artists." He set a date, invited artists, advertised, and rented a parcel of land here in western MA. 20,000 people attended, he charged an admission fee of $0.99, and quickly learned, "the value people place on a penny in this part of the state." Besides having to acquire roughly 20,000 pennies, the ceremonious release of a hundred white pigeons hovered 20 feet over the crowd, and then proceeded to expel there waste over a frantic crowd. There was also a very large contingency of "well armed police, ready for what they perceived as a dangerous gathering of these types," considering the year 1971, and the inherent clash of ideals pertaining to the left and right.

MATT REIDCOLLEGIAN

Robert Lynch addresses issues concerning the arts and its future.

Regardless of what went wrong, the event was a success, and Lynch was ready to proceed with confidence, determination, and had formulated goals to guide his company and perspective.

Lynch's goals of empowering communities and leaders to advance the arts centers around creating an environment in which artists can thrive, generating more revenue for the arts and education of art, bringing leadership together, influencing politicians, and ad campaigns.

The current state of funding for the arts in America is rather dismal compared to most of the world, developed or not according to Lynch.

"Americans as a whole believe that government funding for the arts is roughly fifty percent of all contributions," said Lynch. He continued to articulate that although this may be true with some of our

See LYNCH on page 2

Law school merger possible for UMass

By Matt Elder
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts is in the process of trying to merge with a local law school in order to give students across Massachusetts the benefits of a state law school, according to Ryan Benharris, president of the Student Bar Association at the Southern New England School of Law, which is located near UMass Dartmouth.

"The idea is that our school and SNESL try to be ABA accredited," Benharris said. The ABA, or American Bar Association, is one of the nationally recognized bars for lawyers.

Because of the way the bar system works, Benharris said, you need to pass the bar once you graduate from an ABA accredited school, which SNESL is not. If the merger happens, UMass would help support the law school's efforts to become accredited.

According to Benharris, Massachusetts and Connecticut have their own bars, and if a student passes those they can practice law in either of those states. Massachusetts is one of only five states without a public law school, according to Benharris.

"UMass would take over the school and make it a state school," he said. Benharris added that the school would offer its students the same types of benefits, like tuition breaks, like regular state schools have.

Benharris said that Robert Ward, the dean of SNESL, developed a plan for the merger. According to Benharris, once UMass took over it would be financially easier for the school to become accredited.

"The University would engulf us," he said.

Benharris said that the University would need to provide $800,000 to build an extra room onto one of the current SNESL buildings. He said that the building is worth about $8 million, and if the merger is completed it would not cost the taxpayers.

The money that the University would spend on the merger would help them become ABA accredited, according to Benharris.

Benharris said that the merger would essentially be SNESL giving UMass an $8 million present: their building. He said that UMass would receive all the profits from the school.

Benharris added that the money UMass would contribute would also help to hire additional faculty members, which could offer more classes and in turn assist in the school's bid for accreditation.

"They're trying to beef up their classes," he said

Benharris said that UMass has a $1.2 billion budget for their schools across the state. He said that the $800,000 is well within their budget.

"That's like one night in the DC," he said.

Although Benharris said that he thinks the merger will happen, there is still a lengthy process ahead.

Benharris said that the UMass Board of Trustees met two weeks ago to discuss the possible merger. UMass President Jack Wilson and UMass Dartmouth Chancellor Jean F. MacCormack presented to the board why the two should merge.

"President Wilson is very for the merger," Benharris said. "He's been a huge friend."

Benharris said that for the merger to pass the Board of Trustees, a majority vote is needed. He said that most of the members of the board want to see the merger take place, but there are some opponents.

According to the UMass Web site, there are 25 members of the Board.

Most of the opponents, Benharris said, are afraid of spending the taxpayers' money.

See LAW SCHOOL on page 2

Three former law students fuel criticism for a private unaccredited law school

NORTH DARTMOUTH, Mass. (AP) — Lawsuits by three former law students claiming they were defrauded by a private unaccredited law school in Dartmouth are fueling criticism of a plan by the University of Massachusetts to convert the law school into the state's first public law school.

The graduates of the Southern New England School of Law allege that the school's leaders misled them into believing the school was about to be accredited by the American Bar Association. The school's accreditation was denied in 1997 and again in 1999.

The former students sued in part because their home states — New Jersey and Rhode Island — require bar applicants to be graduates of accredited law schools.

Brian D. Tamborelli of East Greenwich, R.I., alleged that the dean of the law school, Robert V. Ward Jr., said at a student forum in March 2000 that the law school and the University of Massachusetts were in "bed together," and that a University takeover would speed accreditation.

U.S. District Court Judge Nancy Gertner dismissed all three lawsuits, but one suit was revived in a strongly worded decision by Appeals Court Judge Bruce M. Selya.

Selya reinstated a count of fraudulent misrepresentation brought against the school by Joseph Rodi of New Jersey and allowed him to raise a claim against the school under state consumer protection laws.

Tamborelli has appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals decision.

University trustees could meet before the end of the year to vote on whether to merge the law school into the Dartmouth campus.

State Rep. Gale D. Candaras, D-Wilbraham, said the lawsuits signaled a need for caution.

"As you can see from the lawsuits, officials at the Southern New England School of Law have been telling students for years that accreditation was imminent, even though they knew that was not true," Candaras told The Republican of Springfield.

The school's lawyer, Allen N. David of Boston, said the school received "provisional accreditation" from the bar association. It's also clear the school was not promising anything to any of the students, Allen said.

John T. Hoey, a spokesman for the UMass Dartmouth campus, said yesterday that the school will again seek accreditation when the merger is complete. Hoey said he is confident the application will be successful.

Accreditation is also an issue in the proposed merger. University officials said the process will cost about $900,000, but Candaras and other lawmakers said it could cost $40 million.

Some legislators are also concerned about the merger because they fear other university programs will be shortchanged if the University begins a public law school.

-Associated Press

Mad cow false alarm

By John Heilprin
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A cow the Agriculture Department had suspected of carrying mad cow disease was declared free of the illness after follow-up tests, officials said Tuesday. The announcement was a relief to the U.S. beef industry, which is still trying to recover from the nation's first case of the disease last December.

Initial screenings last week had raised the possibility of a new case of the disease in the United States. However, a more definitive test at the National Veterinary Services Laboratories in Ames, Iowa, came back negative, the officials said.

Cattle futures trading ended Tuesday at 87.25 cents per pound on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, just slightly below the 87.32 cents per pound it was at the end of last Wednesday, the day before the latest mad cow scare. In between, it had dipped to nearly 84.2 cents per pound.

"We saw the market sell off and then stabilize," said Bill O'Grady, director of futures research for A.G. Edwards & Sons, Inc. in St. Louis. "The market had sort of expected that the odds were high this would end up being a false positive."

O'Grady and Gregg Doud, chief economist of the National Cattlemen's Beef Association, said beef prices also were affected by the heavy rains and snow in parts of Texas. Doud said it was hard to say how much the mad cow scare alone had influenced the markets.

"We're already back to where we were," said Doud.

After the initial screening, the Agriculture Department said it ran a "gold standard" test twice on Monday and Tuesday. Officials did not say where the cow came from or why it was suspected of being diseased.

"Negative results from both ... tests make us confident that the animal in question is indeed negative," said John Clifford, deputy administrator of the department's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

The initial screenings had produced what officials said were "inconclusive" results, but just the possibility of a second case had rattled cattle producers, meatpackers and hamburger chains.

Julie Quick, a USDA spokeswoman, said officials would provide no further information about the suspect cow since the test results came back negative. It has been less than a year since the first case of mad cow disease.

See MAD COW on page 2

Controversial tapes revealed at station

BOSTON (AP) — The man who was poised to purchase a Boston business radio station but then withdrew, after owner Bradford C. Bleidt revealed a decades-old investment scam in tapes mailed to authorities, has agreed to continue to manage the station until Nov. 30.

Christopher Egan had been operating WBIX since Aug. 1, but the station's license had not yet been transferred when Bleidt, an investment adviser, attempted suicide after mailing confession tapes to the Securities and Exchange Commission, family, and business associates.

On Nov. 18, Egan announced he was withdrawing from the sale, effectively ending his role with the station.

But on Tuesday, the court-appointed receiver in the case, David Viscinanzo, asked Egan to continue operating the station through the end of the month.

Egan agreed, extending his role with the station for 12 days. He said he wanted to give the receiver more time to work out an agreement with the station's previous owner, Alex Langer, to whom Bleidt owes $7 million.

"The receiver felt it was important to operate the station, and was not equipped to do it, so I am willing to step in temporarily and help," Egan said. "If my managing WBIX for a week buys the receiver more time to recover assets, I'll make that sacrifice and assume that expense."

Egan had earlier agreed to pay salaries and health insurance for all displaced WBIX employees through Jan. 7 should it become necessary. Egan said that pledge still stands.

On Monday, a federal judge ordered Bleidt, 50, to undergo a psychiatric evaluation to determine whether he is mentally competent to stand trial on charges he stole tens of millions of dollars from his clients.

Bleidt, 50, confessed on the tapes he mailed to family, business partners and the Boston SEC to bilking his clients over two decades, calling his business "a great big Ponzi scheme."

-Associated Press

Rather steps down

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dan Rather, the hard-charging embodiment of CBS News who saw his reputation damaged by an ill-fated report on President Bush's National Guard service, said Tuesday he will step down as "CBS Evening News" anchor in March after nearly a quarter-century in the job.

Rather, 73, will become a correspondent for both editions of "60 Minutes," saying he looked forward to "pouring my heart" into investigative reporting.

John Roberts and Scott Pelley are frequently mentioned as in-house candidates to succeed him, but CBS News — a distant third in evening news ratings behind NBC and ABC — also will look elsewhere.

Rather replaced broadcast legend Walter Cronkite in 1981 and lasted even longer than his predecessor's 19 years. Rather, Tom Brokaw of NBC and Peter Jennings of ABC competed at the top ranks of network news for more than two decades as the world — and world of news — changed around them. Brokaw leaves NBC's "Nightly News" next week.

After some bumps that included walking off a broadcast, an eyebrow-raising mugging and attracting ridicule by briefly signing off his newscast with the word "courage," a September "60 Minutes Wednesday" story about Bush's service that turned out to be based on allegedly forged documents forced Rather to fight for his professional life.

Independent investigators are looking into what went wrong with the story, and their report is considered imminent.

Rather told The Associated Press that the guard story had

See RATHER on page 2

COURTESY ASSOCIATED PRESS

CBS's Dan Rather decides to quit "CBS Evening News."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Peter Foundas
MANAGING EDITOR Andrew Mernet
BUSINESS MANAGER Rich Pacheco
PRODUCTION MANAGER Cory Rosenberg
NEWS SUPERVISOR Cameron Woods
ACADEMIC MANAGER Tiffany Sugishi
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Samantha Nielsen
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Meghan Healy
CAMPUS EDITOR Alyson Zilfinano
EDITORIAL EDITOR Paige Cram
NEWS EDITOR Erika Lovley
PHOTO EDITOR Matthew Reid
SPORTS EDITOR Mike Marzolfi
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Josh Riggotto
FINANCE MANAGER Hirak Shah
ACCOUNTING CLERK Virginie Frevaut
HUMAN RESOURCES Sandra Marquez
ASSISTANT EDITORIALS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Josh Greenberg
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT NEWS Thomas Hecht
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ARTIST Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mike Busack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Monique Jeannott
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Yousef Munayyer
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Allison Edles
ASSISTANT NEWS Julie O'Donnell
ASSISTANT NEWS Dan O'Brien
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeff Howe

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON SOMETHING BEYOND FAITH SINCE FOUNDED IN 1890. THE PAPER BEGAN AS ACRE THE MASS THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1934 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED CONTINUOUSLY 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARD-WHEN SINCE JANUARY 1998. FOR RATES, DEADLINES AND INFORMATION CALL 545-3500 DAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.J. Port
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andrew Roberts
COPY EDITOR
Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Molly Eggleston
PRODUCTION STAFF
Melody Natal, Lauren Egavian

dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.com
You love it.

Lynch presents the future of art

LYNCH from page 1

European counterparts, the actual total is about 16 percent, and federal contributions are roughly two percent. On a recent trip to the Canadian Arts Association, Lynch quoted them as saying, "we need help!" In actuality, the Canadian Government spends ten times as much as the American Government. Canada annually spends $130 million on the arts, having roughly the same population of California. With these dismal numbers, "Americans for the Arts" have run some creative ad campaigns in cooperation with the Ad council, an important strategic partner.

Reaching out to all the various cultural groups of America, their television advertisements have been created and aired for target groups and locations. One ad showcased "Public Enemy's" Chuck D. rapping about under funding for arts in New York Schools; his actual mother follows his rap stating, "More Hip-hopin, and less hob-nobbing."

Another ad featured a Latino pop star urging involvement in the arts, which was done in English and Spanish. Another focused on an affluent Caucasian family, showing a young kid walking past a street violinist, saying, "Get a job." Directly following this statement, the same kid has a balloon giraffe made for him by a clown, and agitatedly replied, "I don't get it." The participating musicians volunteered their services, and actor Alec Baldwin voluntarily narrated the ads.

Another creative conception by Americans for the Arts can be found on their Web site.

"It was created as a motivational tool," where anyone can type in their zip code, said Lynch. From there, they list every American politician that affects that zip code ranging from George W. Bush, to your local town officials. They each receive a grade on their voting performance pertaining to the arts, on a standard academic grading scale.

From this list, links appear to give feedback to the various politicians. Lynch proceeded to ask the audience, "How many letters are required to coerce a politician into thinking they are laced with a situation requiring immediate action?" A confused audience gave no response; Lynch responded "Ten."

Lynch followed his answer asking, "What do the executions of Charles Degualle, and King Charles the first, the presidential election of Rutherford B. Hayes, and Texas being brought into the union all have in common? One vote," Lynch stated.

Lynch ended the discussion with an open question forum. When a student asked him for his opinion regarding the state of the arts funding and support at UMass, he replied, "We didn't have a fine arts center then, but it seems about the same, many students still create music, and many creative writing outlets exist. I was able to meet Janis Joplin when I was a student here, and I heard Bob Dylan recently performed." He then ended his talk by paraphrasing William Carlos Williams, "Men don't get the news of the day by reading a poem, but many die by their meanings."

UMass working to establish law school

LAW SCHOOL from page 1

but Benharris said that can't happen.

"It's actually illegal to use taxpayers money for this type of merger," he said.

According to Benharris, after it passes the Board of Trustees, UMass would need to make a presentation to the State Board of Higher Education. Benharris said that the Board doesn't need to approve the merger, and that UMass can continue on without their approval.

"I'm very confident it will pass," he said.

According to Benharris, the goal is to get the law school to be nationally recognized and get a lot of above average students to attend. Once this happens, he said, the students could practice law in the state.

"Anybody who went [to the law school] would make a serious tuition break if they will work with public interest," he said. These students would do things like be public defenders for a few years.

Benharris said that Massachusetts has a shortage of lawyers. He said that 11,000 people in the state don't have lawyers, and many of those people end up representing themselves and end up in jail because they don't understand the law.

Benharris said that he wasn't sure when the Board of Trustees will vote on the merger. The next meeting isn't scheduled for several months, however an emergency meeting may be called earlier if the Board chooses.

Rather joins '60 Minutes' team

RATHER from page 1

nothing to do with his announcement.

"Everybody will have their own thoughts about this, but ... this was a separate decision apart from that," he said in an interview.

Discussions with CBS management about when he would leave began in 1999, were shelved after the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and then renewed last summer, Rather said. He said he and CBS Chairman Leslie Moonves agreed his departure would be sometime early next year and Rather settled on March 9 — the 24th anniversary of when he succeeded Cronkite.

CBS News and Rather were undoubtedly weighing whether timing the announcement before or after the investigative panel's release would be better, said Ken Auletta, media columnist for The New Yorker magazine.

"I'm sure one of the things that Rather was doing here was thinking about his legacy," Auletta said. "It must be frustrating for a guy like this who has spent 24 years doing this and building up his career to be tainted by an event that he didn't have control over."

Rather, whose Texas roots were evident in his folksy aphorisms, joined CBS News in 1962 and covered President Kennedy's assassination in Dallas a year later. He became a White House reporter in the Nixon administration and his combative style was captured in a memorable moment when Nixon, at a news conference, grumbled to him: "Are you running for something?"

"No, sir, Mr. President," Rather shot back. "Are you?"

Together with Jennings and Brokaw, Rather's continuous coverage in the wake of Sept. 11 drew praise for helping a nation come to grips with an unimaginable tragedy. He scored several scoops, including anchoring the CBS report that offered the first pictures from the Abu Ghraib prison scandal earlier this year.

But his career was also dogged by incidents that attested to a tightly wound persona. In 1987, he walked off the evening news set in anger after CBS delayed the broadcast for a tennis match, leaving the network with dead air for six minutes. Four months later, then-Vice President George H.W. Bush, angered by a line of questioning from Rather, asked if he'd like to have his career judged by the walk-off.

Rather also claimed to be accosted once on a New York street by a strange man who beat him, asking, "Kenneth, what is the frequency." It became an odd cultural touchstone; the rock band R.E.M. wrote a song about it.

"He's apt to be haunted by the bizarre things that happened to him, the mugging and everything," said Bob Lee, president of WDBJ-TV in Roanoke, Virginia, and head of CBS's affiliate board. "But he has always been a vigorous competitor and a guy who cared an awful lot about the evening news broadcast. I wish he were going out on top."

Brokaw said that he was "pleased for Dan that he's come to a conclusion about his own life, as I have in my case."

"Dan and I have known each other competitively and personally for a long, long time," Brokaw said. "Occasionally on the competitive side, it would be tiny bumps in the road, but when you think of all that we've been through, we have a pretty strong relationship. So I wish him well."

ABC News said Jennings was traveling and could not immediately be reached for comment.

About his successor, Rather said, that "I hope it'll be somebody from the inside. But whoever it is will have my complete, unadulterated support and encouragement. Probably the best way I can help is to stay out of the way."

The transition is likely to raise renewed questions about the long-term viability of evening news broadcasts, which have been suffering from declining ratings for years in a world of instant Internet and cable news.

Rather has long been a target of critics who accused him of a liberal bias, and there's even a Web site devoted to that notion. The National Guard story sent those critics into overdrive. Rather's announcement Tuesday led one Republican congressman from Pennsylvania to issue a statement saying, in effect, good riddance.

Mad cow cleared

MADCOW from page 1

or bovine spongiform encephalopathy, was found in the United States. The disease attacks an animal's nervous system, and food contaminated with BSE can afflict people with variant Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease, a rare disease that is usually fatal.

A Canadian-born Holstein was found infected with BSE last December at a slaughterhouse near Moses Lake, Wash. More than 40 countries almost immediately cut off imports of U.S. beef and more than 700 additional cattle in Washington state, Oregon and Idaho were killed as a precaution. Exports account for about $3.8 billion of America's $40 billion a year beef industry.

The first case led authorities to broaden the number of animals screened for the disease and to further restrict what animal parts can be used in cattle feed. Some of those parts, such as the brain, spinal cord and small intestines, have the highest risk of contamination.

Preliminary screening tests have been conducted on more than 121,000 animals since the Agriculture Department initiated a new testing regime in June focusing on high-risk animals: those that died on the farm, had trouble walking or showed signs of nerve damage.

Within weeks, officials said they might have found two more animals whose preliminary screening tests came back "inconclusive," the same terminology used last Thursday when officials announced the latest possible case. But those two cases turned out to be false alarms once the more delinitive tests came back.

COURTESY CNN.COM

A U.S. cow was cleared of having the Mad Cow disease.

UMASS BASKETBALL
Do you think you have what it takes to be A UMASS MINUTEMAN??!!
The UMass Men's Basketball team will be conducting walk-on tryouts on Saturday October 10th, 2004 @ 4:30pm at the Curry Hicks Cage Gymnasium.
Please be able to produce the following documents:
☐ A copy of your Fall 2004 semester class schedule
☐ A copy of a recent physical exam (completed within the last year)
☐ Proof of medical insurance
Anyone interested in participating in these tryouts must contact Craig Carter 413-577-2287 in the UMass man's basketball office by Thursday, October 14, 2004

Interim leader plans to follow Arafat's rule

By Mohammed Daraghmeh
Associated Press

RAMALLAH, West Bank — The interim Palestinian leader, Mahmoud Abbas, told the Palestinian parliament on Tuesday that he'll follow in Yasser Arafat's footsteps and demand that Israel recognize the "right of return" of Palestinian refugees, a hard-line position that has contributed to failed peace efforts in the past.

Abbas' remarks were seen as the start of his six-week presidential campaign, signaling to young, militant activists that he would not compromise on long-held Palestinian policies, though Israel considers them deal-breakers.

The traditional leadership of Fatah — dominated by contemporaries of the 69-year-old Abbas and Arafat, who died Nov. 11 at 75 — picked Abbas as the party candidate for president of the Palestinian Authority.

Rebellious young Fatah members are demanding a primary election, backing Marwan Barghouti, 45, who is serving a lengthy prison term in Israel.

Barghouti's wife, Fadwa, said her husband would decide early next week whether to run as an independent in the election, set for Jan. 9.

Abbas' speech sent another signal — though he is seen as a pragmatist and moderate opposed to violence, there is no guarantee that he could forge a peace deal with Israel.

During a one-day visit on Monday, Secretary of State Colin Powell hoped that successful Palestinian elections could result in renewed talks on the U.S.-backed "road map" peace plan, which leads through stages to a Palestinian state.

The plan has foundered because neither side carried out the initial obligations. That aside, the last phase of "road map" negotiations would tackle the same issues that have scuttled earlier peace efforts — refugees, borders, Jewish settlements and Jerusalem.

Abbas gave no hint of flexibility Tuesday.

At a memorial ceremony for Arafat at the Palestinian parliament, Abbas said he would walk in the footsteps of the late Palestinian leader. "We promise you [Arafat] that our heart will not rest until we achieve the right of return for our people and end the tragic refugee issue," he said.

The "right of return" is a demand that all the refugees from the war that followed Israel's creation in 1948 should be allowed to return to their original homes, along with their descendants. That refers to a total of about four million people.

Israel has always rejected the concept, offering compensation to refugees and saying they should find permanent homes in Arab countries or a Palestinian state. Four million Arabs would overwhelm the Jewish state, where about six million Jews live.

Israel has consistently turned down Palestinian demands on the other main issues, as well.

Arafat held three top jobs — PLO chief, leader of Fatah and president of the Palestinian Authority. Immediately after Arafat's death on Nov. 11, Abbas was chosen as PLO chief. If he is also elected as Palestinian Authority president, he would be transformed from interim leader to Arafat's successor.

Abbas served as Arafat's first prime minister in 2003. However, he resigned after just four months in power, frustrated with Israeli policy and Arafat's refusal to grant him real power.

Thirteen members of the old-guard Fatah Central Committee picked Abbas as the party candidate Monday.

Palestinian Cabinet minister Qadoura Fares, a Barghouti loyalist, said the Fatah candidate should be chosen in a much larger forum. However, other members of the young guard said they are ready to recognize Abbas.

Palestinian Foreign Minister Nabil Shaath urged Barghouti not to run. "I think Marwan Barghouti is a disciplined man. He is committed to the decisions of Fatah," Shaath said. "Marwan will have an important role in the future."

Barghouti is serving five consecutive life terms for what an Israeli court said was his involvement in shooting attacks that killed four Israelis and a Greek monk. Barghouti, a former Fatah leader in the West Bank, denied any role in the attacks.

Israel has said it would not release him.

Also Tuesday, two more candidates joined the burgeoning list of presidential aspirants — Palestinian legislator Hassan Kreishch, 46, an anti-corruption crusader and Arafat critic, and Bassam Salhi, 44, leader of the People's Party, a small faction with communist roots. Neither is given a chance of winning.

Among others who plan to run are a billionaire industrialist and other critics of corruption under Arafat's regime.

THE HARP
"Come party like you're Irish!"
NEW!! Wireless Internet. Do your homework surf the net. WIRELESS INTERNET!!!!
OCMP & All Credit Cards accepted
Irish Pub
Amherst's last great neighborhood pub!
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Check out our new covered deck!
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
MON. - "Bad Karaoke" with Pauline V
TUES. - Our Famous Trivia Night
WED. - Reggae Night (NO COVER)
TH. - Special Brew (NO COVER)
FRI. - Traditional Irish Session
SAT. - Live Music (call for bands) (NO COVER)
Molsen Pints $2.00
Pitcher $6.50
VOTED BEST NEIGHBORHOOD PUB EAST OF THE RIVER

New York Shop Exchange &
SPORTY'S
We Carry:
GAP
Anne Taylor
Old Navy
J.Crew
Buying & Selling Pre-loved Men & Women's Apparel
Banana Republic
Abercrombie and Fitch
Tommy Hilfiger
and much more...
OFFERING CONSIGNMENTS FOR ALL SPORTING GOODS
Buy and sell at newyorkshopexchange.com
26 Strong Ave. Northampton, MA • 413-585-8555

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

"I have opinions of my own-- strong opinions -- but I don't always agree with them." George Bush

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Iraqi malnutrition levels concern and discourage

We all read and hear about the American soldiers killed in Iraq, and how much of a tragedy it is when our young troops come home wrapped in the American flag. No matter what side of the political fence you sit on, it's clear that the number of deaths that has come out of this war is saddening and frustrating.

However, there is a group that gets less coverage in the news, but has been no less decimated by tragedy and death. It is a group that most Americans either don't know about, or don't want to think about because it doesn't directly affect life and the United States., which makes it easier to ignore.

The group in question is the youth of Iraq, who are just as much casualties of war than the American soldiers dying overseas, perhaps more.

One of the most glaring results of the U.S.-led invasion has been the escalating malnutrition levels among the Iraqi children. According to a recent survey done by the Oslo, Norway-based Fafo Institute for Applied Social Science, malnutrition rates have nearly doubled in the months following the invasion, rising from 3.8 percent before the invasion to nearly eight percent currently.

According to a Boston Globe article, studies suggest 400,000 children in Iraq are suffering from malnutrition. These rates are despite United Nations efforts to deliver food packages to Iraqi citizens. United Nations efforts have been partly hindered by insurgents attacking food convoys that approach the border. For security reasons, these convoys are sent back before they can even deliver a single bit of aide.

Another reason for the poor health of children in Iraq is the decimation of the country's infrastructure following years and years of fighting. The country's sewer systems are in shambles, a large percentage of citizens do not have adequate access to clean water, and sanitation levels are deplorable.

These conditions lead to chronic diarrhea in children whose immune systems have been broken down by long-term protein deficiencies and malnutrition. Since medical supplies in Iraq are sparse, malnourished children begin downward spiral of illness, weight loss, and dehydration.

UNICEF chief Carol Bellamy has estimated that one out of eight Iraqi children dies before reaching the age of five, due primarily to poor nutrition and poor health conditions. This problem has been escalating in Iraq for years, but has grown exponentially following the latest conflict.

"War is waged by adults, but it is the children who suffer the most," said Bellamy. "This protracted fighting and instability is wreaking havoc on Iraqi children."

Some would argue that the suffering of the Iraqi children is a necessary result of war and reconstruction. Regardless of whether or not this is the case, one cannot argue that the situation should be ignored. How long will the children of Iraq continue to suffer needlessly from a war that has already taken the lives of countless innocent victims?

Unsigned staff editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian

STAR TRIBUNE SOK

Media has ugly effects

Mike Annuth

Perhaps it's from reading psychology books or having female friends while growing up, but it is apparent that this country has a serious problem with the media influence on our adolescent girls. Instead of an isolated incident, this has become an epidemic and with the connection of television and magazines to the Internet, visions of what our society considers to be "beautiful" is visibly forced to our adolescent girls at an alarming rate.

This is not a new problem, at least not that I can figure. Since I, myself, have been in my early teen years, I have known girls who have been ill-affected by portrayals of models and skinny, fit girls in magazines and TV. I still know a number of college-aged women today who feel that they have been or are being influenced by what is in the media. While the problem of the media portrayal of only "beautiful" people is not isolated strictly to women, the focus of this editorial is the same focus that has been in the forefront of discussion for quite some time, our young girls are affected in negative ways by what we push as "beautiful" in our society.

I present the question: what exactly is "beautiful"? The magazines and television would have you believe that it is skinny, fit, tall, leggy, lithe and having flawless features. This is echoed time and time again in the pages of Seventeen when you're younger and Cosmopolitan, when you're older. It's seen on MTV and every awards show, in movies and on billboards, when we consciously notice it and when it's unconsciously pushed towards us in advertisements and commercials and even newscasters. The hypocrisy of it all, is when girls are told to "be themselves" by someone who society would deem to have "perfect" looks, influencing the negative stereotype that being oneself means changing towards what we find to be superficially impressive.

Aside from a general lessening of self-esteem in girls, media influence promotes eating disorders, which are a huge problem in our society. According to the United States Department of Health and Human Services, 90 percent of those who have eating disorders are women between the ages of 12 and 25. I cannot stress enough how astounding the influence is embedded in our society or how catastrophic the results when girls think negatively about their body image based on societal expectations.

I have always wanted to be able to hug the world and say that it will be okay, that not everyone looks like the people in the media and nor should they look like those people.

You may be asking, "But Mike, why are you writing about this topic that has been explored so many times by so many people?" My answer, because I think it affects each and every one of us, whether we are a man or a woman, whether we have had personal experience with the media influencing our self-esteem or know someone who has, or whether or not we have even noticed such a thing in our society. I have always wanted to be able to hug the world and say that it will be okay, that not everyone looks like the people in the media and nor should they look like those people.

If we were all designed to be the same person, we would all look the same and it would be quite a boring world. Baskin Robbins isn't known for their one flavor of ice cream, they're known for their 32 flavors, proving that we like variety in both our ice cream and our people. If I could have an answer to what someone should look like it would be simple and one worded, "yourself." However, I seem to hold the dissenting opinion in reference to societal expectations; television and magazines have me beat in both their circulation and their exposure.

I have a younger sister who is 11, and when I asked her about the media influencing how she thinks, she said things like, "How can I compare with those girls? They're thin and you look at them and think, why don't I look like that?" I didn't have an answer for her. I haven't yet found the answer to tell people when they ask questions of that nature. If I could supply an honest answer to everyone affected by media imagery, it would be: you are perfect the way you are, but we have to spread that word because it's as against a lot of magazines and TV, and currently, they're winning.

Mike Anmuth is a Collegian columnist.

Tagging devices pose threat

Andrew Freeman

Think of your experience in elementary school: recess, gym, and bus rides. Now, imagine walking into that school, or stepping onto that bus, and swiping an identification card through a terminal, which sends a signal to administrators that you are on your way to school, or already there. That is the reality facing a growing number of students, as schools from Texas to Tokyo are setting up electronic systems for monitoring students, ostensibly to prevent kidnapping.

Such systems are possible because of Radio Frequency Identification (RFID) tags, a technology that originated during the World War II and is used in everything from product inventories to the highway Speed-pass.

The tags emit a signal, usually a simple ID number, although larger models can transmit more detailed information. These tags are also used on pets, to find them if they get lost, and have recently been approved by the FDA for use as sub-dermal implants. This means chips planted under the skin for doctors to access the patient's medical information. There are even proposals to plant these devices in passports and dollar bills. However, the most disturbing of the devices' uses is in schools.

In the town of Spring, Texas, roughly 28,000 students are being given

IDs that will be read when they enter and exit school buses; this information is transmitted to the school administrators and police. Although the purpose of the system is to prevent kidnapping, the local police chief told the New York Times that he expected it to be used to reassure parents whose children were attending extracurricular events after school. At the entrance to the Enterprise Charter School in Buffalo, New York, students pass through Texas Instruments kiosks where they present their cards to readers to indicate their attendance. In Japan, the Ricky Elementary School's children carry tags in their backpacks that trigger when they step in the door, and their parents are notified by email once they arrive. However, the concept of these systems to prevent kidnapping is flawed.

The ensuing demand for security obscures the fact that the likelihood of kidnapping on the way to school is extremely low.

Youth kidnapping is a relatively rare phenomenon: it composes 0.1 percent of all crimes against individuals, and only 1.5 percent of violent crimes against juveniles, according to FBI data. The majority of kidnappings are committed by people who know the victims, whether family members (49 percent) or acquaintances (27 percent); only 24 percent of kidnappings are committed by strangers. In addition, the majority of kidnappings by family (84 percent) and acquaintances (63 percent) occur at the homes or residences of the victims, so children are much more likely to be kidnapped at home by someone they know than outside by someone they don't. However, heavy media coverage of the few kidnappings that do occur elicits intense fear and creates the false impression that children are constantly in danger. The ensuing demand for security obscures the fact that the likelihood of kidnapping on the way to school is extremely low.

The RFID systems are also expensive. The Buffalo kiosks cost $40,000, while the Spring system is $180,000, and the Ricky tags are around $136,000. Multiply these costs across the country, and you have a massive outlay of funds that could be spent on education, whether improving degraded facilities, adding new classes, or raising teacher salaries. Because of the low probability of kidnapping, this money would essentially be wasted.

To make better use of such a substantial investment, administrators and police officers would surely employ the technology for other purposes. Tracking students after school is one possibility — the information gathered could be transmitted to parents, or even sold to marketers interested in knowing where students congregate. Tags might be implanted under the skin of young children so that they would not lose them, making it possible to locate them anywhere. Moreover, kidnapping of teenagers also occurs, meaning such systems could be extended to middle and high schools, when young people are first asserting their independence. Parents flush with the power of knowing where their children are at all times would be more controlling of their offspring's behavior. As RFID tags spread, they might reach higher education, where parents paying as much as $30,000 a year would demand electronic proof that their children aren't drinking the money away. Unsurprisingly, privacy groups such as the ACLU and Electronic Frontier Foundation oppose the use of RFID tags.

Youth kidnapping is an awful crime, but fortunately it is rare, and expensive RFID technology will not substantially protect against it. Moreover, the threats to civil liberties and privacy are substantial. I'd rather see children playing tag than paranoid parents and administrators tagging children.

Andrew Freeman is a Collegian columnist.

Adoption includes risks

Amelia Sabadini

Adoption is an important issue in society; the pros and cons have been debated. I'd just like to point out that while it probably is true that many children do get adopted and live happily ever after, there is no way to be sure that this will be the case for every given child. Adoption is not the guaranteed perfect solution to an unwanted pregnancy that some people want to believe it is. While I'm not an expert, I don't run an adoption agency, nor have I ever put a child up for adoption, I do feel I can speak with some knowledge on this subject. I am the child of a woman who was adopted.

Even if an adopted child does not get adopted into an abusive home they still have to deal with the fact that they are adopted and it does have an impact.

Some would consider my mother to have been lucky. She was white, healthy and given to smiling quite a lot, so consequently she was adopted while she was still a baby. I mention this because a child's chances of being adopted drop sharply as they grow older. Not that you will be able to find actual numbers of children up for adoption on a website like adoption.com. They only give the percentages of women who put their babies up for adoption. This site does however give a break down, in percentages, of white vs. black women (no other qualifications about race are given, it's just white or black) who apply for placement. They do have pictures of 86 children awaiting adoption in Massachusetts, and mention that there are three couples looking to adopt. Like I said, some would say my mother was lucky. I wouldn't though, given that she was adopted into a severely abusive family.

I am not anti-adoption but I don't see adoption as a panacea. It does have real risks involved. Even if an adopted child does not get adopted into an abusive home, they still have to deal with the fact that they are adopted and it does have an impact. How can it not say something to adopted children that people are willing to go to outrageous lengths to conceive their own children? What is implied by the fact that so many people consider adoption as a last resort? There's also this notion that adoption offers a second chance or a new start for a child. Well, maybe; maybe not. Looking again at adoption.com, I found a section they call "risks," and it is all about the risks incurred by the prospective adoptive parents. There is even a worksheet to determine the risk rating associated with a tentative adoption. It asks questions about the birthmother's level of education with high school drop outs having high-risk scores. Other things that will get a child a high-risk rating are if the birthmother is on welfare, if she's under 18, has a substance abuse problem, or comes from a single parent home. So much for that new start.

I don't talk to my mother anymore. For reasons I have still yet to comprehend, she brought the man who abused her (her adoptive father) into our home. She knew he was abusing her children as he had abused her and instead of stopping him she aided and abetted him. She seldom missed an opportunity to put her children in harms way. She seemed to be perpetually abandoning us. Now, I am only delving into this because I feel it is important to show how there are indeed cases where adoption is not a happy ending. Maybe more importantly, it needs to be stressed that the miserable outcome of my mother's adoption did not just stop short with her, it kept spreading — it is still spreading. Cases like my mother's are probably (hopefully) in the minority. Just the same, say it's a minority of 10 percent out of say a million adopted children who end up in situations of abuse, that's still 100,000 people living in horrible pain.

I realize some people would prefer to not hear this and that this group of people has a fair amount of over-lap with the people who happen to believe that abortion should be made illegal. This mutually inclusive group wants to remain unconscious about these risks. This is understandable. Hearing about these risks raises the specter of doubt. Doubt is uncomfortable and unpleasant, as are pain and fear, but if you are unconscious there is no perceiving such things. The less aware you are, the less you perceive and the less you are effected by your environment.

Amelia Sabadini is a Collegian columnist.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dr. Ralph Stanley plays the Iron Horse

Country legend Ralph Stanley played at the Iron Horse in Northampton on Friday. Though the aging singer has no longer adopted the banjo picking that made him famous for years, was in top form at the show.

Martha gives 'Thanks'

NEW YORK (AP) — Martha Stewart, in prison for one of her favorite holidays, says she is "safe, fit and healthy" and grateful this Thanksgiving for the support of her fans.

In a new message on her personal Web site, the homemaking expert also says she is being treated fairly by staff and other inmates at the federal women's prison in Alderson, W.Va.

"As you would expect, the loss of freedom and the lack of privacy are extremely difficult," the message says. "Visits from my friends, family and colleagues — together with your goodwill and best wishes — will get me through this chapter in my life."

Stewart, 63, is serving a five-month sentence for lying to investigators about a 2001 personal stock sale and will be released from prison in early March. She is appealing her conviction.

Stewart's lawyer has said she has access to a typewriter, but it was not clear if she had a computer that allows her to post messages to her Web site. Her publicist did not immediately return a call Tuesday.

Stewart said before entering prison that she was "very sad" about missing the holiday season. In the past, she has made TV appearances for the holidays, guiding Americans on how to prepare and expertly carve turkey.

At Alderson, as at other federal prisons, Stewart and other inmates will be served a Thanksgiving meal on Thursday, including turkey, said Dan Dunne, a spokesman for the U.S. Bureau of Prisons.

"It's tradition that we do that for the purposes of recognizing the holiday for the inmates," Dunne said. Stewart says she has received thousands of letters and 15,000 emails since reporting to prison Oct. 8. Her lawyers have said she spends much of her time at Alderson writing — perhaps for a book rumored to be in the works.

"I want you to know that I am well," she wrote on the Web site. "I am safe, fit and healthy, and I am pleased to report that, contrary to rumors you might have heard, my daily interactions with the staff and fellow inmates here at Alderson are marked by fair treatment and mutual respect."

— Erin McClam/Associated Press

U2 surprises fans with show at Brooklyn Bridge

NEW YORK (AP) — With the bright lights of lower Manhattan shining on the stage, the band U2 played a surprise outdoor concert Monday in a waterfront park beneath the Brooklyn Bridge.

Although the MTV-organized show hadn't been publicly announced or advertised, thousands lined up at the Empire-Fulton Ferry State Park, a riverside park between the Brooklyn and Manhattan Bridges and across from the New York skyline.

Most people said they heard about the show through word-of-mouth or postings on U2 fans' Web sites.

The concert was for an MTV special called "mtvJAMMED: U2," set to air Dec. 10.

Led by frontman Bono, U2 played songs from its new album, "How to Dismantle an Atomic Bomb." Although the album wasn't scheduled to be released until Tuesday, many fans had already downloaded the songs and sang along with the choruses.

COURTESY FOTO ROMANO/FFROTOS.COM

Deb Pruitt, 47, left her home in Culpeper, Va., at 4 a.m. to see the concert. She met her daughter, Melissa, who was flown in from Los Angeles after winning a U2 raffle.

"It's totally worth it not to sleep at all and drive eight hours to be here," said Deb Pruitt. "We're big fans."

Before the concert, U2 spent the day playing on the back of a flatbed truck that wound through city streets as a film crew shot the band for a new video.

When the waiting fans in Brooklyn saw the truck crossing the Manhattan Bridge with the band on board, they screamed and waved at the rockers.

"It was an incredible show," Zain Deane, 30, said after the band's 45-minute set. "U2's the best. And there's nothing like the skyline at night."

— Sam Dolnik/Associated Press

Dances on the streets of Rio de Janeiro's Cidade Alta slum educate

By HAROLD OLMOS
ASSOCIATED PRESS

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil — The clatter of police helicopters and crackle of a gunfight between drug gangs isn't unusual in the Cidade Alta slum, nicknamed the "Gaza strip" for its endemic violence.

More striking is the ballet music that wafts softly from an old two-story house soon after the shooting ends. Dozens of young people are inside eager for a chance to escape the lure of drug trafficking and other crimes.

The dance program is sponsored by Acao Comunitaria do Brasil — Brazilian Community Action — a privately financed group that has been active in Rio's shantytowns for almost 40 years.

There are also classes in percussion, reggae, rap music and a variety of African-Brazilian dance, although ballet is the center's showpiece — some dancers have even joined the Municipal Theater ballet corps, one of Brazil's most prestigious.

Over the past four years, the center has gradually expanded its focus from basic education to the arts. A key was hiring local teachers to tutor teens and twentysomethings in dance and music, handicrafts and related activities like stage lighting, set design, drawing, electrical wiring and hairdressing — all potential livelihoods for career-hungry youngsters.

From Monday to Saturday, some 500 students flock to the ACB house every day for classes, rehearsals and workshops. Their output — from dolls and recycled paper to T-shirts and postcards — is sold at cultural centers and the city's hotels. Those who have gone on to the Municipal Theater are a source of pride for the center.

"Gisele, Natalia, Rebeca — they all went to the Municipal Theater ballet," says Michele Cristina Costa, 26, a graduate of the ballet course herself and its current teacher. "Three! And all in only three years."

Twelve other dancers are being tested for spots in the troupe, she adds.

Acao Comunitaria do Brasil hopes to raise standards and goals for youngsters in Rio's 600 or so slums, which are often run as private fiefdoms by drug gangs.

"We showed them that dancing can be a respectable career," says Casemiro Moreira, coordinator of the program in Cidade Alta. "And those less inclined to arts learned there's a lot of jobs supporting art they can learn quickly and earn a living."

Standouts become part of "excellence teams" at the center and get scholarships of up to 80 reals, or about $27, a month. That's about a third of what many poor workers earn on Brazil's monthly minimum wage of 260 reals ($93).

The teams now have 40 members and 40 others are awaiting grants. "We hope we can get them enrolled next year, as soon as we get funds to pay for the grants," Moreira says.

Dance is a natural attraction. Brazilians love to dance, from samba to the acrobatic capoeira, a graceful martial art brought to the country by African slaves.

The 42 young people now getting instruction in street dance, ballet, an ancient Angolan dance called Kina Mutembua and various African-Brazilian styles learned many basics outside on their own.

Now their skills are being polished by Firmino Pitanga, who learned capoeira when he was just eight and worked in the 1970s under New York University choreography professor Clyde Morgan as part of the Contemporary Dance group.

"Capoeira here in Cidade Alta has become an art close to perfection," Pitanga says. "But for those joining us, dance gives a possibility to get out of violence."

One of his students, Alexandre Silva, 29, agrees.

"In this place I found a way of life. I now strongly believe in dance as my way of personal realization — it used to be just a dream," says Silva, a leader of the center's "Action and Street Dance" team.

Under Pitanga's direction, the group rehearses almost daily in a yard behind the offices, protected by high, white walls as they prepare for performances in the city's theaters.

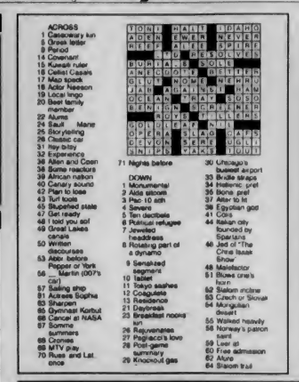
The rehearsals offer a catharsis for those excluded from the life of affluent, seaside Rio down below the shantytowns in the hills.

In one dance choreographed by Pitanga, the students stretch out their arms and point, chanting in a hoarse accusation: "Your home might be creating one more delinquent." Then they rhythmically stomp and execute flips and pirouettes representing police brutality and domestic violence.

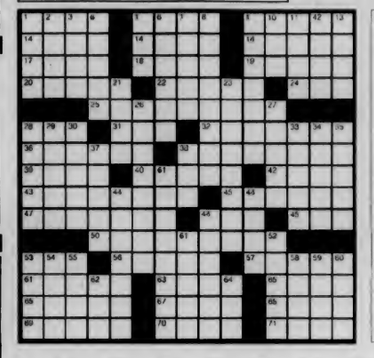
The group also acts out historical events, like the execution of runaway slave leader Zumbi dos Palmares by his Portuguese captors in the early 17th century.

"Representing violence is not hard for them, because they live feeling violence," Pitanga says.

According to official figures, an average of eight people die violently every day in Rio de Janeiro, many of them in the slums.



"One learns how to deal with violence," says Silva, the group leader. "First lesson is not walking on the streets after 7 p.m. This is the deadline to be back at home."



CAMERON TAYLOR/COLLEGIAN

Rio de Janeiro's Brazilian Community Action group hosts a dance program in the city's impoverished slum Cidade Alta.

the Moan and Dove

Thanksgiving Day open at 8pm to help you finish digesting.

Bring your mom.

themoananddove.com
460 West St. • Rte. 116
Amherst, MA • 256-1710
3pm 'til 1am every day

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Don't forget to pack your leopard print thong for this weekend.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
All day long your nerves have been racked with anticipation.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
There is no time for really long stories today; get to the point.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Don't leave for home without resolving all your business.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
There is a rank smell coming out of your room. You need to get rid of that.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Remember, no pudge after this Thanksgiving. That means one piece of pie.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You get to ride in the middle all the way home.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Right now you are so ready to go home. Drive safely.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't forget to pack all your homework for this weekend.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Nothing you could do today could possibly live up to yesterday.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Time to handle some major problems in your life. Be as tactful as possible.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Now it is time for the glorious relaxation period to begin.

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"It is change, continuing change, inevitable change, that is the dominant factor in society today. No sensible decision can be made any longer without taking into account not only the world as it is, but the world as it will be."

-Isaac Asimov

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Linguistics Department seeks native speakers of Arabic (preferably Egyptian Arabic) and Singapore English for speech experiments. Experiments last about 1 hour w/participants paid $8/hr. Arabic speakers contact kawahara@linguist.umass.edu; Singapore English speakers contact mwolf@linguist.umass.edu

$600 Group Fundraiser Scheduling Bonus
4 hours of your group's time PLUS our free (yes, free) fundraising solutions EQUALS $1,000-$2,000 in earnings for your group. Call TODAY for a $600 bonus when you schedule your non-sales fundraise with CampusFundraiser. Contact Campus-Fundraiser 888-923-3238 or visit www.campusfundraiser.com

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. 1 Bedroom units Available Jan 1, 2005 First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com Stop by or call 549-0600

COMPUTERS

Pentium Laptop $99- Pentium III Desktop $99- 413-584-8857

EMPLOYMENT

SPRING INTERNSHIPS
Student Legal Services Office offers a hands-on experience in the Legal field, working directly with attorneys and clients. No experience in the legal profession necessary – training provided. Work 32 hours a week and earn 12 academic credits. Deadline to begin the application process is Nov 24. Contact SLSO today: 545-1995 922 Campus Center.

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 x162

FOR SALE

MP3 $50 Avon Special MP3 & 100's of gifts under $10. Buy or Sell Kat ISR 413-585-1581.

ROOMMATE WANTED

325/month inclusive call 413-775-9997

SERVICES

Computer Consultants $20/hr we come to your dorm/house Certified technicians. Call Kris (413) 253-0215

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV TESTING, Birth-control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. STI Screening and Treatment. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992.

TRAVEL

1SPRING BREAK
Largest selection of Destinations, including Cruises! VIP Club Parties & FREE trips. Epicurean Tours 1-800-231-4-FUN www.BREAKNOW.com

TRAVEL

SPRING BREAK '05
SAVE $100 PER ROOM
Clip & Send or Use Code: PRMSG Online
Cannot be combined with any other offer $100 off based on quad room. Only valid for trips with airfare. Expires 11/2005 www.springbreakdiscounts.com
1 800 426 7710

StudentCity.com The Ultimate Spring Break Experience. 1-888-SpringBreak, or www.StudentCity.com to reserve today.

Spring Break Bahamas Celebrity Party Cruise! 5 Days $299! Includes Meals, Parties! Cancun, Acapulco, Nassau, Jamaica, From $459! Panama City & Daytona $159! www.SpringBreakTravel.com 1-800-678-6386

TRAVEL

#1 Spring Break Vacations! Cancun, Jamaica, Acapulco, Bahamas, Florida. Campus Reps Wanted! Free Meals & Parties! 1-800-234-7007 endlesssummertours.com

Spring Break 2005- Travel with STS, America's #1 Student Tour Operator to Jamaica, Cancun, Acapulco, Bahamas and Florida. Now hiring on-campus reps. Call for group discounts. Information/Reservations 1-800-648-4849 or www.ststravel.com.

WANTED

Snowboard events intern $50/day stipend. For job description email jfriends@deerfield.edu

Egg Donors Needed. Help make a couple's dream of becoming parents come true by becoming an egg donor. Very generous compensation and expenses paid. Ages 21-32. Non-smokers only. For more information please visit our website at www.robertnicholsen.com or contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900.

Have a happy and safe Thanksgiving!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 24, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen squeak by Panthers

'Big Deli' is clutch at the charity stripe

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Maurice Maxwell led four Minutemen in double figures with 17 points and Jeff "Big Deli" Salovski hit two crutial free throws down the stretch as the Massachusetts men's basketball team downed Birmingham Southern 64-60 before 3,122 on opening night at the Mullins Center.

Sophomore guard Art Bowers chipped in with 15 points and senior captain Anthony Anderson added 14 points and five steals as UMass used a strong first half and clutch shooting late in the game to win its sixth consecutive season opener in Amherst.

UMass	64
Birmingham	60

Sophomore forward Rashaun Freeman, who led the Maroon and White in scoring last year at 15.9 points per game, contributed 12 points and seven rebounds before fouling out late in the contest.

"I thought our kids did a great job of keeping their poise against a good team," UMass head coach Steve Lappas said. "Getting the first one out of the way at home is always a good feeling. We're not going to go overboard, and as we told the kids we want to get better one game at a time and see what it adds up to.

UMass took a 40-24 lead into halftime and led by as many as 18 early in the second half before going cold offensively and allowing Birmingham Southern to climb back into the game. Following a jumper by Freeman which made the score 45-30 with 16:16 to play, the Minutemen endured a stretch of 10:16 in which they scored just five points, and allowed the Panthers to narrow the lead to one.

After a basket and two free throws by Thomas Viglianco made the score 45-34 with just over 15 minutes to play, James Collins and Jakob Sigurdarson each made 3-pointers sandwiched around a basket by Freeman to narrow the lead to 47-40 at the 11:30 mark.

The Panthers then proceeded to score the next nine points, and Jimmy Amerson's two free throws with just under seven minutes remaining gave Birmingham Southern its first lead since the 10 minute mark of the first half.

Anderson answered back immediately for UMass, however, as his 3-pointer on the very next possession helped the Maroon and White regain the lead at 50-49. Bowers and Maxwell then combined to spark a 6-2 run that pushed UMass' advantage to 56-52 with 1:37 left.

The teams then traded free throws for the remainder of the game, including a pair from Salovski in two trips to the line, before Viglianco gave the Panthers one last gasp by hitting a 3-pointer with two second remaining. The Minutemen were able to inbound the ball from under their own basket, however, and Bowers sealed the deal by hitting 1-of-2 from the line.

"The difference from last year is that the experience will help us win games along the way, while we're still getting better," Lappas said. "This is not the best basketball we're going to play this year ... but come January we're going to be playing a lot better than this."

COLLEGIAN ARCHIVES

Sophomore power foward Rashaun Freeman goes for a dunk during the 2003-04 season. Freeman scored 12 points and grabbed five boards against Birmingham Southern last night. UMass won 64-60.

Maxwell's shooting paces Minutemen

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

If there were a class on how to hit clutch shots, Maurice Maxwell would be an apt teaching assistant.

In the Massachusetts men's basketball team's 64-60 victory over visiting Birmingham Southern, Maxwell hit two of the biggest shots of the contest en route to an impressive 17-point game. Even more astounding was his accuracy behind the arch where he went 4-for-6 for the evening.

Maxwell, who is usually a defense-minded player, capped off an impressive first half for UMass with a last second 3-pointer which put the Maroon and White up 40-26.

With time running down, Maxwell created his own shot on the top left corner of the arch. He pulled up, faded back, and before the ball hit the floor he was in the air, arms raised with an ear-to-ear grin for the whole crowd to see.

The 3-pointer was an integral part of the Minutemen's success sin the first half as they scored 21 of their first half points from behind the arch. The Panthers, however, made a defensive alteration, switching from a zone to man-to man pressure in hopes of shutting down the outside game.

It worked.

For the majority of the second half, UMass couldn't hit anything. Its field goal percentage dropped dramatically from an astounding 55 percent in the first half, to a lowly 22 percent in the second.

"I thought that the only difference in the second half was that we didn't make shots that we were making the in first half we didn't make in the second half," Lappas said.

When it wasn't working from the outside, Lappas had the Minutemen work it in to Rashaun Freeman and Staphane Lasme. Foul trouble, however, caused both to be relegated to the bench for a majority of the period.

The Panthers brought it back, took the lead, and it appeared that UMass was heading towards a collapse of colossal proportions, just as the going got tough, Maxwell got his hands on the ball again and gave the Minutemen the momentum they desperately needed.

With 4:30 left in the game, the ball was stuck around the perimeter and the shot clock was in the waning seconds. Maxwell got the ball, this time on the top right, and nailed a three as the buzzer sounded, sending the 3,122 fans in attendance into frenzy.

"I think Maxwell hit a three in the second half when they were having a difficult time," Birmingham Southern coach Duane Reboul said. "That kind of ignited them and allowed them to get back into a groove."

Maxwell was quick to mention how pleased he was with the shot, but also knew he had to focus his excitement and stay with the flow of the game.

"I was happy, you know, but then I knew I had to get back on D [defense]," Maxwell said. "Everybody wants to hit big shots but when you hit one, you know you wanted to hit it but you're still like, 'Yea!' you know?"

'The Brawl' leaves scar on NBA

Jeff Howe

When Friday night's brawl in Detroit erupted, the immediate, common reaction by those watching was one of excitement. It slowly turned into shock, which may have soon been replaced by disbelief.

As the days pass, and the aftermath gradually begins to set in — the suspensions, second-guessing, security stipulations and so on — those who invoive themselves with sports may start to question whether or not these fines and suspensions were warranted.

Well, they were.

These players, mainly Ron Artest, Stephen Jackson and Jermaine O'Neil, completely jeopardized the integrity of basketball and the world of sports in general.

Although it is too early to tell, "The Brawl" may have seriously damaged its fan base. This incident, which will undoubtedly be etched in people's brains, alongside things like Bill Laimbeer punching Larry Bird or Dennis Rodman kicking a cameraman, will not be forgotten about and that doesn't bode well for the NBA's image.

This is an image that has developed over the past five-and-a-half years, and it consists of athletes who have tarnished pasts, scandal-ridden careers and even embarrassing retirements in which former stars such as Jayson Williams have spent most of their down-time in courtrooms.

It is also an image that commissioner David Stern has done a stellar job to suppress over the past couple years.

But that all went out the window on Friday night when Ron Artest and his good friends found the time to destroy what was a good basketball game between two very solid teams by launching a free-for-all street brawl in The Palace.

Of course the fans did a great job of provoking the visiting Pacers, but this one still falls squarely on the shoulders of the professional athletes who took it upon themselves to police the matter.

It was the millionaire athletes who put a black eye on the entire sport, and it was those very same athletes who clearly showcased that they thought they, as individuals, were bigger than the game, and sport, as a whole.

On a gut, impulse reaction, it was the athletes who broke a uniquely sacred boundary between themselves and their fans to prove that they wouldn't back down in the face of conflict by showing how irrational they can act: not only off the court but on it.

But Stern also showed that he wouldn't back down to two of the league's biggest superstars plus one of the best role players in the NBA by dishing out three of the most extraordinary suspensions in league history. Ron Artest, who received the harshest punishment, now has the second most shameless album promotion in 2004, only being bested by Janet Jackson.

And by suspending the players involved, Stern stopped at nothing to make sure he did everything in his power to save the integrity of the game by coming down hard on the main components of the brawl all the way down to the bottom by giving Reggie Miller a day off even though he was making harmless attempts to stop the melee while decked out in a full suit.

For it is the integrity of the game that was set up by the legacy of athletes who worked hard to make the NBA what it is today long before Artest's parents were even born, and Stern's rulings are not unprecedented.

In 1877, a year after the National League officially started, four players on the Louisville Grays — including the league's best pitcher, Jim Devlin — were banned from National League baseball for life for losing games on purpose for gamblers. It was the bookies that were attempting to run through professional baseball at that time, similar to today's basketball players who seem more concerned with having strong street credibility than they are with learning how to effectively pass the ball through a zone defense.

It was this precedent that allowed Major League Baseball's first commissioner, Kennesaw Mountain Landis, to pull the plugs on the careers of the 1919 Black Sox who threw World Series games for the extra money from bookies. Landis made a statement saying that he would not stand for players in his league that would maliciously destroy the history and tradition of the game as well as the pride of its former players.

What the Indiana Pacers did on Friday night was not as intense of a violation of the sport as putting money on games, but it did expose one of the things that are wrong with the current game. Most of the players in the league are thugs who certainly are not suitably representing the emblem of Jerry West that stands as the official logo of the National Basketball Association.

So when these players come out and say that they were just trying to defend their pride as men, they should be reminded that, as professional athletes, they are held to higher standards, not just because of their national attention or because young kids want to emulate them in their backyards. They are held to higher standards because what they represent is a team's tradition, a city's image and a sport's integrity.

And while integrity continues to be the last thing on players such as Ron Artest's minds, the words "honor" and "basketball" will never continue to mix.

Jeff Howe is a Collegian editor.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Last minute 'Crusade'

Tamara Tatham had eight rebounds in a last second 61-60 victory over Holy Cross.

KAREN WINGER/COLLEGIAN

Iced over

Senior foward Tim Vitek had an assist last night against Vermont. UMass lost to the University of Vermont 5-2. Marvin Degon had two goals on the game from the Minutemen.

'National Treasure' banks on predictable plot
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

MONDAY • High: 50 • Low: 23
TUESDAY • High: 48 • Low: 34
WEDNESDAY • High: 50 • Low: 29
DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

Minutemen knock off Yale at home
SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 57

Holiday shoppers battle 'Black Friday'

By Mark Jewell
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Malls are no longer conceding the most hardcore shoppers to big, freestanding discount stores on "Black Friday." Anchor stores in malls and even niche shops are increasingly opening their doors before sunrise on the year's biggest retail day.

A.J. Ebert joined a throng waiting in near-freezing temperatures Friday for the 6 a.m. opening of a Best Buy store at the CambridgeSide Galleria.

When the electronics store opened for a one-day, six-hour sale, television cameras were there to film the stampede.

"It was pretty bad. People were pushing and shoving," said Ebert, a 24-year-old nanny from Malden. "But ... it was all for the cameras."

Inside the mall, it was more civilized.

"I was talking to my cousin yesterday and I was like, 'Can I borrow your football pads?' because I was expecting big crowds," she said. "But the only place it was crowded was Best Buy."

CambridgeSide was hardly alone among Massachusetts malls opening early on Friday, expanding a tradition begun by retailers like Wal-Mart and Target.

"The entire retail industry is getting on this early morning bandwagon," said Jon B. Hurst, president of the 2,500-member Retailers Association of Massachusetts.

At the North Shore Mall, in Peabody, a J.C. Penney store opened at 5:30 a.m., with Macy's and Filene's opening their doors at 6. Even jewelers and other niche stores opened two or three hours before normal.

In the past, a mall like North Shore "would be focused more on the late-morning, casual type of shopper," said Hurst, noting that the North Shore Mall's parking lot was nearly full at mid-morning Friday. "Now, the consumers seem more willing to come in early."

At CambridgeSide, Sheila Buckman, a 44-year-old student from Boston, said she woke up at 3:45 a.m. to be on hand when KB Toys opened at 5 a.m., an hour or more before the mall's other stores began doing business.

Buckman, who said she was on a tighter budget this year than in the past, bought some Yu-Gi-Oh trading cards for her children, then raced to Sears to pick up one of the $10 gift cards handed out to store's first 200 shoppers.

COURTESY CAMBRIDGESIDE GALLERIA

The Cambridgeside Galleria prepares for the busy holiday season.

"I'm on a limited income so I can't go crazy," she Buckman, who used the gift card to buy children's socks.

Naotsugu Oyama, a 32-year-old Boston doctor, used his Sears gift card to pick up a $30 jacket for himself.

"I'm glad I got up early," said Oyama, who was shopping at CambridgeSide with his wife and his young son and planned to buy the boy a toy train later in the day.

Ebert was ready to head home after spending 90 minutes filling a large bag with gifts from KB Toys and Filene's. Her top sale item: a Norcent DVD player from Best Buy for $17.99, discounted from $37.99 after two $10 rebates.

For some, like Canadian visitor Linda Szczesniak, Black Friday was more like a spectator sport.

The 48-year-old legal assistant from Toronto awoke early with her daughter at a hotel, in time to witness the 6 a.m. rush at CambridgeSide. For them, shopping could come later.

See SHOPPING on page 2

Bush suspects fraud in Ukraine elections

By Scott Lindlaw
Associated Press

CRAWFORD, Texas — President Bush declared Friday that charges of voter fraud have cast doubt on the Ukrainian election, and warned that any European-negotiated pact on Iran's nuclear program must ensure the world can verify Tehran's compliance.

"The only good deal is one that's verifiable," the president told reporters as he emerged from his Texas ranch for a brief visit to a coffee shop.

Bush issued a new appeal for the power to delete specific items that he deems excessive from budget plans. He spoke a week after Congress approved a $388 billion spending package that lawmakers loaded up with special items for their home-state industries and communities.

The president said he was not troubled by the total cost of the measure, which he said conformed to the outlines of spending requests he had made to lawmakers.

But, he said, "there's going to be things in these big bills that I don't particularly care for."

"The only way a president can affect that which is inside the bill, other than vetoing the entire bill, is to be able to pick out parts of a bill and express displeasure about it through a line-item veto. I hope the Congress will give me a line-item veto."

In 1997 the Supreme Court ruled that line-item veto power gave the president unconstitutionally broad latitude to change laws enacted by Congress. Bush has said he wants a new law that would pass constitutional muster.

World affairs dominated Bush's remarks here. He said he had lent his voice earlier in the day to new efforts to achieve a stable, joint Catholic-Protestant government in Northern Ireland.

Bush called Ian Paisley, who's Democratic Unionist Party represents most of Northern Ireland's British Protestant majority, to try to nudge the process forward.

The president waded in ahead of what is expected to be a week of high-stakes negotiations on the details, and Bush aides said they expected him to call Sinn Fein leader Gerry Adams as early as Saturday.

See BUSH on page 2

Iran signs against nuclear testing

By George Jahn
Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria - Just a day before an international deadline, Iran agreed Sunday not to test any centrifuges as part of a total suspension of nuclear activities that can yield uranium for atomic weapons. Diplomats described the about-face as an effort to avoid possible U.N. sanctions.

Diplomats from the European Union and elsewhere said on condition of anonymity that the International Atomic Energy Agency received a letter from Iran containing a pledge not to test 20 centrifuges during the freeze it agreed to Nov. 7 during negotiations with Britain, France and Germany, who were working on behalf of the European Union.

Diplomats accredited to the IAEA said the Europeans were still checking the offer for loopholes late Sunday and could not conclude that the Iranians had accepted a full freeze until the contents of the letter to the U.N. nuclear watchdog agency were analyzed fully.

But the pledge appeared to resolve a dispute that threatened to escalate at Monday's IAEA board meeting into consultations on possibly referring Iran to the U.N. Security Council for defying the board. The Security Council could then impose sanctions against Iran.

Still, the commitment came with strings attached. A government official from a board member country told The Associated Press that France, Germany and Britain had accepted an Iranian demand to further water down the language of a draft resolution they wrote for adoption by the board on ways of policing the suspension.

The text to be adopted Monday now includes a phrase emphasizing that the suspension is not a legal or binding obligation on Tehran's part, he said.

Iran says its program is for generating electricity, but the United States insists Iran is trying to make nuclear weapons. President Bush has called Iran part of an "axis of evil" with North Korea and prewar Iraq.

Uranium enrichment does not violate the terms of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty that Iran has signed, but for months Tehran has been under pressure to freeze all related activities to ease fears it might want to use the technology to make weapons.

The three European negotiators of the Nov. 7 deal say the freeze also prohibits the Iranians from running centrifuges for research purposes. The centrifuges spin gas into enriched uranium.

The Iranian promise came less than a day before the 35-nation IAEA board was scheduled to reconvene in Vienna over the enrichment suspension.

Iran had no official comment Sunday on the letter. State television and radio in Tehran were still broadcasting earlier statements from a Foreign Ministry spokesman, who had vowed that Iran would use the centrifuges for research.

The Foreign Ministry could not be reached for immediate comment.

"We always had research and development in the past and we will continue that in the future," ministry spokesman Hamid Reza Asefi said.

It is not unusual for Iran state media to lag behind developments in diplomatic negotiations.

The IAEA board meeting adjourned in disarray Friday. The pause was meant to give the Iranian government time to approve a total freeze of its program, which can produce both low-grade nuclear fuel and weapons-grade material for the core of nuclear warheads. Delegates also were to decide on further steps in policing Tehran's nuclear activities.

The dispute about what constituted full suspension had dominated the meeting.

The Europeans say the deal committed Iran to full suspension of enrichment and all related activities at least while the two sides discuss a pact meant to provide Tehran with EU technical and economic aid and other concessions.

Iranian officials had suggested the issue was not up for debate only hours before details emerged of their letter to the agency.

"Referral to the U.N. Security Council would not be the end of the world," Asefi said in Tehran earlier Sunday.

But as the clock ticked down to Monday, EU officials and delegates spoke of the growing likelihood of tough action at the board meeting if Iran remained defiant — including the start of work on a harsh resolution that could include the threat of U.N. Security Council action.

The draft being informally circulated ahead of Monday's resumed board meeting contained intentionally weak language on how any freeze would be monitored by the agency in an attempt to entice Tehran to sign on to total suspension.

No open-bar law passed for holidays

BOSTON (AP) — Under a new interpretation of state law, Massachusetts liquor regulators won't allow bars and clubs statewide to offer open bars for revelers this holiday season.

The crackdown by the state Alcoholic Beverages Control Commission means that clubs can no longer offer fixed-price tickets that include all-you-can-drink deals. In the past, clubs would offer $100 admission tickets, an all-night open bar, and an early breakfast on New Year's Day.

"You're not allowed to have an open bar and we won't be having any," said Douglas Bacon, owner of the White Horse Tavern and three other Boston bars. "It's likely that we will still sell tickets for admission, including hats, noisemakers, food, entertainment, but we will not be including an open bar."

A 20-year-old state law bans two-for-one drink specials, chugging contests and open bars with unlimited drinks. Though the state "happy-hour law" also bars clubs from selling fixed-price tickets to parties with open bars, the law was not strictly enforced until last year, said Alan Eisner, executive director of the Massachusetts Hospitality Association.

Last year, club managers who opened their bars and faced sanctions for it protested to the state, saying they thought the open bars were legal because they sold tickets in advance and considered the events to be private.

The commission responded by sending notices to local licensing boards and bar owners this month clarifying that the rules apply to all events except "private functions."

The commission also defined what those functions are: an event with an identified host who pays the club for the event and restricts admission to invited guests on a written guest list. The event cannot be advertised to the public, under the commission's rules.

Eisner said the commission's stricter interpretation means club owners will cut ticket prices for big events and offer only cash bars.

Frederick Mahony, the commission's chief investigator, said the commission wants to avert tragedy. In past years, patrons in their 20s flocked to package-deal parties, got drunk, and then tried to drive home, he said.

